

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON LIBRARY

THIS BOOK MUST NOT BE REMOVED FROM THE LIBRARY

346.4

Mx. North

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON LIBRARY

17 MAY 1991

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2026

THE ALL ENGLAND LAW REPORTS

(INCORPORATING THE
LAW TIMES REPORTS
AND THE
LAW JOURNAL REPORTS)

OF CASES DECIDED IN
THE HOUSE OF LORDS . THE PRIVY COUNCIL
ALL DIVISIONS OF THE SUPREME COURT AND COURTS OF SPECIAL JURISDICTION

1950

VOLUME 2

Consulting Editor :

Sir ROLAND BURROWS, K.C.

Recorder of Cambridge.

Managing Editor of Halsbury's Laws of England, Hailsham Edition.

Consulting Editor for Chancery Cases :

HAROLD CHRISTIE, Esq., K.C.

Bencher of Lincoln's Inn.

Consulting Editor for Taxation Cases :

CYRIL KING, Esq., K.C.

Bencher of the Middle Temple.

General Editor :

G. F. L. BRIDGMAN, Esq.

of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

[For list of Reporters see overleaf]

Published by

BUTTERWORTH & CO. (Publishers) LTD., 4, 5 & 6 BELL YARD, TEMPLE BAR, LONDON, W.C.2.

REPORTERS.

House of Lords	J. D. PENNINGTON, B.A. (CANTAB.)	Barrister-at-Law
Privy Council	H. McL. MORRISON	Barrister-at-Law
Court of Appeal, No. 1 ..	F. GUTTMAN	Barrister-at-Law
Court of Appeal, No. 2 ..	J. D. PENNINGTON, B.A. (CANTAB.)	Barrister-at-Law
Court of Appeal, No. 3 ..	C. N. BEATTIE	Barrister-at-Law
Court of Appeal, No. 4 ..	F. GUTTMAN	Barrister-at-Law
Court of Criminal Appeal	H. McL. MORRISON	Barrister-at-Law
Chancery Division .. {	R. D. H. OSBORNE H. McL. MORRISON	} Barristers-at-Law
King's Bench Division .. {	F. A. AMIES, B.A. (LEEDS) M.D. CHORLTON, M.A. (OXON.) F. GUTTMAN GWYNEDD LEWIS H. McL. MORRISON CONRAD OLDHAM G. M. SMAILES
Revenue Cases	C. N. BEATTIE	Barrister-at-Law
Probate, Divorce and Admiralty	R. HENDRY WHITE	Barrister-at-Law
Ecclesiastical Cases ..	R. HENDRY WHITE	Barrister-at-Law

HOUSE OF LORDS.

THE LORD HIGH CHANCELLOR. The Rt. Hon. Viscount Jowitt

LORDS OF APPEAL IN ORDINARY

The Rt. Hon. Lord Porter	The Rt. Hon. Lord MacDermott
The Rt. Hon. Lord Simonds	The Rt. Hon. Lord Reid of Drem
The Rt. Hon. Lord Normand	The Rt. Hon. Lord Radcliffe
The Rt. Hon. Lord Oaksey	The Rt. Hon. Lord Tucker
The Rt. Hon. Lord Morton of Henryton	(appointed Sept. 27, 1950)

COURT OF APPEAL

MASTER OF THE ROLLS. The Rt. Hon. Sir Raymond Evershed

The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Tucker (appointed Lord of Appeal in Ordinary, Sept. 27, 1950)	The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Asquith
The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Bucknill	The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Singleton
The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Somervell	The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Denning
The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Cohen	The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Jenkins
	The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Birkett (appointed Sept. 28, 1950)

CHANCERY DIVISION

The Hon. Mr. Justice Vaisey	The Hon. Mr. Justice Harman
The Hon. Mr. Justice Romer	The Hon. Mr. Justice Danckwerts
The Hon. Mr. Justice Roxburgh	The Hon. Mr. Justice Lloyd-Jacob
The Hon. Mr. Justice Wynn-Parry

KING'S BENCH DIVISION

LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF ENGLAND. The Rt. Hon. Lord Goddard

The Rt. Hon. Mr. Justice Humphreys	The Hon. Mr. Justice Finnemore
The Hon. Mr. Justice Hilbery	The Hon. Mr. Justice Pritchard
The Hon. Mr. Justice Oliver	The Hon. Mr. Justice Streatfeild
The Hon. Mr. Justice Croom-Johnson	The Hon. Mr. Justice Ormerod
The Hon. Mr. Justice Stable	The Hon. Mr. Justice Slade
The Hon. Mr. Justice Cassels	The Hon. Mr. Justice Devlin
The Hon. Mr. Justice Hallett	The Hon. Mr. Justice Parker
The Rt. Hon. Mr. Justice Birkett (appointed Lord Justice of Appeal, Sept. 28, 1950)	The Hon. Mr. Justice Gorman
The Hon. Mr. Justice Lynskey	The Hon. Mr. Justice Barry (appointed July 7, 1950)
The Hon. Mr. Justice Jones	The Hon. Mr. Justice Donovan (appointed July 7, 1950)
The Hon. Mr. Justice Byrne	The Hon. Mr. Justice McNair (appointed Sept. 28, 1950)
The Hon. Mr. Justice Morris
The Hon. Mr. Justice Sellers

PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION

PRESIDENT. The Rt. Hon. Lord Merriman

The Hon. Mr. Justice Hodson	The Hon. Mr. Justice Willmer
The Hon. Mr. Justice Pilcher	The Hon. Mr. Justice Pearce
The Hon. Mr. Justice Wallington	The Hon. Mr. Justice Collingwood
The Hon. Mr. Justice Barnard

CASES REPORTED IN VOLUME 2

	PAGE		PAGE
AMERICAN ECONOMIC LAUNDRY, LTD. v. LITTLE [C.A.]	1186	BUFFEL v. CARDON (GT. BRITAIN), LTD. [C.A.]	878
APPLEBY v. CUNARD WHITE STAR, LTD. THE QUEEN MARY [ADM.]	22	BULLOCK, BAILEY v. [K.B.D.]	1167
ARDENNES (OWNER OF CARGO), THE v. ARDENNES (OWNERS), THE [K.B.D.]	517	BURGESS v. COX [CH.D.]	1212
ARDERNE CINEMAS, LTD., GREENHALGH v. [C.A.]	1120	BURNS v. TERRY (JOSEPH) & SONS, LTD. [C.A.]	987
ARIS-BAINBRIDGE v. TURNER MANUFACTURING CO., LTD. [K.B.D.]	1178	BURR, GARNER v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	683
ASHFORD, HOLMES v. [C.A.]	76	BURROWS v. HALL [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	156
ATKINSON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES), GOODLASS WALL AND LEAD INDUSTRIES, LTD. v. [H.L.]	314	BURTON (MONTAGUE), LTD., Ex parte R. v. MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING [C.A.]	282
A.-G., DARLING v. [DURHAM ASSIZES]	793	BUTLE v. SAUNDERS [CH.D.]	193
A.-G., HOWGATE v. [K.B.D.]	1104	CAMNER v. NORTHERN AND LONDON INVESTMENT TRUST, LTD. [H.L.]	486
A.-G., KNOWLES v. [PROB.]	6	CANN, WESTWOOD v. [K.B.D.]	805
AVES, R. v. [C.A.]	330	CAPITAL & PROVINCIAL PROPERTY TRUST, LTD. v. RICE [C.A.]	174
BAILEY v. BULLOCK [K.B.D.]	1167	CARDON (GT. BRITAIN), LTD., BUFEEL v. [C.A.]	878
BANBURY (decd.), Re [CH.D.]	250	CARDY v. CITY OF LONDON CORPN. [K.B.D.]	475
BANK OF ENGLAND, DOLLUS MIEG ET COMPAGNIE S.A. v. [CH.D.]	605	CARPENTER, CORKERY v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	745
BANQUE DES MARCHANDS DE MOSCOU (KOUTSCHESKY) (IN LIQUIDATION) v. KINDERLEY [CH.D.]	105	CHANCYBURY RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL, COCHRANE v. [C.A.]	1134
BARCLAY (JACK), LTD., MONKLAND v. [K.B.D.]	549	CHANDRIS v. ISBRANDTSEN MOLLER CO. INC. [C.A.]	618
BARCLAYS BANK, LTD. PARKINSON v. [C.A.]	715	CHAPLIN (decd.), Re [CH.D.]	155
BARKER v. LEVINSON [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	936	CHEKE (R.) & CO (THIRD PARTY), CURTIS v. MALONEY [K.B.D.]	571
BARNET ETC. RENT TRIBUNAL, R. v. Ex parte MILLMAN [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	825	CITY OF LONDON CORPN., CARDY v. [K.B.D.]	982
BARNET ETC. RENT TRIBUNAL, R. v. Ex parte REEDS INVESTMENTS, LTD. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	216	CITY OF LONDON CORPN., CORY (WILLIAM) & SON, LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	475
BARRATT v. GOUCH-THOMAS [C.A.]	848	CLARKSON, WOLFE v. [C.A.]	584
BASMA (ABDUL KARIM) v. WEEKES [P.C.]	1048	CLAYSON v. ROLLS ROYCE, LTD. [C.A.]	529
BATER v. BATER [C.A.]	146	COCHRANE v. CHANCYBURY RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL [C.A.]	884
BATTEN, LANGFORD PROPERTY CO., LTD. v. [H.L.]	458	COE, PAYNE v. [CH.D.]	1134
BRADLEY v. UNITED STEEL COMPANIES, LTD. [C.A.]	1079	COHEN (A. BANKRUPT), Re. Ex parte THE BANKRUPT v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [C.A.]	111
BEALE v. BEALE [C.A.]	872	COHEN, PERROTT (J.F.) & CO., LTD. v. [C.A.]	36
BECKER v. PURCHASE [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	539	COLEBORN AND SONS, LTD. v. BLOND [C.A.]	939
BENNETT, WALDEN & CO. v. WOOD [C.A.]	837	COLLIER, BORTHWICK-NORTON v. [C.A.]	351
BERRY WIGGINS & CO., LTD., THIRD PARTIES. BIGGIN AND CO., LTD. v. PERMANITE, LTD. [K.B.D.]	134	COMBE v. COMBE [K.B.D.]	204
BEST v. FOX (SAMUEL) & CO., LTD. [LEEDS ASSIZES]	859	CONWAY v. WIMPEY (GEORGE) & CO., LTD. [K.B.D.]	1115
BESTWICK, BROWN (JOHN M.), LTD. v. [C.A.]	798	COON v. DIAMOND TREAD CO. (1938), LTD. [CH.D.]	331
BESANT, HILL-VENNING v. [C.A.]	338	CORKERY v. CARPENTER [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	385
BIGGIN AND CO., LTD. v. PERMANITE, LTD.; BERRY WIGGINS & CO., LTD., THIRD PARTIES. [K.B.D.]	1151	CORY (WILLIAM) & SON, LTD. v. CITY OF LONDON CORPN. [K.B.D.]	745
BIRCH v. NATIONAL UNION OF RAILWAYMEN [CH.D.]	859	COX, BURGESS v. [CH.D.]	584
BIRCH v. TREASURY SOLICITOR [C.A.]	253	CROMPTON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES), REYNOLDS AND GIBSON v. [C.A.]	1212
BISHOP v. CUNARD WHITE STAR, LTD. THE QUEEN MARY [ADM.]	1198	CRYSTAL PALACE TRUSTEES v. MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING [CH.D.]	502
BLAND-SUTTON'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.]	22	CULKIN, RAILWAY EXECUTIVE v. [H.L.]	857
BLOND, COLEBORN AND SONS, LTD. v. [C.A.]	466	CUNARD WHITE STAR, LTD., BISHOP v. SAME, APPLEBY v. THE QUEEN MARY [ADM.]	637
BLUSTON & BRAMLEY, LTD. v. LEIGH. (EULER, THIRD PARTY) [K.B.D.]	351	CUNARD WHITE STAR, LTD., THOMAS v. THE QUEEN MARY [ADM.]	22
BOARD OF TRADE, THORNELOE & CLARKSON, LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	29	CUNNINGHAM-HOWIE v. DIMBLEBY (F.W.) & SONS, LTD. [C.A.]	1157
BOGUSLAWSKI v. GDYNIA AMERYKA LINIE [C.A.]	245	CURTIS v. MALONEY. R. CHEKE & CO. (THIRD PARTY) [K.B.D.]	882
BOOTS CASH CHEMISTS (SOUTHERN), LTD., JOYCE v. [K.B.D.]	355	DALE v. DE SOISSONS [C.A.]	201
BORTHWICK-NORTON v. COLLIER [C.A.]	719	DARLING v. A.-G. [DURHAM ASSIZES]	982
BOURNE v. McDONALD [C.A.]	204	DAVIES v. DE HAVILLAND AIRCRAFT CO., LTD. [K.B.D.]	460
BOWES, Ex parte R. v. LONDON (COUNTY) QUARTER SESSIONS [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	183	DEAN AND WOODBRIDGE & SONS, LOESCHER v. [CH.D.]	793
BRADBURY (decd.), Re [CH.D.]	29	DEBTR (NO. 21 OF 1950), Re A. Ex parte THE DEBTR v. BOWMAKER, LTD. [CH.D.]	582
BRAZIER, PILBURY v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1043	DEBTR (NO. 277 OF 1950), Re A. Ex parte THE DEBTR v. LIGUORI [C.A.]	124
BRITISH MOTOR TRADE ASSOCIATION, HARTWELLS OF OXFORD, LTD. v. [C.A.]	835	DE HAVILLAND AIRCRAFT CO., LTD., DAVIES v. [K.B.D.]	1129
BRITISH MOVIE-TELEVISIONS, LTD. v. LONDON AND DISTRICT CINEMAS, LTD. [C.A.]	705	DEMETRIU v. DEMETRIU [C.A.]	733
BROWN, LEGGATE v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	390	DEMETRIU v. DEMETRIU [C.A.]	582
BROWN (JOHN M.), LTD. v. BESTWICK [C.A.]	564	DE SOISSONS, DALE v. [C.A.]	49
	338	DEVINE v. LONDON HOUSING SOCIETY, LTD. [K.B.D.]	460

	PAGE		PAGE
DIAMOND TREAD Co. (1938), LTD., COON v. [CH.D.]	385	HARLOW v. MINISTER OF TRANSPORT [C.A.]	1005
DIMBLEBY (F.W.) & SONS, LTD., CUNNINGHAM-HOWIE v. [C.A.]	882	HARRIS, R. v. [C.C.A.]	816
DIMENT, KAT v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	657	HARTWELLS OF OXFORD, LTD. v. BRITISH MOTOR TRADE ASSOCIATION [C.A.]	705
DIRECTOR PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS, Ex parte R. v. SOUTH GREENHOE JUSTICES [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	42	HASTE, WESTMINSTER CITY COUNCIL v. [CH.D.]	65
DODDS v. DURHAM COUNTY COUNCIL [DURHAM ASSIZES]	1090	HAWKEN (S.A.), LTD., Re [CH.D.]	408
DOLLFUS MIEG ET COMPAGNIE S.A. v. BANK OF ENGLAND [CH.D.]	605	HEYES, R. v. [C.C.A.]	587
DOUGLAS v. DOUGLAS [C.A.]	748	HICKMAN'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.]	285
DROVER, RUGMAN v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	575	HILL-VENNING v. BESZANT [C.A.]	1151
DUCHESNE v. DUCHESNE [DIV.]	784	HOLLOWAY v. MOBBERLEY & PERRY, LTD. [C.A.]	761
DULLES' SETTLEMENT TRUSTS, Re [C.A.]	1013	HOLMES v. ASHFORD [C.A.]	76
DUNCAN, GRAHAM v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	534	HOLT v. DYSON [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	840
DUNN v. FIDOE [C.A.]	685	HONE (A BANKRUPT), Re. Ex parte THE TRUSTEE v. KENSINGTON BOROUGH COUNCIL [CH.D.]	716
DUNSHEATH, R. v. Ex parte MEREDITH [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	741	HOOKWAY (F.E.) & Co., LTD. v. HOOPER (H.W.) & Co. [C.A.]	842
DURHAM COUNTY COUNCIL, DODDS v. [DURHAM ASSIZES]	1090	HOOPER (H.W.) & Co., HOOKWAY (F.E.) & Co., LTD. v. [C.A.]	842
DYSON, HOLT v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	840	HOPKINS v. HOPKINS [DIV.]	1035
EAST END DWELLINGS Co., LTD. v. FINSBURY BOROUGH COUNCIL [K.B.D.]	81	HOWGATE v. A.-G. [K.B.D.]	1104
—, [C.A.]	943	HOWSON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. MONSELL [CH.D.]	1239
EDWARDS v. HALLIWELL [C.A.]	1064	HUNT, R. v. [C.C.A.]	291
EKINS, GAMMANS v. [C.A.]	140	HUTCHINSON & Co. (PUBLISHERS), LTD. v. TURNER (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) [CH.D.]	633
ELECTRIC AND MUSICAL INDUSTRIES, LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [H.L.]	261	HYNES (decd.), Re [C.A.]	879
ETON RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL, WALTER v. [C.A.]	588	ILFORD CORPN., NALDER v. [K.B.D.]	903
EULER (THIRD PARTY), BLUSTON & BRAMLEY, LTD. v. LEIGH [K.B.D.]	29	INLAND REVENUE COMRS., ELECTRIC AND MUSICAL INDUSTRIES, LTD. v. [H.L.]	261
FAITHFUL, R. v. [C.C.A.]	1251	INLAND REVENUE COMRS., FULLER v. [CH.D.]	976
FAWCETT, LARNER v. [C.A.]	727	INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. LAW (T. W.), LTD. [CH.D.]	196
FENN v. GAZE [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	819	INLAND REVENUE COMRS., LONDON GENERAL CAB Co., LTD. v. [CH.D.]	566
FENTEM (decd.), Re [CH.D.]	1073	INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. SILVERTS, LTD. [CH.D.]	271
FETTER LANE (Nos. 102—107), Re [CH.D.]	479	INSTITUTION OF POLISH ENGINEERS IN GREAT BRITAIN, LTD., JAWORSKI v. [K.B.D.]	51
FIDOE, DUNN v. [C.A.]	685	—, [C.A.]	1191
FIELD v. PERRYS (EALING), LTD. [K.B.D.]	521	ISBRANTSEN MOLLER Co., INC., CHANDRIS v. [C.A.]	618
FIELD'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.]	188	JAMES v. KENT (THOMAS H.) & Co., LTD. [C.A.]	1099
FINDLAY v. RAILWAY EXECUTIVE [C.A.]	969	JAWORSKI v. INSTITUTION OF POLISH ENGINEERS IN GREAT BRITAIN, LTD. [K.B.D.]	51
FINSBURY BOROUGH COUNCIL, EAST END DWELLINGS Co., LTD. v. [K.B.D.]	81	—, [C.A.]	1191
—, [C.A.]	943	JEFFREY v. JEFFREY [DIV.]	449
FITZWILLIAM'S (EARL) WENTWORTH ESTATES Co. v. MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING [K.B.D.]	765	JONES (decd.), Re [CH.D.]	239
FOLKESTONE PIER AND LIFT Co., RADNOR (EARL) v. [CH.D.]	690	JOYCE v. BOOTS CASH CHEMISTS (SOUTHERN), LTD. [K.B.D.]	719
FOSTER v. ROBINSON [C.A.]	342	KASLEFSKY v. KASLEFSKY [C.A.]	398
FOX (SAMUEL) & Co., LTD., BEST v. [LEEDS ASSIZES]	798	KAT v. DIMENT [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	657
FRANKS, R. v. [C.C.A.]	1172	KEATS, Ex parte R. v. HACKNEY, ISLINGTON AND STOKE NEWINGTON RENT TRIBUNAL [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	138
FRERE (decd.), Re [CH.D.]	513	KENT (THOMAS H.) & Co., LTD., JAMES v. [C.A.]	1099
FULHAM, HAMMERSMITH AND KENSINGTON RENT TRIBUNAL, R. v. Ex parte PHILIPPE [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	211	KENWARD v. KENWARD [C.A.]	297
FULLER v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [CH.D.]	976	KERRIDGE v. LAMDN [C.A.]	1110
GAMMANS v. EKINS [C.A.]	140	KINDERSLEY, BANQUE DES MARCHANDS DE MOSCOU (KOUPTCHESKY) (IN LIQUIDATION) v. [CH.D.]	105
GARDINER v. SEVENOAKS RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	84	—, [C.A.]	549
GARNER v. BURR [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	683	KNOWLES v. A.-G. [PROB.]	6
GAZE, FENN v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	819	KORNER v. KORNER (H.) & Co., LTD. [C.A.]	451
GDYNIA AMERYKA LINIE, BOGUSLAWSKI v. [C.A.]	355	KUWAIT OIL Co., LTD., WESTMINSTER AIRWAYS, LTD. v. [C.A.]	596
GIBSON, REYNOLDS AND v. CROMPTON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) [C.A.]	502	LAMDN, KERRIDGE v. [C.A.]	1110
GILLOOLY v. GILLOOLY [C.A.]	1118	LANCASHIRE WELDERS, LTD. v. HARLAND AND WOLFF, LTD. [C.A.]	1096
GLASS' WILL TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.]	953	LANGFORD PROPERTY Co., LTD. v. BATTEN [H.L.]	1079
GLYN'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.]	1150	LARNER v. FAWCETT [C.A.]	727
GOOD, MINT v. [C.A.]	1159	LAW (T. W.), LTD., INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. [CH.D.]	196
GOOD'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.]	653	LEGGATE v. BROWN [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	564
GOODLASS WALL AND LEAD INDUSTRIES, LTD. v. ATKINSON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) [H.L.]	314	LEICESTER PERMANENT BUILDING SOCIETY v. SHEARLEY [CH.D.]	738
GOUGH-THOMAS, BARRATT v. [C.A.]	1048	LEIGH, BLUSTON & BRAMLEY, LTD. v. (EULER, THIRD PARTY) [K.B.D.]	29
GRAHAM v. DUNCAN [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	534	LEVINSON, BARKER v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	825
GREEN (decd.), Re [CH.D.]	913	LIPMAN, NEWMAN v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	832
GREEN, MACDONALD v. [C.A.]	1240	LISSACK v. LISSACK [DIV.]	233
GREENHALGH v. ARDERNE CINEMAS, LTD. [C.A.]	1120	LITTLE, AMERICAN ECONOMIC LAUNDRY, LTD. v. [C.A.]	1186
GREENHALGH, SHACKLETON v. [C.A.]	1223	LITTLE, THIRD PARTY; MARSHALL, FOURTH PARTY. PEARSON v. ROSE & YOUNG, LTD. [C.A.]	1027
HABERMAN v. WESTMINSTER PERMANENT BUILDING SOCIETY [C.A.]	16	LOESCHER v. DEAN AND WOODBRIDGE & SONS [CH.D.]	124
HACKNEY, ISLINGTON AND STOKE NEWINGTON RENT TRIBUNAL, R. v. Ex parte KEATS [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	138	LONDON AND DISTRICT CINEMAS, LTD., BRITISH MOVIE-NEWS, LTD. v. [C.A.]	390
HALL, BURROWS v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	156	LONDON GENERAL CAB Co., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [CH.D.]	566
HALLIWELL, EDWARDS v. [C.A.]	1064
HAMILTON, SMITH v. [CH.D.]	928
HARLAND AND WOLFF, LTD., LANCASHIRE WELDERS, LTD. v. [C.A.]	1096

	PAGE		PAGE
S. (AN INFANT), Re [CH.D.]	159	TOWERFIELD (OWNERS), WORKINGTON HAR-
ST. SAVIOUR'S, WALTHAMSTOW, Re [CONSISTORY		BOUR AND DOCK BOARD v. [H.L.]	414
COURT OF THE DIOCESE OF CHELMSFORD] ..	70	TREASURY SOLICITOR, BIRCH v. [C.A.] ..	1198
—, [CT. OF ARCHES]	812	TURBURVILLE v. WEST HAM CORPN. [C.A.] ..	54
SANDBACH (dec'd.), Re [CH.D.]	1195	TURNER (INSPECTOR OF TAXES), HUTCHINSON
SANDBACH JUSTICES, R. v. Ex parte SMITH		& Co. (PUBLISHERS), LTD. v. [CH.D.] ..	633
[K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	781	TURNER MANUFACTURING CO., LTD., ARIS-
SAUNDERS, BUTTLE v. [CH.D.]	193	BAINBRIDGE v. [K.B.D.]	1178
SAYCELL, TAYLOR v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.] ..	887	UNITAS, THE [P.C.]	219
SCHAR (dec'd.), Re [CH.D.]	1069	UNITED STEEL COMPANIES, LTD., BEADSLEY v.
SCOTT v. SCOTT [C.A.]	1154	[C.A.]	872
SFDGWICK, R. v. [C.C.A.]	397	VESTLEY'S SETTLEMENT, Re [C.A.]	891
SEVENOAKS RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL, GAR-		WALKER, R. v. [C.C.A.]	911
DINER v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	84	WALLACE, SHARER v. [CH.D.]	463
SHACKLETON v. GREENHALGH [C.A.]	1223	WALTER v. ETON RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL
SHARER v. WALLACE [CH.D.]	463	[C.A.]	588
SHARP v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS [K.B.D.] ..	1012	WEBB, Re [CH.D.]	828
SHEARLEY, LEICESTER PERMANENT BUILDING		WEEKES, BASMA (ABDUL KARIM) v. [P.C.] ..	146
SOCIETY v. [CH.D.]	738	WEST HAM CORPN., TURBURVILLE v. [C.A.] ..	54
SHORE v. MINISTRY OF WORKS [C.A.]	228	WEST MIDLANDS GAS BOARD, PEARL ASSURANCE
SILVERTS, LTD., INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v.		Co., LTD. v. [CH.D.]	844
[CH.D.]	271	WESTMINSTER AIRWAYS, LTD. v. KUWAIT OIL
SIMPSON, MINISTRY OF HEALTH v. [H.L.] ..	1137	Co., LTD. [C.A.]	596
SLADE, MIDLAND COUNTIES MOTOR FINANCE CO.,		WESTMINSTER CITY COUNCIL v. HASTE [CH.D.]	65
LTD. v. [C.A.]	821	WESTMINSTER PERMANENT BUILDING SOCIETY,
SMITH, Ex parte . R. v. SANDBACH JUSTICES		HABERMAN v. [C.A.]	16
[K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	781	WESTWOOD v. CANN [K.B.D.]	805
SMITH v. HAMILTON [CH.D.]	928	WETHERALL & Co., LTD. v. STONE [C.A.] ..	1209
SMITH, LONGDON-GRIFFITHS v. [K.B.D.] ..	662	WIGLEY v. WIGLEY [C.A.]	1218
SMITH, R. v. [C.C.A.]	679	WILLEY v. PEACE [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	724
SOUTH EASTERN GAS BOARD, O'MEARA v. [C.A.]	481	WILLIAMS, NEATH RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL v.
SOUTH GREENHOE JUSTICES, R. v. Ex parte		[K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	625
DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS [K.B.D.		WILSON'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [C.A.]	955
DIVL. CT.]	42	WIMPEY (GEORGE) & Co., LTD., CONWAY v.
STARKEY, YATES (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v.		[K.B.D.]	331
[CH.D.]	614	WOLFE v. CLARKSON [C.A.]	529
STEPHENS, ROGERSON v. [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.] ..	144	WOOD, BENNETT, WALDEN & Co. v. [C.A.] ..	134
STERN, Re [CH.D.]	160	WOODBRIDGE & SONS, DEAN AND, LOESCHER v.
STONE, WETHERALL & Co., LTD. v. [C.A.] ..	1209	[CH.D.]	124
SUIDAIR INTERNATIONAL AIRWAYS, LTD. (IN		WORKINGTON HARBOUR AND DOCK BOARD v.
LIQUIDATION), Re [CH.D.]	920	TOWERFIELD (OWNERS) [H.L.]	414
TAMPLIN & SON'S BREWERY BRIGHTON, LTD. v.		YATES v. MORRIS [C.A.]	577
NASH (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) [C.A.]	93	YATES (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. STARKEY
TAYLOR (dec'd.), Re [PROB.]	446	[CH.D.]	614
TAYLOR, R. v. [C.C.A.]	170	YOUNG (dec'd.), Re [CH.D.]	1245
TAYLOR v. SAYCELL [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.] ..	887	YOUNG, PORTMAN BUILDING SOCIETY v. [CH.D.]	443
TERRY (JOSEPH) & SONS, LTD., BURNS v. [C.A.]	987	YOUNG v. RANK [K.B.D.]	166
TETAT v. O'DEA [K.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	695	YOUNG'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.]	1040
THOMAS v. CUNARD WHITE STAR, LTD. THE		ZIELINSKI, R. v. [C.C.A.]	1114
QUEEN MARY [ADM.]	1157
THORNELOE & CLARKSON, LTD. v. BOARD OF TRADE [K.B.D.]	245

INDEX

PAGE

ACCESS
Safe means of, to working place in factory. See FACTORY.
ACCIDENT
Workman, to. See MASTER AND SERVANT.
ACCOUNT
Action for— Particulars — Particulars sought by defendant of sums paid to him by plaintiff [SHARER v. WALLACE]	463
ADMINISTRATION OF ESTATES
Annuity. See ANNUITY.
Expenses— Recovery as costs — Fatal accident — Action by administrator under Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934 — Grant of administration obtained solely for purpose of action — Expenses, incidental to increased value of estate, incurred after judgment [THOMAS v. CUNARD WHITE STAR, LTD. THE QUEEN MARY]	1157
Fund for payment of legacies and testamentary expenses— Liability of realty — Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (c. 23), s. 34 (3), sched. I, Part II, para. 2 [Re RIDLEY (deceased)] ..	1
Partial intestacy— Hotchpot —“Any beneficial interest acquired by any issue of the deceased”— Share of residue settled, subject to widow's life interest therein, on discretionary trusts for benefit of testator's son, C., or C.'s children during C.'s lifetime, and for C.'s children absolutely after his death — C. surviving testator, but predeceasing widow — Distribution of residue as to which partial intestacy — Need of C.'s personal representative to bring into account share settled by will — Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (c. 23), s. 49 (a) [Re YOUNG'S WILL TRUSTS]	1040
Payment under direction in will held to be void— Recovery by next of kin or creditor — Limitation of action [MINISTRY OF HEALTH v. SIMPSON]	1137
ADVERTISEMENT
Display on outer walls of demised premises— Implied reservation of easement in favour of landlord [Re WEBB]	823
AGED PERSON
Bequest to— Charitable object. See CHARITY.
AGENT
Estate agent— Commission — Contract to pay commission on “securing an offer” — Offer subject to contract [BENNETT, WALDEN & CO. v. WOOD]	134
AGRICULTURAL HOLDING See AGRICULTURE.
AGRICULTURE
Agricultural holding— Notice to quit —“ Aggregate of agricultural land ”— Inn and orchard land and pasture — Inn buildings used in connection with agricultural trade — Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948 (c. 63), s. 1 (1) [DUNN v. FIDOE]	685
AIRCRAFT
Injury caused by impact on property. See WAR INJURY.
ALTERATION OF AREA
Of local authority. See LOCAL GOVERNMENT.
ANNOYANCE
Damages for— Breach of contract. See CONTRACT (Breach—Damages).
ANNUITY
Annuity free of income tax—“ Payment ”— of stated amount — Direction by will to set aside annually £1,500 free of tax and accumulate — Finance Act, 1941 (c. 30), s. 25 (1) [Re BANBURY (deceased)]	250
Perpetual— Gift to unincorporated body — Validity [Re JONES (deceased)]	239
APPEAL COMMITTEE
Of quarter sessions. See QUARTER SESSIONS.
APPROVED SCHOOL
Order in respect of young person. See CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS.
ARBITRATION
Award— Damages — Power of arbitrator to award interest — Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934 (c. 41), s. 3 (1) [CHANDRIS v. ISBRANDTSEN MOLLER CO. INC.]	618
Commencement within time fixed by agreement— Extension of time —“ Undue hardship ”— Delay due to fault of applicants for extension — Loss on sub-contracts — Arbitration Act, 1934 (c. 14), s. 16 (6) [F. E. HOOKWAY & CO. v. H. W. HOOPER & CO.]	842
ARREST
Search— Metropolis — Police officer's powers — Suspicion of possession of stolen property —“ Having or conveying ” property in street — Search during voluntary visit to police station — Metropolitan Police Act, 1839 (c. 47), s. 66 [WILEY v. PEACE]	724
ATTESTATION
Of will. See WILL.
ATTORNMENT CLAUSE
In mortgage— Creation of relationship of landlord and tenant — Application of Rent Restrictions Acts [PORTMAN BUILDING SOCIETY v. YOUNG]	443
AUTHOR
Liability to income tax— Lump sum received for film rights of books [HOWSON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. MONSELL]	1239
AWARD
See ARBITRATION.

	PAGE BANK BALANCE
Subject of donatio mortis causa— Delivery—Sufficiency of deposit books as indicia of title [BIRCH v. TREASURY SOLICITOR]	1198
BANKRUPTCY
Bankruptcy notice— Validity—Formal defect—Copy served on debtor entitled in the wrong court— Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (c. 59), s. 147 (1) [Re A DEBTOR (No. 21 of 1950). Ex parte THE DEBTOR v. BOWMAKER, LTD.]	1129
Effect on transaction by bankrupt— Payment by cheque before bankruptcy—Collection of money by payee's bank after bankruptcy—Bankrupt granted secured overdraft by bank—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (c. 59), s. 45, s. 47 (1) [Re HONE (a bankrupt). Ex parte THE TRUSTEE v. KENSING- TON BOROUGH COUNCIL]	716
Notice— Validity—Judgment creditor resident abroad outside the scheduled territories—Notice requiring payment into court—Exchange Control Act, 1947 (c. 14), sched. IV, para. 3—Exchange Control (Bankruptcy Notices) Order, 1949 (S.I. 1949, No. 585), art. 1 (a), sched., Part 1— R.S.C., Ord. 42, r. 1 (2) [Re A DEBTOR, NO. 277 of 1950. Ex parte THE DEBTOR v. LIGUORI]	733
Preferential claim— Assessed tax—Excess profits tax in respect of a chargeable accounting period other than last completed period before bankruptcy—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (c. 59), s. 33 (1) (a) [Re PRATT. Ex parte INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. PHILLIPS (TRUSTEE IN BANKRUPTCY)]	540, 994
Rescission of receiving order— Application for rescission after expiration of time allowed for appeal —Circumstances in which application entertained—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (c. 59), s. 108 (1) [Re COHEN (A BANKRUPT). Ex parte THE BANKRUPT v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS] ..	36
BASTARDY
Child born abroad of foreign mother domiciled abroad— Putative father British subject domiciled in England—Jurisdiction to make affiliation order—Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1872 (c. 65), s. 3 [TETAU v. O'DEA]	695
BENEFIT TO COMMUNITY
Charitable object. See CHARITY.
BETTING
See GAMING.
BIAS
Justices'. See JUSTICES.
BIGAMY
See CRIMINAL LAW.
BILL OF LADING
See SHIPPING.
BOUNDARY
Of local authority— Alteration. See LOCAL GOVERNMENT
BREWERY COMPANY
Income tax— Deductions against profits—Tied houses—Premises held under long leases—Rent exceeding net annual value—Premises sub-let at rents lower than net annual value—Deduction of rent forgone [TAMPLIN & SON'S BREWERY BRIGHTON, LTD. v. NASH]	93
BUILDING
Regulations. See PUBLIC HEALTH.
BUILDING LAND
Compulsory purchase by Central Land Board— Power of board to acquire land for disposal for permitted development—Planning permission granted by local authority to prospective lessee— Owner unwilling to sell at existing use value [EARL FITZWILLIAM'S WENTWORTH ESTATES CO. v. MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING]	765
BUILDING OPERATION
Lighting of "working place"— Injury to night watchman [FIELD v. PERRYS (EALING) LTD.] ..	521
BUILDING SOCIETY
Society in dissolution— Annual meeting—Duty of trustees to summon—Building Societies Act, 1874 (c. 42), s. 32—Building Societies Act, 1894 (c. 47), s. 9 [PAYNE v. COE]	111
CANDLESTICKS
On church altar. See ECCLESIASTICAL LAW.
CAPITAL
Application to purpose not authorised by trust instrument— Compensation for chattels destroyed by enemy action [Re MOUNT EDGCUMBE SETTLED ESTATES]	242
CARRIAGE BY SEA
See SHIPPING.
CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS
Injury to passenger— Defective paving near edge of platform—Breach of implied warranty that premises reasonably safe [PROTHEROE v. RAILWAY EXECUTIVE]	1093
Statutory undertakers— Profits tax—Exemption—"Authorised person" limited by enactment as regards charge for service—Taxis cab company—Cabs licensed under statute—Maximum fares prescribed—Relationship between driver and company that of bailee and bailor [LONDON GENERAL CAB CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS]	566
CERTIORARI
Rent tribunal determination. See RENT CONTROL (Tribunal).
CHARGING ORDER
For solicitor's costs. See SOLICITOR (Costs).
CHARITABLE PURPOSE
See CHARITY.
CHARITY
Benefit to community— Aged persons—Gift to persons in certain parish over sixty-five years of age —Charitable Uses Act, 1601 (43 Eliz., c. 4), preamble [Re ROBINSON (deceased)]	1148
[Re BRADBURY (deceased)]	1150
[Re GLYN'S WILL TRUSTS]	1150

CHARITY—continued

- Cy-pres doctrine—General charitable intention—Unconditional gift for particular purpose—Purpose impracticable [Re GOOD'S WILL TRUSTS] 653
- Hospital—Vesting in Minister of Health—Whether remaining a charity—National Health Service Act, 1946 (c. 81), s. 59 (1), (2) [Re FRERE (deceased)] 513
- Perpetuities—Gift dependent on future uncertain event—Trustees directed to retain fund until such time as a candidate for the priesthood comes forward from a certain church [Re MANDER (deceased)] 191
- Relief of poverty—"For the permanent aid of distressed gentlefolk and similar purposes" [Re YOUNG (deceased)] 1245
- Town and country planning—Benefit to community—Promotion of industry, commerce and art [CRYSTAL PALACE TRUSTEES v. MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING] 857
- Uncertainty—Gift to Royal College of Surgeons—Subsidiary or incidental object of college not charitable [Re BLAND-SUTTON'S WILL TRUSTS] 466

CHARTERPARTY

See SHIPPING.

CHEMIST

- Chemist's shop—Factory—Staff comprising manager, dispenser, assistants and porter—Porter alone employed in manual labour [JOYCE v. BOOTS CASH CHEMISTS (SOUTHERN) LTD.] 719

CHEQUE

- Bankruptcy—Payment by cheque before bankruptcy—Collection of money by bank after bankruptcy—Bankrupt granted secured overdraft by bank [Re HONE (A BANKRUPT). Ex parte THE TRUSTEE v. KENSINGTON BOROUGH COUNCIL] 716

CHILD

Custody. See JUSTICES (Infant).

CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS

- Approved school order—Order against young person aged sixteen—Appeal by parents to quarter sessions—Young person over seventeen when appeal heard—Jurisdiction to hear appeal—Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (c. 12), s. 62 (1) (a) [RUGMAN v. DROVER] 575

CINEMATOGRAPH

- Film—Storage—Inflammable substance—Storage in cave—"Premises" within the Celluloid and Cinematograph Film Act, 1922 (c. 35), s. 1 (1) [GARDINER v. SEVENOAKS RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL] 84

CLUB

- Members' club—Member injured through faulty construction of club premises—Liability of management committee for breach of warranty [SHORE v. MINISTRY OF WORKS] 228

COAL

- Nationalisation of industry—Valuation of transferred interests—Price if sold "in the open market by a willing seller to a willing buyer"—"All relevant circumstances"—Regulations controlling prices—Coal Industry Nationalisation Act, 1946 (c. 59), s. 13 (4), s. 13 (5) [PRIESTMAN COLLIERIES, LTD., v. NORTHERN DISTRICT VALUATION BOARD] 129

COMMISSION

Estate agent. See AGENT.

COMMUNITY

Benefit to—Charitable object. See CHARITY.

COMPANY

- Private company—Articles of association—Fraud on minority shareholders—Restriction on transfer of shares—Special resolution enabling sale to outsiders with sanction of an ordinary resolution—Impeachment—Discrimination between majority and minority shareholders—Intention of voters—Sale price of majority holding to be paid partly out of assets of company [GREENHALGH v. ARDERNE CINEMAS, LTD.] 1120
- Receiver—Preferential payments—Rates—Failure to pay out of assets coming to receiver's hands—Subsequent loss of assets—Liability of receiver—Companies Act, 1929 (c. 23), s. 78 (1) [WESTMINSTER CITY COUNCIL v. HASTE] 65
- Winding-up—Compulsory winding-up—Petition for relief under Companies Act, 1948, s. 210 (1), or for winding-up order—Petitioner's costs—Taxation—Affidavit in support of petition in addition to statutory affidavit—Documents exhibited to statutory affidavit—Acute conflict between parties—Petition grounded on allegation that affairs of company required investigation—Additional affidavit—Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38), s. 210 (1), s. 224 (1)—Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1949 (S.I. 1949, No. 330), r. 3, r. 30, Appendix, Form 9 [Re S. A. HAWKEN, LTD.] 408
- Election—Application for order that winding-up invalid—Previous application for leave to appeal out of time against rejection of proof—Consent to adjournment of application for leave pending decision on application for order that winding-up invalid [BANQUE DES MARCHANDS DE MOSCOU (KROUPETSKESKY) (IN LIQUIDATION) v. KINDERSLEY] 105, 549
- Execution—Execution not completed until after order for winding-up—English winding-up ancillary to foreign winding-up—Rights of creditor—Discretion of court—Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38), s. 325 (1) (c) [Re SUIDAIR INTERNATIONAL AIRWAYS, LTD.] 920
- Jurisdiction—Company not carrying on business in England, but having substantial assets here—Companies Act, 1929 (c. 23), s. 338 (1), (2) [BANQUE DES MARCHANDS DE MOSCOU (KROUPETSKESKY) (IN LIQUIDATION) v. KINDERSLEY] 105, 549
- Preferential creditor—Advances for payment of wages—Advances by bank on current account on being satisfied that an amount equal to advance would shortly be paid in—Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38), s. 319 (4) [Re PRIMROSE (BUILDERS), LTD.] 334
- Rights of execution creditor—Goods seized by sheriff, but execution not completed, before commencement of winding-up—Notice of meeting of creditors served on sheriff within fourteen days of sale of goods—Notice of meeting at which resolution for voluntary winding-up was to be proposed—Resolution passed for compulsory winding-up—Subsequent order for compulsory winding-up—Duties of sheriff—Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38), s. 325 (1), s. 326 (2) [BLUSTON & BRAMLEY, LTD. v. LEIGH (EULER, THIRD PARTY)] 29

COMPENSATION

Compulsory purchase. See COMPULSORY PURCHASE.

Loss of office—Liability to income tax. See INCOME TAX.

Requisitioned property. See REQUISITION (Land).

To transferred officers of local authority. See LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

COMPULSORY PILOTAGE

See HARBOUR.

COMPULSORY PURCHASE

Building land—Compulsory purchase by Central Land Board—Power of board to acquire land for disposal for permitted development—Planning permission granted by local authority to prospective lessee—Owner unwilling to sell at existing use value—Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (c. 51), s. 43 (1) [EARL FITZWILLIAM'S WENTWORTH ESTATES CO. v. MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING] 765

Compensation—Interest in war-damaged hereditament—Flats subject to Rent Acts demolished by enemy action—Cost of works payment—Whether compensation to be assessed on the basis that rents controlled—War Damage Act, 1943 (c. 21), s. 14 (1)—Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (c. 51), s. 53 (1) (a) [EAST END DWELLINGS CO., LTD. v. FINSEBURY BOROUGH COUNCIL] 81, 943

See also TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING.

CONDEMNATION

As prize. See PRIZE LAW.

CONDONATION

See DIVORCE (Cruelty).

CONFESSION

Admissibility. See CRIMINAL LAW (Evidence).

CONFLICT OF LAWS

Nullity—Marriage in Russia—Validity—Parties domiciled in England—Requirements of Soviet law not observed—Mutual consent—Wife forbidden to leave Russia—Avoidance for failure of condition [KENWARD v. KENWARD] 297

CONVINANCE

See DIVORCE.

CONSORTIUM

See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

CONTRACT

Breach—Damages—Foreseeable consequence of breach—Series of contracts—Plaintiffs compromising claim by ultimate purchaser—Liability of original vendor to plaintiffs—Warranties added to succeeding contracts [BIGGIN & CO., LTD. v. PERMANITE, LTD.; BERRY WIGGINS & CO., LTD., THIRD PARTIES] 859

Measure—Inconvenience and discomfort—Annoyance and mental distress—Loss of social prestige—Decision by husband and wife not to have child [BAILEY v. BULLOCK] 1167

Frustration—Change of circumstances—Power of court to qualify literal words of contract—Agreement to remain in force during continuance of statutory Order—Order continued by different statute and for different reasons [BRITISH MOVIESTONERS, LTD. v. LONDON AND DISTRICT CINEMAS, LTD.] 390

Memorandum or note—Contract of service—No mention of nature of duties—Implication of term as to reasonable notice of termination of contract where memorandum insufficient—Statute of Frauds, 1677 (c. 3), s. 4 [JAMES v. THOMAS H. KENT & CO., LTD.] 1009

Promise made with intention to create legal relationship—Enforcement—Unequivocal acceptance of liability—Intention that promises will act on promise—Promise acted on [COMBE v. COMBE] 1115

Repudiation—Anticipatory breach—Contract with corporation for removal of refuse—Under-taking by contractors to observe bye-laws—Sealing of new bye-laws—Substantial additional burden on contractors [WILLIAM CORY & SON, LTD. v. CITY OF LONDON CORPORATION] 584

Sale of goods. See SALE OF GOODS.

CONTROL OF INDUSTRY

Development council—Power to set up—"Desired by a substantial number of persons engaged in the industry"—Need to ascertain wishes of employers and employed—Industrial Organisation and Development Act, 1947 (c. 40), s. 1 (4) [THORNELOE & CLARKSON v. BOARD OF TRADE] 246

CONVOCAION

Of university. See UNIVERSITY.

CORRECTIVE TRAINING

See CRIMINAL LAW (Sentence).

CORROBORATION

See CRIMINAL LAW (Evidence).

COSTS

Payment into court—Sum awarded less than sum paid into court—Right of defendants to costs after date of payment in—Discretion of court—R.S.C., Ord. 22, r. 6 [FINDLAY v. RAILWAY EXECUTIVE] 969

Quarter sessions—Appeal from court of summary jurisdiction. See QUARTER SESSIONS.

Security for costs—Legal aid—Right of assisted person to order—Matrimonial cause—Amount of order—Wife's case conducted by salaried solicitor—Wife poor person when application first made [WIGLEY v. WIGLEY] 1218

Solicitor's lien. See SOLICITOR.

Taxation—Company—Compulsory winding-up—Petitioners' costs—Affidavit in support of petition in addition to statutory affidavit—Documents exhibited to statutory affidavit—Acute conflict between parties—Petition grounded on allegation that affairs of company required investigation [Re S. A. HAWKEN, LTD.] 408

Eight defendants jointly represented and seven successful—Two distinct issues—Main issue against one defendant only—Separate defences—Plaintiff successful on main issue—Action against other defendants dismissed with costs—Claim by successful defendants to be paid seven-eighths of fee for instructions for brief and counsel's fees [KORNER v. H. KORNER & CO., LTD.] 451

Fatal accident—Action by administrator under Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934—Grant of administration obtained solely for purpose of action—Administration expenses, incidental to increased value of estate, incurred after judgment—R.S.C., Ord. 65, r. 27 (29) [THOMAS v. CUNARD WHITE STAR, LTD. THE QUEEN MARY] 1157

Review by court—Objection as to quantum—No error by master in principle [COON v. DIAMOND TREAD CO. (1938), LTD.] 385

	PAGE
COUNSEL
Criminal proceedings— Responsibility for indictment—Time to apply for amendment [R. v. SMITH]	679
COUNTY COURT
Jurisdiction— Rent Restriction—Breach of covenant to repair in original tenancy agreement—Claim for £414 damages [WOLFE v. CLARKSON]	529
Specific performance— Agreement to erect fence—County Courts Act, 1934 (c. 53), s. 52 (1) (d), s. 71 [BOURNE v. McDONALD]	183
COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL
See CRIMINAL LAW (Appeal).
CREDITOR
Execution. See COMPANY (Winding-up).
CRIMINAL LAW
Appeal— Power to overrule previous decisions of court—Court of Criminal Appeal—Stare decisis—Rule not applicable where liberty of subject concerned [R. v. TAYLOR]	170
Bigamy— Defence—Absence for seven years—"Marrying a second time"—More than one bigamy—Availability of statutory defence in respect of third and subsequent bigamies—Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (c. 100), s. 57 [R. v. TAYLOR]	170
Conspiracy— Sentence—Imprisonment for longer than two years [R. v. MORRIS]	965
Depositions— Evidence given in answer to leading questions—Validity of committal—Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (c. 42), s. 17 [R. v. WALKER]	911
Evidence— Confession—Allegation that confession improperly obtained—Ruling in absence of jury on admissibility—Right of counsel at trial again to cross-examine police and examine prisoner regarding circumstances in which confession obtained [R. v. MURRAY]	925
Corroboration— Direction to jury—Need for judge to refer to evidence relied on as corroboration [R. v. ZIELINSKI]	1114
False pretences— Indictment—Amendment—Charge of obtaining money by false pretences—Evidence that cheques, not money, obtained—Amendment to meet evidence [R. v. SMITH]	679
Gross indecency— No actual physical contact proved—Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (c. 69), s. 11 [R. v. HUNT]	291
Indictment— Amendment—Indictment not bad on its face—Amendment of matter of description—Charge of obtaining money by false pretences—Evidence that cheques, not money, obtained—Amendment to meet evidence—Responsibility of counsel for accuracy of indictment—Time to apply for amendment—Indictments Act, 1915 (c. 90), s. 5 (1) [R. v. SMITH]	679
Receiving— Recent possession of stolen property—Direction to be given to jury [R. v. AVES]	330
Sentence— Committal to quarter sessions by court of summary jurisdiction—Duty of quarter sessions to ascertain whether appeal against conviction pending—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (c. 58), s. 29 (1) [R. v. FAITHFUL]	1251
Common law misdemeanour— Sentence of imprisonment for longer than two years [R. v. MORRIS]	965
Corrective training— Adverse report by Prison Commissioners [R. v. MURRAY]	925
Preventive detention— Length of sentence—Normal period of eight years—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (c. 58), s. 21 (2) [R. v. SEDGWICK]	397
Probation order— Power of court also to fine—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (c. 58), s. 3 (1), s. 13 [R. v. PARRY]	1179
Trial— Plea of Not Guilty—Withdrawal—Admission of guilt—Need to take verdict of jury [R. v. HEYES]	587
Vagrancy— "Known character"—Evidence—Previous conviction—Accused discharged conditionally on previous conviction—Vagrancy Act, 1824 (c. 83), s. 4—Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871 (c. 112), s. 15—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (c. 58), s. 12 (1) [R. v. HARRIS]	816
CRUELTY
See DIVORCE.
CURRENCY CONTROL
Bankruptcy notice— Validity—Judgment creditor resident abroad outside scheduled territories—Notice requiring payment into court [Re A DEBTOR, No. 277 of 1950. Ex parte THE DEBTOR v. LIGUORI]	733
CUSTODY
Infant. See JUSTICES (Infant).
CUSTOMS
Illegal export— Condemnation of goods by magistrate—Claimants ordered to pay five guineas costs—Appeal by claimants to quarter sessions against order of condemnation—Competency—Metropolitan Police Courts Act, 1839 (c. 71), s. 50—Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (c. 36), s. 226 [R. v. LONDON (COUNTY) QUARTER SESSIONS. Ex parte BOWES]	1043
Indictment— Importing prohibited goods—Need to allege intent to evade prohibition—Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (c. 36), s. 186 [R. v. FRANKS]	1172
Smuggling— Conspiracy—Sentence [R. v. MORRIS]	965
CY-PRES DOCTRINE
Charitable purpose— General charitable intention—Unconditional gift for particular purpose—Purpose impracticable [Re GOOD'S WILL TRUSTS]	653
DAMAGES
Arbitration— Power of arbitrator to award interest [CHANDRIS v. ISBRANDTSEN MOLLER CO. INC.]	618
Breach of contract. See CONTRACT.
Carriage by sea. See SHIPPING.
Fatal Accidents Act, under. See NEGLIGENCE.
Law Reform Act, under. See NEGLIGENCE.
Libel. See LIBEL.
Measure of damages— Foreseeable consequence of breach of contract—Series of contracts—Plaintiffs compromising claim by ultimate purchaser—Liability of original vendor to plaintiffs—Warranties added to succeeding contracts [BIGGIN AND CO., LTD. v. PERMANITE, LTD.; BERRY WIGGINS & CO., LTD., THIRD PARTIES]	859
Negligence. See NEGLIGENCE.

DANGEROUS DRIVING
See STREET TRAFFIC.
DANGEROUS GOODS
Sale of. See NEGLIGENCE.
DEBENTURE
Gas company— Compensation to debenture holder on nationalisation. See GAS.
DECLARATION
Legitimacy. See LEGITIMATION.
DEFENDANT
Adding to parties to action. See PRACTICE (Parties).
DEPOSITIONS
See CRIMINAL LAW.
DEVELOPMENT COUNCIL
See CONTROL OF INDUSTRY.
DISCOMFORT
Damages for— Breach of contract. See CONTRACT (Breach— Damages).
DISCOVERY
Interrogatories—"Opposite parties"—Joint tortfeasors—Administration of interrogatories by one tortfeasor to another—Necessity of notice—R.S.C., Ord. 31, r. 1 [CLAYSON v. ROLLS ROYCE, LTD.]	884
Privilege—Production of documents—Communications between insurers and assured—Communications before plaintiffs' formal claim—Right of court to inspect documents—R.S.C., Ord. 31, r. 19A (2) [WESTMINSTER AIRWAYS, LTD. v. KUWAIT OIL CO., LTD.]	596
DISCRETION
Exercise by Divorce Court. See DIVORCE (Discretion).
DISCRETIONARY TRUST
See TRUST AND TRUSTEE.
DISQUALIFICATION
Driving licence. See STREET TRAFFIC.
DIVORCE
Appeal—Court of Appeal—Undeferred petition by husband—Right of wife to appear in Court of Appeal [GILLOOLY v. GILLOOLY]	1118
Jurisdiction—Divisional Court—"No error of the court at the hearing alleged"—New evidence obtained after trial—Unsuccessful party entitled to appeal to Court of Appeal—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 523) (L9), r. 36 [PRINCE v. PRINCE]	375
Connivance—Suspicion of adulterous association—Watching and eavesdropping—Opportunity created for adultery—No intention to promote or encourage adultery—Motive only to obtain evidence [DOUGLAS v. DOUGLAS]	748
Cruelty—Condonation—Revival of cruelty—Inference that conditional forgiveness has become absolute after lapse of time—Cruelty committed from 1930-38—Alleged revival after 1945 [BEALE v. BEALE]	539
Defence—Insanity [LISSACK v. LISSACK]	233
Neglect by wife of husband and child—Refusal of sexual intercourse—Desire to end marriage—No evidence of intention to wound husband or of injury to his health [KASLEFSKY v. KASLEFSKY]	398
Standard of proof—"Beyond reasonable doubt" [BATER v. BATER]	458
Decree nisi—Substitution of decree of judicial separation—Motive of financial advantage—Exercise of discretion of court [JEFFREY v. JEFFREY]	449
Discretion—Lack of frankness—Incomplete disclosure in first statement—Complete confession in second statement and in court [GILLOOLY v. GILLOOLY]	1118
Domicil—Petition by wife—Extent of onus on wife to prove husband's domicil in England—Husband domiciled in Canada at date of presentation of petition—Wife resident in England for thirty-one months, and in Canada for five months, of three years immediately preceding commencement of proceedings—"Ordinarily resident"—Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949 (c. 100), s. 1 (1) (a) [HOPKINS v. HOPKINS]	1035
Evidence—Privilege—Letter by husband to probation officer—Probation officer consulted by wife, but not accepted as conciliator by husband [MOLE v. MOLE]	328
Judicial separation—Substitution of decree for decree nisi of divorce—Motive of financial advantage—Exercise of discretion of court—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 183 (3) (added by Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 9) [JEFFREY v. JEFFREY]	449
Maintenance—Amount—Wife's earning capacity—When to be taken into account [ROSE v. ROSE]	311
Assessment—Factors to be considered—Conduct of parties—Matters excluded from consideration—Not brought forward at trial—Inconsistency with decree—Matters calculated to produce different result at trial—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 190 (1) [DUCHESENE v. DUCHESENE]	784
Children—Order for payment of annual sum to be held in trust for children—Power of court to create trust in favour of children—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 193 (3) (added by the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 10 (4)) [YATES (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. STARKEY]	614
Undertaking by husband to pay yearly allowance—Forbearance by wife to apply for order for maintenance—Enforcement of undertaking [COMBE v. COMBE]	1115
Petition—Service—Dispensing with service—Substituted service ineffective—Discretion of judge—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (c. 85), s. 42 [PAOLANTONIO v. PAOLANTONIO]	404
Practice—Second petition—Petition for divorce on the ground of cruelty—Leave to file second petition on the ground of desertion—First petition still on file [DEMETRIOU v. DEMETRIOU]	49
Security for costs—Assisted person. See LEGAL AID.
Variation of settlement. See VARIATION OF SETTLEMENT.
DOCUMENT
Inspection by court—To determine claim to privilege [WESTMINSTER AIRWAYS, LTD. v. KUWAIT OIL CO., LTD.]	596
Production. See DISCOVERY.

DOMICIL
Divorce. See DIVORCE.
DONATIO MORTIS CAUSA
See GIFT.
DRUNK
In charge of carriage while drunk. See HIGHWAY.
EASEMENT
Implied reservation— Lease—Display of advertisements on outer wall of demised premises [Re WEBB]	828
ECCLESIASTICAL LAW
Ornaments— Candlesticks—Legality of six candlesticks on the Holy Table or retable [Re ST. SAVIOUR'S, WALTHAMSTOW]	70, 812
EDUCATION
Remuneration of teachers— Augmentation of war service pay—New Burnham scales of salary introduced in 1945—Right of teachers on war service to increased scales [TURBURVILLE v. WEST HAM CORPORATION]	54
ELECTION
Company— Winding-up—Application for order that winding-up invalid—Previous application for leave to appeal out of time against rejection of proof—Consent to adjournment of application for leave pending decision on application for order that winding-up invalid [BANQUE DES MARCHANDS DE MOSCOU (KROUPETSCHESKY) (IN LIQUIDATION) v. KINDERSLEY]	105, 549
EMERGENCY LEGISLATION
Requisition. See REQUISITION.
ENTAILED INTEREST
Disposition—"Devise referring specifically to the property" [Re MANOR FARM, KYTES HARDWICK]	572
ESTATE AGENT
See AGENT.
ESTATE DUTY
Property deemed to pass— Money received under policy of assurance—"Effectuated" by deceased—"Wholly kept up . . . for . . . a donee"—Payment of initial premiums by third party—Commutation of premiums—Policy for the benefit of donee and the deceased—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1889 (c. 7), s. 11 (1)—Finance Act, 1894 (c. 30), s. 2 (1) (c) [Re OAKES (deceased)]	851
EXCESS PROFITS TAX
Computation of standard profits—"Working proprietors"— Director of company "owning" shares—Shareholding as joint owner—Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), s. 13 (2) (b) (as substituted by Finance Act, 1940 (c. 29), s. 31 (1)) [INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. T. W. LAW, LTD.]	196
"Income received from investment"— Fees from licences to perform gramophone records in public collected and distributed to members by company limited by guarantee—Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), sched. VII, Part I, para. 6 (1) [ELECTRIC AND MUSICAL INDUSTRIES, LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS]	261
Preferential claim for, in bankruptcy— Tax claimed in respect of chargeable accounting period other than last completed period before bankruptcy [Re PRATT. Ex parte INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. PHILLIPS (TRUSTEE IN BANKRUPTCY)]	540, 994
EXCESSIVE SPEED
See STREET TRAFFIC.
EXCHANGE CONTROL
See CURRENCY CONTROL.
EXECUTION
Against company— Execution not completed until after order for winding-up—English winding-up ancillary to foreign winding-up—Rights of creditor—Discretion of court [Re SUIDAIR INTERNATIONAL AIRWAYS, LTD.]	920
Sale by sheriff of goods seized— Title of purchaser—Rights of true owner—Bankruptcy and Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1913 (c. 34), s. 15 [CURTIS v. MALONEY]	201, 982
EXECUTION CREDITOR
Rights in company's winding-up. See COMPANY (Winding-up).
EXPECTATION OF LIFE
Element in assessing damages for negligence. See NEGLIGENCE (Damages).
FACTOR
Mercentile agent— Possession of goods—Motor car—Consent given by owner to possession of car—Registration book obtained by a trick—Sale of car with registration book—Title of innocent purchaser—Factors Act, 1889 (c. 45), s. 2 (1) [PEARSON v. ROSE & YOUNG, LTD. (LITTLE, THIRD PARTY; MARSHALL, FOURTH PARTY)]	1027
FACTORY
Building operations—"Premises . . . temporarily used for . . . construction of a building"— Night watchman injured during week-end stoppage of work—Machinery not being used, but available for use—"Working-place"—Watchman's tour of inspection—"Efficiently lighted"—Watchman provided with hurricane lamp—Building Regulations, 1926 (S. R. & O., 1926, No. 738), reg. 15 [FIELD v. PERRYS (EALING), LTD.]	521
Chemist's shop— Staff comprising manager, dispenser, assistants and porter—Porter alone employed in manual labour—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 151 (1) [JOYCE v. BOOTS CASH CHEMISTS (SOUTHERN), LTD.]	719
Fencing—"Securely fenced"— Test—Fencing giving security from reasonably expected dangers—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 13 (1) [BURNS v. JOSEPH TERRY & SONS, LTD.]	987
Lifting tackle— Tackle of good construction, etc., supplied by employers, but used for wrong purpose by servant—Fellow-servant killed—Liability of employers—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 23 (1) (a) [BEADLEY v. UNITED STEEL COMPANIES, LTD.]	872
Safe means of access to place of work— Maintenance of floors and passages—Passage leading to canteen—Rainwater collected on floor of passage—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 25 (1), s. 26 (1) [DAVIES v. DE HAVILLAND AIRCRAFT CO., LTD.]	582

FAIR COMMENT

See LIBEL (Particulars).

FALSE PRETENCES

Obtaining money or valuable security by. See CRIMINAL LAW.

FALSE TRADE DESCRIPTION

See TRADE MARK.

FENCE

Agreement to erect—Specific performance—Power of county court to decree [BOURNE v. McDONALD] 183

FENCING

Dangerous machinery. See FACTORY.

FILM

See CINEMATOGRAPH.

FLOOR

Factory, in—Maintenance. See FACTORY.

FOOD AND DRUGS

Proceedings against third party—Information by retailer against supplier—Need for retailer to prove contravention of Act by supplier—Food and Drugs Act, 1938 (c. 56), s. 83 (1) [MOORE v. RAY] 561

Sample—Delivery of sample to consignee—Consignee's name, but no address, appearing on container—Consignee's address known to sampling officer—Validity—Food and Drugs Act, 1938 (c. 56), s. 70 (2) [FENN v. GAZE] 819

Selling to the prejudice of the purchaser—Information—Validity—Charge of selling milk "not of the nature, substance, and quality" of the article demanded—Food and Drugs Act, 1938 (c. 56), s. 3 (1) [MOORE v. RAY] 561

FOREIGN GOVERNMENT

Recognition—Retroactive effect. See INTERNATIONAL LAW.

FORFEITURE

Clause in will. See WILL (Forfeiture clause).

FRIENDLY SOCIETY

Action against trustees—Tort—Libel—Competence—Friendly Societies Act, 1896 (c. 25), s. 94 (1) [LONGDON-GRIFFITHS v. SMITH] 662

Registrar—Approval of trade union rules—Effect [BIRCH v. NATIONAL UNION OF RAILWAYMEN] 253

FRUSTRATION

See CONTRACT.

GAMING

Promise to pay person money paid by him in respect of gaming contract—Loan to repay lost bets—Term that loan should be applied in payment of betting debt—Gaming Act, 1892 (c. 9), s. 1 [MACDONALD v. GREEN] 1240

GAS

Nationalisation—Agreement made after November 19, 1945, but before January 23, 1948—Disclaimer by area gas board—Reference to Gas Arbitration Tribunal—Disclaimer not allowed by tribunal—Jurisdiction of court—Gas Act, 1948 (c. 67), s. 36 (5) [O'MEARA v. SOUTH EASTERN GAS BOARD] 481

Compensation—"Securities"—Debenture—Redeemable mortgage debenture—Gas Act, 1948 (c. 67), s. 74 (1) [PEARL ASSURANCE CO., LTD. v. WEST MIDLANDS GAS BOARD] 844

GIFT

Donatio mortis causa—Bank balances—Deposit accounts—Delivery—Animus donandi—Sufficiency of deposit books as indicia of title [BIRCH v. TREASURY SOLICITOR] 1198

GOLD PLATE

See PLATE.

GOODS

Sale of. See SALE OF GOODS.

GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENT

Entry on land by contractors to do work—Negligence of contractors—Liability of department [DARLING v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL] 798

GROSS INDECENCY

See CRIMINAL LAW.

GUARANTEE

Hire-purchase agreement—Indemnity against loss sustained through breach by hirer—Term that guarantor should be informed if payment of instalment more than thirty days overdue—Agreement to give time to hirer—When payment "overdue" [MIDLAND COUNTIES MOTOR FINANCE CO., LTD. v. SLADE] 821

HAIR DYE

Injury to customer of hairdresser. See NEGLIGENCE (Dangerous goods).

HALLMARK

See PLATE.

HARBOUR

Pilot—Compulsory pilot—Responsibility of shipowner—Action by shipowner against harbour board for negligence—Counterclaim by board for damage to harbour—Contributory negligence—Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 27), s. 74—Pilotage Act, 1913 (c. 31), s. 15 [WORKINGTON HARBOUR AND DOCK BOARD v. OWNERS OF THE S.S. TOWERFIELD] 414

HIGHWAY

Drunk in charge of "carriage"—Inclusion in "carriage" of bicycle—Licensing Act, 1872 (c. 94), s. 12 [CORKERY v. CARPENTER] 745 Negligence on. See NEGLIGENCE.

Nuisance on. See NUISANCE.

Stopping up—Town and country planning—Power of Minister of Transport to override statute giving inhabitants right to use highway [HARLOW v. MINISTER OF TRANSPORT] 1005

HIRE-PURCHASE

Guarantee for performance of agreement by hirer—Term that guarantor should be informed if payment of instalment more than thirty days overdue—Agreement to give time to hirer—When payment "overdue" [MIDLAND COUNTIES MOTOR FINANCE CO., LTD. v. SLADE] .. 821

HOLIDAYS

Remuneration. See WAGES.

HOSPITAL

See CHARITY; NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE; WILL.

HOTCHPOT

See ADMINISTRATION OF ESTATES (Partial intestacy).

HOUSING

Insanitary house—Notice to execute work—Appeal to county court—Owner's undertaking to do part of work—Power of court to quash notice as a whole—Housing Act, 1936 (c. 51), s. 9 (1), s. 15 (2) [COCHRANE v. CHANTONBURY RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL] .. 1134

Purchase price—Limitation—House built under building licence—Maximum rent to be charged on letting stated in application for licence—No condition limiting rent attached to licence—Condition limiting rent and purporting to be condition "attached to a building licence" registered as local land charge [R. v. BARNET, ETC., RENT TRIBUNAL. Ex parte REED'S INVESTMENTS, LTD.] .. 848

HUSBAND AND WIFE

Consortium—Right of consortium—Husband injured and losing sexual capacity owing to defendant's negligence—Defendant's liability to wife [BEST v. SAMUEL FOX & CO., LTD.] .. 798

Maintenance—Application to High Court—Injunction to prevent husband removing assets outside jurisdiction pending hearing of application—Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949 (c. 100), s. 5 (1) [SCOTT v. SCOTT] .. 1154

INCOME TAX

Compensation for loss of office—Term in service agreement for payment on termination of service agreement—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. E, r. 1 [DALE v. DE SOISSONS] .. 460

Deduction against profits—Brewery company—Tied houses—Premises held under long leases—Rent exceeding net annual value—Premises sub-let at rents lower than net annual value—Deduction of rent forgone—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. D, Cases I and II, r. 3 (m)—Finance Act, 1940 (c. 29), s. 17 (2) [TAMPLIN & SON'S BREWERY BRIGHTON, LTD. v. NASH] .. 93

Publication of journals for charity—Profits paid to charity—Liability of publishers in respect of profits [HUTCHINSON & CO., LTD. v. TURNER] .. 633

Subscriptions to charity on behalf of employees—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. D, Cases I and II, r. 3 (a) [HUTCHINSON & CO., LTD. v. TURNER] .. 633

Deduction of tax—Agreement to pay remuneration without deduction of tax—Validity—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), All Schedules Rules, r. 23 (2) [JAWORSKI v. INSTITUTION OF POLISH ENGINEERS IN GREAT BRITAIN, LTD.] .. 51, 1191

Income from foreign possessions—New source in year of assessment—Shares in foreign company—Acquired prior to 1942-43—Income first received in 1942-43—Liability to tax in that year—New source of income "in any year of assessment"—Finance Act, 1926 (c. 22), s. 30, proviso (ii) [GOODLASS WALL AND LEAD INDUSTRIES, LTD. v. ATKINSON] .. 314

Profit from profession or vocation—Authoress—Lump sum received for film rights of books—Capital or income—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. D, case II [HOWSON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. MONSELL] .. 1239

Profits of trade—Capital profit—Profit on collection of book debt—Book debt included among assets acquired from predecessor—Purchase of debt at discount—Election to be treated as having set up new trade—Ultimate payment of debt in full—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. D, Case I [REYNOLDS AND GIBSON v. CROMPTON] .. 502

Reliefs—Children's allowance—Secured maintenance order—Order providing for payment of annual sum to be held in trust for children—Treatment as husband's income of sums paid—"Settlement"—Settlor—Finance Act, 1936 (c. 34), s. 21 (1), (9) [YATES (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. STARKEY] .. 614

INCONVENIENCE

Damages for—Breach of contract. See CONTRACT (Breach—Damages).

INDICTMENT

See CRIMINAL LAW.

Customs offences. See CUSTOMS.

INDUSTRIAL DISEASE

See WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

INDUSTRY

Control. See CONTROL OF INDUSTRY.

INFANT

Application to make ward of court—Need for infant to be made respondent to originating summons—Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949 (c. 100), s. 9 [RE S. (AN INFANT)] .. 159

Maintenance—Application—Form of summons—Parties—Condition of making order that another should have applied for custody [RE DULLES' SETTLEMENT TRUSTS] .. 1013

Application to justices by mother for order against father—Venue—Child living out of England—Power of justices to make order [R. v. SANDBACH JUSTICES. Ex parte SMITH] .. 781

Father foreign citizen resident abroad—Submission of father to jurisdiction of High Court [RE DULLES' SETTLEMENT TRUSTS] .. 1013

Justices' order enforcing previous maintenance order—Right of appeal to High Court—Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925 (c. 45), s. 7 (3) [RE STERN] .. 160

See also DIVORCE; JUSTICES.

INFLAMMABLE SUBSTANCE

Cinematograph film—Storage. See CINEMATOGRAPH.

INJUNCTION

Husband and wife—Maintenance—Application to High Court—Injunction to prevent husband removing assets outside jurisdiction pending hearing of application for maintenance—Validity [SCOTT v. SCOTT] .. 1154

	PAGE
INSANITARY HOUSE See HOUSING.
INSANITY Defence to charge of cruelty [LISSACK v. LISSACK]	233
INSURANCE Life assurance— Estate duty on money received under policy. See ESTATE DUTY. Motor insurance— Third-party insurance. See STREET TRAFFIC (Driving uninsured motor vehicle).
INTEREST Arbitration— Award of damages—Power of arbitrator to award damages [CHANDEIS v. ISBRANDTSEN MOLLER Co., INC.] Sale of land— Interest on purchase price—Purchaser in possession before completion—Failure to complete—Payment of purchase money into court—Liability of purchaser to pay interest from date of lodgment until completion [PEARLBERG v. MAY]	618 1022
INTERNATIONAL LAW Recognition of foreign government— Retroactive effect—Payment of compensation to officers and men of Polish merchant navy on their leaving their ships—Offer made in London on July 5, 1945, by Minister of old Polish government, on behalf of Polish shipping company—Recognition by British government of new Polish government from midnight on July 5/6, 1945—Offer accepted and acted on, in England, after recognition of new Polish government [BOGUSLAWSKI v. GDOYNIA AMERYKA LINIE]	355
INTERROGATORIES See DISCOVERY.
INTESTACY Partial intestacy— Hotchpot. See ADMINISTRATION OF ESTATES.
JOINT TENANCY Under will— Disclaimer—Purported disclaimer by one joint tenant—Release [Re SCHAR, deceased]	1069
JOINT TORTFEASORS See TORT.
JUDGMENT Judgment on admission of facts— Discretion of court—Specially indorsed writ—Unconditional leave to defend granted although claim partially admitted—Defence partially admitting claim—Payment into court—R.S.C., Ord. 32, r. 6 [LANCASHIRE WELDERS, LTD. v. HARLAND AND WOLFE, LTD.]	1096
JUDICIAL SEPARATION See DIVORCE.
JURY Verdict— Need to take—Plea of Not Guilty—Withdrawal and admission of guilt [R. v. HEYES]	587
JUSTICES Bias— Application for possession of cottage—Clerk to justices having acted for vendor of cottage on sale to applicant several years previously—Advice to justices on evidence—Comment after decision of justices—Conclusion of justices that no case to answer—Decision announced during respondent's examination, and before cross-examination [R. v. LOWER MUNSLOW JUSTICES. Ex parte PUDGE] Infant— Custody and maintenance—Application by mother for order against father—Venue—Child living out of England—Power of justices to make order [R. v. SANDBACH JUSTICES. Ex parte SMITH] Sentence— Committal to quarter sessions—Case tried summarily on application of prosecution—Committal a nullity—Refusal of adjudication by quarter sessions—Power of justices to conclude hearing and pass sentence—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (c. 58), s. 28 (1), s. 29 (1) [R. v. SOUTH GREENHOE JUSTICES. Ex parte DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS]	756 781 42
LAND Building. See BUILDING LAND. Requisition. See REQUISITION. Sale of. See SALE OF LAND. Work on, under statutory authority— Entry on land by contractors under contract with Ministry—Negligence of contractors—Liability of Ministry [DARLING v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL]	793
LAND CHARGE Local land charge— Condition in building licence limiting rent. See RENT CONTROL.
LAND DRAINAGE Watercourse— Keeping clear of obstruction—Natural watercourse—Obstruction impeding flow of water and causing flooding—Liability of owner for failing to clear stream [NEATH RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL v. WILLIAMS]	625
LAND IMPLEMENT See STREET TRAFFIC (Trailer).
LANDLORD AND TENANT Access to demised premises— Maintenance—Duty of landlord—Stairway—Lighting [DEVINE v. LONDON HOUSING SOCIETY, LTD.] Attornment clause in mortgage— Creation of relationship [PORTMAN BUILDING SOCIETY v. YOUNG] Lease— Determination—Power for landlords to determine twenty-one years' lease at end of fourteen years if landlords "shall require the premises for the purpose of the business carried on by them"—Premises not required immediately at end of fourteen years—Only part of premises required [PARKINSON v. BARCLAYS BANK, LTD.] Encroachment by tenant on property of landlord adjoining demised premises, but not included in lease—Tenant claiming possession under lease—Acquiescence by landlords in de facto possession—Claim for cost of repairs [J. F. PERROTT & Co., LTD. v. COHEN] New lease— Joint landlords—Premises required for occupation by two of three landlords—Two landlords sons of third landlord—Reasonableness—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), s. 5 (2), s. 5 (3) (b) (i) [WETHERALL & Co., LTD. v. STONE] Time for making claim—"Within two months after service of notice"—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36), s. 5 (2) [KERRIDGE v. LAMBIN] Surrender of tenancy— Surrender by operation of law—Tenancy from year to year—Termination—Grant of licence to former tenant to occupy premises rent free [FOSTER v. ROBINSON]	1173 443 936 939 1209 1110 342

LEASE

See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

LEGACY

Payment by executor to wrong person—Recovery by unpaid legatee—Limitation of action
[MINISTRY OF HEALTH v. SIMPSON] 1137

LEGAL AID

Security for costs—Right of assisted person to order—Matrimonial cause—Amount of order—
Wife's case conducted by salaried solicitor—Wife poor person when application first made—
Legal Aid (General) Regulations, 1950 (S.I. 1950, No. 1359), reg. 5 (10) [WIGLEY v. WIGLEY] 1218

LEGITIMATION

Declaration of legitimacy—Declaration of legitimacy of uncle—"Ancestor"—Jurisdiction of court to make declaration—Legitimacy Act, 1926 (c. 60), s. 2 (1)—R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 5;
Ord. 34, r. 1 [KNOWLES v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL] 6

LIBEL

Damages—Special damages—Loss of employment following publication of libel—Determination of service not in breach of contract [LONGDON-GRIFFITHS v. SMITH] 662
Friendly society—Action against trustees—Competence [LONGDON-GRIFFITHS v. SMITH] 662
Particulars—Fair comment—General plea—Particulars of facts on which plea based [CUNNINGHAM-
HOWIE v. F. W. DIMBLEBY & SONS] 882 Privileged occasion—Four co-defendants—Malice found against one only—Effect on privilege of other defendants [LONGDON-GRIFFITHS v. SMITH] 662

LIEN

Enforcement—Sale—Jurisdiction of court to order sale where no right to sell at common law or in equity—R.S.C., Ord. 50, r. 2 [LARNER v. FAWCETT] 727
Solicitor's lien. See SOLICITOR.

LIFTING TACKLE

Safety provisions. See FACTORY.

LIMITATION OF ACTION

Public authority. See PUBLIC AUTHORITY.
Recovery of sum paid under invalid residuary bequest—Action by next of kin—Limitation Act,
1939 (c. 21), s. 20 [MINISTRY OF HEALTH v. SIMPSON] 1137

LOADING

Ship. See SHIPPING (Charterparty).

LOCAL GOVERNMENT

Alteration of area—Extension of county borough boundaries to include parts of rural districts—
Loss to rural district ratepayers—Abolition of rural district councils affected and districts amalgamated—Right of new rural district council to financial adjustment with county borough —"Property" of former rural district councils—Local Government Act, 1933 (c. 51), sched. V, r. 1 (a) [MAGOR AND ST. MELLONS RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL v. NEWPORT CORPORATION] 1226 Compensation to transferred officer—"Emoluments for which compensation granted"—
Increases of salary in new employment—Power to review compensation—Local Government Act, 1929 (c. 17), s. 123; sched. VIII, para. 14 [DODDS v. DURHAM COUNTY COUNCIL] .. 1090 Superannuation—"Continuous temporary service"—Period of rendering services broken by employee's participation in strike—City of London (Various Powers) Act, 1944 (c. iv),
s. 9 (2) [CARDY v. CITY OF LONDON CORPORATION] 475
Decision of claim by "authority concerned"—Scheme administered by county council—Employees of rural district council entitled to participate—Claim to annual superannuation allowance by former employee of rural district council—Claim admitted by rural district council, but rejected by county council—Local Government Superannuation Act, 1937 (c. 68),
s. 8, s. 35 [WALTER v. ETON RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL] 588

MAINTENANCE

See DIVORCE; INFANT; JUSTICES.
Order where husband neglects to provide for wife. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

MALICE

Libel—Privilege. See LIBEL.

MANDAMUS

Application for order directed to chairman of university convocation—Alleged refusal to per- form duty imposed by university statutes—Matter for visitor of university—Refusal to reemploy teacher in school [R. v. DUNSHEATH. Ex parte MEREDITH] 741

MARRIAGE

Marriage in Russia—Validity—Parties domiciled in England—Requirements of Soviet law not observed—"Mistake"—Wife forbidden to leave Russia—Avoidance for failure of condition
[KENWARD v. KENWARD] 297
Restraint—Condition in will—Motive [Re FENTEM (deceased)] 1073

MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT

See SETTLEMENT.

MASTER AND SERVANT

Contract of service—Memorandum or note—No mention of nature of duties—Implication of term as to reasonable notice of termination of contract where memorandum insufficient
[JAMES v. THOMAS H. KENT & CO., LTD.] 1099 Liability of master—Criminal act of servant—Scope of employment—Rent collector employed by estate agent—Authorisation by master to determine suitability of tenant—Requirement of premium as condition of grant of tenancy, contrary to Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949 (c. 40), s. 2 (1) [BARKER v. LEVINSON] 825
Negligence of servant—Liability of master. See NEGLIGENCE.
Provision of safe place for servant to work—Rainwater on floor of passage leading to canteen—
Workman slipping and suffering injury [DAVIES v. DE HAVILLAND AIRCRAFT CO., LTD.] 582

MEASURE OF DAMAGES

See DAMAGES; NEGLIGENCE.

Carriage by sea—Breach of contract. See SHIPPING.

MEDICAL SCHOOL Bequest to. See WILL (Gift to medical school of hospital).
MEMORANDUM Agreement beyond year. See CONTRACT. Contract for sale of land. See SALE OF LAND.
MENTAL DISTRESS Damages for— Breach of contract. See CONTRACT (Breach—Damages).
MERCANTILE AGENT See FACTOR.
METROPOLIS Police— Power of arrest—Suspicion of possession of stolen property—“ Having or conveying ” property in street—Search during voluntary visit to police station [WILLEY v. PEACE] ..	724
MINISTRY See GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENT.
MISTAKE Money paid under mistake— Recovery—Claim in equity—Residue of testator's estate paid to charitable institutions by executors—Directions in will void for uncertainty—Rights of those entitled under intestacy to recover from institutions sums paid [MINISTRY OF HEALTH v. SIMPSON] ..	1137
MORTGAGE Attornment clause— Creation of relationship of landlord and tenant—Application of Rent Restrictions Acts [PORTMAN BUILDING SOCIETY v. YOUNG] .. Possession of mortgaged property— Mortgagor not in occupation—Person in occupation under agreement with mortgagor—Need to join occupier as defendant to claim for possession by mortgagor—R.S.C., Ord. 55, r. 5A [LEICESTER PERMANENT BUILDING SOCIETY v. SHEARLEY] .. Requisition of land subject to mortgage— Application of compensation—Land leased to company—Covenant by lessee to insure against fire—Insurance to be laid out in re-building—Mortgage by lessee—Property destroyed by fire while requisitioned—Insurance policy not kept up—Whether compensation to be applied in same manner as money receivable under policy [RADNOR (EARL) v. FOLKESTONE PIER AND LIFT CO.] ..	443 738 690
MOTOR VEHICLE See STREET TRAFFIC.
MUTUAL WILLS See WILL.
NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE Legacy to hospital— Destruction of object—Vesting of hospital in Minister of Health after date of will but before death of testator—National Health Service Act, 1946 (c. 81), s. 6 [Re GLASS' WILL TRUSTS] ..	953
NATIONALISATION Coal industry. See COAL. Gas. See GAS.
NEGLIGENCE Damages— Measure—Expectation of life—Pain and suffering—Effect of devaluation of pound—Deductions from basic sum—Pension—Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846 (c. 93) to 1908 (c. 7)—Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934 (c. 41), s. 1 (1) [BISHOP v. CUNARD WHITE STAR, LTD. APPLEBY v. SAME. THE QUEEN MARY] .. Dangerous goods— Liability of manufacturer—Hair dye—Warning given by manufacturers to hairdresser—Character of preparation not brought to knowledge of customer—Failure of hairdresser to take precautions—Injury to customer [HOLMES v. ASHFORD] .. Highway— Unlighted motor-cycle stationary at night [HILL-VENNING v. BESZANT] .. Negligence of servant— Liability of master—Accident to unauthorised passenger in lorry—Extent of duty to take care [CONWAY v. GEORGE WIMPEY & CO., LTD.] .. Tree— Elm tree adjoining road—Fall on passing car—Fall due to disease—Liability of occupier of land [CAMINER v. NORTHERN AND LONDON INVESTMENT TRUST, LTD.] .. Wife's loss of consortium— Injury to husband causing sexual incapacity—Tortfeasor's liability to wife [BEST v. SAMUEL FOX AND CO., LTD.] .. Work on land under statutory authority— Entry on land by contractors under contract with Ministry—Negligence of contractors—Liability of Ministry—Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 50 (1) [DARLING v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL] ..	22 76 1151 331 486 798 793
NEW LEASE Under Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927. See LANDLORD AND TENANT (New lease).
NIGHT WATCHMAN Building site— Injury during week-end cessation of work—“ Efficient lighting ” of “ working-place ” [FIELD v. PERRYS (EALING) LTD.] ..	521
“ NO CASE ” Submission of— Trial by jury—Defendants not put to election whether to call evidence—Discretion of judge [YOUNG v. RANK] ..	166
“ NON-BREWED VINEGAR ” False trade description [KAT v. DIMENT] ..	657
NOTE Of contract for sale of land. See SALE OF LAND (Contract— Memorandum).
NOTICE OF INTENDED PROSECUTION. See STREET TRAFFIC (Dangerous driving).
NOTICE TO QUIT See AGRICULTURE (Agricultural holding).

NUISANCE

Ground for order for possession of dwelling-house. See RENT RESTRICTION.

Premises adjoining highway—Dwelling-house—Weekly tenancy—Collapse of wall—No express provision as to repairs—No right of entry reserved to landlord—Liability of landlord—Implication of right—Effect of Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 16 (2) [MINT v. GOOD] 1159

Statutory nuisance—Watercourse—Natural watercourse—Obstruction impeding flow of water and causing flooding—Liability of owner for failing to abate—Nuisance not due to owner's act or default—Land Drainage Act, 1930 (c. 44), s. 35 (1), s. 57 (1), (2)—Public Health Act, 1936 (c. 49), s. 93, s. 259 (1) (b), proviso [NEATH RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL v. WILLIAMS] 625

Tree—Elm tree adjoining road—Fall on passing car—Fall due to disease—Liability of occupier of land [CAMINER v. NORTHERN AND LONDON INVESTMENT TRUST, LTD.] 486

NULLITY

Conflict of laws—Marriage of British subject in Russia—Validity—Requirements of Soviet law not observed—No intention by Soviet officials that ceremony should be effective marriage—Mistake—No right to consortium—Wife forbidden to leave Russia—Avoidance for failure of condition [KENWARD v. KENWARD] 297

Polygamous marriage—Petitioner domiciled in England—Marriage in Egypt with Moslem domiciled in Egypt—Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949 (c. 100), s. 1 (1), (2) [RISK (otherwise YERBURGH) v. RISK] 973

OFFICE

Loss of—Compensation—Liability to income tax [DALE v. DE SOISSONS] 460

ORIGINATING SUMMONS

See PRACTICE.

ORNAMENT

Church. See ECCLESIASTICAL LAW.

PAIN AND SUFFERING

Element in assessing damages for negligence. See NEGLIGENCE (Damages).

PARTICULARS

See PRACTICE.

PARTIES

See PRACTICE.

PASSAGE

Factory, in—Maintenance. See FACTORY.

PASSENGER

Carriage of. See CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS.

PASSENGER STEAMER

Fishing vessel used for pleasure trip—Need for certificate as to survey [GRAHAM v. DUNCAN] 534

PAYMENT INTO COURT

See COSTS.

PENSION

Damages for negligence, consideration of pension in assessment. See NEGLIGENCE (Damages).

War. See WAR PENSION.

PENSIONS APPEAL TRIBUNAL

See WAR PENSION.

PERPETUAL ANNUITY

See ANNUITY.

PERPETUITIES

Charitable gift dependent on future uncertain event—Trustees directed to retain fund until such time as a candidate for the priesthood comes forward from a certain church [Re MANDER (deceased)] 191

Settlement—Limitation dependent on void limitation—Accord with previous valid limitations—"Issue" [Re MILL'S DECLARATION OF TRUST] 292

PETITION

Divorce. See DIVORCE.

PHOTOGRAPHER

Street photographer—Not a street trader [NEWMAN v. LIPMAN] 832

PILOT

See HARBOUR.

PLANNING

See TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING.

PLATE

Gold plate—Wedding ring—Need to bear hall-mark—Plate (Offences) Act, 1733 (c. 26), s. 1, s. 5—Gold Plate (Standard) Act, 1798 (c. 69), s. 1, s. 2, s. 6—Wedding Rings Act, 1855 (c. 60), s. 1—Gold Wares (Standard of Pineness) Order, 1932 (S.R. & O., 1932, No. 654), art. 2 [WESTWOOD v. CANN] 805

Silver plate—Cigarette case—Below statutory standard—Exposure to sale—Absence of hall-mark—Obligation to mark sub-standard goods—Liability of seller to penalty—Forfeiture of article—Stat. 8 & 9 Will. 3 c. 8, s. 8 (as amended by Plate Duty Act, 1719 (c. 11), s. 3)—Plate (Offences) Act, 1733 (c. 26), s. 1, s. 5 [WESTWOOD v. CANN] 805

POLICE

Arrest and search—Powers. See ARREST.

POLITICAL FUND

Trade union. See TRADE UNION.

POLYGAMOUS MARRIAGE

Petition for nullity. See NULLITY.

POULTRY SHED

Drawn by tractor—"Trailer"—"Land implement" [GARNER v. BURR] 683

POVERTY

Relief of—Charitable object. See CHARITY.

PRACTICE

- Originating summons—Guardianship of infant—Form—Parties—Condition of making order for maintenance that mother should have applied for custody—Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886 (c. 27), s. 5—Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925 (c. 45), s. 3 (2)—R.S.C., Ord. 55A, r. 2, r. 3 [Re DULLES' SETTLEMENT TRUSTS] 1013
- Parties—Summons by mortgagees for possession—Mortgagor not in occupation—Person in occupation under agreement with mortgagor—Need to join occupier as defendant to claim for possession by mortgagees—R.S.C., Ord. 55, r. 5A [LEICESTER PERMANENT BUILDING SOCIETY v. SHEARLEY]* 738
- Particulars—Action for an account—Particulars sought by defendant of sums paid to him by plaintiff—R.S.C., Ord. 19, r. 7 (b) [SHARER v. WALLACE] 463
- Parties—Adding defendants—Applicants not asserting title to property, but claiming possession or control through bank as bailee—Invocation of doctrine of immunity of foreign sovereign States—Applicants not necessary parties at commencement of action—Action against Bank of England for delivery up of gold bars deposited with bank by governments of United Kingdom, United States of America, and France—Application by governments of United States and France to be added as defendants—R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 11 [DOLLFUS MIEG ET COMPAGNIE S.A. v. BANK OF ENGLAND] 605
- Trial by jury—Submission of no case to answer—Defendants not put to election whether to call evidence—Discretion of judge [YOUNG v. RANK] 166

PREFERENTIAL PAYMENT

Assessed tax. See BANKRUPTCY (Preferential claim).

Company's winding-up: See COMPANY (Receiver).

PREMIUM

Condition of grant, etc., of tenancy. See RENT CONTROL (Premium).

Prohibition of payment by Rent Restrictions Acts. See RENT RESTRICTION (Premium).

PREVENTIVE DETENTION

See CRIMINAL LAW (Sentence).

PRIVATE COMPANY

See COMPANY.

PRIVILEGE

Discovery. See DISCOVERY.

Evidence. See DIVORCE (Evidence).

Libel. See LIBEL.

PRIZE LAW

Condemnation—Ship—Enemy flag—Duress—Ship built in Germany by German subsidiary of Dutch company under agreement with and subsidised by German government [THE UNITAS] 219

PROBATE

Defence—Want of knowledge and approval—Circumstances giving rise to suspicion—Need to be attendant on, or relevant to, preparation and execution of will—Allegation of immoral conduct between deceased and beneficiary struck out—Contentious Probate Rules, r. 40A—R.S.C., Ord. 19, r. 25 (a), r. 27 [Re R. (deceased)] 117

PROBATION OFFICER

Communications with—Privilege. See DIVORCE (Evidence).

PROBATION ORDER

See CRIMINAL LAW (Sentence).

PRODUCTION

Of documents. See DISCOVERY (Privilege).

PROFITS TAX

Computation of profits—Deduction of directors' remuneration—"Controlling interest" of directors—Shares registered in name of custodian trustee—Finance Act, 1937 (c. 54), sched. IV, para. 11 [INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. SILVERTS, LTD.] 271

Exemption—Statutory undertaker—"Authorized person" limited by enactment as regards charge for service—Carriage of passengers by road—Taxi-cab proprietors—Cabs licensed under statute—Maximum fares prescribed—Relationship between driver and company that of bailee and bailor of cab—Finance Act, 1937 (c. 54), s. 19 (5) [LONDON GENERAL CAB CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS] 566

PROMISE

Enforcement—Intention to create legal relationship—Unequivocal acceptance of liability—Intention that promisee will act on promise—Promise acted on [COMBE v. COMBE] 1115

PUBLIC AUTHORITY

Limitation of action—"Public duty or authority"—Agreement to augment teachers' war service pay—Limitation Act, 1939 (c. 21), s. 21 (1)—Local Government Staffs (War Service) Act, 1939 (c. 94), s. 1 (1) [TURBURVILLE v. WEST HAM CORPORATION] 54

PUBLIC HEALTH

Building regulations—Breach of bye-laws—Notice requiring removal of structures—Validity—"Owner" of premises—Statement as to right of appeal—Need to state right to apply for extension of time—Statutory extension of time limit—Form of notice to owner—Service on owner—Wrongful removal of structures—Damages—Public Health Act, 1936 (c. 49), s. 65 (1), (3), s. 300 (3), s. 343 (1)—Building Restrictions (War-Time Contraventions) Act, 1946 (c. 35), s. 3 (1) [NALDER v. ILFORD CORPORATION] 903

PURCHASE TAX

Chargeable process—Conversion of army wireless type vehicle into shooting brake—Finance Act, 1946 (c. 64), s. 16 (1), (3) [COLEBORN & SONS, LTD. v. BLOND] 351

QUARTER SESSIONS

Appeal to—Customs offence—Condemnation of goods by magistrate—Claimants ordered to pay five guineas costs—Appeal by claimants to quarter sessions against order of condemnation—Competency [R. v. LONDON (COUNTY) QUARTER SESSIONS. Ex parte BOWES]	1043
Young person—Approved school order—Order against young person aged sixteen—Appeal by parent—Young person over seventeen when appeal heard—Jurisdiction to hear appeal [RUGMAN v. DROVER]	575
Committal of offender to, for sentence—Duty to ascertain whether appeal against conviction pending [R. v. FAITHFUL]	1251
Costs—Appeal from court of summary jurisdiction—Costs of successful appellant disallowed—Reason for disallowance stated by court—Decision based on conclusion of court on material issue—Appellant's evidence not heard [BECKER v. PURCHASE]	837
Sentence—Committal by justices of offender for sentence. See JUSTICES (Sentence).

RATES

Company's winding-up—Preferential payment—Failure to pay out of assets coming into receiver's hands—Subsequent loss of assets—Liability of receiver [WESTMINSTER CITY COUNCIL v. HASTE]	65
---	----

RECEIVING STOLEN GOODS

See CRIMINAL LAW.

RECTIFICATION

No power in rent tribunal to rectify written tenancy agreement [R. v. HACKNEY, ISLINGTON AND STOKE NEWINGTON RENT TRIBUNAL. Ex parte KEATS]	138
---	-----

REGISTRAR OF FRIENDLY SOCIETIES

Approval of trade union rules—Effect [BIRCH v. NATIONAL UNION OF RAILWAYMEN]	253
--	-----

REGULATION OF WAGES

See WAGES.

RENTAL EQUIVALENT

See RENT CONTROL (Tribunal).

RENT CONTROL

Premium—Purchase price of goodwill of business—Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949 (c. 40), s. 2 (2), s. 18 (2), sched. I, Part I, para. 1 [R. v. BARNET, ETC., RENT TRIBUNAL. Ex parte MILLMAN]	216
Tribunal—Certiorari—Rental equivalent—Determination—Premium—Payment to lessor for work done to premises—Payment to lessor of half profit on assignment of lease—Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949 (c. 40), s. 1 (5), s. 18 (2), sched. I, Part I, para. 1 [R. v. FULHAM, HAMMERSMITH AND KENSINGTON RENT TRIBUNAL. Ex parte PHILIPPE]	211
Jurisdiction—"Limitation of rent under any enactment"—Dwelling-house built under building licence—Maximum rent to be charged on letting stated in application for licence—No condition limiting rent attached to licence—Condition limiting rent and purporting to be condition "attached to a building licence" registered as local land charge under Land Charges Act, 1925 (c. 22), s. 15, pursuant to Building Materials and Housing Act, 1945 (c. 20), s. 8 (1)—Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949 (c. 40), s. 1 (7) (b) [R. v. BARNET, ETC., RENT TRIBUNAL. Ex parte REEDS INVESTMENTS, LTD.]	848
Powers—Rectification of written tenancy agreement—Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949 (c. 40), s. 1 [R. v. HACKNEY, ISLINGTON AND STOKE NEWINGTON RENT TRIBUNAL. Ex parte KEATS]	138

RENT RESTRICTION

County court—Jurisdiction—Breach of covenant to repair in original tenancy agreement—Claim for £414 damages—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 15 (1), s. 17 (2) [WOLFE v. CLARKSON]	529
Death of tenant—"Member of tenant's family"—Daughter residing in house at time of statutory tenant's death—Unconditional order for possession made against tenant before death, but suspended—Death of statutory tenant before date for possession—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (1) (g) [AMERICAN ECONOMIC LAUNDRY v. LITTLE]	1186
Reputed husband of tenant—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (1) (g) (as amended by Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 13, and Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1935 (c. 13), s. 1) [GAMMANS v. EKINS]	140
Implied condition of tenancy—Access by landlord to execute repairs—Not equivalent to express reservation of right of access and entry [MINT v. GOOD]	1159
Mortgage—Attornment clause—Creation of relationship of landlord and tenant—Application of Rent Restrictions Acts [PORTMAN BUILDING SOCIETY v. YOUNG]	443
Nuisance—Suffering premises to be used for immoral purposes—Order for possession suspended indefinitely—Right of landlord to immediate possession—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 5 (2) (as substituted by Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923 (c. 32), s. 4)—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 3 (1), sched. I, para. (b) [YATES v. MORRIS]	577
Premium—Recovery—Agreement made after March 25, 1949—Counterclaim for avoidance of lease and for possession—Premium paid and agreement executed before June 2, 1949—Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949 (c. 40), s. 2 (5) [HABERMAN v. WESTMINSTER PERMANENT BUILDING SOCIETY]	16
Standard rent—Apportionment—Flat let with another flat—Whole dwelling outside Rent Acts—Flat first let as separate dwelling subsequently—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (1), (3) [CAPITAL AND PROVINCIAL PROPERTY TRUST, LTD. v. RICE]	174
Premises let with dwelling-house—House let on Sept. 1, 1939—Subsequent letting of house and separate garage—Treatment of garage as part of dwelling-house—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71), s. 3 (3) [LANGFORD PROPERTY CO. v. BATTEN]	1079
Statutory tenant—Retention of possession after end of contractual tenancy—Lease of shop and dwelling-house—Dwelling-house sub-let—Expiration of lease—Tenant not then occupying dwelling-house—Subsequent resumption of possession—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 15 (1) [JOHN M. BROWN, LTD. v. BESTWICK]	338

	PAGE
RENT RESTRICTION—continued
Sub-tenancy—Exclusive use of part of house—Kitchen and other essential parts of house shared with tenant—Surrender of tenancy by tenant—Landlord's right to possession against sub-tenant—Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949 (c. 40), s. 9 [SHACKLETON v. GREENHALGH]	1223
Surrender of tenancy—Contractual tenancy from year to year—Agreement to terminate tenancy and grant of licence to former tenant—Validity [FOSTER v. ROBINSON]	342
RENTCHARGE
Improvement—"Redemption"—Payment by tenant for life under settlement of periodical instalments representing capital and interest—Right to recoupment out of capital [Re SANDBACH (deceased)]	1195
REPAIR
Settled property—Expenditure by tenant for life—Recoupment out of capital money [Re DUKE OF NORTHUMBERLAND (deceased)]	1181
REPUTATION
Contract. See CONTRACT.
REQUISITION
Land—Compensation—Application of compensation—Land subject to mortgage—Land leased to company—Covenant by lessee to insure against fire—Insurance money to be laid out in re-building—Mortgage by lessee—Property destroyed by fire while requisitioned—Insurance policy not kept up—Whether compensation to be applied in same manner as money receivable under policy—Compensation (Defence) Act, 1939 (c. 75), s. 2 (1) (b), s. 14 [RADNOR (EARL) v. FOLKESTONE PIER AND LIFT CO.]	690
Right of owner to compensation—Formal claim made by lessee—"Owner"—Computation of rackrent—Regard to restrictive covenants in lease—Date at which rackrent to be computed—Compensation (Defence) Act, 1939 (c. 75), s. 2 (3), s. 11, s. 17 (1)—Public Health Act, 1936 (c. 49), s. 343 (1) [BORTHWICK-NORTON v. COLLIER]	204
RESERVATION
Of easement. See EASEMENT.
REVENUE
Stamp duty—Voluntary disposition—Deed of declaration of trust made under power in earlier deed to vary trusts—Whether chargeable with ad valorem stamp duty—Stamp Act, 1891 (c. 39), s. 62—Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910 (c. 8), s. 74 (1) [FULLER v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS]	976
RING
Wedding ring—Need to bear hall-mark. See PLATE.
ROAD TRAFFIC
See STREET TRAFFIC.
RULE AGAINST PERPETUITIES
See PERPETUITIES.
SAFE MEANS OF ACCESS
See FACTORY.
SAFE SYSTEM OF WORKING
See MASTER AND SERVANT.
SALE
Lien—Enforcement—Jurisdiction of court to order sale where no right to sell at common law or in equity [LARNER v. FAWCETT]	727
SALE OF GOODS
Non-delivery—Conditions in regard to sale by dealer imposed by manufacturer after date of contract between dealer and customer—Customer required to enter into covenant against re-sale—Refusal by customer to enter into covenant—Dealer's failure to deliver car—Liability of dealer [MONKLAND v. JACK BARCLAY, LTD.]	715
Delivery to be within reasonable time—Refusal by manufacturer to supply dealer except subject to conditions regarding sale by dealer unacceptable by purchaser—Liability of dealer [HARTWELLS OF OXFORD, LTD. v. BRITISH MOTOR TRADE ASSOCIATION]	705
SALE OF LAND
Contract—Memorandum—Deficiency in memorandum supplied by second document—No reference in second document to memorandum—Omission of material term in alleged memorandum—Concession by plaintiff of term in favour of defendant to render contract enforceable—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 40 (1) [BURGESS v. COX]	1212
Parties—Agent of purchaser contracting in own name—Knowledge of agency by vendor—Right of purchaser to maintain action for specific performance—Vendors tenants in common—One vendor having no power to convey interest—Right of purchaser to order against other vendors in respect of their shares [ABDUL KARIM BASMA v. WEEKES]	146
Time of the essence—Failure to complete purchase—Time not initially of the essence—Subsequent introduction of term—"Impropriety" on part of purchaser—Request for delay—Right to forfeit deposit and re-sell—Damages when property wrongfully re-sold [SMITH v. HAMILTON]	928
Interest on purchase price—Purchaser in possession before completion—Failure to complete—Payment of purchase money into court—Liability of purchaser to pay interest from date of lodgment until completion [PEARLBERG v. MAY]	1022
SAMPLE
Under Food and Drugs Act. See FOOD AND DRUGS.
SEA
Carriage by. See SHIPPING.
SEARCH
See ARREST.
SECRET TRUST
See TRUST AND TRUSTEE.
SECURITY FOR COSTS
See COSTS.
Assisted person. See LEGAL AID.

SENTENCE

See CRIMINAL LAW; JUSTICES.

SERVANT

See MASTER AND SERVANT.

SERVICE

Contract of. See MASTER AND SERVANT.

Divorce petition. See DIVORCE (Petition).

SETTLED LAND

Improvement rentcharge—"Redemption"—"Tithe annuity"—"Discharge"—Payment by tenant for life of periodical instalments under rentcharge, representing capital and interest, and of annuities—Right to recoupment, in respect of such part of payments as represented capital, out of capital moneys subject to settlement—Settled Land Act, 1925 (c. 18), s. 73 (1) (xiii), (xvi) [Re SANDBACH (deceased)] 1195

Repairs—Expenditure by tenant for life—Recoupment of capital money—"Landlord"—Settled Land Act, 1925 (c. 18), s. 73 (1) (iv), s. 75 (2)—Agriculture Act, 1947 (c. 48), s. 22 (4)—Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948 (c. 63), s. 96 (1), sched. III, para. 23 [Re DUKE OF NORTHUMBERLAND (deceased)] 1181

SETTLEMENT

Limitation dependent on void limitation—Accord with previous valid limitations—"Issue" [Re MILL'S DECLARATION OF TRUST] 292

Marriage settlement—Gift of £20,000 by will to be held on trusts of daughter's marriage settlement—Covenant by testator in settlement to bring £10,000 into the settlement—£20,000 declared to be "in addition" to the £10,000—Settlement trust fund vested in daughter's son—Death of son before death of testator—Destination of £20,000 on daughter's death [Re HICKMAN'S WILL TRUSTS] 285

Settled land—Capital moneys—Application to purpose not authorised by trust instrument—Compensation for chattels destroyed by enemy action—Purchase thereof of chattels to devolve as heirlooms—Settled Land Act, 1925 (c. 18), s. 64 [Re MOUNT EDGUMBE SETTLED ESTATES] 242

Trust—Discretionary trust—Trustees directed "to pay or apply" income of trust fund during specified period to or for "the support or benefit of all or any one or more" of a named class of persons—Corpus to be divided at end of specified period—Beneficiaries of discretionary trust having only contingent interest in corpus—Exercise of trust—Allocations of income in favour of infant beneficiaries—Resolution of trustees that sums "shall belong" to or be divided among each of the infant beneficiaries—Sums allocated to infants not being required for their maintenance, resolution to accumulate—Trustee Act, 1925 (c. 19), s. 31 (2) [Re VESTEY'S SETTLEMENT] 891

Variation. See VARIATION OF SETTLEMENT.

SHERIFF

Sale by. See EXECUTION.

"SHIFTING CLAUSE"

See WILL.

SHIP

Condemnation as prize. See PRIZE LAW.

SHIPPING

Bill of lading—Inclusion of term at variance with contract between parties—Admissibility of evidence as to true contract [THE ARDENNES (OWNER OF CARGO) v. ARDENNES (OWNERS)] 517

Carriage by sea—Breach of contract—Measure of damages—Shipper taking delivery and paying freight—Right to recover increase in import duty and loss of profit [THE ARDENNES (OWNER OF CARGO) v. THE ARDENNES (OWNERS)] 517

Charterparty—Loading—"Ready to load"—Stowage space occupied by bunkers—Mainmast and after derricks not in position [NOEMI JULIA STEAMSHIP CO., LTD. v. MINISTER OF FOOD] 699

Passenger steamer—Fishing vessel used for pleasure trip—Need for certificate as to survey—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (c. 60), s. 267, s. 271 (1) [GRAHAM v. DUNCAN] 584

SILVER PLATE

See PLATE.

SMUGGLING

See CUSTOMS.

SOCIAL PRESTIGE

Loss—Damages for—Breach of contract. See CONTRACT (Breach—Damages).

SOLICITOR

Breach of duty—Client's action founded in contract—Measure of damages [BAILEY v. BULLOCK] 1167

Costs—Lien—Money in "client account"—Charging order—Plaintiff awarded decree of specific performance subject to payment of money to defendant—"Property recovered or preserved" through solicitor's instrumentality—Solicitors Act, 1932 (c. 37), s. 69 [LOESCHER v. DEAN] 124

Lien—Title deed and mortgage deed—Solicitor acting for mortgagor and mortgagee—Deeds in custody of solicitor—Death of mortgagee—Solicitor co-executor—Transfer of mortgage to solicitor—Redemption—Right of solicitor to retain deeds [BARRATT v. GOUGH-THOMAS] 1048

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE

Jurisdiction of county court—Agreement to erect fence [BOURNE v. McDONALD] 183

Sale of land—Right of purchaser to maintain action—Agent of purchaser contracting in own name—Knowledge of agency by vendor—Vendors tenants in common—One vendor having no power to convey interest—Right of purchaser to order against other vendors in respect of their shares [ABDUL KARIM BASMA v. WEEKES] 146

SPEED

Excessive speed. See STREET TRAFFIC.

STAIRWAY

Access to demised premises—Duty of landlord to light [DEVINE v. LONDON HOUSING SOCIETY, LTD.] 1178

STAMP DUTY

See REVENUE.

STANDARD RENT

See RENT RESTRICTION.

STATUTORY NUISANCE

See NUISANCE.

STOPPING UP

Highway. See HIGHWAY.

STREET PHOTOGRAPHER

See STREET TRADING.

STREET TRADING

Street photographer—Not a street trader—London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1947 (c. xlv), s. 17 (2) [NEWMAN v. LIPMAN] 832

- STREET TRAFFIC

Dangerous driving—Notice of intended prosecution—Notice sent by registered post to defendant's permanent residence eleven days after commission of the offence—Defendant known to be then seriously ill in hospital—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 21 (c) [HOLT v. DYSON] 840Driving uninsured motor vehicle—Avoidance of disqualification—No "special reasons" found—Conditional discharge—Exercise of discretion—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 35 (2)—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (c. 58), s. 7 (1), s. 12 (2) [TAYLOR v. SAYCELL] 887Charge of using motor vehicle and trailer while uninsured—Wrong description of offence—Charge not amended—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 35 (1) [ROGERSON v. STEPHENS] 144Disqualification—Power to limit disqualification to driving of vehicle in relation to which offence committed—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 6 (1), s. 35 (2) [BURROWS v. HALL] 156"Special reason" for refraining from disqualification—Insurers willing to admit liability—Taxi-cab under repair—Insurance cover suspended during overhaul—Renewed user through oversight—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 35 (2) [PILBURY v. BRAZIER] 835Validity of policy—Policy covering facts constituting offence against Road Traffic Act—Use of tractor with two trailers covered—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 18 (1), s. 35 (1) [LEGGATE v. BROWN] 564Excessive speed—Proof of speed—Evidence by one police officer of speedometer reading—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 10 (3) (as substituted by Road Traffic Act, 1934 (c. 50), s. 2 (3)) [PENNY v. NICHOLAS] 89Traffic sign—"Slow"—Duty of driver [BUFFEL v. CARDOX (GT. BRITAIN), LTD.] 878Trailer—Poultry shed drawn by tractor—"Land Implement"—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 1—Motor Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 670), reg. 3 (1) [GARNER v. BURR] 683

SUBSTITUTED SERVICE

See DIVORCE (Petition).

SUPERANNUATION

Local government officers. See LOCAL GOVERNMENT (Superannuation).

SURRENDER

Of tenancy. See LANDLORD AND TENANT; RENT RESTRICTION.

TAXATION

Of costs. See COSTS.

TEACHER

Remuneration. See EDUCATION.

TENANCY

Joint. See JOINT TENANCY.

Weekly. See WEEKLY TENANCY.

Surrender. See LANDLORD AND TENANT; RENT RESTRICTION.

TENANT

Encroachment on property of landlord—Liability for cost of repairs. See LANDLORD AND TENANT (Lease).

TIED HOUSE

See BREWERY COMPANY.

TIME

Essence of contract. See SALE OF LAND (Contract).

TITHE

Annuity—"Discharge"—Payment of annuity by tenant for life under settlement—Right to recoupment out of capital [Re SANDBACH (deceased)] 1195

TORT

Joint tortfeasors—Administration of interrogatories by one tortfeasor to another—Necessity of notice [CLAYSON v. ROLLS ROYCE, LTD.] 884

TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING

Highway—Stopping up—Power of Minister of Transport—Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (c. 51), s. 49 (1) [HARLOW v. MINISTER OF TRANSPORT] 1005Land held on charitable trusts—Benefit to community—Promotion of industry, commerce and art [CRYSTAL PALACE TRUSTEES v. MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING] 857War damage—Compulsory purchase order—Direction by Minister that application for order under Act of 1944 be continued after Act of 1947 came into force—Direction given before Act of 1947 came into force—Validity—Interpretation Act, 1889 (c. 63), s. 37—Town and Country Planning Act, 1944 (c. 47), s. 1 (1)—Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (c. 51), s. 113 (2), (5), sched. X, para. 16 [R v. MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING. Ex parte MONTAGUE BURTON, LTD.] 282

TRACTOR

Drawing two laden trailers—Third party risks covered by insurance policy—Validity of policy [LEGGATE v. BROWN] 564

TRADE DESCRIPTION

False description. See TRADE MARK.

TRADE MARK

- False trade description—Description false, but recognised by trade—"Non-brewed vinegar"—"Intent to defraud"—Offence against statute—Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (c. 28), s. 2 (1) (d) [KAT v. DIMENT] 657

TRADE UNION

- Action by member against union—Matter of substance, tainted with oppression—Invasion of members' individual rights [EDWARDS v. HALLIWELL] 1064
- Political fund—Member "contracting out"—Rules approved by Registrar of Friendly Societies—Effect of approval—Rule resulting in exclusion of exempted member from office—Validity—Trade Union Act, 1913 (c. 30), s. 3 (1) (b) [BIRCH v. NATIONAL UNION OF RAILWAYMEN] .. 253

TRAFFIC SIGN

See STREET TRAFFIC (Traffic sign).

TRAILER

See STREET TRAFFIC (Trailer).

TRANSFERRED OFFICER

Of local authority—Compensation. See LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

TREE

- Elm tree adjoining road—Fall on passing car—Fall due to disease—Liability of occupier of land [CAMINER v. NORTHERN AND LONDON INVESTMENT TRUST, LTD.] 486

TRIAL

See CRIMINAL LAW; PRACTICE.

TRUST AND TRUSTEE

- Discretionary trust—Trustees directed "to pay or apply" income of trust fund during specified period to or for "the support or benefit of all or any one or more" of a named class of persons—Corpus to be divided at end of specified period—Beneficiaries of discretionary trusts having only contingent interest in corpus—Exercise of trust—Allocations of income in favour of infant beneficiaries—Resolution of trustees that sums "shall belong" to each of the infant beneficiaries—Sums allocated to infants not being required for their maintenance, resolution to accumulate—Trustee Act, 1925 (c. 19), s. 31 (2) [Re VESTET'S SETTLEMENT] 891
- Duty of trustee—Sale of property—Overriding duty to obtain best price—Negotiations in advanced stage—Higher purchase price offered by third party [BUTTLE v. SAUNDERS] 193
- Secret trust—Purposes communicated orally to one executor—Trusts to take effect after death of that executor by means of will of executor—Establishment of terms of trust by affidavit evidence [Re YOUNG (deceased)] 1245

TURNOVER

- Turnover of "company's annual business"—Sums to be included [ARIS-BAINBRIDGE v. TURNER MANUFACTURING CO., LTD.] 1178

UNCERTAINTY

Of object of gift in will. See CHARITY.

UNINCORPORATED BODY

- Gift, to—Perpetual annuity—Validity [Re JONES (deceased)] 239

UNIVERSITY

- Mandamus—Application for order directed to chairman of convocation—Alleged refusal to perform duty imposed by university statutes—Matter for visitor of university—Refusal to re-employ teacher in school [R. v. DUNSHEATH. Ex parte MEREDITH] 741

VAGRANCY

See CRIMINAL LAW.

VARIATION OF SETTLEMENT

- Variation inimical to interests of children—Compensation of children—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 191 (1), s. 192 [MAXWELL v. MAXWELL] .. 979

VOLUNTARY DISPOSITION

Liability to stamp duty. See REVENUE.

WAGES

- Regulation—Holiday remuneration—Order fixing remuneration—Remuneration to "accrue" in respect of periods before coming into force of order—Validity of order—Wholesale Mantle and Costume Wages Council (Great Britain) Wages Regulation (Holidays) Order, 1949 (S.I. 1949, No. 1402), sched., para. 9 [MASTER LADIES TAILORS ORGANISATION v. MINISTER OF LABOUR AND NATIONAL SERVICE] 525

WAR DAMAGE

- Compulsory purchase of war-damaged hereditament—Compensation—Flats subject to Rent Acts demolished by enemy action—Whether compensation to be assessed on basis that rents controlled [EAST END DWELLINGS CO., LTD. v. FINSBURY BOROUGH COUNCIL] 81, 943
- Compulsory purchase order—Direction by Minister that application for order under Town and Country Planning Act, 1944, be continued after Act of 1947 came into force—Direction given before Act of 1947 came into force—Validity [R. v. MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING. Ex parte MONTAGUE BURTON, LTD.] 282
- Damage not made good—Discretion of War Damage Commission—Amount of payment—Payment of interest—War Damage Act, 1943 (c. 21), s. 13 (1) (b) [Re Nos. 102—107 FETTER LANE] .. 479

WAR INJURY

- Injury caused by impact of aircraft on property—Injury sustained by passenger in aircraft—Injury sustained abroad—Personal Injuries (Emergency Provisions) Act, 1939 (c. 82), s. 8 (1) [HOWGATE v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL] 1104

WAR PENSION

- Tribunal requiring report of specialist—Report favourable to claimant—Minister obtaining report of independent medical expert—Tribunal's rejection of claim based on report to Minister—Validity of procedure—Pensions Appeal Tribunals (England and Wales) Rules, 1946 (S.R. & O., 1946, No. 1708/L.22), r. 15 (2), (3)—Royal Warrant concerning Retired Pay, Pensions, etc., 1949 (Cmd. 7699), art. 4 (2) [SHARP v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS] 1012

WARD OF COURT

- Application to make infant a ward—Need for infant to be made respondent to originating summons [Re S. (AN INFANT)] 159

WARRANTY

See CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS.

WATERCOURSE

Obstruction impeding flow of water. See LAND DRAINAGE; NUISANCE.

WEDDING RING

Need to bear hall-mark. See PLATE.

WEEKLY TENANCY

Repairs—Implication of liability of landlord—Right to enter and effect repairs [MINT v. GOOD] .. 1159

WILL

"All his worldly goods and chattels both real and personal"—Inclusion of real property [Re YOUNG (deceased)] .. 1245

Annuity. See ANNUITY.

Attestation—Attestation by beneficiary under secret trust—Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 15 [Re YOUNG (deceased)] .. 1245

Condition—Certainty—To J. "if he shall occupy my freehold property" [Re FIELD'S WILL TRUSTS] .. 188

Disposition of entailed interest—"Devise referring specifically to the property"—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 176 (1) [Re MANOR FARM, KYTES HARDWICK] .. 572

Forfeiture clause—Income payable to beneficiary "so long as he shall be able to give a personal discharge"—Appointment of receiver in lunacy of beneficiary's estate [Re OPPENHEIM'S WILL TRUSTS] .. 86

Restraint of marriage—Motive—Construction of words of futurity [Re FENTEM (deceased)] .. 1073

Gift to hospital "if not taken over by the State"—Residuary gift to same hospital—Effect of condition on residuary gift [Re FRERE (deceased)] .. 513

Gift to medical school of hospital—Gift over if hospital nationalised or passes into public ownership—Whether gift over takes effect consequent on National Health Service Act—National Health Service Act, 1946 (c. 81), s. 8 (1), s. 15 (1) [Re BLAND-SUTTON'S WILL TRUSTS] .. 466

Joint tenancy—Disclaimer—Release—Purported disclaimer by one joint tenant [Re SCHAR (deceased)] .. 1069

Lapse—Gift of £20,000 to be held on trusts of daughter's marriage settlement—Covenant by testator in settlement to bring £10,000 into the settlement—£20,000 declared to be "in addition" to the £10,000—Settlement trust fund vested in daughter's son—Death of son before death of testator—Destination of £20,000 on daughter's death [Re HICKMAN'S WILL TRUSTS] .. 285

Legacy—Destruction of object—Gift to hospital—Vesting of hospital in Minister of Health after date of will but before death of testator—National Health Service Act, 1946 (c. 81), s. 6 [Re GLASS' WILL TRUSTS] .. 953

Mutual wills—Identical terms—Husband and wife—Recital of agreement to make mutual wills—Each given absolute interest—In case of lapse, residuary estate divided into moieties, one moiety to be regarded as testator's personal moiety and the other as deceased spouse's moiety—Fresh will by husband after accepting benefit under wife's will—Implied trust in regard to wife's moiety of husband's residuary estate—Whether pecuniary legatees entitled to take as beneficiaries under trusts of wife's moiety and as legatees of similar legacies under second will [Re GREEN (deceased)] .. 913

"Personal belongings" [Re HYNES (deceased)] .. 879

"Personal chattels as defined by Administration of Estates Act, 1925"—"Article of personal use"—Motor yacht, bought and used entirely for pleasure cruises—Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (c. 23), s. 55 (1) (x) [Re CHAPLIN (deceased)] .. 155

Residuary gift—"All my real estate" [Re RIDLEY (deceased)] .. 1

Shifting clause—Validity—Uncertainty [Re WILSON'S WILL TRUSTS] .. 955

WINDING-UP

Of company. See COMPANY (Winding-up).

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION

Compensation—Calculation of weekly payments—Change in rates of remuneration—Alteration in working hours—Same wage paid for forty-four hour week as previously paid for forty-eight hour week—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1943 (c. 6), s. 6 (1) [RAILWAY EXECUTIVE v. CULKIN] .. 637

Industrial disease—Certificate of disablement given after July 5, 1948—Workman not insured against disease—National Insurance (Industrial Injuries) Act, 1946 (c. 62), s. 89 (1), proviso (a) [HOLLOWAY v. MOBBERLEY & PERRY, LTD.] .. 761

YACHT

Sixty-foot motor yacht "article of personal use" within Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 55 (1) (x) [Re CHAPLIN (deceased)] .. 155

YOUNG PERSON

See CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS.

CASES REFERRED TO

	PAGE
Adam S.S. Co., Ltd. v. London Assurance Corp., [1914] 3 K.B. 1256; 83 L.J.K.B. 1861; 111 L.T. 1031; 18 Digest 138, 890	596, 597, 603, 605
Adam W. Spies, The, (1901), 70 L.J.P. 25; 41 Digest 683, 5124	415, 433
Adams v. Naylor, [1946] 2 All E.R. 241; [1946] A.C. 543; 115 L.J.K.B. 356; 175 L.T. 97; 2nd Digest Supp.	1105, 1108
Addis v. Gramophone Co., Ltd., [1909] A.C. 488; 78 L.J.K.B. 1122; 101 L.T. 466; 17 Digest 78, 1	1168, 1170
Admiralty Comrs. v. S.S. Volute, [1922] 1 A.C. 129; 91 L.J.P. 38; 126 L.T. 425; 41 Digest 780, 6417	415, 438
Aga Khan v. Times Publishing Co., Dawson v. Same, [1924] 1 K.B. 675; 93 L.J.K.B. 361; 130 L.T. 746; 32 Digest 153, 1847	882, 883
Aksionainoye Obschestvo A. M. Luther v. Sagor (James) & Co., [1921] 3 K.B. 532; 90 L.J.K.B. 1202; 125 L.T. 705; 11 Digest 309, 17	357, 363, 364, 372
Alexander v. Rayson, [1936] 1 K.B. 169; 105 L.J.K.B. 148; 154 L.T. 205; Digest Supp. 167, 168, 169	1100, 1101
Alexander's Timber Co., Re, (1901), 70 L.J.Ch. 767; 9 Digest 592, 3493	1100, 1101
Allard v. Selfridge & Co., [1925] 1 K.B. 129; 94 L.J.K.B. 374; 132 L.T. 377; 88 J.P. 204; 43 Digest 240, 850	657, 659, 660
Allen v. Flood, [1898] A.C. 1; 67 L.J.Q.B. 119; 77 L.T. 717; 62 J.P. 595; 1 Digest 33, 253	798, 801
Alliance Building Society v. Varma, [1949] 2 All E.R. 261; [1949] Ch. 724; [1949] L.J.R. 1452; 2nd Digest Supp.	738, 739
Alsop v. Oxford (Lord), (1833), 1 My. & K. 564; 2 L.J.Ch. 174; 39 E.R. 794; 42 Digest 214, 2390	385, 387
Amalgamated Society of Engineers v. Jones, (1913), 29 T.L.R. 484; 43 Digest 101, 1050	1064, 1066
Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants v. Osborne, [1910] A.C. 87; 79 L.J.Ch. 87; 101 L.T. 787; 43 Digest 93, 963	253, 255
Amand, Re, [1941] 2 K.B. 239; 110 L.J.K.B. 524; subsequent proceedings, on appeal, sub nom., Amand v. Secretary of State for Home Affairs, [1942] 2 All E.R. 381; sub nom., Amand v. Home Secretary and Minister of Defence of Royal Netherlands Government, [1943] A.C. 147; sub nom., R. v. Secretary of State for Home Affairs and Minister of Defence of the Royal Netherlands Government, Ex p. Amand, 111 L.J.K.B. 657; 167 L.T. 177; 2nd Digest Supp.	357, 372
Anchor Line v. Dundee Harbour Trustees, The Circassia, Ellerman Lines v. Dundee Harbour Trustees, The City of Naples, 1922 S.C. (H.L.) 79; 58 Sc. L.R. 440; [1922] S.L.T. 137; 41 Digest 970, t	415, 427
Anderson v. Bank of British Columbia, (1876), 2 Ch.D. 644; 45 L.J.Ch. 449; 35 L.T. 76; 18 Digest 131, 823	596, 597, 600, 602
Anglo-Celtic Shipping Co., Ltd. v. Elliott and Jeffery, (1926), 42 T.L.R. 297; 36 Digest 57, 363	76, 77
Anstead, Re, [1943] 1 All E.R. 522; [1943] Ch. 161; 112 L.J.Ch. 161; 168 L.T. 309; 2nd Digest Supp.	2, 3
Apollinaris Co. v. Wilson, (1886), 31 Ch.D. 632; 55 L.J.Ch. 665; 54 L.T. 478; Digest, Practice, 911, 4538	607, 611
Arantzazu Mendi, The, [1939] 1 All E.R. 719; [1939] A.C. 256; 160 L.T. 513; sub nom., Spain Republic Government v. Arantzazu Mendi, 108 L.J.P. 55; Digest Supp.	357, 372
Arlidge v. Tottenham Urban Council, [1922] 2 K.B. 719; 92 L.J.K.B. 21; 127 L.T. 841; 86 J.P. 171; 38 Digest 214, 489	904, 908
Armement Adolf Deppe v. Robinson (John) & Co., Ltd., [1917] 2 K.B. 204; 86 L.J.K.B. 1103; 116 L.T. 664; 41 Digest 529, 3568	699, 703
Armormat Manufacturing Co., Ltd. v. General Incandescent Co., Ltd., [1911] 2 K.B. 143; 80 L.J.K.B. 1005; 104 L.T. 805; 10 Digest 1013, 7036	921, 922, 923
Asby v. White, (1703), 1 Bro. Parl. Cas. 62; 1 E.R. 417; 1 Digest 23, 187	798, 800
Askey v. Golden Wine Co., Ltd., [1948] 2 All E.R. 35; 2nd Digest Supp.	564
Assets Co., Ltd. v. Forbes (Inspector of Taxes), (1897), 61 J.P. 616; 3 Tax Cas. 542; 23 Digest 18, a	503, 512
Astle v. Astle, [1939] 3 All E.R. 967; [1939] P. 415; 109 L.J.P. 6; Digest Supp.	233, 236
A.-G. v. Day, (1749), 1 Ves. Sen. 218; 27 E.R. 992; 42 Digest 519, 833	147, 153, 154
A.-G. v. Irish Steel, Ltd., (1948), Irish Tax Cases, No. 67	541, 546, 995, 999
A.-G. v. Jackson, [1932] A.C. 365; sub nom., Re Cockell, 101 L.J.Ch. 186; 146 L.T. 450; 16 Tax Cas. 681; subsequent proceedings, sub nom., Re Cockell, [1932] W.N. 172; 16 Tax Cas. 681, 721; Digest Supp.	540, 541, 544, 546, 547, 995, 999
A.-G. v. Meech, (1931), 15 Annotated Tax Cases 619	852, 856
A.-G. v. Smythies (or Smithies), (1836), 2 My. & Cr. 135; 6 L.J.Ch. 35; 40 E.R. 592; 8 Digest 386, 2030	742, 743
A.-G. v. Talbot, (1748), 1 Ves. Sen. 78; 3 Atk. 662; 27 E.R. 903; 8 Digest 387, 2054	741, 743
A.-G. v. Tod Heatley, [1897] 1 Ch. 560; 66 L.J.Ch. 275; 76 L.T. 174; 36 Digest 177, 221	626, 631
Augustinus v. Nerinckx, (1880), 16 Ch.D. 13; 43 L.T. 458; 18 Digest 189, 1381	463, 464
Baindail (otherwise Lawson) v. Baindail, [1946] 1 All E.R. 342; [1946] P. 122; 115 L.J.P. 65; 174 L.T. 320; 2nd Digest Supp.	298, 309, 310, 973, 974, 975
Baker v. Dalgleish Steam Shipping Co., Ltd., [1922] 1 K.B. 361; 91 L.J.K.B. 392; 36 Digest 140, 943	24, 26
Banbury, Re, [1950] 2 All E.R. 250	892, 901
Banco de Bilbao v. Sancha, [1938] 2 All E.R. 253; [1938] 2 K.B. 176; 107 L.J.K.B. 681; 159 L.T. 369; Digest Supp.	357, 364, 372
Banks v. Cope Brown, [1948] 2 All E.R. 76; [1948] 2 K.B. 287; [1948] L.J.R. 1870; 112 J.P. 338; 2nd Digest Supp.	1223, 1224
Banque Internationale de Commerce de Petrograd v. Goukassow, [1925] A.C. 150; 93 L.J.K.B. 1084; 132 L.T. 116; Digest Supp.	106, 107
Barclays Bank, Ltd. v. A.-G., [1944] 2 All E.R. 208; [1944] A.C. 372; 113 L.J.K.B. 465; 171 L.T. 366; 2nd Digest Supp.	852, 855
Barker v. Herbert, [1911] 2 K.B. 633; 80 L.J.K.B. 1329; 105 L.T. 349; 75 J.P. 481; 36 Digest 197, 374	1160, 1165
Barnett v. Caxton Floors, Ltd., Butler v. Kleine Patent Fire Resisting Flooring Syndicate, Ltd., (1928), 140 L.T. 138; 93 J.P. 59; Digest Supp.	521, 522
Barratt v. Gough-Thomas, [1945] 2 All E.R. 414, 650; 174 L.T. 329; 2nd Digest Supp.	1049, 1050, 1058
Barrell v. Fordree, [1932] A.C. 676; 101 L.J.K.B. 529; 147 L.T. 206; 96 J.P. 273; affg., [1931] 2 K.B. 257; 100 L.J.K.B. 515; 145 L.T. 219; 95 J.P. 141; Digest Supp.	1223, 1224
Barrett v. Hardy Brothers (Alnwick), Ltd., [1925] 2 K.B. 220; 94 L.J.K.B. 665; 133 L.T. 249; 31 Digest 561, 7090	174, 178, 179, 180, 181

Barry v. Jackson , (1842), 1 Y. & C. Ch. Cas. 585; 62 E.R. 1028; 21 Digest 165, 232	785, 788
Barry v. Butlin , (1838), 2 Moo. P.C.C. 480; 1 Curt. 637; 12 E.R. 1089; 23 Digest 130, 1294	117, 120, 121, 122, 123
Bartholomew v. Freeman , (1878), 3 C.P.D. 316; 38 L.T. 814; Digest, Practice, 660, 2801	727, 730, 731
Bass v. Bass , [1915] P. 17; 84 L.J.P. 53; 112 L.T. 70; 27 Digest 416, 4215	785, 792
Bastin v. Davies , [1950] 1 All E.R. 1095; 114 J.P. 302	561, 562, 563
Baylis v. London (Bp.) , [1913] 1 Ch. 127; 82 L.J.Ch. 61; 107 L.T. 730; 35 Digest 156, 526	1138, 1143
Beach, Re , (1905), cited [1905] 2 K.B. at p. 688; 4 Digest 100, 900	1129, 1131
Beard v. Beard , [1945] 2 All E.R. 306; [1946] P. 8; 114 L.J.P. 33; 174 L.T. 65; 2nd Digest Supp.	539, 540
Beaumont, Re , [1902] 1 Ch. 889; 71 L.J.Ch. 478; 86 L.T. 410; 25 Digest 542, 292	1199, 1204, 1206
Beaumont, Re , [1913] 1 Ch. 325; 82 L.J.Ch. 183; 108 L.T. 181; 43 Digest 602, 494	286, 289
Bede S.S. Co. v. River Wear Comrs. , [1907] 1 K.B. 310; 76 L.J.K.B. 434; 96 L.T. 370; 41 Digest 979, 8677	415, 428
Bellairs v. Bellairs , (1874), L.R. 18 Eq. 510; 43 L.J.Ch. 669; 44 Digest 455, 2774	1073, 1076
Benham v. Gambling , [1941] 1 All E.R. 7; [1941] A.C. 157; 110 L.J.K.B. 49; 164 L.T. 290; 2nd Digest Supp.	22, 24, 25
Bennett, Re , [1950] 1 All E.R. 435, n	385
Bennett, Walden & Co. v. Wood , [1950] 2 All E.R. 134	391, 396
Beresford v. Royal Insurance Co., Ltd. , [1938] 2 All E.R. 602; [1938] A.C. 586; 107 L.J.K.B. 464; 158 L.T. 459; Digest Supp.	715
Berry v. Berry , [1929] 2 K.B. 316; 98 L.J.K.B. 748; 141 L.T. 461; Digest Supp.	940, 941
Bethell, Re , (1888), 38 Ch.D. 220; 57 L.J.Ch. 487; 58 L.T. 674; 11 Digest 413, 801	298, 310
Bidie, Re , [1948] 2 All E.R. 995; [1949] Ch. 121; [1949] L.J.R. 386; 113 J.P. 22; 2nd Digest Supp.	1090, 1092
Bibbie v. Lumley , (1802), 2 East. 469; 102 E.R. 448; 35 Digest 158, 544	1138, 1143
Billings v. Reed , [1944] 2 All E.R. 415; [1945] K.B. 11; 114 L.J.K.B. 11; 171 L.T. 312; 2nd Digest Supp.	1108, 1109
Birch v. Birch , (1873), 42 L.J.P. & M. 23; 28 L.T. 540; 27 Digest 288, 2603	398, 400
Birmingham and Midland Motor Omnibus Co., Ltd. v. London and North Western Ry. Co. , [1913] 3 K.B. 850; 83 L.J.K.B. 474; 109 L.T. 64; 18 Digest 87, 394	596, 597, 601, 603
Bishopsgate Motor Finance Corp., Ltd. v. Transport Brakes, Ltd. , [1949] 1 All E.R. 37; [1949] 1 K.B. 322; [1949] L.J.R. 741; 2nd Digest Supp.	1028, 1033
Bize v. Dickson , (1786), 1 Term. Rep. 285; 99 E.R. 1097; 35 Digest 147, 460	1138, 1143
Blackie v. Osmaston , (1884), 28 Ch.D. 119; 54 L.J.Ch. 473; 52 L.T. 6; 26 Digest 148, 1115	463, 464
Blackwell v. Blackwell , [1929] A.C. 318; 98 L.J.Ch. 251; 140 L.T. 444; Digest Supp.	1246, 1247, 1249
Blain, Ex p. , Re Sawers , (1879), 12 Ch.D. 522; 41 L.T. 46; 42 Digest 687, 1012	1013, 1014, 1015
Blake, Re , [1932] 1 Ch. 54; 100 L.J.Ch. 251; 145 L.T. 42; Digest Supp.	1138, 1147
Blount v. Blount , (1916) 1 K.B. 230; 85 L.J.K.B. 230; 114 L.T. 176; 28 Digest 68, 356	1191, 1193
Blount v. Burrow , (1792), 4 Bro. C.C. 72; 1 Ves. 546; 29 E.R. 784; 25 Digest 542, 293	1199, 1202
Blunden v. Desart , (1842), 2 Dr. & War. 405; 42 Digest 269, f	1049, 1053, 1062
Blunt v. Blunt , [1943] 2 All E.R. 76; [1943] A.C. 517; 112 L.J.P. 58; 169 L.T. 33; 2nd Digest Supp.	449, 451, 1118, 1119
Board of Trade v. Cayzer, Irvine & Co. , [1927] A.C. 610; 96 L.J.K.B. 872; 137 L.T. 419; affg. S.C. sub nom. , Cayzer, Irvine & Co. v. Board of Trade , [1927] 1 K.B. 269; 95 L.J.K.B. 1054; 136 L.T. 7; Digest Supp.	618, 622
Boards, Re , [1895] 1 Ch. 499; 64 L.J.Ch. 305; 72 L.T. 220; 23 Digest 510, 5753	2, 5
Bolsover Colliery Co., Ltd. v. Abbott , [1946] K.B. 8; 115 L.J.K.B. 5; 173 L.T. 172; 2nd Digest Supp.	1187, 1189, 1190
Booth v. Booth , [1922] 1 K.B. 66; 91 L.J.K.B. 127; 126 L.T. 342; 28 Digest 69, 365	1191, 1193
Borough Court Estate, Re , [1932] 2 Ch. 39; 101 L.J.Ch. 316; 147 L.T. 476; Digest Supp.	1182, 1186
Borthwick-Norton v. Collier , [1950] 2 All E.R. 204; 114 J.P. 375	690, 693
Borthwick-Norton v. Romney Warwick Estates, Ltd. , [1950] 1 All E.R. 798	577, 579, 580, 581
Bostock v. Bostock , [1950] 1 All E.R. 25; 114 J.P. 59	328, 329
Boswell v. Coaks , (1887), 57 L.J.Ch. 101; 57 L.T. 742; 21 Digest 431, 131	385
Bound v. Lawrence , [1892] 1 Q.B. 226; 61 L.J.M.C. 21; 65 L.T. 844; 56 J.P. 118; 24 Digest 936, 247	720, 721, 722
Bowditch v. Wakefield Local Board , (1871), L.R. 6 Q.B. 567; 40 L.J.M.C. 214; 25 L.T. 88; 36 J.P. 197; 26 Digest 523, 2334	904, 906, 907
Bowen, Re , [1893] 2 Ch. 491; 62 L.J.Ch. 681; 68 L.T. 789; 8 Digest 327, 1102	466, 469
Bower v. Hett , [1895] 2 Q.B. 337; 64 L.J.Q.B. 772; 73 L.T. 176; 5 Digest 816, 6937	30, 32
Bowman v. Secular Society, Ltd. , [1917] A.C. 406; 86 L.J.Ch. 568; 117 L.T. 161; 8 Digest 265, 270; 9 Digest 81, 310	467, 471, 715
Boy Andrew (Owners), Ltd. v. St. Rognvald (Owners), Ltd. , [1948] A.C. 140; [1948] L.J.R. 768; sub nom. , Admiralty Comrs. v. North of Scotland and Orkney and Shetland Steam Navigation Co., Ltd. , [1947] 2 All E.R. 350; 2nd Digest Supp.	415, 424
Bradbury, Re , [1950] 2 All E.R. 1150	1149, 1150
Bradfield, Re , [1914] W.N. 423; 44 Digest 722, 5722	879, 880
Bradford Corp. v. Myers , [1916] 1 A.C. 242; 85 L.J.K.B. 146; 114 L.T. 83; 80 J.P. 121; 38 Digest 110, 784	55, 62, 63
Bradshaw v. Bradshaw , (1817), 2 Mer. 492; 35 E.R. 1028	1023, 1025
Brandao v. Barnett , (1846), 3 C.B. 519; 12 Cl. & Fin. 787; 7 L.T.O.S. 525; 136 E.R. 207, H.L.; revg. S.C. sub nom. , Barnett v. Brandao , (1843), 6 Man. & G. 630, Ex. Ch.; revg. Brandao v. Barnett , (1840), 1 Man. & G. 908; 3 Digest 285, 878	125, 127
Brandon, Ex p. , Re Trench , (1884), 25 Ch.D. 500; 53 L.J.Ch. 576; 50 L.T. 41; 4 Digest 74, 632	36, 38, 39
Brighton College v. Marriott , [1926] A.C. 192; 134 L.T. 417; 28 Digest 24, 127	467, 470
Briginshaw v. Briginshaw , (1938), 60 C.L.R. 336; 12 A.L.J. 100; 44 A.L.R. 334	458, 459
Brisbane v. Dacres , (1813), 5 Taunt. 143; 128 E.R. 641; 35 Digest 159, 545	1138, 1143
Britain v. Rossiter , (1879), 11 Q.B.D. 123; 48 L.J.Q.B. 362; 40 L.T. 240; 43 J.P. 332; 12 Digest 123, 810	1100, 1102, 1103
British-American Tobacco Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. , [1941] 2 All E.R. 86, 651; [1941] 2 K.B. 270; 111 L.J.K.B. 1; 165 L.T. 275; 29 Tax Cas. 49	271, 273, 276, 277, 278, 280, 281
British India Steam Navigation Co. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. , (1881), 7 Q.B.D. 165; 50 L.J.Q.B. 517; 44 L.T. 378; 6 Digest 500, 3172	844, 847
British Insulated and Helsby Cables, Ltd. v. Atherton , [1926] A.C. 205; 95 L.J.K.B. 336; 134 L.T. 289; affg. S.C. sub nom. , Atherton v. British Insulated and Helsby Cables, Ltd. , [1925] 1 K.B. 421; 94 L.J.K.B. 319; 132 L.T. 288; 10 Tax Cas. 155; 28 Digest 52, 264	633, 636
British Oil & Cake Co., Ltd. v. Bursall & Co. , Bursall & Co. v. Rayner & Co. , Rayner & Co. v. Bowring & Co., Ltd. , (1923), 39 T.L.R. 406; 39 Digest 684, 2701	861, 868

British Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., Ltd. v. Underground Electric Rys. Co. of London, Ltd., [1912] A.C. 673; 81 L.J.K.B. 1132; 107 L.T. 325; 17 Digest 126, 343	860, 864
Brock v. Wollams, [1949] 1 All E.R. 715; [1949] 2 K.B. 388	140, 141, 143
Brockbank v. Whitehaven Junction Ry. Co., (1862), 7 H. & N. 834; 31 L.J.Ex. 349	799
Broggi v. Robins, (1899), 15 T.L.R. 224; 31 Digest 346, 4889	1178, 1176
Brown, Ex p. , Re Jeavons, (1874), 9 Ch. App. 304; 43 L.J.Bey. 105; 30 L.T. 108; 4 Digest 538, 4955	36, 40
Brown v. Collins, (1883), 25 Ch.D. 56; 53 L.J.Ch. 368; 49 L.T. 329; 28 Digest 335, 2017	159
Brown v. Draper, [1944] 1 All E.R. 246; [1944] K.B. 309; 113 L.J.K.B. 196; 170 L.T. 144; 2nd Digest Supp.	348, 345, 1187, 1188
Brown v. National Provident Institution, Ogston v. Provident Mutual Life Assoc., [1921] 2 A.C. 222; 90 L.J.K.B. 1009; 125 L.T. 417; 8 Tax Cas. 57; 28 Digest 62, 316	314, 316
Brown v. New Empress Saloons, Ltd., [1937] 2 All E.R. 133; 106 L.J.K.B. 331; 156 L.T. 427; Digest Supp.	969, 971
Buckland v. Guildford Gas Light & Coke Co., [1948] 2 All E.R. 1086; [1949] 1 K.B. 410; 113 J.P. 44; 2nd Digest Supp.	331, 333
Buckley v. Alexander (unreported)	805, 810
Burkitt v. Kille (A. & E.), [1932] 2 All E.R. 372; [1939] 2 K.B. 743; 108 L.J.K.B. 669; 160 L.T. 481; Digest Supp.	76, 78
Burmester v. Burmester, [1913] P. 76; 82 L.J.P. 54; 108 L.T. 272; 27 Digest 507, 5449	1154, 1156
Burridge v. Bellew, (1875), 32 L.T. 807; 42 Digest 253, 2847	452, 456
Burroughs v. Oakley, (1815), 1 Mer. 52; 35 E.R. 596; 42 Digest 560, 1253	1022, 1025
Burrows v. Rhodes, [1889] 1 Q.B. 816; 68 L.J.K.B. 545; 80 L.T. 591; 63 J.P. 532; 42 Digest 980, 112	564
Burton v. Pinkerton, (1867), L.R. 2 Exch. 340; 36 L.J.Ex. 137; 17 L.T. 15; 31 J.P. 615; 17 Digest 97, 126	1168, 1170, 1171
Bush v. Whitehaven Town and Harbour Trustees, (1888), 52 J.P. 392; 2 Hudson's B.C., 4th ed., 118; 12 Digest 385, 3167	391, 395
Butterworth v. Butterworth and Englefield, Collins v. Collins and Harrison, Barratt v. Barratt and Fox, Howell v. Howell and Walker, Adams v. Adams and Ward, Ellworthy v. Ellworthy and Ledgard, [1920] P. 126; 89 L.J.P. 151; 122 L.T. 804; 27 Digest 452, 4676	798, 802
C. v. C., [1947] 2 All E.R. 50; 177 L.T. 399; 111 J.P. 442; sub nom. , Colquitt v. Colquitt, [1948] P. 19; [1948] L.J.R. 897; 2nd Digest Supp.	6, 9
Cain v. Moon, [1896] 2 Q.B. 283; 65 L.J.Q.B. 587; 74 L.T. 728; 25 Digest 541, 286	1198, 1199, 1202
Calder v. Dobell, (1871), L.R. 6 C.P. 486; 40 L.J.C.P. 224; 25 L.T. 129; 1 Digest 577, 2188	147, 151, 152
Campbell, Re , (1923), 10 Tax Cas. 585; Digest Supp.	541, 545, 546, 994, 995, 999
Campbell (Donald) & Co. v. Pollak, [1927] A.C. 732; 96 L.J.K.B. 1132; 137 L.T. 656; Digest, Practice, 788, 3503	969, 970
Campbell's Trustees v. Adamson, 1936 S.C. (H.L.) 31	573, 574
Campbell's Trusts, Re , [1922] 1 Ch. 551; 91 L.J.Ch. 433; 127 L.T. 236; 40 Digest 568, 1054	286, 289, 290
Cannan v. Abington (Earl), [1900] 2 Q.B. 66; 69 L.J.Q.B. 517; 82 L.T. 382; 64 J.P. 504; 26 Digest 348, 755	745, 746
Capel St. Mary, Suffolk (Rector and Churchwardens) v. Packard, [1927] P. 289; Digest Supp.	70, 74, 812, 814, 815
Carolina, The, (1802), 4 Ch. Rob. 256; 1 Eng. Pr. Cas. 385; 165 E.R. 604; 37 Digest 604, 440	220, 227
Carr v. Anderson, (1901), 18 T.L.R. 206; Digest, Pleading, 194, 1641	463, 465
Carroll v. Andrew Barclay & Sons, Ltd., [1948] 2 All E.R. 386; [1948] A.C. 477; [1948] L.J.R. 1490; 2nd Digest Supp.	987, 989, 992, 993
Cassano & Mackay's Contract, Re , [1920] W.N. 7; 42 Digest 559, 1240	1023, 1025
Catlin, Re , (1854), 18 Beav. 508; 52 E.R. 200; 42 Digest 216, 2423	385, 387
Cave v. Hastings, (1881), 7 Q.B.D. 125; 50 L.J.Q.B. 575; 45 L.T. 348; 46 J.P. 56; 12 Digest 142, 961	1213, 1215, 1216
Central London Property Trust, Ltd. v. High Trees House, Ltd., [1947] K.B. 130; [1947] L.J.R. 77; 175 L.T. 332; 2nd Digest Supp.	940, 943, 1115, 1117
Chalmers v. Speedwell Wire Co., 1942 S.C. (J.) 42; 2nd Digest Supp.	987, 992
Chamberlayne v. Brockett, (1872), 8 Ch. App. 206; 42 L.J.Ch. 368; 28 L.T. 248; 37 J.P. 261; 8 Digest 326, 1095	191, 192
Chandris v. Isbrandtsen-Moller Co. Inc., [1950] 1 All E.R. 768	391, 395
Chaplin v. Hicks, [1911] 2 K.B. 786; 80 L.J.K.B. 1292; 105 L.T. 285; 17 Digest 92, 98	860, 861, 870
Chapman, Re , [1904] 1 Ch. 431; 73 L.J.Ch. 291; 90 L.T. 339; affd. sub nom. , Chapman v. Perkins, [1905] A.C. 106; 74 L.J.Ch. 331; 92 L.T. 372; 44 Digest 490, 3095	1073, 1075
Chapman v. Pickersgill, (1762), 2 Wils. 145; 95 E.R. 734; 1 Digest 24, 193	798, 800
Chapple v. Chapple, (1929), 98 L.J.P. 95; 140 L.T. 699; Digest Supp.	785, 786, 790
Chastaney v. Nairn (Michael) & Co., Ltd., [1937] 1 All E.R. 376; Digest Supp.	987, 990
Christ's Hospital v. Grainger, (1849), 1 Mac. & G. 460; 19 L.J.Ch. 33; 15 L.T.O.S. 497; 13 J.P. 778; 41 E.R. 1343; 8 Digest 324, 1060	467, 473
Christie v. Christie, (1873), L.R. 3 Ch. App. 499; 42 L.J.Ch. 544; 28 L.T. 607; Digest, Pleading, 63, 536	117, 119
Christie v. Leachinsky, [1947] 1 All E.R. 567; [1947] A.C. 573; [1947] L.J.R. 757; 176 L.T. 443; 111 J.P. 224; Digest Supp.	725, 726
Church of the Holy Trinity, Woolwich, Re , [1949] P. 369	70, 71, 72, 74
Churchman v. Churchman, [1945] 2 All E.R. 190; [1945] P. 44; 114 L.J.P. 17; 173 L.T. 108; 2nd Digest Supp.	748, 749, 750, 751, 752, 753, 754, 755
Clanricarde (Marquess) v. Congested Districts Board for Ireland, (1914), 79 J.P. 481; 11 Digest 118, 116	766, 775
Clark v. R., (1884), 14 Q.B.D. 92; 52 L.T. 136; 49 J.P. 246; sub nom. , R. v. Clark, 54 L.J.M.C. 66; 37 Digest 364, 1658	816
Clarke v. Wilson, (1808), 15 Ves. 317; 33 E.R. 774; 42 Digest 560, 1249	1022, 1025
Clavering v. Ellison, (1859), 7 H.L. Cas. 707; 29 L.J.Ch. 761; 11 E.R. 282; 44 Digest 440, 2667	956, 963
Clayton v. Sale Urban District Council, [1926] 1 K.B. 415; 95 L.J.K.B. 178; 134 L.T. 147; 90 J.P. 5; 36 Digest 229, 702	626, 631, 632
Clayton's Case, (1816), 1 Mer. 572; 35 E.R. 781; 3 Digest 179, 334	334, 337
Clift v. Taylor, [1948] 2 All E.R. 113; [1948] 2 K.B. 394; [1948] L.J.R. 1822; 2nd Digest Supp.	1209, 1211
Cockhill v. Davies, [1943] 1 All E.R. 638; [1943] K.B. 508; 112 L.J.K.B. 441; 169 L.T. 78; 107 J.P. 130; 2nd Digest Supp.	1044, 1046, 1047
Cole, Re , [1919] 1 Ch. 218; 88 L.J.Ch. 82; 120 L.T. 374; 34 Digest 62, 378	475, 477
Cole v. North Western Bank, (1875), L.R. 10 C.P. 354; 44 L.J.C.P. 233; 32 L.T. 733; 41 Digest 393, 2359	1028

Collier, Re, Ex p. Dan Rylands, Ltd. , (1891), 64 L.T. 742; 4 Digest 111, 994	1129, 1131
Collins v. London General Omnibus Co., (1893), 63 L.J.Q.B. 428; 68 L.T. 831; 57 J.P. 678; 18 Digest 141, 905	597, 602
Collman v. Mills, [1897] 1 Q.B. 396; 66 L.J.Q.B. 170; 75 L.T. 590; 61 J.P. 102; 14 Digest 44, 128	825, 826, 827
Collyer v. Hoare & Co., Ltd., (1928), 17 Tax Cas. 169; revid. , [1931] 1 K.B. 123; 100 L.J.K.B. 249; 144 L.T. 71; 17 Tax Cas. 184; revid. , [1932] A.C. 407; 101 L.J.K.B. 274; 146 L.T. 469; 17 Tax Cas. 209; Digest Supp.	94, 97, 101, 104
Colmer v. Ede, (1870), 40 L.J.Ch. 185; 23 L.T. 884; 42 Digest 260, 2944	1049, 1053, 1054, 1055, 1056, 1060, 1061
Comiskey v. Bowring-Hanbury, [1905] A.C. 84; 74 L.J.Ch. 263; 92 L.T. 241; 44 Digest 963, 8165	1246, 1248
Connolly v. Woolrich and Johnson, (1867), 11 L.C.J. 197; 3 C.L.J.N.S. 14; 11 Digest 328, 156, ii	298, 310
Contract Discount Corp., Ltd. v. Overlyne Trading Co., Ltd., (1947), unreported	1096, 1097, 1098
Cooke v. Vogeler (Charles A.) Co., [1901] A.C. 102; 70 L.J.K.B. 181; 84 L.T. 10; affg. , Re A.B. & Co. , [1900] 1 Q.B. 541; 69 L.J.Q.B. 375; 82 L.T. 169; 4 Digest 25, 199	1014, 1015
Cooper v. Cooper, [1936] 2 All E.R. 542; Digest Supp.	23, 24
Coss v. National Maternity Hospital (unreported)	597, 604
Cotter v. National Union of Seamen, [1929] 2 Ch. 58; 98 L.J.Ch. 323; 141 L.T. 178; Digest Supp.	1064, 1067
Coxen, Re , [1948] 2 All E.R. 492; [1948] Ch. 747; [1948] L.J.R. 1590; 2nd Digest Supp.	188, 190, 1247, 1250
Crooks v. Allan, (1879), 5 Q.B.D. 38; 49 L.J.Q.B. 201; 41 L.T. 800; 41 Digest 602, 4294	518, 520
Croston v. Vaughan, [1937] 4 All E.R. 249; [1938] 1 K.B. 540; 107 L.J.K.B. 182; 158 L.T. 221; 102 J.P. 11; Digest Supp.	884, 885, 886
Crozier v. Wishart & Co., Ltd. and Western Printing Services, Ltd., [1936] 1 All E.R. 1; sub nom. , Crozier v. Wishart Books, Ltd., [1936] 1 K.B. 471; 105 L.J.K.B. 267; 154 L.T. 363; Digest Supp.	663, 674
Crutchley v. Jerningham, (1817), 2 Mer. 502; 35 E.R. 1032; 42 Digest 561, 1268	1023, 1025
Cullen v. A.-G. for Ireland, (1866), 14 W.R. 869; 1 Eng. & Irish Reports 190; 21 Digest 65, q	1246, 1247, 1250, 1251
Cullerne v. London and Suburban General Permanent Building Society, (1890), 25 Q.B.D. 485; 59 L.J.Q.B. 525; 63 L.T. 611; 55 J.P. 148; 7 Digest 458, 24	254, 259
Culsha v. Cheese, (1849), 7 Hare 236; 18 L.J.Ch. 269; 68 E.R. 97; 44 Digest 494, 3133	286, 290
Currie's Settlement, Re, Re Rooper , [1910] 1 Ch. 329; 79 L.J.Ch. 285; 101 L.T. 899; 44 Digest 492, 3111	286, 290
Custance's Settlements, Re , [1945] 2 All E.R. 441; [1946] Ch. 42; 114 L.J.Ch. 293; 173 L.T. 195; 2nd Digest Supp.	86, 88
Cutler v. Simons, (1816), 2 Mer. 103; 35 E.R. 880; 42 Digest 561, 1266	1022, 1025
Dafen Tinplate Co. v. Llanelly Steel Co., [1920] 2 Ch. 124; 89 L.J.Ch. 346; 123 L.T. 225; 9 Digest 559, 3703	1121, 1126, 1127
Daglish v. Daglish, [1936] P. 49; 105 L.J.P. 19; 154 L.T. 246; Digest Supp.	449, 450
Dailey v. Dailey (otherwise Smith), [1947] 2 All E.R. 269, n.; 2nd Digest Supp.	785, 790
Daimler Co., Ltd. v. Continental Tyre & Rubber Co. (Gt. Britain), Ltd., [1916] A.C. 307; 85 L.J.K.B. 1333; 114 L.T. 1049; 2 Digest 145, 195	220, 222
Dallison's Settled Estates, Re , [1892] 3 Ch. 522; 61 L.J.Ch. 712; 30 Digest 293, 198	1196, 1197
Dalton v. Angus, (1881), 6 App. Cas. 740; 50 L.J.Q.B. 689; 44 L.T. 844; 46 J.P. 132; 34 Digest 158, 1234	793, 797
Dangar, Grant & Co. v. Gospel Oak Iron Co., (1890), 6 T.L.R. 260; 1 Digest 531, 1884	727, 732
Davenport v. R., (1877), 3 App. Cas. 115; 47 L.J.P.C. 8; 37 L.T. 727; 31 Digest 472, 6195	415, 436
David v. Frowd, (1833), 1 My. & K. 200; 2 L.J.Ch. 68; 39 E.R. 657; 24 Digest 793, 8240	1137, 1138, 1142, 1146
Davie v. Colinton Friendly Society, (1870), 9 Macph. (Ct. of Sess.) 96; 25 Digest 323, 244, n	254, 259
Davies (Davis) v. Mann, (1842), 10 M. & W. 546; 12 L.J.Ex. 10; 7 J.P. 53; 152 E.R. 588; 2 Digest 232, 214	415, 436, 440
Davies v. Owen (Thomas) & Co., Ltd., [1919] 2 K.B. 39; 88 L.J.K.B. 887; 121 L.T. 156; 83 J.P. 193; 24 Digest 908, 68	988, 993
Davies v. Powell Duffryn Associated Collieries, Ltd. (No. 2), [1942] 1 All E.R. 657; [1942] A.C. 601; 111 L.J.K.B. 418; 167 L.T. 74; 2nd Digest Supp.	23, 24, 26
Davis v. Angel, (1862), 31 Beav. 223; 31 L.J.Ch. 613; 54 E.R. 1123; affd. 4 De G. F. & J. 524; 6 L.T. 880; 45 E.R. 1287; 44 Digest 479, 2965	1073, 1077
Davis v. Davis, [1950] 1 All E.R. 40; [1950] P. 125; 114 J.P. 56	458, 459, 460
Davis v. Swan Motor Co. (Swansea), Ltd., [1949] 1 All E.R. 620; (1949) 2 K.B. 291	331, 333
Dawson v. Great Northern & City Ry. Co., [1905] 1 K.B. 260; 74 L.J.K.B. 190; 92 L.T. 137; 69 J.P. 29; 1 Digest 79, 636	1228, 1231
Dean's Will Trusts, Re , [1950] 1 All E.R. 882	513, 516
Debtor (No. 478 of 1908), Re A, Ex p. Debtor , [1908] 2 K.B. 684; 77 L.J.K.B. 981; 99 L.T. 458; 4 Digest 99, 398	1129, 1132
Delgoffe v. Fader, [1939] 3 All E.R. 632; [1939] Ch. 922; 161 L.T. 166; Digest Supp.	1199, 1204, 1207, 1208
Dendree Valley Railway & Canal Co., Re, Ex p. Moss , (1850), 19 L.J.Ch. 474; 15 L.T.O.S. 246; 10 Digest 1207, 8539	106, 109
Dennis v. Tovell, (1872), L.R. 8 Q.B. 10; 42 L.J.M.C. 33; 27 L.T. 482; 37 J.P. 263; 41 Digest 974, 8641	415, 426
Denny, Mott and Dickson, Ltd. v. Fraser (James B.) & Co., Ltd., [1944] 1 All E.R. 678; [1944] A.C. 265; 113 L.J.P.C. 37; 171 L.T. 345; 2nd Digest Supp.	391, 395
De Reneville v. De Reneville, [1948] 1 All E.R. 56; [1948] P. 100; [1948] L.J.R. 1761; 2nd Digest Supp.	973, 975
Det Forenede Dampskibs Selskab v. Barry Ry. Co., [1919] L.L.Rep. 658	415, 426, 434, 442
Dewhurst v. Clarkson, (1854), 3 E. & B. 194; 2 C.L.R. 1143; 23 L.J.Q.B. 247; 23 L.T.O.S. 109; 18 J.P. 635; 118 E.R. 1114; 25 Digest 300, 87	253, 258
Dexters, Ltd. v. Hill Crest Oil Co. (Bradford), [1926] 1 K.B. 348; 95 L.J.K.B. 386; 134 L.T. 494; 39 Digest 684, 2702	860, 867, 868, 869
Dilke, Re , [1921] 1 Ch. 34; 90 L.J.Ch. 89; 124 L.T. 229; 37 Digest 416, 256	976, 978
Dillon, Re , (1890), 44 Ch.D. 76; 59 L.J.Ch. 420; 62 L.T. 614; 25 Digest 543, 293	1199, 1204, 1205, 1206, 1207
Dixon v. Astley, (1816), 19 Ves. 564; 34 E.R. 625; 42 Digest 560, 1254	1022, 1025
Dobell (G. C.) & Co., Ltd. v. Barber & Garratt, [1931] 1 K.B. 219; 100 L.J.K.B. 65; 144 L.T. 266; Digest Supp.	861, 868

- Dobson v. Horsley, [1915] 1 K.B. 634; 84 L.J.K.B. 399; 112 L.T. 101; 31 Digest 100, 1173, 1175, 1177
2333
- Donegal Tweed Co., Ltd. v. Stephenson, (1929) 98 L.J.K.B. 657; 141 L.T. 262; Digest Supp. 1110, 1114
- Donoghue v. Stevenson, [1932] A.C. 562; 101 L.J.P.C. 119; 147 L.T. 231; Digest Supp. 1161, 1166
- Drummond v. Muirhead & Guthrie Smith, (1900), 2 F. (Ct. of Sess.) 585; 37 Sc.L.R. 433; 75 S.L.T. 401; 42 Digest 268, 302311 1049, 1050, 1056, 1060
- Dublin (Dean and Chapter) v. R., (1724), 1 Bro. Parl. Cas. 73; 1 E.R. 425; 16 Digest 346, 42, 46
1730
- Ducker v. Rees Roturbo Development Syndicate, Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Samie, [1928] A.C. 132; 97 L.J.K.B. 317; 138 L.T. 598; 13 Tax Cas. 366; reversing, Rees Roturbo Development Syndicate v. Inland Revenue Comrs., Same v. Ducker, [1928] 1 K.B. 506; 96 L.J.K.B. 944; 138 L.T. 143; Digest Supp. 503, 512
- Dudley & District Benefit Building Society v. Emerson, [1949] 2 All E.R. 252; [1949] Ch. 707; [1949] L.J.R. 1441; 2nd Digest Supp. 738
- Duff Development Co. v. Kelantan Government, [1924] A.C. 797; 93 L.J.Ch. 343; 131 L.T. 676; Digest Supp. 607, 613, 1014, 1021
- Duffield v. Elwes, (1827), 1 Bl. N.S. 497; 4 E.R. 959; sub nom. Duffield v. Hicks, 1 Dow. & Cl. 1; 25 Digest 549, 351 1199, 1207
- Dufour v. Pereira, (1769), 1 Dick. 419; 2 Harg. Jurid. Arg. 304; 21 E.R. 332; 44 Digest 181, 914, 917, 918, 919
106
- Dunbar (otherwise White) v. Dunbar, [1909] P. 90; 78 L.J.P. 35; 100 L.T. 380; 27 Digest 501, 5365 785, 786
- Dunn v. Bucknall Bros., Dunn v. Currie (Donald) & Co., [1902] 2 K.B. 614; 71 L.J.K.B. 963; 87 L.T. 497; 41 Digest 410, 2552 517, 518, 520
- Dunster v. Hollis, [1918] 2 K.B. 795; 88 L.J.K.B. 331; 120 L.T. 109; 31 Digest 100, 1173, 1174, 1177
2335
- Dyke v. Elliott, The Gauntlett, (1872), L.R. 4 P.C. 184; 41 L.J.Adm. 65; 26 L.T. 45; 17 E.R. 373; 42 Digest 730, 1526 873, 876
- Edwards v. Great Western Ry. Co., (1851), 11 C.B. 588; 21 L.J.C.P. 72; 138 E.R. 603; 2 Digest 473, 1176 618, 620, 621, 623, 624
- Egerton v. Brownlow (Earl), (1853), 4 H.L. Cas. 1; 23 L.J.Ch. 348; 21 L.T.O.S. 306; 10 E.R. 359; 12 Digest 240, 1971 706, 712
- Eglantine Inn, Ltd. v. Smith and Smith (Trading as "The Cromac Printery"), [1948] N.I. 29; 2nd Digest Supp. 663, 677
- Egmont's (Lord) Settled Estates, Re, (1890), 45 Ch.D. 395; 59 L.J.Ch. 768; 63 L.T. 608; 30 Digest 294, 205 1196, 1197
- Ellingsen v. Det Skandinaviske Compani, [1919] 2 K.B. 567; 121 L.T. 367; sub nom., Ellingsen v. Dat Skandinaviske Co. and Harsem & Co., Ltd., 88 L.J.K.B. 956; Digest, Practice, 877, 4177 452, 456
- Elliott v. Roberts, (1912), 107 L.T. 18; 12 Digest 151, 1037 1100, 1101
- Ellis & Sons Amalgamated Properties, Ltd. v. Sisman, [1948] 1 All E.R. 44; [1948] 1 K.B. 653; [1948] L.J.R. 929; 2nd Digest Supp. 81, 82, 83, 944, 946, 947, 949, 950, 951, 952, 953
- Emanuel v. Emanuel, [1945] 2 All E.R. 494; [1946] P. 115; 114 L.J.P. 60; 173 L.T. 118; 2nd Digest Supp. 749, 755
- English, Scottish & Australian Chartered Bank, Re, [1893] 3 Ch. 385; 62 L.J.Ch. 825; 69 L.T. 268; 10 Digest 1058, 7410 920, 921, 924
- Eurymedon, The, [1938] P. 41; 107 L.J.P. 81; 158 L.T. 445; sub nom., Corstar Owners v. Eurymedon Owners, The Eurymedon, [1938] 1 All E.R. 122; Digest Supp. 415, 424, 438
- Evans, Re, [1893] 1 Ch. 252; 62 L.J.Ch. 413; 68 L.T. 271; Digest, Practice, 969, 5050 1118, 1119
- Evans, Re, [1931] B. & C.R. 48; Digest Supp. 1129, 1133
- Evans v. Bartlam, [1937] 2 All E.R. 646; [1937] A.C. 473; 106 L.J.K.B. 568; sub nom., Bartlam v. Evans, 157 L.T. 311; Digest Supp. 22, 23, 24, 404, 405, 549, 550, 552, 554, 1096, 1097, 1099
- Everitt v. Everitt, [1948] 2 All E.R. 545; 2nd Digest Supp. 375, 381
- Exmouth (Viscount), Re, (1883), 23 Ch.D. 158; 52 L.J.Ch. 420; 48 L.T. 422; 44 Digest 441, 2668 956, 963
- Farley v. Westminster Bank, Ltd., [1939] 3 All E.R. 491; [1939] A.C. 430; 108 L.J.Ch. 307; 161 L.T. 103; Digest Supp. 857, 858
- Farmer v. Arundel, (1772), 2 Wm. Bl. 824; 96 E.R. 485; 35 Digest 158, 543 1138, 1143
- Farrands, In the Goods of, (1876), 1 P.D. 439; 25 Digest 171, 1880 446, 447
- Farrant v. Barnes, (1862), 11 C.B.N.S. 553; 31 L.J.C.P. 137; 142 E.R. 912; 8 Digest 135, 392 76, 78
- Feay v. Barnwell, [1938] 1 All E.R. 31; Digest Supp. 1157, 1159
- Filby v. Hounsell, [1896] 2 Ch. 737; 65 L.J.Ch. 852; 75 L.T. 270; 12 Digest 144, 983 147, 151, 152
- Fillingham v. Bromley, (1823), Turn. & R. 530; 37 E.R. 1204; 44 Digest 442, 2675 188, 190
- Finch v. Bannister, [1908] 1 K.B. 485; 77 L.J.K.B. 313; 97 L.T. 913; 72 J.P. 73; affd., [1908] 2 K.B. 441; 77 L.J.K.B. 718; 99 L.T. 228; 72 J.P. 203; 41 Digest 55, 399 626, 631
- Findley v. Newman, Hender & Co., Ltd., [1937] 4 All E.R. 58; Digest Supp. 987, 990
- Finlay (James) & Co. v. N. V. Kwik Hoo Tong H.M., [1929] 1 K.B. 400; 98 L.J.K.B. 251; 140 L.T. 389; Digest Supp. 860, 863
- Fisher v. Ruiship-Northwood U.D.C. and Middlesex County Council, [1945] 2 All E.R. 458; [1945] K.B. 584; 115 L.J.K.B. 9; 173 L.T. 261; 110 J.P. 1; 2nd Digest Supp. 793, 797
- Fisher v. Val de Travers Asphalt Co., (1876), 1 C.P.D. 511; 45 L.J.Q.B. 479; 35 L.T. 366; 17 Digest 113, 233 860, 865
- Fleetwood, Re, (1880), 15 Ch.D. 594; 49 L.J.Ch. 514; 43 Digest 598, 463 1246, 1247, 1250
- Fleming v. Burrows, (1826), 1 Russ. 276; 4 L.J.O.S.Ch. 115; 38 E.R. 107; 44 Digest 742, 6000 879, 880
- Folkes v. King, [1923] 1 K.B. 282; 92 L.J.K.B. 125; 128 L.T. 405; Digest Supp. 1028, 1030, 1031, 1032, 1033 748, 752
- Forster v. Forster, (1790), 1 Hag. Con. 144; 161 E.R. 504; 27 Digest 355, 3403 253, 257, 259
- Forster v. National Amalgamated Union of Shop Assistants, Warehousemen and Clerks, [1927] 1 Ch. 539; 96 L.J.Ch. 141; 137 L.T. 86; 43 Digest 105, 1093 1013, 1014, 1015, 1018
- Forsyth v. Forsyth, [1947] 2 All E.R. 623; [1948] P. 125; [1948] L.J.R. 487; 177 L.T. 617; 112 J.P. 60; 2nd Digest Supp. 649, 1019 220, 223, 226
- Fortuna, The, (1811), 1 Dods. 81; 1 Eng. Pr. Cas. 193, n; 165 E.R. 1240; 37 Digest 649, 1019 1064, 1066, 1067, 1068, 1069, 1121
- Foss v. Harbottle, (1843), 2 Hare 461; 67 E.R. 189; 9 Digest 481, 3160; 13 Digest 417, 1377 995, 1000
- Fox, Exp., Re Smith, (1886), 17 Q.B.D. 4; 55 L.J.Q.B. 288; 54 L.T. 307; 4 Digest 477, 4315

Frailay v. Charlton, [1920] 1 K.B. 147; 88 L.J.K.B. 1285; 121 L.T. 577; 83 J.P. 249; 14 Digest 37, 76	1172
Francis v. Cockrell, (1870), L.R. 5 Q.B. 501; 39 L.J.Q.B. 291; 23 L.T. 466; 42 Digest 908, 49	228, 230
Franklin v. Gramophone Co., Ltd., [1948] 1 All E.R. 353; [1948] 1 K.B. 542; [1948] L.J.R. 870; 2nd Digest Supp.	987, 991
Fraser, Re , [1913] 2 Ch. 224; 82 L.J.Ch. 406; 108 L.T. 960; 40 Digest 568, 1053	286, 289
French v. Champkin, [1920] 1 K.B. 76; 89 L.J.K.B. 131; 122 L.T. 95; 83 J.P. 258; 39 Digest 241, 168	351, 354
Fuller, Ex p. , Re Long, (1881), 16 Ch.D. 617; 50 L.J.Ch. 448; 44 L.T. 63; 42 Digest 261, 2957	1050, 1055, 1061
Fulton v. Andrew, (1875), L.R. 7 H.L. 448; 44 L.J.P. 17; 32 L.T. 209; 23 Digest 133, 1317	117, 121, 123
Gaisberg v. Storr, [1949] 2 All E.R. 411; 2nd Digest Supp.	1115, 1116, 1117
Galloway v. London Corp., (1866), L.R. 1 H.L. 34; 35 L.J.Ch. 477; 14 L.T. 865; 30 J.P. 580; 11 Digest 117, 109	766, 774
Gamble v. Jordan, [1913] 3 K.B. 149; 82 L.J.K.B. 743; 108 L.T. 1022; 77 J.P. 269; 38 Digest 221, 539	351, 354
Gardner, Re , [1920] 2 Ch. 523; 89 L.J.Ch. 649; 124 L.T. 49; 43 Digest 598, 465	1246, 1247, 1249
Gardner, Re , [1923] 2 Ch. 230; 92 L.J.Ch. 569; 129 L.T. 206; 43 Digest 598 (annotation)	1246, 1247, 1251
Gardner v. James, [1948] 2 All E.R. 1069; 113 J.P. 62; 2nd Digest Supp.	887, 888, 889, 890
Garnett v. Garnett and Calderon, (1919), 35 T.L.R. 521; 27 Digest 490, 5224	375, 378, 379
Gas Lighting Improvement Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1923] A.C. 723; 92 L.J.K.B. 665; 129 L.T. 481; 12 Tax Cas. 503; Digest Supp.	261, 266, 267, 268
Gates v. Bill (R.) & Son, [1902] 2 K.B. 38; 71 L.J.K.B. 702; 87 L.T. 258; 34 Digest 35, 119	567, 570
General Medical Council v. Inland Revenue Comrs., English Branch Council of General Medical Council v. Inland Revenue Comrs., (1928), 97 L.J.K.B. 578; 139 L.T. 225; 13 Tax Cas. 819; Digest Supp.	467, 471
Gibson v. Clarke, (1813), 1 Ves. & B. 500; 35 E.R. 195; 40 Digest 183, 1528	1022, 1025
Giles v. Walker, (1890), 24 Q.B.D. 656; 59 L.J.Q.B. 416; 62 L.T. 933; 54 J.P. 599; 36 Digest 195, 359	626, 629
Gillatt and Watts v. Colquhoun, (1884), 2 Tax Cas. 76; 23 Digest 47, 244	94, 100
Gillmore v. London County Council, [1938] 4 All E.R. 331; 159 L.T. 615; Digest Supp.	1093, 1094, 1095
Gipps v. Gipps and Hume, (1864), 11 H.L. Cas. 1; 33 L.J.P.M. & A. 161; 10 L.T. 735; 11 E.R. 1230; 27 Digest 37, 3064	748, 753
Glasson v. Rougier, [1944] 1 All E.R. 535; 26 Tax Cas. 86; 2nd Digest Supp.	1239
Glikstein (J.) & Son, Ltd. v. Green, [1929] A.C. 381; 98 L.J.K.B. 363; 140 L.T. 625; 14 Tax Cas. 364; Digest Supp.	1178
Glory Paper Mills Co., Re , [1894] 3 Ch. 473; 63 L.J.Ch. 885; 71 L.T. 528; 9 Digest 90, 370	197, 199, 200
Glyn's Will Trusts, Re , [1950] 2 All E.R. 1150	1149, 1150, 1151
Goater, Ex p. , Re Finney, (1874), 30 L.T. 620; 4 Digest 72, 617	36, 39
Godstone Rural District Council v. Croydon Corp., (1932), 102 L.J.K.B. 34; 148 L.T. 87; 96 J.P. 363; Digest Supp.	1227, 1228, 1230, 1231, 1234, 1236, 1237, 1238
Gold Hill Mines, Re , (1883), 23 Ch.D. 210; 49 L.T. 66; 10 Digest 832, 5426	409, 412
Golden Horse Shoe (New), Ltd. v. Thurgood, [1934] 1 K.B. 548; 103 L.J.K.B. 619; 150 L.T. 427; 18 Tax Cas. 280; Digest Supp.	503, 506, 510
Gooch, Re , [1929] 1 Ch. 740; 98 L.J.Ch. 285; 141 L.T. 150; Digest Supp.	286, 289
Gorham v. Brice, (1902), 18 T.L.R. 424; 42 Digest 870, 198	89, 92
Gover v. Field, [1944] 1 All E.R. 151, 417, n; 113 L.J.K.B. 129; 170 L.T. 73; sub nom. Field v. Gover, [1944] K.B. 200; 2nd Digest Supp.	174, 179, 180, 181
Gower v. Gower, [1950] 1 All E.R. 804; 114 J.P. 221	458, 459
Gowers v. Walker, [1930] 1 Ch. 262; 99 L.J.Ch. 138; 142 L.T. 404; 15 Tax Cas. 165; Digest Supp.	540, 541, 544, 546, 547, 548, 994, 995, 998, 999, 1000, 1001, 1004
Graham v. Seal, (1918), 88 L.J.Ch. 31; 119 L.T. 526; 35 Digest 609, 3459	1050, 1056
Graham and Scott (Southgate), Ltd. v. Oxlade, [1950] 1 All E.R. 856	134, 136
Grampian S.S. Co., Ltd. v. Carver & Co., (1893), 9 T.L.R. 210; 41 Digest 448, 2807	699, 703
Gray v. Gee, (1923), 39 T.L.R. 429; 27 Digest 82, 645	798, 801, 802
Grayson v. Atkinson, (1752), 1 Wils. K.B. 333; 95 E.R. 6417	1246, 1248
Great Western Ry. Co. v. Mostyn (Owners), The Mostyn, [1928] A.C. 57; 97 L.J.P. 8; 138 L.T. 403; 41 Digest 974, 8645	415, 426, 433, 435, 436, 437, 439, 440, 441, 442
Green v. Berliner, [1936] 1 All E.R. 199; [1936] 2 K.B. 477; 105 L.J.K.B. 662; 155 L.T. 486; Digest Supp.	663, 671
Green v. Sevin, (1879), 13 Ch.D. 589; 49 L.J.Ch. 166; 41 L.T. 724; 44 J.P. 282; 40 Digest 113, 911	929, 933
Greenfield v. London & North Eastern Ry. Co., [1944] 2 All E.R. 438; [1945] K.B. 89; 114 L.J.K.B. 252; 171 L.T. 337; 2nd Digest Supp.	1105, 1107, 1108
Greenough v. Gaskell, (1833), 1 My. & K. 98; 39 E.R. 618; 18 Digest 125, 743	597, 600
Greenwood, Re , [1901] 1 Ch. 887; 70 L.J.Ch. 326; 84 L.T. 118; 44 Digest 1234, 10,665	86, 88
Greenwood v. Turner, [1891] 2 Ch. 144; 60 L.J.Ch. 351; 64 L.T. 261; 42 Digest 559, 1239	1023, 1025
Greer, Re , [1895] 2 Ch. 217; 64 L.J.Ch. 620; 59 J.P. 441; sub nom. , Re Grier, 72 L.T. 865; 21 Digest 619, 2069	30, 33
Griffiths v. Griffiths, (1909), 25 T.L.R. 544; 73 J.P. 391; 27 Digest 569, 6274	160, 164, 165
Griffiths v. Griffiths, (1912), 106 L.T. 646; 27 Digest 551, 6042	449, 450
Griffiths v. Smith, [1941] 1 All E.R. 66; [1941] A.C. 170; 110 L.J.K.B. 156; 164 L.T. 386; 105 J.P. 63; 2nd Digest Supp.	55, 58, 61, 62, 64
Groom v. Crocker, [1938] 2 All E.R. 394; [1939] 1 K.B. 194; 108 L.J.K.B. 296; 158 L.T. 477; Digest Supp.	1168, 1169
Grosvenor Metal Co., Ltd., Re , [1949] 2 All E.R. 948; [1950] Ch. 63; 2nd Digest Supp.	920, 922, 923
Groves, Maclean & Co. v. Volkart Bros., (1884), 1 Cab. & El. 309	699, 700, 704
Grundy v. Briggs, [1910] 1 Ch. 444; 79 L.J.Ch. 244; 101 L.T. 901; 9 Digest 370, 2357	197, 200
Guaranty Trust Co. v. United States, (1938), 304 U.S. 126	357, 364, 365
Guardhouse v. Blackburn, (1866), L.R. 1 P. & D. 109; 35 L.J.P. & M. 116; 14 L.T. 69; 23 Digest 111, 1044	117, 122
Guardian Permanent Benefit Building Society, Re , (1882) 23 Ch.D. 440; 52 L.J.Ch. 857; 48 L.T. 134; 7 Digest 455, 4	253, 259
Guildford Corp. v. Brown, [1915] 1 K.B. 256; 84 L.J.K.B. 289; 112 L.T. 415; 79 J.P. 143; 38 Digest 222, 540	351, 354
Guinness (Bob), Ltd. v. Salomonsen, [1948] 2 K.B. 42; 2nd Digest Supp.	1115, 1117
Gunner v. Gunner and Stirling, [1948] 2 All E.R. 771; [1949] P. 77; [1948] L.J.R. 1904; 2nd Digest Supp.	6, 11, 13
Guy v. Livesey, (1618), Cro. Jac. 501; 79 E.R. 428; 27 Digest 80, 632	799

	PAGE
H. v. H., [1938] 3 All E.R. 415; 159 L.T. 525; Digest Supp.	49, 50
Hadley v. Baxendale, (1854), 9 Exch. 341; 23 L.J.Ex. 179; 23 L.T.O.S. 69; 156 E.R. 145; 17 Digest 93, 101	861, 868, 869
Hadley v. Perks, (1866), L.R. 1 Q.B. 444; 35 L.J.M.C. 177; 14 L.T. 325; 30 J.P. 485; 14 Digest 178, 1561	725, 726
Hadley (Felix) & Co. v. Hadley, [1898] 2 Ch. 680; 67 L.J.Ch. 694; 79 L.T. 299; 12 Digest 469, 3320	716, 717, 718
Hagger, Re, [1930] 2 Ch. 190; 99 L.J.Ch. 492; 143 L.T. 610; Digest Supp.	914, 918
Haile Selassie v. Cable and Wireless, Ltd. (No. 2), [1938] 3 All E.R. 677; [1939] Ch. 182; 108 L.J.Ch. 190; 160 L.T. 120; Digest Supp.	357, 363
Hal dane v. Sinclair, 1927 S.C. 562; Digest Supp.	1079, 1080, 1084, 1085
Hales v. Bolton Leathers, Ltd., [1950] 1 All E.R. 149; [1950] 1 K.B. 493	761, 763, 764, 765
Hall v. Brooklands Auto-Racing Club, [1933] 1 K.B. 205; 101 L.J.K.B. 679; 147 L.T. 404; Digest Supp.	228, 229, 230, 231, 232
Hall v. Hall, (1864), 3 Sw. & Tr. 347; 33 L.J.P.M. & A. 65; 9 L.T. 810; 164 E.R. 1309; 27 Digest 323, 3022	233, 236
Hall (Harry), Ltd. v. Barron (Inspector of Taxes), (1949), 30 Tax Cas. 451	502, 503, 511, 512
Hammond & Co. v. Bussey, (1887), 20 Q.B.D. 79; 57 L.J.Q.B. 58; 17 Digest 110, 214	860, 863
Hanbury v. Hanbury, [1892] P. 222; 61 L.J.P. 115; subsequent proceedings, 8 T.L.R. 559; 27 Digest 324, 3024	233, 234, 236
Hancock v. Smith, (1889), 41 Ch.D. 456; 58 L.J.Ch. 725; 61 L.T. 341; 43 Digest 1022, 4615	125, 126
Hardaker v. Idle District Council, [1896] 1 Q.B. 335; 65 L.J.Q.B. 383; 74 L.T. 69; 60 J.P. 196; 34 Digest 161, 1255	793
Harris v. Harris (No. 2), (1861), 29 Beav. 110; 54 E.R. 568; 32 Digest 506, 1665	1138, 1145
Harris v. Harris, [1949] 2 All E.R. 318; 113 J.P. 495; 2nd Digest Supp.	781, 783
Harris v. Rotol, Ltd., [1950] 1 All E.R. 867	761, 763, 764
Harrison v. Kirk, [1904] A.C. 1; 73 L.J.P.C. 35; 89 L.T. 566; 24 Digest 791, 8222	1138, 1140
Harrison v. Harrison, (unreported)	748, 753
Harland v. Diggins, (1926) A.C. 289; 134 L.T. 492; 28 Digest 88, 506	52, 53
Harvey's Estate, Re, (1886), 17 L.R. Ir. 65; 42 Digest 272, 30561	1050, 1056, 1060
Haseldine v. Hosken, [1933] 1 K.B. 822; 102 L.J.K.B. 441; 148 L.T. 510; Digest Supp.	564
Haskins v. Lewis, [1931] 2 K.B. 1; 100 L.J.K.B. 180; 144 L.T. 378; 95 J.P. 57; Digest Supp.	338, 339, 342
Hastings (Lord) v. Saddler, (1898), 79 L.T. 355; 31 Digest 554, 7014	940, 942
Hatch, Re, [1919] 1 Ch. 351; 88 L.J.Ch. 147; 120 L.T. 694; 35 Digest 95, 36	1138, 1147
Hay (or Bourhill) v. Young, [1942] 2 All E.R. 396; [1943] A.C. 92; 111 L.J.P.C. 97; 167 L.T. 261; 2nd Digest Supp.	331, 332
Heard v. Pullinger, [1950] 1 All E.R. 581	663, 677
Heap v. Ind Coope & Allsopp, Ltd., [1940] 3 All E.R. 634; [1940] 2 K.B. 476; 109 L.J.K.B. 724; 163 L.T. 169; 2nd Digest Supp.	1160, 1161, 1163, 1164, 1166, 1167
Hedges v. Hooker, (1889), 60 L.T. 822; 53 J.P. 613; 41 Digest 672, 5034	534, 536, 538
Hemms v. Wheeler, [1948] 2 K.B. 61; [1948] L.J.R. 1024; 2nd Digest Supp.	1080, 1081, 1084, 1086, 1087, 1088
Henley v. Cameron, [1949] L.J.R. 989; 2nd Digest Supp.	1151, 1153
Henley v. Murray, [1950] 1 All E.R. 908	460, 461
Henry v. Foster (A.), Henry v. Foster (J.), Hunter v. Dewhurst, (1932), 145 L.T. 225; 16 Tax Cas. 605; sub nom., Dewhurst v. Hunter, 146 L.T. 510; Digest Supp.	460, 461, 462
Hensman v. Fryer, (1867), 3 Ch. App. 420; 37 L.J.Ch. 97; 17 L.T. 394; 23 Digest 387, 4581	2, 4
Hetley, Re, [1902] 2 Ch. 866; 71 L.J.Ch. 769; 87 L.T. 265; 43 Digest 592, 415	1246, 1247, 1248
Hewett, Re, [1918] 1 Ch. 458; 118 L.T. 524; sub nom., Re Hewitt, 87 L.J.Ch. 209; 44 Digest 455, 2773	1073, 1076, 1077
Hexter v. Pearce, [1900] 1 Ch. 341; 69 L.J.Ch. 146; 82 L.T. 109; 42 Digest 473, 403	147, 153, 154
Hick v. Raymond & Reid, [1893] A.C. 22; 62 L.J.Q.B. 98; 68 L.T. 175; 12 Digest 308, 2547	706, 711
Hicks v. Ross, [1891] 3 Ch. 499; 60 L.J.Ch. 853; 65 L.T. 200; 39 Digest 193, 828	239, 241
Higgins v. Senior, (1841), 8 M. & W. 834; 11 L.J.Ex. 199; 151 E.R. 1278; 1 Digest 639, 2599	147, 150, 151, 152
Hill v. Fox, (1859), 4 H. & N. 359; 157 E.R. 879; sub nom., Fox v. Hill, 32 L.T.O.S. 337; 23 J.P. 261; 25 Digest 415, 190	1240, 1243, 1244
Hill v. William Hill (Park Lane), Ltd., [1949] 2 All E.R. 452; [1949] A.C. 530; [1949] L.J.R. 1383; 2nd Digest Supp.	1240, 1244
Hill v. Wolverhampton Corrugated Iron Co. Ltd., [1939] 3 All E.R. 72; [1939] 2 K.B. 469; 108 L.J.K.B. 536; 161 L.T. 6; 32 B.W.C.C. 129; Digest Supp.	637, 647
Hilliard v. Fulford, (1876), 4 Ch.D. 389; 46 L.J.Ch. 43; 35 L.T. 750; 23 Digest 431, 5020	1138, 1147
Hills v. Hills, (1841), 8 M. & W. 401; 10 L.J.Ex. 440; 151 E.R. 1095; 25 Digest 542, 294	1199, 1202
Hinckes, Re, [1921] 1 Ch. 475; 90 L.J.Ch. 335; 124 L.T. 681; 44 Digest 472, 2913	956, 959, 960, 964
Hirji Mulji v. Cheong Yue S.S. Co., Ltd., [1926] A.C. 497; 95 L.J.P.C. 121; 134 L.T. 737; 41 Digest 367, 2139	584, 586
Hoar v. Hoar, (1801), 3 Hag. Ecc. 137; 162 E.R. 1108; 27 Digest 327, 3056	748, 753
Hoare v. Green (Robert), Ltd., [1907] 2 K.B. 315; 76 L.J.K.B. 730; 96 L.T. 724; 71 J.P. 341; 24 Digest 903, 39	720, 723
Hobbs v. London and South-Western Ry. Co., (1875), L.R. 10 Q.B. 111; 44 L.J.Q.B. 49; 32 L.T. 252; 39 J.P. 693; 17 Digest 95, 106	1168, 1170, 1171
Hobbs v. People Newspaper Publishing Co., Ltd., (1926), The Times, Mar. 30	882, 883
Hodge & Sons v. Anglo-American Oil Co., (1922), 12 Ll.L. Rep. 183; Digest Supp.	76, 79
Hodges v. Waddington, (1683), 2 Vent. 360; 86 E.R. 485; 23 Digest 430, 5011	1138, 1145
Hodgson v. York Corp., (1873), 28 L.T. 336; 37 J.P. 725; 44 Digest 59, 429	625, 626, 628
Holden v. Holden, (1810), 1 Hag. Con. 453; 161 E.R. 614; 27 Digest 285, 2563	233, 234, 236
Hollins, Re, [1918] 1 Ch. 503; 87 L.J.Ch. 326; 118 L.T. 672; 39 Digest 126, 188	239, 241
Holy Trinity, Woolwich, Re, [1949] P. 369; 2nd Digest Supp.	812, 815
Hood-Barrs v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1946] 2 All E.R. 768; 176 L.T. 283; 27 Tax Cas. 385; 2nd Digest Supp.	615, 616
Hope Bros., Ltd v. Cowan, [1913] 2 Ch. 312; 82 L.J.Ch. 439; 108 L.T. 945; 31 Digest 31, 1781	828, 829
Horrocks v. Rigby, (1878), 9 Ch.D. 180; 47 L.J.Ch. 800; 38 L.T. 782; 42 Digest 579, 1452	147, 153, 154
Horton v. London Graving Dock Co., [1950] 1 All E.R. 180; [1950] 1 K.B. 421	1094, 1095
Howard's Settled Estates, Re, [1892] 2 Ch. 233; 61 L.J.Ch. 311; 67 L.T. 156; 30 Digest 281, 66	1196, 1197
Howarth v. Howarth, (1884), 9 P.D. 218; 51 L.T. 872; 27 Digest 492, 5250	375, 383
Howe v. Smith, (1884), 27 Ch.D. 89; 53 L.J.Ch. 1055; 50 L.T. 573; 48 J.P. 773; 40 Digest 226, 1959	929, 934
Huggett v. Miers, [1908] 2 K.B. 278; 77 L.J.K.B. 710; 99 L.T. 326; 31 Digest 100, 2386	1173, 1175
Hummeltnberg, Re, [1923] 1 Ch. 237; 92 L.J.Ch. 326; 129 L.T. 124; Digest Supp.	467, 469

Humphries v. Horne, (1844), 3 Hare 276; 67 E.R. 386; 42 Digest 454, 246	1022, 1023, 1026
Hutchinson v. Jauncey, [1950] 1 All E.R. 165; [1950] 1 K.B. 574	338, 341
Hyams v. Stuart King, [1908] 2 K.B. 696; 77 L.J.K.B. 794; 99 L.T. 424; 12 Digest 193, 1527; 25 Digest 401, 53	715, 1240, 1244, 1245
Hyde v. Hyde and Woodmansee, (1866), L.R. 1 P.D. 130; 35 L.J.P. & M. 57; 14 L.T. 188; 11 Digest 413, 800	973, 974, 975
Hyde v. White, White v. Hyde, [1933] P. 105; 149 L.T. 96; sub nom. , Re White , 102 L.J.P. 71; Digest Supp.	125, 128
Hyman v. Hyman and Goldman, [1904] P. 403; 73 L.J.P. 106; 91 L.T. 361; 27 Digest 342, 3227..	233, 234, 236
Ilfracombe Permanent Mutual Benefit Building Society, Re , [1901] 1 Ch. 102; 70 L.J.Ch. 66; 84 L.T. 146; 10 Digest 840, 5512	409, 413
Income Tax Special Purposes Comrs. v. Pemsel, [1891] A.C. 531; 61 L.J.Q.B. 265; 65 L.T. 621; 55 J.P. 805; 3 Tax Cas. 53; 8 Digest 241, 1; 28 Digest 10, 51	467, 471, 857, 859
Indermaur v. Dames, (1886), L.R. 1 C.P. 274; 35 L.J.C.P. 184; 14 L.T. 484; affid. (1867), L.R. 2 C.P. 311; 36 L.J.C.P. 181; 16 L.T. 293; 31 J.P. 390; 36 Digest 35, 203	1094, 1095
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Bibby (J.) & Sons, Ltd., [1945] 1 All E.R. 667; 114 L.J.K.B. 353; 173 L.T. 17; 29 Tax Cas. 167; affg. , Bibby (J.) & Sons, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1944] 1 All E.R. 548; 170 L.T. 370; 29 Tax Cas. 167; reversg. , [1943] 2 All E.R. 419; 170 L.T. 8; 29 Tax Cas. 167; 2nd Digest Supp.	197, 198, 271, 276, 280, 281
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Clark (F. A.) & Son, Ltd., [1941] 2 All E.R. 86, 651; [1941] 2 K.B. 270; 111 L.J.K.B. 1; 165 L.T. 275; 29 Tax Cas. 49	271, 273, 274, 275, 277, 280, 281
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Forrest, (1890), 15 App. Cas. 334; 60 L.J.Q.B. 281; 63 L.T. 36; 54 J.P. 772; 3 Tax Cas. 117; 39 Digest 299, 730	467, 472
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Raphael, Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Ezra, [1935] A.C. 96; sub nom. , Re Sassoon , 104 L.J.Ch. 24; 152 L.T. 217; Digest Supp.	391, 395
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Scott, Re Bootham Ward Strays , York, [1892] 2 Q.B. 152; 61 L.J.Q.B. 432; 67 L.T. 173; 56 J.P. 530, 632; 3 Tax Cas. 134; 39 Digest 298, 774	467, 470
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Tootal Broadhurst Lee Co., Ltd., [1947] 2 All E.R. 409; 29 Tax Cas. 352; 2nd Digest Supp.	261, 266, 267, 270
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Yorkshire Agricultural Society, [1928] 1 K.B. 611; 97 L.J.K.B. 100; 138 L.T. 192; 13 Tax Cas. 58; Digest Supp.	857, 858
Institution of Civil Engineers v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1932] 1 K.B. 149; 100 L.J.K.B. 705; 145 L.T. 553; 16 Tax Cas. 158; Digest Supp.	466, 467, 472
Jackson v. Union Marine Insurance Co., Ltd., (1874), L.R. 10 C.P. 125; 44 L.J.C.P. 27; 31 L.T. 789; 12 Digest 386, 3175	391, 395
Jackson Stansfield & Sons v. Butterworth, [1948] 2 All E.R. 558; 112 J.P. 377; 2nd Digest Supp.	848, 850
Jagger v. Jagger, [1926] P. 93; 95 L.J.P. 83; 135 L.T. 1; 27 Digest 507, 5450; Digest Supp.	1154, 1156
James v. British General Insurance Co., [1927] 2 K.B. 311; 96 L.J.K.B. 729; 137 L.T. 156; Digest Supp.	564
Jamshed Khodaram Irani v. Burjorji Dhunjibhai, (1915), 32 T.L.R. 156; 40 Digest 111, 582	929, 932
Janes' Settlement, Re , [1918] 2 Ch. 54; 87 L.J.Ch. 454; 119 L.T. 114; 28 Digest 66, 343	52, 53
Jarrett v. Hunter, (1886), 34 Ch.D. 182; 56 L.J.Ch. 141; 55 L.T. 727; 51 J.P. 165; 12 Digest 146, 991	147, 152
Jennings v. Kelly, [1939] 4 All E.R. 464; [1940] A.C. 206; 109 L.J.P.C. 38; 162 L.T. 1; 2nd Digest Supp.	983, 984, 985
Joel's Lease, Re , [1930] 2 Ch. 359; 99 L.J.Ch. 529; 143 L.T. 765; Digest Supp.	686, 687
Johnson, Ex p. , Re Johnson , (1883), 25 Ch.D. 112; 53 L.J.Ch. 309; 50 L.T. 157; 4 Digest 186, 1721	1129, 1132
Johnson v. Hill, [1945] 2 All E.R. 272; 173 L.T. 38; 2nd Digest Supp.	23, 24, 26
Joicy, Re , (1932), 76 Sol. Jo. 459; Digest Supp.	976, 978
Jones v. Great Central Ry. Co., [1910] A.C. 4; 79 L.J.K.B. 191; 100 L.T. 710; 18 Digest 137, 875	596, 597, 600
Jones v. Jones, (1876), 1 Q.B.D. 279; 45 L.J.Q.B. 166; 34 L.T. 243; 44 Digest 455, 2776	1074, 1077
Jones v. Leeming, [1930] A.C. 415; 99 L.J.K.B. 318; 143 L.T. 60; Digest Supp.	503, 506
Jones v. Littledale, (1837), 6 Ad. & El. 486; 1 Nev. & P.K.B. 677; Will. Woll. & Dav. 240; 6 L.J.K.B. 169; 112 E.R. 186; 1 Digest 629, 2527	147, 150
Jones v. Monte Video Gas Co., (1880), 5 Q.B.D. 556; 49 L.J.Q.B. 627; 42 L.T. 639; 18 Digest 85, 380	597, 602
Jones v. Pritchard, [1908] 1 Ch. 630; 77 L.J.Ch. 405; 98 L.T. 386; 19 Digest 43, 229	828, 831
Jones v. Truman, [1949] C.L.Y. 3385	141, 143
Jones Bros. (Holloway), Ltd. v. Woodhouse, [1923] 2 K.B. 117; 92 L.J.K.B. 638; 129 L.T. 317; 21 Digest 372, 1470	201, 202, 203
Jones (R. E.), Ltd. v. Waring & Gillow, Ltd., [1925] 2 K.B. 612; 94 L.J.K.B. 594; 132 L.T. 807; on appeal , [1926] A.C. 670; 95 L.J.K.B. 913; 135 L.T. 548; 35 Digest 149, 470	6, 9
Joseph Constantine S.S. Line, Ltd. v. Imperial Smelting Corp., Ltd., [1941] 2 All E.R. 165; [1942] A.C. 154; 110 L.J.K.B. 433; 165 L.T. 27; 2nd Digest Supp.	391, 395
Judgment Debtor (No. 530 of 1908), Re A , [1908] 2 K.B. 474; 77 L.J.K.B. 968; 99 L.T. 126; 4 Digest 97, 874	1129, 1131
Kasler & Cohen v. Slavouski, [1928] 1 K.B. 78; 96 L.J.K.B. 850; 137 L.T. 641; 39 Digest 443, 724	860, 866
Kaslo-Slocan Mining & Financial Corp., Ltd., Re , [1910] W.N. 13; 10 Digest 838, 5499	409, 412
Keegan v. Dawson, [1934] I.R. 232; 27 B.W.C.C. Supp. 136; Digest Supp.	1105, 1108
Keen v. Henry, [1894] 1 Q.B. 292; 63 L.J.Q.B. 211; 69 L.T. 671; 58 J.P. 262; 34 Digest 35, 118	567, 570
Keeves v. Dean, Nunn v. Pellegrini, [1924] 1 K.B. 685; 93 L.J.K.B. 203; 130 L.T. 593; 31 Digest 576, 7254	1187, 1188
Kellock v. Kellock, [1939] 3 All E.R. 972; Digest Supp.	233, 236
Kelly's Directories, Ltd. v. Gavin & Lloyds, [1901] 2 Ch. 763; 70 L.J.Ch. 736; 85 L.T. 399; Digest, Practice, 880, 4196	452, 457
Kemp v. Wright, [1895] 1 Ch. 121; 64 L.J.Ch. 59; 71 L.T. 650; 59 J.P. 133; 7 Digest 503, 296	111, 115, 116
Kensington Borough Council v. Allen, [1926] 1 K.B. 576; 95 L.J.K.B. 481; 134 L.T. 665; 90 J.P. 105; 36 Digest 230, 703	903, 904, 907
Kenyon v. Walker, Stevenson v. Kenyon, [1946] 2 All E.R. 595; 2nd Digest Supp.	1223, 1224
Kiddle v. Kidston, (1884), 14 L.R. Ir. 1; 18 I.L.T. 9; 41 Digest 672, a	534, 536, 537

	PAGE
Kingston's (Duchess) Case, (1776), 1 Leach. 146; 168 E.R. 175; 27 Digest 554, 6080 ..	785, 788
Kirkman v. Kirkman, (1807), 1 Hag. Con. 409; 161 E.R. 598; 27 Digest 286, 2579 ..	233, 234, 236
Knatchbull's Settled Estate, Re , (1885), 29 Ch.D. 588; 54 L.J.Ch. 1168; 53 L.T. 284; 30 Digest 281, 65 ..	1196, 1197
Krzus v. Crow's Nest Pass Coal Co., [1912] A.C. 590; 81 L.J.P.C. 227; 107 L.T. 77; 6 B.W.C.C. 270; 2 Digest 131, 7211 ..	1105, 1108
Laing v. Reed, (1869), 5 Ch. App. 4; 39 L.J.Ch. 1; 21 L.T. 773; 34 J.P. 134; 7 Digest 458, 25 ..	253, 258
Lake v. Simmons, [1926] 2 K.B. 51; 95 L.J.K.B. 586; 135 L.T. 129; reversd. , [1927] A.C. 437; 96 L.J.K.B. 621; 137 L.T. 233; 35 Digest 97, 64 ..	1028, 1031, 1032
Lancaster and Macnamara, Re , [1918] 2 K.B. 472; 87 L.J.K.B. 1250; 119 L.T. 440; 2 Digest 42, 232 ..	686, 687
Lancefield v. Iggulden, (1874), 10 Ch. App. 136; 44 L.J.Ch. 203; 31 L.T. 813; reversd. , L.R. 17 Eq. 556; 23 Digest 522, 5900 ..	2, 4
Langford Property Co., Ltd. v. Sommerfeld, [1948] W.N. 287; 206 L.T.Jo. 38; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	1080, 1089
Lanyon, Re , [1927] 2 Ch. 264; 96 L.J.Ch. 487; 137 L.T. 806; 44 Digest 456, 2782 ..	956, 963, 1073, 1076
Lassence v. Tierney, (1849), 1 Mac. & G. 551; 15 L.T.O.S. 557; 41 E.R. 1379; 37 Digest 99, 346 ..	293, 295, 296
Latter v. Juckes and Page, [1927] 1 K.B. 17; 96 L.J.K.B. 137; 136 L.T. 177; Digest Supp. ..	30, 35
Lauder v. Lauder, [1949] 1 All E.R. 76; [1949] P. 277 ..	398, 402
Laurie v. Raglan Building Co., Ltd., [1941] 3 All E.R. 332; [1942] 1 K.B. 152; 111 L.J.K.B. 292; 166 L.T. 63; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	167, 168
Lawson, Re , [1914] 1 Ch. 682; 83 L.J.Ch. 519; 110 L.T. 573; 34 Digest 38, 149 ..	475, 477
Lazard Eros. & Co. v. Banque Industrielle de Moscou, [1932] 1 K.B. 617; 101 L.J.K.B. 65; 146 L.T. 240; Digest Supp. ..	106, 107, 109
Lazard Bros. & Co. v. Midland Bank, Ltd., [1933] A.C. 289; 102 L.J.K.B. 191; 148 L.T. 242; Digest Supp. ..	357, 363, 372
Leduc v. Ward, (1888), 20 Q.B.D. 475; 57 L.J.Q.B. 379; 58 L.T. 908; 41 Digest 485, 3172 ..	517, 518, 520
Lee v. Roberts, (1925), 60 L.Jo. 574; 159 L.T.Jo. 531; 31 Digest 585, 7346 ..	529, 531, 533
Lee (John) & Son (Grantham), Ltd. v. Railway Executive, [1949] 2 All E.R. 581 ..	391, 396
Leslie & Co. v. Cumming, [1926] 2 K.B. 417; 95 L.J.K.B. 1007; 135 L.T. 443; 31 Digest 557, 7041 ..	338, 339
Levene v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1928] A.C. 217; 97 L.J.K.B. 377; 139 L.T. 1; 13 Tax Cas. 486; Digest Supp. ..	1035, 1038
Levy v. Langridge, (1838), 4 M. & W. 337; 150 E.R. 1458; sub nom. , Levi v. Langridge , 7 L.J.Ex. 387; 39 Digest 458, 852 ..	76, 78
Lewis v. James, (1886), 32 Ch.D. 326; 56 L.J.Ch. 163; 54 L.T. 260; 50 J.P. 423; 42 Digest 558, 1231 ..	1023, 1025
Liddiard v. Waldron, [1934] 1 K.B. 435; 103 L.J.K.B. 172; 150 L.T. 323; Digest Supp. ..	828, 831
Linaker v. Pilcher, (1901), 70 L.J.K.B. 396; 84 L.T. 421; 43 Digest 127, 1291 ..	662, 663, 666, 669, 671, 674
Lindo v. Belisario, (1795), 1 Hag. Con. 216; 161 E.R. 531; on appeal (1796), 1 Hag. Con. App. 7; 27 Digest 36, 123 ..	973, 975
Lindop v. Quaipe, [1949] 1 All E.R. 456 ..	174, 179, 180
Lindsay v. Lindsay, [1934] P. 162; 103 L.J.P. 100; 151 L.T. 283; Digest Supp. ..	784, 785, 787, 789, 790, 791
Lindsay's Estate, Re , [1915] W.N. 246 ..	385, 389
Linnett v. Metropolitan Police Comr., [1946] 1 All E.R. 380; [1946] K.B. 290; 115 L.J.K.B. 613; 174 L.T. 178; 110 J.P. 153; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	825, 827
Lissack v. Lissack, [1950] 2 All E.R. 293 ..	398, 403
Liverpool School for Indigent Blind, Re , [1898] 2 Ch. 669; sub nom. , Lund v. Liverpool School for Indigent Blind , 67 L.J.Ch. 680; 79 L.T. 68; 62 J.P. 728; 28 Digest 83, 515 ..	52, 53
Liversidge v. Anderson, [1941] 3 All E.R. 338; [1942] A.C. 206; 110 L.J.K.B. 724; 116 L.T. 1; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	245, 248
Llewellyn, Re , [1891] 3 Ch. 145; 60 L.J.Ch. 732; 65 L.T. 249; 42 Digest 268, 3021 ..	1049, 1053, 1061, 1062
Lloyd Generale Italiano, Re , (1885), 29 Ch.D. 219; 54 L.J.Ch. 748; 10 Digest 1208, 8549 ..	106, 110, 549, 550, 557, 558
London and Globe Finance Corp., Ltd., Re , [1903] 1 Ch. 728; 72 L.J.Ch. 368; 88 L.T. 194; 10 Digest 985, 6819 ..	657, 661
London & North Eastern Ry. Co. v. Berriman, [1946] 1 All E.R. 255; [1946] A.C. 278; 115 L.J.K.B. 124; 174 L.T. 151; 38 B.W.C.C. 109; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	873, 876, 987, 991
Long v. Millar, (1879), 4 C.P.D. 450; 48 L.J.Q.B. 596; 41 L.T. 306; 43 J.P. 797; 12 Digest 141, 956 ..	1213, 1215, 1216
Lord Advocate v. Inzievar Estates, [1938] 2 All E.R. 424; [1938] A.C. 402; 107 L.J.P.C. 65; 159 L.T. 97; Digest Supp. ..	852, 856
Lorentzen v. Lydden & Co., Ltd., [1942] 2 K.B. 202; 111 L.J.K.B. 327; 167 L.T. 365; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	357, 372
Lotinga v. North Eastern Marine Engineering Co. (1938), Ltd., [1941] 3 All E.R. 1; [1941] 2 K.B. 399; 111 L.J.K.B. 65; 106 J.P. 1; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	988, 993
Loveden v. Loveden, (1810), 2 Hag. Con. 1; 161 E.R. 648; 27 Digest 296, 2730 ..	458, 459
Lovesy v. Palmer, [1916] 2 Ch. 233; 85 L.J.Ch. 481; 114 L.T. 1033; 12 Digest 144, 984 ..	147, 151, 152
Low v. Guthrie, [1909] A.C. 278; 78 L.J.P.C. 126; 23 Digest 132, 1306 ..	117, 123
Lowry v. Consolidated African Selection Trust, Ltd., [1940] 2 All E.R. 545; [1940] A.C. 648; 109 L.J.K.B. 539; 164 L.T. 56; 23 Tax Cas. 295; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	94, 97, 99, 102
Lucas, Re , [1922] 2 Ch. 52; 91 L.J.Ch. 480; 127 L.T. 272; Digest Supp. ..	1149
Luccioni v. Luccioni, [1943] 1 All E.R. 260; affd. , [1943] 1 All E.R. 354; [1943] P. 49; 112 L.J.P. 51; 168 L.T. 263; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	404, 405, 406, 407
Lumley v. Gye, (1853), 2 E. & B. 216; 22 L.J.Q.B. 463; 118 E.R. 749; 42 Digest 987, 169 ..	798, 799, 803, 804
Lumley v. Ravenscroft, [1895] 1 Q.B. 683; 64 L.J.Q.B. 441; 72 L.T. 382; 59 J.P. 277; 28 Digest 162, 199 ..	147, 153, 154
Luxor (Eastbourne), Ltd. v. Cooper, [1941] 1 All E.R. 33; [1941] A.C. 108; 110 L.J.K.B. 131; 164 L.T. 313; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	134, 136
Lynch v. Knight, (1861), 9 H.L. Cas. 577; 5 L.T. 291; 11 E.R. 854; 27 Digest 82, 644 ..	799, 802, 803
Lyon v. Don Brothers, Buist & Co., Ltd., 1944 S.C. (J.) 1; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	987, 990, 993
Lyon v. Reed, (1844), 13 M. & W. 285; 13 L.J.Ex. 377; 3 L.T.O.S. 302; 153 E.R. 118; 31 Digest 512, 6696 ..	343, 346

	PAGE
McCarrick v. Liverpool Corp., [1946] 2 All E.R. 646; [1947] A.C. 219; [1947] L.J.R. 56; 176 L.T. 11; 111 J.P. 6; 2nd Digest Supp. 1160, 1102, 1164
McCheane v. Gyles (No. 2), [1902] 1 Ch. 911; 71 L.J.Ch. 446; 86 L.T. 217; Digest, Practice, 429, 1246	607, 609
McIntyre v. Hardcastle, [1948] 1 All E.R. 696; [1948] 2 K.B. 82; [1948] L.J.R. 1249; 2nd Digest Supp. 1209, 1210, 1211
McIvor v. Robertson (unreported)	832, 833
McKenna v. City Life Assurance Co., [1919] 2 K.B. 491; 88 L.J.K.B. 1223; 122 L.T. 30; 29 Digest 361, 2921
McKernan v. Fraser, (1931), 46 C.L.R. 343	821, 824
M'Lachlan v. M'Lachlan, 1945 S.C. 382; 2nd Digest Supp.	663, 677
Maclaren v. Stainton, (1858), 27 L.J.Ch. 442; 30 L.T.O.S. 331; 44 Digest 958, 8109	233, 235, 236
M'Lean v. Leftley (or M'Lean), 1947 S.C. 79; 2nd Digest Supp.	188, 190
MacLenan v. Segar, [1917] 2 K.B. 325; 86 L.J.K.B. 1113; 117 L.T. 876; 29 Digest 9, 120; 36 Digest 123, 817	781, 783
M'Naghten's Case, (1843), 10 Cl. & Fin. 200; 8 E.R. 718; 14 Digest 56, 229	228, 230, 231, 232, 1093, 1094, 1095
Macrae v. Macrae, [1949] 2 All E.R. 34; [1949] P. 397; 113 J.P. 342; 2nd Digest Supp.	233, 236, 237, 238, 239
McTaggart v. McTaggart, [1948] 2 All E.R. 754; [1949] P. 94; [1949] L.J.R. 82; 2nd Digest Supp.	1035, 1039
Magee v. Atkinson and Townley, (1837), 2 M. & W. 440; Murph. & L. 115; 6 L.J.Ex. 115; 150 E.R. 830; 1 Digest 628, 2526	328, 329
Mallett v. Dunn, [1949] 1 All E.R. 973; [1949] 2 K.B. 180; [1949] L.J.R. 1650; 2nd Digest Supp.	147, 150
Manners v. Manners and Fortescue, [1936] 1 All E.R. 41; [1936] P. 117; 105 L.J.P. 26; 15 L.T. 271; Digest Supp.	799
Manning v. Manning, Fellows v. Fellows, [1950] 1 All E.R. 602	375, 379, 381
Marbe v. George Edwards (Daly's Theatre), Ltd., [1928] 1 K.B. 269; 96 L.J.K.B. 980; 138 L.T. 51; 42 Digest 911, 71	748, 749, 751, 752, 755
Marchbank v. Campbell, [1923] 1 K.B. 245; 92 L.J.K.B. 137; 128 L.T. 283; 31 Digest 571, 712	167
Margate Pier and Harbour (Co. of Proprietors) v. Margate Town Council, (1869), 20 L.T. 564; 33 J.P. 437; 36 Digest 179, 240	174, 176
Marreo v. Richardson, [1903] 2 K.B. 584; 77 L.J.K.B. 859; 93 L.T. 486; 32 Digest 383, 659	626, 631
Marryat, Re, [1948] 1 All E.R. 796; [1948] 1 Ch. 298; [1948] L.J.R. 1237; 2nd Digest Supp. Marshall, Re, [1920] 1 Ch. 284; 89 L.J.Ch. 204; 122 L.T. 673; 39 Digest 50, 678	716, 718 475, 477
Martin v. Macknochie, (1868), L.R. 2 P.C. 365; 38 L.J.Ecd. 1; 19 L.T. 503; 33 J.P. 35; 16 E.R. 603; 19 Digest 450, 2948	86, 87, 88 70, 72, 73, 74, 75
Martin Estates Co., Ltd. v. Watt & Hunter, [1925] N.I. 79; 31 Digest 557, 7045, i	188, 190
Martins Bank, Ltd. v. Kavanagh, [1948] 2 All E.R. 448; 2nd Digest Supp.	738, 739
Mason, Re, [1928] 1 Ch. 385; 97 L.J.Ch. 321; 139 L.T. 477; affd. , [1929] 1 Ch. 1; Digest Supp.	1138, 1146, 1147
Mason & Taylor, Re, (1878), 10 Ch.D. 729; 48 L.J.Ch. 193; 42 Digest 268, 3025	1050, 1061
May, Ex p. , Re May, (1884), 12 Q.B.D. 497; 50 L.T. 744; 4 Digest 538, 4947	38, 40
Melhuish v. Morris, (1938) 4 All E.R. 98; Digest Supp.	89, 90, 91, 92, 93
Mercantile Marine Service Assoc. v. Toms, [1916] 2 K.B. 243; 85 L.J.K.B. 311; 114 L.T. 124; 43 Digest 126, 1288	663, 668, 673
Mercer v. Pyramid Sand and Gravel Co., (1944), 109 J.P. 54; 2nd Digest Supp.	657, 660
Mersey Docks and Harbour Board Trustees v. Gibbs, Same v. Penhallow, (1866), L.R. 1 H.L. 93; 11 H.L. Cas. 686; 35 L.J.Ex. 225; 14 L.T. 677; 30 J.P. 467; 11 E.R. 1500; affg. S.C. sub nom. , Gibbs v. Liverpool Docks Trustees, (1858), 3 H. & N. 164; 27 L.J.Ex. 321; 31 L.T.O.S. 22; 22 J.P. 224; 43 Digest 871, 3167	663, 667
Messenger, Re, Ex p. Calvert, (1876), 3 Ch.D. 317; 45 L.J.Bey. 134; 34 L.T. 920; 42 Digest 268, 3023	1049, 1050, 1053, 1054, 1055, 1056, 1060
Metcalf v. Boyce, [1927] 1 K.B. 758; 96 L.J.K.B. 376; 136 L.T. 606; 91 J.P. 55; Digest Supp.	343, 347
Miley v. A.-G., [1918] 1 I.R. 455	467, 471
Millard v. Millard and Addis, [1945] 2 All E.R. 525; sub nom. , M. v. M., [1946] P. 31; 115 L.J.P. 29; 173 L.T. 805; 2nd Digest Supp.	6, 9
Miller v. Attlee, (1849), 3 Exch. 799; 13 L.T.O.S. 121; 42 Digest 259, 2930	125, 127
Miller v. Boothman (William) & Sons, Ltd., [1944] 1 All E.R. 333; [1944] K.B. 337; 113 L.J.K.B. 206; 170 L.T. 187; 2nd Digest Supp.	988, 993
Miller v. Hancock, [1893] 2 Q.B. 177; 69 L.T. 214; 57 J.P. 758; 31 Digest 99, 2380	1173, 1174, 1175, 1177
Mills' Will Trusts, Re, [1937] 1 All E.R. 142; 106 L.J.Ch. 159; 156 L.T. 190; Digest Supp.	879, 880
Minet v. Johnson, (1890), 63 L.T. 507; Digest, Practice, 391, 949	738, 739, 741
Minister of Pensions v. Chennell, [1946] 2 All E.R. 719; [1947] K.B. 250; [1947] L.J.R. 700; 176 L.T. 164; 2nd Digest Supp.	1105, 1108
Mitchell v. Barnes, [1949] 2 All E.R. 719; [1950] 1 K.B. 448	174, 179
Mittelmann v. Denman, [1920] 1 K.B. 519; 89 L.J.K.B. 310; 122 L.T. 426; 84 J.P. 39; 33 Digest 391, 1023	1044, 1047
Mogul S.S. Co. v. McGregor, Gow & Co., [1892] A.C. 25; 61 L.J.Q.B. 295; 66 L.T. 1; 56 J.P. 101; 12 Digest 234, 1938	715
Monk v. Redwing Aircraft Co., Ltd., [1942] 1 All E.R. 133; [1942] 1 K.B. 182; 111 L.J.K.B. 277; 166 L.T. 42; 2nd Digest Supp.	663, 677
Monkland v. Jack Barclay, Ltd., [1950] 2 All E.R. 715	706, 709, 711, 712, 713
Monypenny v. Dering, (1852), 2 De.G.M. & G. 145; 22 L.J.Ch. 313; 19 L.T.O.S. 320; 42 E.R. 826; 44 Digest 551, 3697	956, 963
Moorcock, The, (1889), 14 P.D. 64; 58 L.J.P. 73; 60 L.T. 654; 12 Digest 611, 5048	391, 395
Moore v. Darton, (1851), 4 De.G. & Sm. 517; 20 L.J.Ch. 626; 18 L.T.O.S. 24; 4 Digest 938; 25 Digest 541, 288	1199, 1205, 1207
Morgan v. London General Omnibus Co., (1884), 13 Q.B.D. 832; 53 L.J.Q.B. 352; 51 L.T. 213; 48 J.P. 503; 24 Digest 935, 242	720, 722
Morgan's Will Trusts, Re, [1950] 1 All E.R. 1097	513, 516, 954
Morland v. Pellatt, (1829), 8 B. & C. 722; 3 Man. & Ry. K.B. 411; 7 L.J.O.S.K.B. 54; 108 E.R. 1211; 21 Digest 508, 833	30, 32, 33
Mosely, Re, (1867), 15 W.R. 975; 42 Digest 268, 3020	1050, 1054
Moser v. Marsden, [1892] 1 Ch. 487; 61 L.J.Ch. 319; 66 L.T. 570; Digest, Practice, 423, 1194 606, 607, 610, 611	1138, 1146
Moses v. Macferlan, (1760), 2 Burr. 1005; 97 E.R. 676; 35 Digest 154, 511	1247, 1249
Moss v. Cooper, (1861), 1 John. & H. 352; 4 L.T. 790; 70 E.R. 782; 43 Digest 501, 484

Mould v. Mould, [1933] P. 76; 102 L.J.P. 21; 148 L.T. 499; Digest Supp.	785, 786, 787, 788, 789, 790
Mudge v. Mudge, [1950] 1 All E.R. 607	748, 751, 753
Murray v. Scott, Agnew v. Murray, Brimelow v. Murray, (1884), 9 App. Cas. 519; 53 L.J.Ch. 745; 51 L.T. 462; 7 Digest 455, 5	254, 259
Musgrove, In the Estate of , Davis v. Mayhew, [1927] P. 264; 96 L.J.P. 140; 137 L.T. 612; 44 Digest 284, 1159	117, 121
Naamlooze Vennootschap Handels-en-Transport Maatschappij "Vulcaan" v. A/S J. Ludwig Mowinckels Rederi, [1938] 2 All E.R. 152; Digest Supp.	618, 622, 624
Nachimson v. Nachimson, [1930] P. 217; 99 L.J.P. 104; 143 L.T. 254; 94 J.P. 211; Digest Supp.	298, 300, 303, 304
Nash v. High Duty Alloys, Ltd., [1947] 1 All E.R. 363; [1947] K.B. 377; 2nd Digest Supp.	987, 993
National Pari-Mutual Assocn., Ltd. v. R. (1930), 47 T.L.R. 110; Digest Supp.	1090
National Provincial Bank, Ltd. v. Freedman and Rubens, (1934), (unreported)	334, 336, 337
Neale v. Del Soto, [1945] 1 All E.R. 191; [1945] K.B. 144; 114 L.J.K.B. 138; 172 L.T. 65; 2nd Digest Supp.	1223, 1224, 1225
New Callao, Ltd., Re , (1882), 47 L.T. 175; 10 Digest 850, 5637	409, 412
New South Wales Taxation Comrs. v. Palmer, [1907] A.C. 179; 76 L.J.P.C. 41; 96 L.T. 278; 30 Digest 183, 507	995, 998
Newport Borough Council v. Monmouthshire County Council, [1947] 1 All E.R. 900; [1947] A.C. 520; [1947] L.J.R. 913; 177 L.T. 77; 111 J.P. 402; 2nd Digest Supp.	1228, 1237
Newton v. Hardy, (1933), 149 L.T. 165; Digest Supp.	798, 799, 802
Newton v. Hatter, (1705), 2 Ld. Raym. 1208; 92 E.R. 298	799
Newton v. Newton, (1885), 11 P.D. 11; 55 L.J.P. 13; 27 Digest 549, 6005	1154, 1155, 1156
Nicholson, Re , Ex p. Quinn, (1883), 53 L.J.Ch. 302; 49 L.T. 811; 42 Digest 269, 3027	1049, 1050, 1054, 1055, 1056, 1060, 1061, 1062
Noakes v. Noakes and Hill, (1877), 4 P.D. 60; 47 L.J.P. 20; 39 L.T. 47; 27 Digest 518, 5532	1154, 1155
Noel v. Robinson, (1682), 1 Vern. 90; 23 E.R. 334; 23 Digest 428, 4988	1138, 1141
Norris v. Beazley, (1877), 2 C.P.D. 80; 46 L.J.Q.B. 169; 35 L.T. 846; Digest, Practice 429, 1243	607, 608
North v. Loomes, [1919] 1 Ch. 378; 88 L.J.Ch. 217; 120 L.T. 533; 12 Digest 156, 1109	1213, 1217
North British Ry. Co. v. Scott, [1923] A.C. 37; 92 L.J.P.C. 16; 128 L.T. 394; 8 Tax Cas. 332; 28 Digest 88, 514	1191, 1193, 1194
Noys v. Mordaunt, (1706), 2 Vern. 581; 24 E.R. 128; sub nom. Noyes v. Mordant, Gilb. Ch. 2; 20 Digest 350, 894	914, 917
O.C.S., Re , Ex p. Debtor, [1904] 2 K.B. 161; 73 L.J.K.B. 585; 91 L.T. 224; 4 Digest 99, 896	1129, 1131
Oastler v. Henderson, (1877), 2 Q.B.D. 575; 46 L.J.Q.B. 607; 37 L.T. 22; 31 Digest 523, 6701	343, 347, 349
O'Brien v. Condon, [1905] 1 I.R. 51; 38 I.L.T. 252; 43 Digest 596, 447 iii	1246, 1247, 1250
Ocean Bride, The, (1854), Spinks, 66; 2 Ecc. & Ad. 8; 24 L.T.O.S. 99; 164 E.R. 277; 37 Digest 656, 1128	221, 227
Ogden, Re , (1909), 25 T.L.R. 382; 8 Digest 297, 738	857
Ogilvie, Re , [1910] P. 243; 79 L.J.P. 113; 103 L.T. 154; 42 Digest 216, 2430	385, 387, 388, 389
Oldham, Re , [1925] Ch. 75; 94 L.J.Ch. 148; 132 L.T. 658; 44 Digest 182, 109	914, 917
Oliver v. Hunting, (1890), 44 Ch.D. 205; 59 L.J.Ch. 255; 62 L.T. 108; 12 Digest 160, 1156	1213, 1215, 1216
Onderneeming, The, (1803), 5 Ch. Rob. 7, n.; 165 E.R. 678; 37 Digest 578, 96	220, 226
Onslow v. Onslow, Jones & Campbell, (1889), 60 L.T. 680; 27 Digest 427, 4352	49, 50
Oppenheimer v. Frazer & Wyatt, [1907] 1 K.B. 519; 76 L.J.K.B. 276; reversd. C.A.; [1907] 2 K.B. 50; 76 L.J.K.B. 806; 97 L.T. 3; 1 Digest 335, 495	1028, 1030, 1031, 1032
Ord v. Ord, [1923] 2 K.B. 432; 92 L.J.K.B. 859; 129 L.T. 605; 27 Digest 237, 2080	785, 788
Orr v. Kaines, (1750), 2 Ves. Sen. 194; 28 E.R. 125; 23 Digest 430, 5013	1138, 1141
Osborne v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, [1909] 1 Ch. 163; 78 L.J.Ch. 204; 99 L.T. 945; affd. sub nom. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants v. Osborne, [1910] A.C. 87; 79 L.J.Ch. 87; 101 L.T. 787; 43 Digest 104, 1089	663, 671
O'Shea, Re , Ex p. Lancaster, [1911] 2 K.B. 981; 81 L.J.K.B. 70; 105 L.T. 486; 25 Digest 415, 192	1240, 1242, 1243, 1244, 1245
Oxford City Council v. Oxfordshire County Council, [1938] 4 All E.R. 721; [1939] A.C. 48; 108 L.J.K.B. 136; 160 L.T. 161; 103 J.P. 79; reversd. , [1938] 1 All E.R. 801; [1938] 2 K.B. 415; 107 L.J.K.B. 724; 159 L.T. 73; 102 J.P. 219; Digest Supp.	1227, 1228, 1231, 1233, 1234
Oxford Group v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1949] 2 All E.R. 537; 2nd Digest Supp.	857, 858
Packe, Re , [1913] 1 Ch. 437; 87 L.J.Ch. 300; 118 L.T. 693; 8 Digest 333, 1139	653, 655, 656
Padbury v. Holliday & Greenwood, Ltd., (1912), 28 T.L.R. 494; 34 Digest 159, 1246	793, 796
Palme, The, (1872), Dalloz, Jurisprudence Generale, Pt. III, 94	220, 227
Palmer's Shipbuilding and Iron Co. v. Chaytor, (1869), L.R. 4 Q.B. 209; 10 B. & S. 177; 38 L.J.M.C. 63; 19 D.T. 638; 33 J.P. 327; 24 Digest 900, 21	155, 156
Parana, The, (1877), 2 P.D. 118; 36 L.T. 383; 41 Digest 492, 3207	517, 518, 520
Parkinson (Sir Lindsay) & Co., Ltd. v. Commissioners of Works and Public Buildings, [1950] 1 All E.R. 208; [1949] 2 K.B. 632	390, 391, 395, 396
Parry v. Aluminium Corpn., Ltd., (1940), 162 L.T. 236; Digest Supp.	167, 168
Parsons v. Parsons, [1907] P. 331; 76 L.J.P. 159; 27 Digest 382, 3735	449, 450
Pasley v. Freeman, (1789), 3 Term. Rep. 51; 100 E.R. 450; 26 Digest 31, 186	798, 800, 804
Paterson v. Beardmore (William) & Co., Ltd., [1948] L.J.R. 1146; 41 B.W.C.C. 64; 2nd Digest Supp.	638, 647
Paul's Settlement Trusts, Re , [1920] 1 Ch. 99; 88 L.J.Ch. 530; 121 L.T. 544; 44 Digest 784, 6414	286, 289
Pearce v. Davis, (1834), 1 Mood. & R. 365; 174 E.R. 125; 12 Digest 464, 3773	716, 718
Pearson v. Cox, (1877), 2 C.P.D. 369; 36 L.T. 495; 42 J.P. 117; 34 Digest 157, 1233	793
Pease & Partners, Ltd. v. Birch, [1941] 1 All E.R. 343; sub nom. Birch v. Pease & Partners, Ltd., [1941] 1 K.B. 615; 110 L.J.K.B. 273; 165 L.T. 146; 34 B.W.C.C. 37; 2nd Digest Supp.	1115, 1117
Peek v. Peek, [1947] 2 All E.R. 578; [1948] P. 46; [1948] L.J.R. 333; affd. , [1948] 2 All E.R. 297; 2nd Digest Supp.	375, 381, 382, 383, 384
Peek v. Trower, (1881), 7 P.D. 21; 45 J.P. 797; 19 Digest 462, 3091	812, 816
Peel, Re , [1936] Ch. 161; 105 L.J.Ch. 65; 154 L.T. 373; Digest Supp.	892, 898, 899
Pelly v. Wathen, (1849), 7 Hare, 351; 18 L.J.Ch. 281; 13 L.T.O.S. 43; 68 E.R. 144; affd. , (1851), 1 De G.M. & G. 16; 21 L.J.Ch. 105; 18 L.T.O.S. 129; 42 E.R. 457; 42 Digest 266, 3004	1049, 1053, 1062, 1063

	PAGE
Pender v. Herle, (1725), 3 Bro. Parl. Cas. 505; 1 E.R. 1462; 16 Digest 347, 1733 ..	42, 46
Pender v. Lushington, (1877), 6 Ch.D. 70; 46 L.J.Ch. 317; 9 Digest 572, 3800	1064, 1068
Penny v. Wimbledon Urban Council, [1899] 2 Q.B. 72; 68 L.J.Q.B. 704; 80 L.T. 615; 34 Digest 161, 1260	793, 796
Perrin v. Morgan, [1943] 1 All E.R. 187; [1943] A.C. 399; 112 L.J.Ch. 81; 168 L.T. 177; 2nd Digest Supp.	879, 881, 1246, 1248
Peterson v. Peterson, (1866), L.R. 3 Eq. 111; 36 L.J.Ch. 101; 23 Digest 431, 5025	1138, 1142
Petrie v. MacFisheries, Ltd., [1939] 4 All E.R. 281; [1940] 1 K.B. 258; 109 L.J.K.B. 263; 161 L.T. 408; 104 J.P. 40; 2nd Digest Supp.	475, 478
Pettit, Re, [1922] 2 Ch. 765; 91 L.J.Ch. 732; 127 L.T. 491; 39 Digest 167, 537	1192, 1194
Petty v. Petty, [1943] 2 All E.R. 511; [1943] P. 101; 112 L.J.P. 97; 169 L.T. 224; 2nd Digest Supp.	375, 380, 381, 384
Pharmaceutical Society of Ireland v. Revenue Comrs., [1938] I.R. 202	467, 471
Phillips v. Bury, (1694), Carth. 180, 319; Skin. 447; 90 E.R. 198; 8 Digest 385, 2014	741, 743
Phillips, Re, [1931] 1 Ch. 347; 100 L.J.Ch. 65; 144 L.T. 178; Digest Supp.	976, 978
Phillips v. Phillips, (1844), 1 Rob. Ecc. 144; 2 L.T.O.S. 336; 3 L.T.O.S. 141; 163 E.R. 993	748, 753, 754
Phillips v. Potter, (1925), 94 L.J.K.B. 819; 133 L.T. 256; 31 Digest 570, 7182	174, 178
Philp v. Squire, (1791), Peake, 114; 27 Digest 81, 641	799
Pig Marketing Board (Northern Ireland) v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1945] N.I. 155; 26 Tax Cas. 319; 2nd Digest Supp.	467, 471
Pilbury v. Brazier, [1950] 2 All E.R. 835	887, 890
Place v. Searle, [1932] 2 K.B. 497; 101 L.J.K.B. 465; 147 L.T. 188; Digest Supp.	798, 801, 802, 804
Plancq v. Marks, (1906), 70 J.P. 216; 94 L.T. 577; 42 Digest 870, 199	89, 92
Platman v. Frohman, [1929] 1 K.B. 376; 98 L.J.K.B. 351; 140 L.T. 405; 93 J.P. 134; Digest Supp.	174, 182
Plunkett v. Barclays Bank, Ltd., [1936] 1 All E.R. 653; [1936] 2 K.B. 107; 105 L.J.K.B. 379; 154 L.T. 465; Digest Supp.	125
Podar Trading Co., Ltd., Bombay v. Francois Tagher, Barcelona, [1949] 2 All E.R. 62; [1949] 2 K.B. 277; [1949] L.J.R. 1470; 2nd Digest Supp.	618, 619, 623
Point of Ayr Collieries, Ltd. v. Lloyd-George, [1943] 2 All E.R. 546; 2nd Digest Supp.	245, 248, 766, 776
Polemis and Furness, Withy & Co., Re, [1921] 3 K.B. 560; sub nom., Polemis v. Furness, Withy & Co., 90 L.J.K.B. 1353; 126 L.T. 154; 36 Digest 29, 151	799, 804
Pontardawe Rural Council v. Moore-Gwyn, [1929] 1 Ch. 656; 98 L.J.Ch. 242; 141 L.T. 23; 93 J.P. 141; Digest Supp.	626, 629
Pontopores, The, (1915), 1 Br. & Col. Pr. Cas. 371; subsequent proceedings, [1916] 1 P. 100; 85 L.J.P. 143; 114 L.T. 418; 37 Digest 676, 1436	220, 227
Powles v. Hider, (1856), 6 E. & B. 207; 25 L.J.Q.B. 331; 27 L.T.O.S. 77; 21 J.P. 4; 119 E.R. 841; 34 Digest 34, 112	567, 570
Pratt v. British Medical Assoc., [1919] 1 K.B. 244; 88 L.J.K.B. 628; 120 L.T. 41; Digest Supp.	663, 676
Pretty v. Bickmore, (1873), L.R. 8 C.P. 401; 28 L.T. 704; 37 J.P. 552; 31 Digest 345, 4881	1160, 1161, 1166
Price, Re, [1950] 1 All E.R. 338; [1950] Ch. 241	879, 881
Price v. Griffith, (1851), 1 De G.M. & G. 80; 21 L.J.Ch. 78; 18 L.T.O.S. 190; 42 E.R. 482; 42 Digest 453, 236	147, 153, 154
Price v. Guest, Keen and Nettlefolds, [1918] A.C. 760; 87 L.J.K.B. 801; 119 L.T. 345; 11 B.W.C.C. 154; 34 Digest 408, 3325	475, 477
Primus, The, (1854), 1 Ecc. & Ad. 353; 2 Eng. Pr. Cas. 290; Spinks, 48; 24 L.T.O.S. 15; 164 E.R. 203; 37 Digest 579, 107	220, 226
Prinses Juliana, The, Esbjerg Owners v. Prinses Juliana Owners, [1936] 1 All E.R. 685; [1936] P. 139; 105 L.J.P. 58; 155 L.T. 261; Digest Supp.	415, 430
Prole v. Allen, [1950] 1 All E.R. 476	229, 231
Prout v. Hunter, [1924] 2 K.B. 736; 93 L.J.K.B. 993; 132 L.T. 193; 31 Digest 557, 7040	338, 339, 340
Public Trustee v. Pearlberg, [1940] 2 All E.R. 270; [1940] 2 K.B. 1; 109 L.J.K.B. 597; 164 L.T. 114; 2nd Digest Supp.	550, 552, 553
Puddephatt v. Leith, [1916] 1 Ch. 200; 85 L.J.Ch. 185; 114 L.T. 454; 28 Digest 398, 266	271, 278
Pudbrook v. Richmond Consolidated Mining Co., (1878), 9 Ch.D. 610; 48 L.J.Ch. 65; 28 Digest 476, 316	271, 278
Pwllbach Colliery Co., Ltd. v. Woodman, [1915] A.C. 634; 84 L.J.K.B. 874; 113 L.T. 10; 36 Digest 199, 356	828, 831
Pyke, Ex p., Re Lister, (1878), 8 Ch.D. 754; 38 L.T. 923; sub nom., Re Lister, Ex p. Pike, 47 L.J.Bey. 100; 25 Digest 415, 191	1240, 1242, 1244, 1245
Quarman v. Burnett, (1840), 6 M. & W. 499; 9 L.J.Ex. 308; 151 E.R. 509; 34 Digest 23, 29	793
Quech v. Collett, [1948] 1 All E.R. 252; [1948] 1 K.B. 478; [1948] L.J.R. 956; 112 J.P. 166; 2nd Digest Supp.	887, 889, 890
Queskey, Re, [1946] 1 All E.R. 717; [1946] Ch. 250; [1947] L.J.R. 182; 175 L.T. 107; 110 J.P. 272; 2nd Digest Supp.	160, 163
Quinn v. Leatham, [1901] A.C. 495; 70 L.J.P.C. 76; 85 L.T. 239; 65 J.P. 708; 42 Digest 971, 30	799, 803
R. v. Askew, [1949] 2 All E.R. 687; 113 J.P. 511	397
R. v. Bennett, R. v. Newton, (1913), 9 Cr. App. Rep. 146; sub nom., R. v. Newton and Bennett, 109 L.T. 747; 15 Digest 1008, 11,319	657, 661
R. v. Benson, [1908] 2 K.B. 270; 77 L.J.K.B. 644; 98 L.T. 933; 72 J.P. 286; 14 Digest 235, 2218	630
R. v. Blane, (1849), 13 Q.B. 769; 18 L.J.M.C. 216; 13 L.T.O.S. 257; 13 J.P. 825; 116 E.R. 1458; 3 Digest 387, 257	695, 696, 697, 698
R. v. Bodmin J.J., Ex p. McEwen, [1947] 1 All E.R. 109; [1947] K.B. 321; [1947] L.J.R. 338; 111 J.P. 47; 2nd Digest Supp.	42, 44
R. v. Castro, (1880), 5 Q.B.D. 490; 49 L.J.Q.B. 747; 43 L.T. 78; 44 J.P. 732; affd., sub nom., Castro v. R., (1881), 6 App. Cas. 229; 50 L.J.Q.B. 497; 44 L.T. 350; 45 J.P. 452; 14 Digest 477, 5196	965, 966
R. v. Christchurch (Inhabitants), (1848), 12 Q.B. 149; 18 L.J.M.C. 28; 12 L.T.O.S. 214; 12 J.P. 792; 116 E.R. 823; 42 Digest 636, 348	525, 527
R. v. Clarke, [1950] 1 All E.R. 546; [1950] 1 K.B. 523; 114 J.P. 192	816
R. v. Cohen and Bateman, [1909] 2 Cr. App. Rep. 197; 73 J.P. 352	925, 927
R. v. Cooke, (1858), 1 F. & F. 64; 15 Digest 1006, 11,230	680

R. v. Creamer, [1919] 1 K.B. 564; 88 L.J.K.B. 594; 120 L.T. 575; 83 J.P. 120; 15 Digest 974, 10, 898	799
R. v. Croydon Rent Tribunal, Ex p. Chalkley, (1948), 92 Sol. Jo. 720; 2nd Digest Supp. 1173, 1176	1173, 1176
R. v. Errington, (1922), 16 Cr. App. Rep. 143; 14 Digest 234, 2201	680
R. v. Fairbairn, [1949] 2 K.B. 690	816
R. v. Fisher, (1875), 32 L.T. 22; 39 J.P. 612; 14 Digest 186, 1655	725, 726
R. v. Fox, (1925), 21 Ll.L.R. 72	534, 538
R. v. Fulham, Hammersmith and Kensington Rent Tribunal, Ex p. Philippe, [1950] 2 All E.R. 211	217, 218
R. v. Garrett, (1853), Dears. C.C. 232; 23 L.J.M.C. 20; 17 J.P. 774; 14 Digest 135, 1072	680
R. v. Gee, R. v. Bibby, R. v. Dunscombe, [1936] 2 All E.R. 89; [1936] 2 K.B. 442; 105 L.J.K.B. 739; 155 L.T. 31; 100 J.P. 227; Digest Supp.	912
R. v. Grant, [1936] 2 All E.R. 1156; 106 L.J.K.B. 9; 155 L.T. 209; 100 J.P. 324; Digest Supp.	42, 43, 44
R. v. Hancroft and St. Pancras Furnished Houses Rent Tribunal, Ex p. Ascot Lodge, Ltd., [1947] 2 All E.R. 12; [1947] K.B. 973; [1947] L.J.R. 1003; 176 L.T. 560; 111 J.P. 349; 2nd Digest Supp.	212, 215
R. v. Hancock, (1931), 100 L.J.K.B. 419; 145 L.T. 168; Digest Supp.	587
R. v. Hertford College, (1878), 3 Q.B.D. 693; 47 L.J.Q.B. 649; 39 L.T. 18; 42 J.P. 772; 8 Digest 367, 1713	742, 743
R. v. Hughes, 20 Cr. App. Rep. 4	680
R. v. Humphreys, Ex p. Ward, [1914] 3 K.B. 1237; 84 L.J.K.B. 187; sub nom. , R. v. Humphrys, Ex p. Ward, 111 L.T. 1110; 79 J.P. 67; 3 Digest 387, 253	696, 697, 698
R. v. Income Tax Special Purposes Comrs., (1888), 21 Q.B.D. 313; 53 J.P. 84; sub nom. , R. v. Income Tax Special Comrs., Ex p. Cape Copper Mining Co., Ltd., 57 L.J.Q.B. 513; 59 L.T. 455; 2 Tax Cas. 332; 28 Digest 97, 580	211, 212, 214
R. v. Jennings, (1949), 33 Cr. App. Rep. 143; 2nd Digest Supp.	680
R. v. Kenworthy, (1823), 1 B. & C. 711; 107 E.R. 261; 16 Digest 432, 2928	42, 46
R. v. Kilham, (1870), L.R. 1 C.C.R. 261; 39 L.J.M.C. 109; 22 L.T. 625; 34 J.P. 533; 15 Digest 982, 10, 997	680
R. v. Lumley, (1869), 1 C.C.R. 196; 38 L.J.M.C. 86; 20 L.T. 454; 33 J.P. 597; 15 Digest 789, 7990	171
R. v. Marston, (1918), 13 Cr. App. Rep. 203; 15 Digest 983, 11,006	680
R. v. Marylebone County Court Judge, [1923] 1 K.B. 365; 92 L.J.K.B. 367; sub nom. , R. v. Scully, Ex p. Boon, 128 L.T. 364; 81 Digest 570, 7183	174, 177
R. v. Middlesex Quarter Sessions, Ex p. , Director of Public Prosecutions, [1950] 1 All E.R. 916; 114 J.P. 276	817
R. v. Minister of Health, Ex p. Glamorgan County Mental Hospital (Committee of Visitors), [1938] 4 All E.R. 32; 102 J.P. 497; sub nom. , R. v. Minister of Health, [1939] 1 K.B. 232; 108 L.J.K.B. 27; 159 L.T. 508; Digest Supp.	212, 213
R. v. Moland, (1843), 2 Mood. C.C. 276; 15 Digest 983, 11,007	679
R. v. Neal, [1949] 2 All E.R. 438; [1949] 2 K.B. 590; 113 J.P. 468; 2nd Digest Supp.	587
R. v. Newman, (1839), 3 J.P. 677; 15 Digest 982, 11,001	679
R. v. Paddington and St. Marylebone Rent Tribunal, Ex p. Bedrock Investments, Ltd., [1947] 2 All E.R. 15; [1947] K.B. 984; 176 L.T. 562; 111 J.P. 367; affd. , [1948] 2 All E.R. 528; [1948] 2 K.B. 413; [1949] L.J.R. 284; 112 J.P. 367; 2nd Digest Supp.	1173, 1176
R. v. Roberts and Morris, (1926), 134 L.T. 635; sub nom. , R. v. Roberts, 90 J.P. 84; Digest Supp.	965, 967
R. v. St. Mary, Whitechapel (Inhabitants), (1848), 12 Q.B. 120; 17 L.J.M.C. 172; 11 L.T.O.S. 473; 116 E.R. 811; 42 Digest 694, 1095	525, 527
R. v. Schama, R. v. Abramovitch, (1914), 84 L.J.K.B. 396; 112 L.T. 480; 79 J.P. 184; 15 Digest 972, 10, 865	330
R. v. Sheridan, [1936] 2 All E.R. 883; [1937] 1 K.B. 223; 106 L.J.K.B. 6; 155 L.T. 207; 100 J.P. 319; Digest Supp.	42, 43, 44
R. v. Smith, (1855), Dears. C.C. 494; 24 L.J.M.C. 135; 26 L.T.O.S. 6; 19 J.P. 358; 15 Digest 966, 10, 793	680
R. v. Treanor (or McAvoy), [1939] 1 All E.R. 330; 160 L.T. 286; Digest Supp.	170, 171, 172, 173
R. v. Tuttle, (1929), 140 L.T. 701; Digest Supp.	680
R. v. Warwicksire J.J., (1556), 6 E. & B. 837; 25 L.J.M.C. 119; 27 L.T.O.S. 235; 20 J.P. 693; 119 E.R. 1075; 2 Digest 290, 608	1044, 1047
R. v. Wickham, (1839), 10 Ad. & El. 34; 8 L.J.M.C. 87; 113 E.R. 14; 15 Digest 987, 11,044	680
R. v. Willesden J.J., Ex p. Utley, [1947] 2 All E.R. 838; [1948] 1 K.B. 397; [1948] L.J.R. 394; 112 J.P. 97; 2nd Digest Supp.	42, 45
R. & P. Properties, Ltd. v. Baldwin, [1938] 4 All E.R. 845; [1939] 1 K.B. 461; 108 L.J.K.B. 463; 160 L.T. 445; Digest Supp.	1080, 1081, 1085, 1088
Ramduitt Ramkissendass v. E. D. Sassoon & Co., (1929), 1 L.R. 56 Calc. 1048; 98 L.J.P.C. 58; 140 L.T. 542; Digest Supp.	618, 622
Rayner v. Stepney Corp., [1911] 2 Ch. 312; 80 L.J.Ch. 678; 105 L.T. 362; 75 J.P. 468; 38 Digest 212, 471	904, 908
Read v. Lincoln (Bp.), [1892] A.C. 644; 62 L.J.P.C. 1; 67 L.T. 128; 56 J.P. 725; affg. , [1891] P. 9; 64 L.T. 149; 19 Digest 315, 1146	70, 72, 74, 75, 812, 814, 816
Reddel v. Dobree, (1839), 10 Sim. 244; 59 E.R. 607; 25 Digest 554, 382	1198, 1199, 1205
Reed (Dennis), Ltd. v. Goody, [1950] 1 All E.R. 919	134, 136, 138, 391, 396
Reed (Dennis), Ltd. v. Nicholls, [1948] 2 All E.R. 914; 2nd Digest Supp.	134, 137
Reedie v. London & North Western Ry. Co., Hobbit v. Same , (1849), 4 Exch. 244; 20 L.J.Ex. 65; 154 E.R. 1201; 34 Digest 27, 56	793
Rees v. Cambrian Wagon Works, Ltd., (1946), 175 L.T. 220; 2nd Digest Supp.	873
Reeve, Re , [1935] Ch. 110; 104 L.J.Ch. 101; 152 L.T. 254; Digest Supp.	1040, 1042
Reid v. Langlois, (1849), 1 Mac. & G. 627; 19 L.J.Ch. 337; 41 E.R. 1408; 18 Digest 132, 828	597, 600
Reilly v. Beardmore & Co., 1947 S.C. 275; 2nd Digest Supp.	873, 877
Remon v. City of London Real Property Co., [1921] 1 K.B. 49; 89 L.J.K.B. 1105; 123 L.T. 617; 31 Digest 556, 7032	338, 341, 342
Restall v. Restall, [1930] P. 189; 99 L.J.P. 123; 143 L.T. 225; Digest Supp.	785, 786, 787, 788, 789, 791, 792
Rica Gold Washing Co., Re , (1879), 11 Ch.D. 36; 40 L.T. 531; 10 Digest 838, 5497	409, 412
Richardson v. Richardson, [1949] 2 All E.R. 330; [1950] P. 16	539, 540
Rickards (Charles), Ltd. v. Oppenheim, [1950] 1 All E.R. 420; [1950] 1 K.B. 616	940, 943
Ridgway v. Wharton, (1857), 6 H.L. Cas. 238; 27 L.J.Ch. 46; 29 L.T.O.S. 390; 10 E.R. 1287; 12 Digest 137, 924	1213, 1215
Ridsdale v. Clifton, (1877), 2 P.D. 276; 46 L.J.P.C. 27 36 L.T. 865; 42 J.P. 148 19 Digest 314, 1145	70, 72

	PAGE
Ritso, Ex p. Re Ritso , (1883), 22 Ch.D. 529; 52 L.J.Ch. 535; 48 L.T. 376; 4 Digest 538, 4956	36, 40
Ritter v. Godfrey, [1920] 2 K.B. 47; 89 L.J.K.B. 467; 122 L.T. 396; Digest, Practice, 854, 4002	969, 970
River Wear Comrs. v. Adamson, (1877), 2 App. Cas. 743; 47 L.J.Q.B. 193; 37 L.T. 543; 42 J.P. 244; affo. , (1876), 1 Q.B.D. 546; 46 L.J.Q.B. 83; 45 L.T. 118; 41 Digest 974, 8643	415, 426, 433, 434, 437, 441, 442 1138, 1142
Rivers, Re , [1920] 1 Ch. 320; 88 L.J.Ch. 462; 121 L.T. 57; 24 Digest 596, 6298	1150
Roadley, Re , [1930] 1 Ch. 524; 99 L.J.Ch. 232; 144 L.T. 64; Digest Supp.	125, 126
Roberts v. Death, (1881), 8 Q.B.D. 319; 51 L.J.Q.B. 15; 46 L.T. 246; 21 Digest 629, 2131	573, 574
Roberts v. Roberts, (1884), 13 Q.B.D. 794; 53 L.J.Q.B. 313; 50 L.T. 351; 7 Digest 37, 194	550, 552
Robertson, Ex p. Re Morton , (1875), L.R. 20 Eq. 733; 44 L.J.Bey. 99; 32 L.T. 697; 4 Digest 24, 193	1115, 1117
Robertson v. Minister of Pensions, [1948] 2 All E.R. 767; [1949] 1 K.B. 227; [1949] L.J.R. 323; 2nd Digest Supp.	1138, 1145 1146
Robinson, Re , [1911] 1 Ch. 502; 80 L.J.Ch. 381; 104 L.T. 331; 43 Digest 960, 4002	245, 248
Robinson v. Minister of Town and Country Planning, [1947] 1 All E.R. 851; [1947] K.B. 702; [1947] L.J.R. 1285; 177 L.T. 375; 111 J.P. 378; 2nd Digest Supp.	784, 735, 788, 790, 791
Robinson v. Robinson, [1943] 1 All E.R. 251; [1943] P. 43; 112 L.J.P. 47; 163 L.T. 158; 2nd Digest Supp.	1138, 1143
Rogers v. Ingham, (1876), 3 Ch.D. 351; 35 L.T. 677; 35 Digest 93, 25	748, 753
Rogers v. Rogers, (1830), 3 Hag. Ecc. 57; 162 E.R. 1079; 27 Digest 327, 3061	23, 24, 25
Rose v. Ford, [1937] 3 All E.R. 827; [1937] A.C. 826; 106 L.J.K.B. 576; 157 L.T. 174; reuss. , [1936] 1 K.B. 90; 105 L.J.K.B. 21; 154 L.T. 77; Digest Supp.	253, 258
Rosenberg v. Northumberland Building Society, (1889), 22 Q.B.D. 373; 60 L.T. 558; 7 Digest 457, 17	147, 152
Rossiter v. Miller, (1878), 3 App. Cas. 1124; 48 L.J.Ch. 10; 39 L.T. 173; 42 J.P. 804; 12 Digest 147, 1002	1, 2, 5,
Rowe, Re , [1941] 2 All E.R. 330; [1941] Ch. 343; 110 L.J.Ch. 145; 165 L.T. 76; 2nd Digest Supp.	857
Royal Choral Society v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1943] 2 All E.R. 101; 112 L.J.K.B. 648; 169 L.T. 100; 25 Tax Cas. 263; 2nd Digest Supp.	466, 467, 470, 471, 472
Royal College of Surgeons of England, Re , [1899] 1 Q.B. 871; 68 L.J.Q.B. 613; 80 L.T. 611; sub nom. Royal College of Surgeons of England v. Inland Revenue Comrs., 4 Tax Cas. 344; 33 Digest 299, 781	94, 100
Russell v. Aberdeen Town and County Bank, (1888), 13 App. Cas. 418; 58 L.J.P.C. 8; 59 L.T. 481; 53 J.P. 244; 2 Tax Cas. 321; 28 Digest 45, 227	89, 91
Russell v. Beesley, [1937] 1 All E.R. 527; Digest Supp.	798, 800
Russell v. Men of Devon, (1788), 2 Term. Rep. 667; 100 E.R. 359; 26 Digest 587, 2780	106, 107, 549, 550, 558
Russian and English Bank, Re , [1932] 1 Ch. 663; 101 L.J.Ch. 226; 147 L.T. 57; Digest Supp.	106, 107
Russian and English Bank v. Baring Bros. & Co., Ltd., [1932] 1 Ch. 435; 101 L.J.Ch. 157; 146 L.T. 424; Digest Supp.	106, 108, 549, 550, 558, 559, 560, 561
Russian and English Bank and Florance Montefiore Guédalla v. Baring Bros. & Co., Ltd., [1936] 1 All E.R. 505; [1936] A.C. 405; 105 L.J.Ch. 174; 154 L.T. 602; Digest Supp.	106, 107
Russian Commercial and Industrial Bank v. Comptoir d'Escompte de Mulhouse, [1925] A.C. 112; 93 L.J.K.B. 1098; 132 L.T. 99; Digest Supp.	160, 164, 165
Ruther v. Ruther, [1903] 2 K.B. 270; 72 L.J.K.B. 826; 67 J.P. 359; 27 Digest 566, 6250	626, 629
Rylands v. Fletcher, (1868), L.R. 3 H.L. 330; 37 L.J.Ex. 161; 19 L.T. 220; 33 J.P. 70; 36 Digest 187, 311
Saffery v. Mayer, [1901] 1 K.B. 11; 70 L.J.Q.B. 145; 83 L.T. 394; 64 J.P. 740; 25 Digest 414, 175	1240, 1242, 1243
St. Andrew's, Haverstock-Hill, (1909), 25 T.L.R. 408; 19 Digest 438, 2784	812, 814
St. David's Gold Mining Co., Ltd., Re , (1866), 14 L.T. 539; 10 Digest 1042, 7255	409, 413
St. John's College, Cambridge v. Todington, (1757), 1 Burr. 158; 97 E.R. 245; 8 Digest 385, 2003	741, 743
St. Saviour's Hampstead, Re , [1932] P. 134; Digest Supp.	70, 71, 73, 74, 812, 814, 815
St. Tudno, The, [1916] P. 291; 86 L.J.P. 1; 115 L.T. 634; 37 Digest 579, 111	220, 222
Salamán, Re , [1907] 2 Ch. 46; 76 L.J.Ch. 419; 96 L.T. 809; on appeal , [1908] 1 Ch. 4; 77 L.J.Ch. 60; 98 L.T. 255; 23 Digest 447, 5179	892, 901
Sanderson v. Hudson, (1923), Times, Jan. 29, 1923; Digest Supp.	798, 801
Sanpietro, In the Estate of, In the Estate of Van Tuyll Van Serooskerken , [1940] 4 All E.R. 482; [1941] P. 16; 110 L.J.P. 23; 2nd Digest Supp.	446, 447
Saunders, Re , [1898] 1 Ch. 17; 67 L.J.Ch. 55; 77 L.T. 450; 21 Digest 105, 775	52, 53
Savoy Overseers v. Art Union of London, [1896] A.C. 296; 65 L.J.M.C. 161; 74 L.T. 497; 60 J.P. 660; 38 Digest 498, 525	467, 472
Schwann v. Cotton, [1916] 2 Ch. 459; 85 L.J.Ch. 639; 115 L.T. 168; 19 Digest 52, 297	828, 831
Schwartz v. India Rubber, Gutta Percha & Telegraph Works Co., Ltd., [1912] 2 K.B. 299; 81 L.J.K.B. 780; 106 L.T. 706; 5 B.W.C.C. 390; 34 Digest 258, 2209	1105, 1108
Scott v. Pattison, [1923] 2 K.B. 723; 12 Digest 166, 1214a	1100, 1103
Scott v. Tyler, (1788), 2 Bro. C.C. 431; 2 Dick. 712; 21 E.R. 448; 44 Digest 483, 3030	1073, 1075
Seaford Court Estates, Ltd. v. Asher, [1949] 2 All E.R. 155; [1949] 2 K.B. 481; 2nd Digest Supp.	1228, 1236
Sedleigh-Denfield v. O'Callaghan, [1940] 3 All E.R. 349; [1940] A.C. 880; 164 L.T. 72; sub nom. Sedleigh-Denfield v. St. Joseph's Society for Foreign Missions, 109 L.J.K.B. 893; 2nd Digest Supp.	625, 626, 628, 1160, 1164
Seward v. Vera Cruz, The Vera Cruz, (1884), 10 App. Cas. 59; 54 L.J.P. 9; 52 L.T. 474; 49 J.P. 324; 42 Digest 769, 1959	1006, 1007
Sewell v. Burdick, (1884), 10 App. Cas. 74; 54 L.J.Q.B. 156; 52 L.T. 445; 41 Digest 372, 2186	517, 519
Sharpington v. Fulham Guardians, [1904] 2 Ch. 449; 73 L.J.Ch. 777; 91 L.T. 739; 68 J.P. 510; 38 Digest 109, 783	55, 63
Shaw v. Rootes Securities, Ltd., [1948] 2 All E.R. 168; 41 B.W.C.C. 128; 2nd Digest Supp.	637, 638, 640, 642, 644, 645, 646, 647, 650
Shaw v. Smith, (1886), 18 Q.B.D. 193; 56 L.J.Q.B. 174; 56 L.T. 40; 18 Digest 58, 152	884, 885
Sheers v. Thimbleby & Son, (1897), 76 L.T. 709; 12 Digest 140, 943	1213, 1216
Sheffield v. Eden, (1878), 10 Ch.D. 291; 40 L.T. 283; 42 Digest 263, 2980	1049, 1052, 1055, 1059, 1062
Sheffield Corp'n. v. Luxford, Same v. Morrell, [1929] 2 K.B. 180; 98 L.J.K.B. 512; 141 L.T. 265; 93 J.P. 235; Digest Supp.	577, 580

Shelton's Settled Estates, Re , [1945] 1 All E.R. 283; [1945] Ch. 158; 114 L.J.Ch. 198; 172 L.T. 237; 2nd Digest Supp.	286, 289
Shirlaw v. Southern Foundries (1926), Ltd., [1939] 2 All E.R. 113; [1939] 2 K.B. 206; 108 L.J.K.B. 747; 160 L.T. 353; Digest Supp.	391, 395
Shrewsbury (Earl), In the Estate of , McLeod v. Shrewsbury (Earl), [1922] P. 112; 91 L.J.P. 46; 126 L.T. 415; 23 Digest 129, 1273	117, 123
Shuttleworth v. Cox Bros. & Co. (Maidenhead), Ltd., [1927] 2 K.B. 9; 96 L.J.K.B. 104; 136 L.T. 337; Digest Supp.	1121, 1126
Sidebotham v. Kershaw, Leese & Co., [1920] 1 Ch. 154; 89 L.J.Ch. 113; 122 L.T. 325; 9 Digest 559, 3704	1121, 1126 1154, 1156
Sidney v. Sidney, (1867), 17 L.T. 9; 27 Digest 507, 5446
Sifton v. Sifton, [1938] 3 All E.R. 435; [1938] A.C. 656; 107 L.J.P.C. 97; 159 L.T. 289; Digest Supp.	188, 190
Signy v. Abbey National Building Society, [1944] 1 All E.R. 448; [1944] K.B. 449; 113 L.J.K.B. 486; 170 L.T. 238; 2nd Digest Supp.	174, 180
Simpson v. Teignmouth & Shaldon Bridge Co., [1903] 1 K.B. 405; 72 L.J.K.B. 204; 88 L.T. 117; 67 J.P. 65; 26 Digest 348, 756	745, 747
Simpson v. Weber, (1925), 133 L.T. 46; Digest Supp.	828, 830
Sinclair v. Brougham, [1914] A.C. 398; 83 L.J.Ch. 465; 111 L.T. 1; 35 Digest 167, 8	1138, 1146
Skinner v. Geary, [1931] 2 K.B. 546; 100 L.J.K.B. 718; 145 L.T. 675; 95 J.P. 194; Digest Supp.	338, 339 286, 289
Slade, Re , (1919), 89 L.J.Ch. 412; 122 L.T. 321; 44 Digest 417, 2478
Smith v. Baker, (1873), L.R. 8 C.P. 350; 42 L.J.C.P. 155; 28 L.T. 637; 37 J.P. 567; 5 Digest 905, 7428	550, 552
Smith v. Baker & Sons, [1891] A.C. 325; 60 L.J.Q.B. 683; 65 L.T. 467; 55 J.P. 660; 34 Digest 202, 1657	582, 583, 873 298, 305
Smith v. Brown, (1705), 2 Saik. 666; 91 E.R. 566; 43 Digest 16, 86
Smith v. Buller, (1875), L.R. 19 Eq. 473; 45 L.J.Ch. 69; 31 L.T. 873; Digest, Practice, 948, 4882	1157, 1159 385
Smith v. Buller, (1886), 5 N.Z.L.R. 41; 42 Digest 142, 9
Smith v. Cowdery, (1825), 2 Sim. & St. 358; 3 L.J.O.S. Ch. 205; 57 E.R. 382; 44 Digest 479, 2694	1073
Smith v. General Motor Car Co., Ltd., [1911] A.C. 188; 80 L.J.K.B. 839; 105 L.T. 113; 34 Digest 35, 115	567, 569, 571 467, 471
Smith v. Kerr, [1902] 1 Ch. 774; 71 L.J.Ch. 369; 86 L.T. 477; 8 Digest 247, 69
Smith v. National Meter Co., Ltd., [1945] 2 All E.R. 35; [1945] K.B. 543; 115 L.J.K.B. 321; 172 L.T. 379; 2nd Digest Supp.	663, 674
Smith v. Smith, [1897] P. 293; 66 L.J.P. 151; 77 L.T. 206; 27 Digest 490, 5221	375, 378, 379, 381
Smith v. Streetfield, [1913] 3 K.B. 764; 82 L.J.K.B. 1237; 109 L.T. 173; 32 Digest 155, 1876	662, 663, 665, 674, 675, 676, 677 529, 532, 533
Smith (A. J.) & Co., Ltd. v. Kirby, [1947] 1 All E.R. 459; 2nd Digest Supp.	147, 150, 151, 152 988, 993
Smith-Bird v. Blower, [1939] 2 All E.R. 406; Digest Supp.
Smithwick v. National Coal Board, [1950] W.N. 238
Snell, Re , (1877), 6 Ch.D. 105; 46 L.J.Ch. 627; 37 L.T. 350; 42 Digest 268, 3024	1050, 1054, 1055, 1061
Snelling v. Huntingfield (Lord), (1834), 1 G.M. & R. 20; 3 L.J.Ex. 232; 149 E.R. 976; 12 Digest 123, 807	1100, 1102
Sociedad Anonima Commercial de Esportacion E Importacion (Dreyfus (Louis) & Co.) v. National S.S. Co., [1935] 2 K.B. 313; 104 L.J.K.B. 529; 153 L.T. 180; Digest Supp.	699, 701
Society of Writers to the Signet v. Inland Revenue Comrs., (1886), 14 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 34; 2 Tax Cas. 257; 28 Digest 13, 65m	467
Souch v. Strawbridge, (1846), 2 C.B. 808; 15 L.J.C.P. 170; 135 E.R. 1161; sub nom. , Touch v. Strawbridge, 7 L.T.O.S. 64; 12 Digest 121, 793	1100, 1103
South American Stores (Gath & Chaves), Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., (1926), 12 Tax Cas. 905; Digest Supp.	1192, 1193
South Staffordshire Tramways Co., Re , (1894), 1 Mans. 202; 10 Digest 850, 5638	409, 413
Southwark Water Co. v. Quick, (1878), 3 Q.B.D. 315; 47 L.J.Q.B. 258; 18 Digest 121, 714	597, 602
Sower v. Steel Barrel Co., Ltd., (1935), 154 L.T. 85; 99 J.P. 379; Digest Supp.	987, 990
Spawforth v. Spawforth, [1946] 1 All E.R. 379; [1946] P. 131; 115 L.J.P. 38; 174 L.T. 260; 2nd Digest Supp.	49, 50
Squire v. Squire, [1948] 2 All E.R. 51; [1949] P. 51; [1948] L.J.R. 1345; 112 J.P. 319; 2nd Digest Supp.	233, 236, 238, 398, 401, 402
Srini Vasan (otherwise Clayton) v. S. S. Vasan, [1945] 2 All E.R. 21; [1946] P. 67; 114 L.J.P. 49; 173 L.T. 102; 2nd Digest Supp.	973, 974
Staffs Motor Guarantee, Ltd. v. British Wagon Co., Ltd., [1934] 2 K.B. 305; 103 L.J.K.B. 613; 151 L.T. 396; Digest Supp.	1028, 1032
Stanley v. Thomas, [1939] 2 All E.R. 636; [1939] 2 K.B. 462; 160 L.T. 555; 103 J.P. 241; Digest Supp.	840, 841, 842
Stannard's Estate, Re , [1897] 1 I.R. 415; 42 Digest 269, 3032ii	1050, 1056, 1060
Stanyforth v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1930] A.C. 339; 99 L.J.K.B. 327; 142 L.T. 641; Digest Supp.	976, 978
Starey v. Chilworth Gunpowder Co., (1889), 24 Q.B.D. 90; 59 L.J.M.C. 13; 62 L.T. 73; 54 J.P. 436; 43 Digest 240, 847	657, 659
Stevens v. Boustead (E.) & Co., [1918] 1 K.B. 382; 87 L.J.K.B. 321; 118 L.T. 294; 7 Tax Cas. 107; 28 Digest 45, 229	94, 99
Stevens v. Gourley, (1859), 7 C.B.N.S. 99; 29 L.J.C.P. 1; 1 L.T. 33; 141 E.R. 752; 34 Digest 584, 53	904, 906
Stevens v. Tirard, [1939] 4 All E.R. 186; [1940] 1 K.B. 204; 109 L.J.K.B. 202; 161 L.T. 400; 23 Tax Cas. 321; 2nd Digest Supp.	614, 615, 616 1160, 1163
Stocker v. Planet Building Society, (1879), 27 W.R. 877; 31 Digest 343, 4866
Stokes v. Whicher, [1920] 1 Ch. 411; 89 L.J.Ch. 198; 123 L.T. 23; 12 Digest 143, 967	1213, 1215
Stone v. Burn, [1911] 1 K.B. 927; 80 L.J.K.B. 560; 103 L.T. 540; 74 J.P. 456; 43 Digest 241, 858	657, 660 914, 918
Stone v. Hoskins, [1905] P. 194; 74 L.J.P. 110; 93 L.T. 441; 44 Digest 182, 107
Stratheden and Campbell (Lord), Re , [1894] 3 Ch. 265; 63 L.J.Ch. 372; 71 L.T. 225; 8 Digest 257, 196	191, 192
Stumore v. Campbell & Co., [1892] 1 Q.B. 314; 61 L.J.Q.B. 463; 66 L.T. 218; 21 Digest 620, 2081	125, 126
Sudeley's (Lord) Settled Estates, Re , (1887), 37 Ch.D. 123; 57 L.J.Ch. 182; 58 L.T. 7; 30 Digest 293, 199	1196, 1197
Sun Shipping Co., Ltd. v. Watson & Youell Shipping Agency, Ltd., (1926), 42 T.L.R. 240; 41 Digest 449, 2812	699, 703, 705

	PAGE
Sutton v. Begley, [1923] 2 K.B. 694; 92 L.J.K.B. 1086; 129 L.T. 773; 31 Digest 571, 7195..	174, 176, 182
Swift & Co. v. Board of Trade, [1925] A.C. 520; 94 L.J.K.B. 629; 133 L.T. 49; 25 Digest 138, 558	129, 132
Sydney Municipal Council v. Campbell, [1925] A.C. 338; 133 L.T. 63; sub nom. , Sydney Municipal Council v. Hughes Motor Service, Ltd., 94 L.J.P.C. 65; Digest Supp.	766, 774
Tabor v. Godfrey, (1895), 64 L.J.Q.B. 245; 31 Digest 554, 7013	939, 940, 941, 942, 943
Tactician, The, [1907] P. 244; 76 L.J.P. 80; 97 L.T. 621; 41 Digest 902, 7951	415, 430
Taff Vale Ry. Co. v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, [1901] A.C. 426; 70 L.J.K.B. 905, n; 83 L.T. 474; reversd. , [1901] 1 K.B. 170; 70 L.J.Q.B. 219; 83 L.T. 474; 64 J.P. 788; rest. , [1901] A.C. at p. 434; 43 Digest 92, 957	662, 663, 666, 667, 668, 669, 670, 671, 673
Tarry v. Ashton, (1876), 1 Q.B.D. 314; 45 L.J.Q.B. 260; 34 L.T. 97; 40 J.P. 439; 34 Digest 163, 1274	1160, 1164, 1165
Tatam v. Reeve, [1893] 1 Q.B. 44; 67 L.T. 683; 57 J.P. 118; sub nom. , Tatham v. Reeve, 62 L.J.Q.B. 30; 25 Digest 411, 146	1240, 1242, 1244, 1245
Taxiarhis, The, (1913), R.G.D.I.P. xx, 518	220, 227
Taylor v. Goodwin, (1879), 4 Q.B.D. 228; 48 L.J.M.C. 104; 40 L.T. 458; 43 J.P. 653; 26 Digest 438, 1553	745, 746
Taylor v. Whitehead, (1781), 2 Doug. K.B. 745; 99 E.R. 475; 43 Digest 416, 393	1173, 1175
Tea Trading Co. K. & C. Popoff Bros., Re , [1933] Ch. 647; 102 L.J.Ch. 224; 149 L.T. 138; Digest Supp.	106, 110
Tench v. Cheese, (1855), 6 De G.M. & G. 453; 24 L.J.Ch. 716; 25 L.T.O.S. 261; 43 E.R. 1309; 23 Digest 501, 5675	892, 898
Tennant v. Smith, [1892] A.C. 150; 61 L.J.P.C. 11; 66 L.T. 327; 56 J.P. 596; 3 Tax Cas. 158; 28 Digest 17, 87	633, 636
Thames Conservators v. Port of London Sanitary Authority, [1894] 1 Q.B. 647; 63 L.J.M.C. 121; 69 L.T. 803; 58 J.P. 335; 36 Digest 229, 700	626, 632
Thames Iron Works Co. v. Patent Derrick Co., (1860), 1 John & H. 93; 29 L.J.Ch. 714; 2 L.T. 208; 70 E.R. 676; 32 Digest 224, 90	727, 730, 731
Thom v. Hutchinson (J. & P.), Ltd., 1925 S.C. 386; 41 Digest 911, 7	415, 432
Thomas v. Bradbury, Agnew & Co., Ltd., [1906] 2 K.B. 627; 75 L.J.K.B. 726; 95 L.T. 23; 32 Digest 162, 1955	662, 663, 676, 677
Thomas v. Dering, (1837), 1 Keen 729; 6 L.J.Ch. 267; 48 E.R. 488; 42 Digest 471, 395	147, 153, 154
Thomas v. Owen, (1887), 20 Q.B.D. 225; 57 L.J.Q.B. 198; 58 L.T. 162; 52 J.P. 516; 19 Digest 34, 166	828, 831
Thompson, Re , [1936] 2 All E.R. 141; [1936] Ch. 676; 105 L.J.Ch. 289; 155 L.T. 474; Digest Supp.	2, 5
Thomson v. University of London, (1864), 33 L.J.Ch. 625; 10 L.T. 403; 8 Digest 385, 2012	742, 744
Threadkell, Re , (1906), cited [1908] 2 K.B. at p. 689; 4 Digest 99, 897	1129, 1131
Timnings v. Timmings, (1792), 3 Hag. Ecc. 76; 162 E.R. 1086; 27 Digest 339, 3195	748, 753
Tinline v. White Cross Insurance, [1921] 3 K.B. 327; 90 L.J.K.B. 1118; 125 L.T. 632; 29 Digest 408, 3214	564
Tomalin v. Pearson (S.) & Son, Ltd., [1909] 2 K.B. 61; 78 L.J.K.B. 863; 100 L.T. 685; 2 B.W.C.C. 1; 34 Digest 258, 2208	1105, 1108
Tommie, The, The Rothersand, [1914] P. 251; 84 L.J.P. 35; 112 L.T. 257; 37 Digest 580, 119	220, 226
Tovarishestvo Manufactur Liudvig-Rabenek, Re , [1944] 2 All E.R. 556; [1944] Ch. 404; 113 L.J.Ch. 250; 171 L.T. 66; 2nd Digest Supp.	106, 109, 110, 550, 556, 557, 558
Trawlers (Grimsby), Ltd. v. Crouchen, [1943] 1 All E.R. 253; 36 B.W.C.C. 22; 2nd Digest Supp.	638, 647
Trestain v. Trestain, [1950] 1 All E.R. 618	785
Trew v. Perpetual Trustee Co., [1895] A.C. 264; 64 L.J.P.C. 49; 72 L.T. 241; 43 Digest 607, 525	286, 289
Truman, Hanbury, Buxton & Co. v. Kerslake, [1894] 2 Q.B. 774; 63 L.J.M.C. 222; 53 J.P. 766; 36 Digest 234, 732	903, 904, 906
Tuck & Sons v. Priester, (1887), 19 Q.B.D. 629; 56 L.J.Q.B. 553; 52 J.P. 213; 42 Digest 729, 1516	873, 876, 987, 991
Tudor-Hart v. British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection, [1937] 4 All E.R. 475; [1938] 2 K.B. 329; 107 L.J.K.B. 501; 153 L.T. 162; Digest Supp.	882, 883
Turner v. Baker, [1949] 1 All E.R. 560; [1949] 1 K.B. 605; reversd. sub nom. , Baker v. Turner, [1950] 1 All E.R. 834; [1950] A.C. 401; 2nd Digest Supp.	1223, 1224
Turner (otherwise Robertson) v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures, Ltd., [1950] 1 All E.R. 449	167, 169
Turner v. Watts, (1927), 97 L.J.K.B. 92; affd. , (1928), 97 L.J.K.B. 403; 138 L.T. 680; 92 J.P. 113; Digest Supp.	343, 348
Twine v. Bean's Express, Ltd., (1946), 175 L.T. 131; 2nd Digest Supp.	331, 333
Tyrell v. Painton, [1894] P. 151; 70 L.T. 453; 23 Digest 132, 1504	117, 121, 122
Union Bank of Calcutta, Re , Ex p. Watson, (1850), 3 De G. & Sm. 253; 19 L.J.Ch. 388; 15 L.T.O.S. 389; 64 E.R. 467; 10 Digest 1207, 8540	106, 109
Upsons, Ltd. v. Herne, [1946] 2 All E.R. 309; [1946] K.B. 591; 115 L.J.K.B. 433; 175 L.T. 350; 2nd Digest Supp.	174, 176, 177, 179, 180, 181
Usher's Wiltshire Brewery, Ltd. v. Bruce, [1915] A.C. 433; 84 L.J.K.B. 417; 112 L.T. 651; 6 Tax Cas. 399; 28 Digest 56, 287	94, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105
Usmar v. Usmar, [1949] P. 1; [1948] L.J.R. 1418; 2nd Digest Supp.	398, 402
Vacher & Sons, Ltd. v. London Society of Compositors, [1913] A.C. 107; 82 L.J.K.B. 232; 107 L.T. 722; 43 Digest 123, 1259	663, 670
Valentine v. Wetherill, (1860), 31 Barbour 655	6, 13
Vaughan v. Campbell, Heatley & Co. (1885), 2 T.L.R. 33; 41 Digest 448, 2805	699, 703, 704
Vaughan v. Shaw, [1945] 2 All E.R. 52; [1945] K.B. 400; 114 L.J.K.B. 350; 173 L.T. 6; 2nd Digest Supp.	1080, 1081, 1084, 1085, 1088
Vavasseur v. Krupp, (1878), 9 Ch.D. 351; 39 L.T. 437; Digest, Practice, 912, 4543	607, 610, 611, 613
Veale v. Cabezas, [1921] W.N. 311; 31 Digest 565, 7124	1080, 1085, 1088
Victoria Laundry (Windsor), Ltd. v. Newman Industries, Ltd., [1949] 1 All E.R. 997; [1949] 2 K.B. 528; 2nd Digest Supp.	861, 869
Vigilantia, The, (1798), 1 Ch. Rob. 1; 1 Eng. Pr. Cas. 31; 165 E.R. 74; 37 Digest 577, 87	220, 226
Vortigern, The, [1899] P. 140; 63 L.J.P. 49; 80 L.T. 382; 41 Digest 473, 3043	699, 701
Vowles v. Armstrong-Siddeley Motors, Ltd., [1938] 4 All E.R. 796; Digest Supp.	987, 989, 990
Vrow Elizabetha, The, (1803), 5 Ch. Rob. 2; 165 E.R. 676; 37 Digest 577, 88	220, 223, 226, 227

Wagstaff v. Short-Horn Dairy Co., (1884), Cab. & El. 324 ; 39 Digest 480, 1022 ..	861, 869
Walker, Re , Meredith v. Walker, (1893), 68 L.T. 517 ; 42 Digest 263, 2931 ..	1050, 1054, 1060
Walker v. Blotchley Flettons, Ltd., [1937] 1 All E.R. 170 ; Digest Supp. ..	987, 989, 993
Wallis v. Hands, [1893] 2 Ch. 75 ; 62 L.J.Ch. 586 ; 68 L.T. 428 ; 31 Digest 135, 2696 ..	343, 346
Walpole (Lord) v. Orford, (1797), 3 Ves. 402 ; 30 E.R. 1076 ; 44 Digest 178, 75 ..	914, 917
Ward v. Coltness Iron Co., Ltd., 1944 S.C. 318 ; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	720, 721
Ward v. Turner, (1752), 1 D.L.R. 170 ; 2 Ves. Sen. 431 ; 21 E.R. 234 ; 28 E.R. 275 ; 25 Digest 552, 372 ..	1199, 1204, 1205
Warrender v. Warrender, (1835), 2 Cl. & Fin. 488 ; 6 E.R. 1239 ; 11 Digest 333, 218 ..	298, 304, 307
Warter v. Warter, (1890), 15 P.D. 35 ; 59 L.J.P. 45 ; 62 L.T. 328 ; 3 Digest 372, 130 ..	6, 10
Waterpark (Lord) v. Fennell, (1859), 7 H.L. Cas. 650 ; 33 L.T.O.S. 374 ; 23 J.P. 643 ; 11 E.R. 259 ; 31 Digest 31, 1788 ..	828, 829
Watts, Re , [1931] 2 Ch. 302 ; 100 L.J.Ch. 353 ; 145 L.T. 520 ; Digest Supp. ..	976, 978
Weatherley v. Weatherley, [1947] 1 All E.R. 563 ; [1947] A.C. 628 ; [1947] L.J.R. 869 ; 176 L.T. 434 ; 111 J.P. 220 ; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	799
Weatherogg v. Johns, (1931), cited in 95 J.P.Jo. 364 ..	89, 90
Weighman v. Weighman, [1947] 2 All E.R. 852 ; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	404, 406, 407
Westall v. Westall, (1949), 65 T.L.R. 337 ..	398, 399, 402
Westby's Settlement, Re , [1950] 1 All E.R. 479 ..	86, 88
Weston, Re , [1902] 1 Ch. 680 ; 71 L.J.Ch. 343 ; 86 L.T. 551 ; 25 Digest 544, 302 ..	1199, 1203, 1205, 1207
Weyland v. Weyland, (1742), 2 Atk. 632 ; 26 E.R. 777 ; 20 Digest 494, 2237 ..	1040, 1042
Wheelodon v. Burrows, (1879), 12 Ch.D. 31 ; 48 L.J.Ch. 853 ; 41 L.T. 327 ; 19 Digest 46, 253 ..	828, 831
White, Re , [1916] 1 Ch. 172 ; 85 L.J.Ch. 368 ; 114 L.T. 353 ; 44 Digest 714, 5625 ..	155, 156
White v. Altrincham Urban District Council, [1936] 1 All E.R. 923 ; [1936] 2 K.B. 138 ; 105 L.J.K.B. 366 ; 154 L.T. 656 ; 29 B.W.C.C. 105 ; Digest Supp. ..	385, 387, 389
White v. White, [1949] 2 All E.R. 339 ; [1950] P. 39 ; 113 J.P. 474 ..	233, 236, 238
White's Trusts, Re , (1886), 33 Ch.D. 449 ; 55 L.J.Ch. 701 ; 55 L.T. 162 ; 50 J.P. 695 ; 8 Digest 333, 1188 ..	653, 655
White-Popham Settled Estates, Re , [1936] 2 All E.R. 1486 ; [1936] Ch. 725 ; 105 L.J.Ch. 368 ; 155 L.T. 553 ; Digest Supp. ..	242, 243, 244
Whiteside v. Whiteside, [1949] 2 All E.R. 913 ; [1950] Ch. 65 ; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	1192, 1193
Wickham v. Evered, (1819), 4 Madd. 53 ; 56 E.R. 628 ; 42 Digest 560, 1256 ..	1023, 1025
Wilchick v. Marks & Silverstone, [1934] 2 K.B. 56 ; 103 L.J.K.B. 372 ; 151 L.T. 60 ; Digest Supp. ..	1160, 1161, 1166
Wilkinson, Re , [1926] Ch. 842 ; 95 L.J.Ch. 528 ; 135 L.T. 736 ; 44 Digest 442, 2678 ..	1188, 190
Wilks, Re , [1891] 3 Ch. 59 ; 60 L.J.Ch. 696 ; 65 L.T. 184 ; 38 Digest 692, 358 ..	1070, 1072
Williams v. Ellis, (1880), 5 Q.B.D. 175 ; 49 L.J.M.C. 47 ; 42 L.T. 249 ; 44 J.P. 394 ; 26 Digest 348, 754 ..	745, 747
Williams v. Swansea Harbour Trustees, (1863), 14 C.B.N.S. 845 ; 143 E.R. 675 ; 41 Digest 979, 8676 ..	415, 428
Williams Bros. v. Ed. T. Agius, Ltd., [1914] A.C. 510 ; 83 L.J.K.B. 715 ; 110 L.T. 865 ; 39 Digest 670, 2571 ..	860, 864
Wilson, Re , [1913] 1 Ch. 314 ; 82 L.J.Ch. 161 ; 108 L.T. 321 ; 8 Digest 313, 948 ..	653, 654, 655, 656
Wilson v. Anderton, (1830), 1 B. & Ad. 450 ; 9 L.J.O.S.K.B. 48 ; 109 E.R. 855 ; 3 Digest 115, 385 ..	607, 612
Wilson v. Merry, (1868), L.R. 1 Sc. & Div. 326 ; 19 L.T. 30 ; 32 J.P. 675 ; 34 Digest 211, 1747 ..	873
Wilsons & Clyde Coal Co., Ltd. v. English, [1937] 3 All E.R. 628 ; [1938] A.C. 57 ; 106 L.J.P.C. 117 ; 157 L.T. 406 ; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	872
Winget, Ltd., Re , [1924] 1 Ch. 550 ; 93 L.J.Ch. 286 ; 131 L.T. 240 ..	541, 545, 546
Winn v. Bull, (1877), 7 Ch.D. 29 ; 47 L.J.Ch. 139 ; 42 J.P. 230 ; 12 Digest 86, 511 ..	1213
Winsmore v. Greenbank, (1745), Willes, 577 ; 125 E.R. 1330 ; 27 Digest 81, 640 ..	798, 801
Winter v. Cardiff Rural District Council, [1950] 1 All E.R. 819 ..	873
Winter v. Winter, [1942] 2 All E.R. 390 ; [1942] P. 151 ; 111 L.J.P. 95 ; 167 L.T. 258 ; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	375, 380, 381
Winter Garden Theatre (London), Ltd. v. Millenium Productions, Ltd., [1947] 2 All E.R. 331 ; [1948] A.C. 173 ; [1947] L.J.R. 1422 ; 177 L.T. 349 ; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	343, 346
Withers v. Nethersole, [1948] 1 All E.R. 400 ; [1948] L.J.R. 805 ; 28 Tax Cas. 501 ; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	1239
Wood v. Burgess, (1889), 24 Q.B.D. 162 ; 59 L.J.M.C. 11 ; 61 L.T. 593 ; 54 J.P. 325 ; 43 Digest 240, 846 ..	657, 660
Wood v. Wood, [1891] P. 272 ; 60 L.J.P. 66 ; 64 L.T. 586 ; 27 Digest 506, 5424 ..	785, 786
Woodhead v. Putnam, [1923] 1 K.B. 252 ; 92 L.J.K.B. 137 ; 128 L.T. 281 ; 31 Digest 572, 7196 ..	174, 176, 181
Woods v. Winskill, [1913] 2 Ch. 303 ; 82 L.J.Ch. 447 ; 109 L.T. 399 ; 10 Digest 793, 4982 ..	65, 66, 68, 69
Wright v. Ingle, (1885), 16 Q.B.D. 379 ; 55 L.J.M.C. 17 ; 54 L.T. 511 ; 50 J.P. 436 ; 26 Digest 491, 2018 ..	904, 907
Wringe v. Cohen, [1939] 4 All E.R. 241 ; [1940] 1 K.B. 229 ; 109 L.J.K.B. 227 ; 161 L.T. 366 ; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	1160, 1161, 1162, 1163, 1164, 1166
Yarrow v. Yarrow, [1892] P. 92 ; 61 L.J.P. 69 ; 66 L.T. 383 ; 27 Digest 324, 3025 ..	233, 234, 236
Yates v. R., (1885), 14 Q.B.D. 648 ; 54 L.J.Q.B. 258 ; 52 L.T. 305 ; 49 J.P. 436 ; 32 Digest 202, 2521 ..	1105, 1107
Yendall v. Sweeney, Yendall v. Lynn, 1922 S.C. (J.) 32 ; 59 Sc. L.R. 299 ; [1922] S.L.T. 278 ; 41 Digest 672, e ..	534, 537
Yool v. Ewing, [1904] 1 I.R. 434 ; 3 Digest 363, 4610 ..	6, 10
Yorkshire Dale S.S. Co., Ltd. v. Minister of War Transport, [1942] 2 All E.R. 6 ; [1942] A.C. 691 ; 113 L.J.K.B. 512 ; 167 L.T. 349 ; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	1105, 1108
Young v. Bristol Aeroplane Co., Ltd., [1944] 2 All E.R. 293 ; [1944] K.B. 718 ; 113 L.J.K.B. 513 ; 171 L.T. 113 ; affd. , [1946] 1 All E.R. 98 ; [1946] A.C. 163 ; 115 L.J.K.B. 63 ; 174 L.T. 39 ; 2nd Digest Supp. ..	89, 92
Young v. Docherly, Young v. Kyle, 1929 S.C. (J.) 57 ; Digest Supp. ..	534, 537, 538
Zetland (Earl) v. Lord Advocate, (1878), 3 App. Cas. 505 ; 38 L.T. 297 ; 21 Digest 96, 702 ..	6, 11, 13

STATUTES, ETC., REFERRED TO PUBLIC GENERAL STATUTES

	PAGE
Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (c. 23)—
s. 34 (3)	1
s. 49 (a)	1040
s. 55 (1) (x)	155
sched. I, Part II, para. 2	1
Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948 (c. 63)—
s. 1 (1)	685
s. 96 (1), sched. III, para. 23	1181
Agriculture Act, 1947 (c. 48), s. 22 (4)	1181
Arbitration Act, 1934 (c. 14), s. 16 (6)	842
Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (c. 59)—
s. 33 (1) (a)	540, 994
ss. 45, 47 (1)	716
s. 103 (1)	36
s. 147 (1)	1129
Bankruptcy and Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1913 (c. 34), s. 15	201, 982
Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1872 (c. 65), s. 3	695
Building Restrictions (War-Time Contraventions) Act, 1946 (c. 35), s. 3 (1)	903
Building Societies Act, 1874 (c. 42), s. 32	111
Building Societies Act, 1894 (c. 47), s. 9	111
Celluloid and Cinematograph Film Act, 1922 (c. 35), s. 1 (1)	84
Charitable Uses Act, 1601 (c. 4), preamble	1148
Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (c. 12), s. 62 (1) (a)	575
Coal Industry Nationalisation Act, 1946 (c. 59), s. 13 (4), (5)	129
Companies Act, 1929 (c. 23)—
s. 78 (1)	65
s. 338 (1)	105, 549
(2)	549
Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38)—
ss. 210 (1), 224 (1)	408
s. 319 (4)	334
s. 325 (1)	29
(c)	920
s. 326 (2)	29
Compensation (Defence) Act, 1939 (c. 75)—
s. 2 (1) (b)	690
(3),	204
s. 11	204
s. 14	690
s. 17 (1)	204
County Courts Act, 1934 (c. 53), ss. 52 (1) (d), 71	183
Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (c. 58)—
s. 3 (1)	1179
s. 7 (1)	887
s. 12 (1)	816
(2)	887
s. 13	1179
s. 21 (2)	397
s. 28 (1)	42
s. 29 (1)	42, 1251
Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (c. 69), s. 11	291
Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1889 (c. 7), s. 11 (1)	851
Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (c. 36)—
s. 186	1172
s. 226	1043
Exchange Control Act, 1947 (c. 14), sched. IV, para. 3	733
Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67)—
s. 13 (1)	987
s. 23 (1) (a)	872
ss. 25 (1), 26 (1)	582
s. 151 (1)	719
Factors Act, 1889 (c. 45), s. 2 (1)	1027
Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846 (c. 93) to 1908 (c. 7)	22
Finance Act, 1894 (c. 30), s. 2 (1) (c)	851
Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910 (c. 8), s. 74 (1)	976
Finance Act, 1926 (c. 22), s. 30, proviso (ii)	314
Finance Act, 1936 (c. 34), s. 21 (1), (9)	614
Finance Act, 1937 (c. 54)—
s. 19 (5)	566
sched. IV, para. 11	271
Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109)—
s. 13 (2) (b) (as substituted by Finance Act, 1940 (c. 29), s. 31 (1))	196
sched. VII, Part I, para. 6 (1)	261
Finance Act, 1940 (c. 29), s. 17 (2)	93
Finance Act, 1941 (c. 30), s. 25 (1)	250
Finance Act, 1946 (c. 64), s. 16 (1), (3)	351
Food and Drugs Act, 1938 (c. 56)—
s. 3 (1)	561
s. 70 (2)	819
s. 83 (1)	561
Friendly Societies Act, 1896 (c. 25), s. 94 (1)	622
Gaming Act, 1892 (c. 9), s. 1	1240
Gas Act, 1948 (c. 67)—
s. 36 (5)	481
s. 74 (1)	844
Gold Plate (Standard) Act, 1793 (c. 69), ss. 1, 2, 6	805
Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886 (c. 27), s. 5	1013

Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925 (c. 45)—
s. 3 (2)	1013
s. 7 (3)	160
Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 27), s. 74	414
Housing Act, 1936 (c. 51), ss. 9 (1), 15 (2)	1134
Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40)—
sched. D, case I	502
case II	1239
cases I and II, r. 3 (a)	633
r. 3 (m)	93
sched. E, r. 1	460
All Schedules Rules, r. 23 (2)	51, 1191
Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17)—
s. 5 (2) (as substituted by Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923 (c. 32), s. 4)	577
s. 12 (1)	174
(g) (as amended by Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 13, and Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1935 (c. 13), s. 1)	140, 1186
(3)	174
s. 15 (1)	338, 529
s. 16 (2)	1159
s. 17 (2)	529
Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (c. 42), s. 17	911
Indictments Act, 1915 (c. 90), s. 5 (1)	679
Industrial Organisation and Development Act, 1947 (c. 40), s. 1 (4)	245
Interpretation Act, 1889 (c. 63), s. 37	282
Land Charges Act, 1925 (c. 22), s. 15, pursuant to Building Materials and Housing Act, 1945 (c. 20), s. 8 (1)	848
Land Drainage Act, 1930 (c. 44), ss. 35 (1), 57 (1), (2)	625
Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (c. 36)—
s. 5 (2)	1110, 1209
(3) (b) (i)	1209
Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949 (c. 40)—
s. 1	138
(5)	211
(7) (b)	848
s. 2 (1)	825
(2)	216
(5)	16
s. 9	1223
s. 18 (2), sched. I, Part I, para. I	211, 216
Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20)—
s. 40 (1)	1212
s. 176 (1)	572
Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934 (c. 41)—
s. 1 (1)	22
s. 3 (1)	618
Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949 (c. 100)—
s. 1 (1)	973
(a)	1035
(2)	973
s. 5 (1)	1154
s. 9	159
Legitimacy Act, 1926 (c. 60), s. 2 (1)	6
Licensing Act, 1872 (c. 94), s. 12	745
Limitation Act, 1939 (c. 21)—
s. 20	1137
s. 21 (1)	54
Local Government Act, 1929 (c. 17), s. 123, sched. VIII, para. 14	1090
Local Government Act, 1933 (c. 51), sched. V, r. 1 (a)	1226
Local Government Staffs (War Service) Act, 1939 (c. 94), s. 1 (1)	54
Local Government Superannuation Act, 1937 (c. 68), ss. 8, 35	588
Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (c. 85), s. 42	404
Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (c. 28), s. 2 (1) (d)	657
Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (c. 60), ss. 267, 271 (1)	534
Metropolitan Police Act, 1839 (c. 47), s. 66	724
Metropolitan Police Courts Act, 1839 (c. 71), s. 50	1043
National Health Service Act, 1946 (c. 81)—
s. 6	953
ss. 8 (1), 15 (1)	466
s. 59 (1) (2)	513
National Insurance (Industrial Injuries) Act, 1946 (c. 62), s. 89 (1), proviso (a)	761
Offences Against the Person Act, 1861 (c. 100), s. 57	170
Personal Injuries (Emergency Provisions) Act, 1939 (c. 82), s. 8 (1)	1104
Pilotage Act, 1913 (c. 31), s. 15	414
Plate (Offences) Act, 1738 (c. 26), ss. 1, 5	805
Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871 (c. 112), s. 15	816
Public Health Act, 1936 (c. 49)—
s. 65 (1) (3)	903
ss. 93, 259 (1) (b), proviso	625
s. 300 (3)	903
s. 343 (1)	204, 903
Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 3 (1), sched. I, para. (b)	577
Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (c. 71), s. 3 (3)	1079
Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43)—
s. 1	683
s. 6 (1)	156
s. 10 (3) (as substituted by Road Traffic Act, 1934 (c. 50), s. 2 (3))	89
s. 18 (1)	564
s. 21 (c)	840
s. 35 (1)	144, 564
(2)	156, 835, 887

	PAGE
Settled Land Act, 1925 (c. 18)—
s. 64	242
s. 73 (1) (iv)	1181
(xiii), (xvi)	1195
s. 75 (2)	1181
Solicitors Act, 1932 (c. 37), s. 69	124
Stamp Act, 1891 (c. 39), s. 62	976
Statute of Frauds, 1677 (c. 3), s. 4	1099
Statute 8 & 9 Will. 3 c. 8, s. 3 (as amended by Plate Duty Act, 1719 (c. 11), s. 3)	805
Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49)—
s. 162 (1) (as amended by Administration of Justice Act, 1928 (c. 26), s. 9)	446
s. 183 (3) (added by Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 9)	449
s. 190 (1)	784
ss. 191 (1), 192	979
s. 193 (3) (added by Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 10 (4))	614
Town and Country Planning Act, 1944 (c. 47), s. 1 (1)	282
Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (c. 51)—
s. 43 (1)	765
s. 49 (1)	1005
s. 53 (1) (a)	81, 943
s. 113 (2), (5), sched. X, para. 16	282
Trade Union Act, 1913 (c. 30), s. 3 (1) (b)	253
Trustee Act, 1925 (c. 19), s. 31 (2)	891
Vagrancy Act, 1824 (c. 83), s. 4	816
War Damage Act, 1943 (c. 21)—
s. 13 (1) (b)	479
s. 14 (1)	943
Wedding Rings Act, 1855 (c. 60), s. 1	805
Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 15	1245
Workmen's Compensation Act, 1943 (c. 6), s. 6 (1)	637

LOCAL STATUTES

City of London (Various Powers) Act, 1944 (c. iv), s. 9 (2)	475
London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1947 (c. xlv), s. 17 (2)	832

RULES

Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1949 (S.I. 1949, No. 330), rr. 3, 30, Appendix, Form 9	408
Contentious Probate Rules, r. 40A	117
Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 523/L9), r. 36	375
Pensions Appeal Tribunals (England and Wales) Rules, 1946 (S.R. & O., 1946, No. 1708/L22), r. 15 (2) (3)	1012
R.S.C.—
Ord. 16, r. 11	605
Ord. 19, r. 7 (b)	463
rr. 25 (a), 27	117
Ord. 22, r. 6	969
Ord. 25, r. 5	6
Ord. 31, r. 1	884
r. 19A (2)	596
Ord. 32, r. 6	1096
Ord. 34, r. 1	6
Ord. 42, r. 1 (2)	733
Ord. 50, r. 2	727
Ord. 55, r. 5A	738
Ord. 55A, rr. 2, 3	1013
Ord. 65, r. 27 (29)	1157

REGULATIONS

Building Regulations, 1926 (S.R. & O., 1926, No. 738), reg. 15	521
Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 50 (1)	793
Legal Aid (General) Regulations, 1950 (S.I. 1950, No. 1359), reg. 5 (10)	1218
Motor Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 670), reg. 3 (1)	683

ORDERS

Exchange Control (Bankruptcy Notices) Order, 1949 (S.I. 1949, No. 585), art. 1 (a), sched., Part I	733
Gold Wares (Standard of Fineness) Order, 1932 (S.R. & O., 1932, No. 654), art. 2	805
Wholesale Mantle and Costume Wages Council (Great Britain) Wages Regulation (Holidays) Order, 1949 (S.I. 1949, No. 1402), sched., para. 9	525

MISCELLANEOUS

Royal Warrant concerning Retired Pay, Pensions, etc., 1949 (Cmd. 7699), art. 4 (2)	1012
---	------

WORDS AND PHRASES

Accrue	525
Aggregate of agricultural land	685
All his worldly goods and chattels both real and personal	1245
All my real estate	1
All relevant circumstances	129
Ancestor	6
Any beneficial interest acquired by any issue of the deceased	1040
Article of personal use	155
Attached to a building licence	848
Authorised person	566
Authority concerned	589
Beyond reasonable doubt	458
Carriage	745
Client account	124
Company's annual business	1178
Continuous temporary service	475
Contracting out	253

	PAGE
Controlling interest	271
Desired by a substantial number of persons engaged in the industry	245
Devise referring specifically to the property	572
Discharge	1195
Effectuated	851
Efficiently lighted	521
Emoluments for which compensation granted	1090
For the permanent aid of distressed gentlefolk and similar purposes	1245
Having or conveying	724
If he shall occupy my freehold property	188
If not taken over by the State	513
Impropriety	928
In addition	285
In any year of assessment	285
In the open market by a willing seller to a willing buyer	314
Income received from investment	129
Intent to defraud	261
Issue	657
Known character	292
Land implement	516
Landlord	688
Limitation of rent under any enactment	1181
Marrying a second time	848
Member of the tenant's family	170
No error of the court at the hearing alleged	140, 1186
Non-brewed vinegar	375
Not of the nature, substance, and quality	657
Opposite parties	561
Ordinarily resident	881
Overdue	1035
Owner	821
Owning	204, 903
Payment	196
Personal belongings	250
Personal chattels as defined by Administration of Estates Act, 1925	879
Premises	155
Premises . . . temporarily used for . . . construction of a building	84
Property	521
Property recovered or preserved	1226
Public duty or authority	124
Ready to load	54
Redemption	699
Securely fenced	1195
Securing an offer	987
Securities	134
Settlement	844
Shall belong	614
Shall require the premises for the purpose of the business carried on by them	891
Slow	936
So long as he shall be able to give a personal discharge	878
Special circumstances	86
Special reason	446
Special reasons	335
Support or benefit of all or any one or more	887
To pay or apply	891
Turnover	891
Undue hardship	1178
Wholly kept up . . . for . . . a donee	842
Within two months after service of notice	851
Working-place	1110
Working proprietors	521
	196

CORRIGENDA

- [1950] 1 All E.R.
P. 1073. EDWARDS v. NEWLAND. Case referred to No. 8, and p. 1078, line F.3: for "1923 S.C. 43" read "1923 S.C. (H.L.) 43."
- [1950] 2 All E.R.
P. 139. R. v. HACKNEY, ISLINGTON AND STOKE NEWINGTON RENT TRIBUNAL. Ex p. KEATS. Line H.5.: for "chairman" read "deputy chairman."
P. 211. R. v. FULHAM, HAMMERSMITH AND KENSINGTON RENT TRIBUNAL. Ex p. PHILIPPE. Line H.4.: for "tenant had assigned" read "tenant had not assigned."
P. 241. Re JONES (decd.). Solicitors: insert "W. J. McMillin, Liverpool (for the trustees);"
P. 355. COLEBORN AND SONS, LTD. v. BLOND. Line B.3: for "Appeal dismissed with costs" read "Appeal allowed with costs."
P. 513. Re FRERE (decd.). Line D.1: for "who died on Aug. 22, 1941" read "who died on Jan. 15, 1949."
P. 561. MOORE v. RAY. Line F.4.: for "s. 38 (1)" read "s. 83 (1)."
P. 565. LEGGATE v. BROWN. Line D.3.: for "trailer" read "tractor."
P. 573. Re MANOR FARM, KYTES HARDWICK. Counsel: for "K. J. T. Elphinstone" read "W. T. Elverston."
P. 663. LONDON-GRIFFITHS v. SMITH. Case referred to No. 14: read "McKernan v. Fraser, (1931), 46 C.L.R. 343" instead of as printed. P. 677, line F.1: for "McKenna v. Frazer" read "McKernan v. Fraser." Line F.3: for "[1946] C.L.R. 405" read "46 C.L.R. 405."
P. 732. LARNER v. FAWCETT. Solicitors: after "Gibson & Weldon" read "agents for Albert E. Maith, Doncaster."
P. 734. R. v. SANDBACH JUSTICES. Ex p. SMITH. Line A.2: for "mother was not resident" read "father was not resident."
P. 956. Re WILSON'S WILL TRUSTS. Counsel: for "J. H. Lazarus" read "Robert S. Lazarus."
P. 958. BURNS v. JOSEPH TERRY & SONS, LTD. Counsel for the defendants: read "Geoffrey Veale (Rauden-Smith with him)" instead of as printed. P. 993, line A.4: for "employee must at his peril" read "employer must at his peril."

THE ALL ENGLAND LAW REPORTS

INCORPORATING THE
LAW TIMES REPORTS
AND THE
LAW JOURNAL REPORTS

Re RIDLEY (deceased). NICHOLSON v. NICHOLSON
AND ANOTHER.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Harman, J.), April 20, 1950.]

Administration—Fund for payment of legacies and testamentary expenses—Liability of realty—Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (c. 23), s. 34 (3), sched. I, Part II, para. 2.

Will—Residuary gift—“All my real estate.”

By her will made in 1946, a testatrix, who died in 1948, leaving a gross estate consisting of £83,616 personalty and £31,100 realty, made bequests of specific articles valued at £14,100 and gave the residue of her personal chattels to G. By cl. 6 the will provided: “I give free of all death duties all my real estate which includes Manmead Covert and Maperton and my advowsons to the said [G.] absolutely.” By cl. 7 the testatrix gave pecuniary legacies (some of them free of legacy duty) amounting to £29,240. By cl. 8, the testatrix gave “the residue of my property including property over which I have a general power of appointment to the said [G.]”. The estate duty on the personalty amounted to £34,902 and the estate and succession duties on the realty amounted together to £8,300. The debts and funeral expenses together amounted to £1,632. It was admitted that the pecuniary legacies were payable only out of the personalty, but, as the sum of the legacies, debts, expenses, and duties on the realty and personalty exceeded the amount of the personalty, it was argued that the realty ought to bear a proportion of the testamentary expenses (including duties). The property described in cl. 6 was the only realty which the testatrix possessed at the date of her death.

HELD: the terms of cl. 6 and the fact that it was followed by the bequest of pecuniary legacies and a residuary gift showed an intention that the realty should not be resorted to for the payment of legacies and testamentary expenses until the personalty was exhausted, but, if that were not so, the property devised by cl. 6 was not property “not specifically devised or bequeathed but included (either by a specific or general description) in a residuary gift” within the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, sched. I, Part II, para. 2, and, therefore, could not be made to bear a proportion of the testamentary expenses in order to avoid abatement of the legacies.

Dictum of FARWELL, J., in Re Rowe ([1941] Ch. 348), applied.

[AS TO ORDER OF APPLICATION OF ASSETS OF SOLVENT ESTATES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 14, pp. 375-386, paras. 704-718; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 23, pp. 496, 497, 501-503, Nos. 5621-5639, 5667-5694.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Anstead, [1943] 1 All E.R. 522; [1943] Ch. 161; 112 L.J.Ch. 161; 168 L.T. 309; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Lancefield v. Iggulden, (1874), 10 Ch. App. 136; 44 L.J.Ch. 203; 31 L.T. 813; revsg., L.R. 17 Eq. 556; 23 Digest 522, 5900.
- (3) Hensman v. Fryer, (1867), 3 Ch. App. 420; 37 L.J.Ch. 97; 17 L.T. 394; 23 Digest 387, 4581.
- (4) Re Rowe, [1941] 2 All E.R. 330; [1941] Ch. 343; 110 L.J.Ch. 145; 165 L.T. 76; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) Re Thompson, [1936] 2 All E.R. 141; [1936] Ch. 676; 105 L.J.Ch. 289; 155 L.T. 474; Digest Supp.
- (6) Re Boards, [1895] 1 Ch. 499; 64 L.J.Ch. 305; 72 L.T. 220; 23 Digest 510, 5758.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine, inter alia, (i) out of what fund or funds the pecuniary legacies bequeathed by Mary Stephanie Ridley ought to be paid; (ii) how the testatrix's debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and duties in respect of the realty, ought to be borne.

N. S. S. Warren for the plaintiff, one of the executors of the will.

Wilfrid Hunt for the first defendant, the second executor, beneficially interested under the will as devisee and residuary legatee.

R. O. Wilberforce for the second defendant, a pecuniary legatee.

HARMAN, J.: This is a curious point which arises because of the magnitude of the exactions of the State. The testatrix, Mary Stephanie Ridley, left a considerable estate. She died on Mar. 22, 1948, leaving a will dated Feb. 9, 1946. She left gross personalty amounting to about £83,616 on which the estate duty is about £34,902. She left real property valued gross at £31,100 on which the estate and succession duties amount to about £8,300. The debts and funeral expenses amount to £1,632. The will is in a somewhat unusual form. The testatrix appointed two nephews, the plaintiff and the first defendant, to be her executors and trustees. She then gave free of duty a number of bequests set out in a memorandum: those are specific legacies and only valued at some £14,000. She then gave the residue of her personal chattels to Godfrey Nicholson, the first defendant. By cl. 6 she made a devise in these words:

"I give free of all death duties all my real estate which includes Manmead Covert and Maperton and my advowsons to the said Godfrey Nicholson absolutely."

At the end of cl. 6 she requests the devisee of her said real estate to keep in good order certain family graves in the parish church. By cl. 7 she gives a number of pecuniary legacies, some of them free of legacy duty, and some not. Those legacies amount to £29,240. By cl. 8 she proceeds:

"I give the residue of my property including property over which I have a general power of appointment to the said Godfrey Nicholson . . ."

The first question raised by the summons is whether the pecuniary legacies given by cl. 7 are charged on or payable out of both the residuary personal estate and (if the personalty be deficient) the realty, or whether they are charged only on the personalty. It was admitted, and the admission was inevitable, that on the peculiar form of this will pecuniary legacies could only be paid out of the personal estate and that the real estate was not subject to them. The effect of that is that the pecuniary and specific legacies added to the debts and the death duties on both realty and personalty more than exhaust the personal estate, and that if there be no other source from which to pay both the duties and the pecuniary legacies, the latter will have to abate to some extent. It is said that, having regard to the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, that is not right, but that the primary fund for payment, not of the legacies, but of the testamentary expenses, in which are included death duties on both realty and personalty, is the realty and the personalty not specifically bequeathed. It is to be noted that the devise of the real estate is a general devise which would cover any realty of which the deceased died possessed: that realty is devised free of all death duties. The result of such a devise is to cast the burden of the death duties which are ordinarily charged on the real estate on to the personal estate. Consequently, it was the intention of the testatrix that her real estate should have the burden of this duty discharged by the personalty. It is also noticeable that she does not describe it as "the rest of my real estate" or "my other real estate." She describes it as "my real estate" including certain named properties which were in fact all the real estate she had. Having disposed of that, she then by the next clause gives the pecuniary legacies and by cl. 8 gives what she calls "the residue of my property": this is a true residuary clause which would sweep up realty as well as personalty if any were undisposed of. If, for instance, the devise in cl. 6 failed, cl. 8 would be sufficient to take it up. So that cl. 8 is not confined to personalty, but is a general residuary devise and bequest.

I take it therefore that it is clear that the intention of this testatrix was that her realty should be given separately from whatever would remain, and that the devisee thereof was meant to take it free of the imposition of death duties, and whoever took the residue was to take whatever there was left after payment of the legacies which follow the devise under the will.

Nevertheless, counsel for the second defendant says that, having regard to the terms of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 34, a result follows which I will explain in a moment. Section 34 provides:

"(3) Where the estate of a deceased person is solvent his real and personal estate shall . . . be applicable towards the discharge of the funeral, testamentary and administration expenses, debts and liabilities payable thereout in the order mentioned in Part II of sched. I to this Act."

It has been decided, and is not now disputed, that that has nothing to do with legacies. Here, an even larger amount than legacies is the estate duty on personalty, and that is obviously included in this section. Paragraph 1 of Part II of sched. I to that Act deals with property undisposed of by will, with which we are not concerned here. Paragraph 2 deals with "Property of the deceased not specifically devised or bequeathed but included (either by a specific or general description) in a residuary gift, subject to the retention out of such property of a fund sufficient to meet any pecuniary legacies . . ."

Reference to Re Anstead (1), decided by UTHWATT, J., shews how that schedule is meant to work. He said ([1943] Ch. 164), after reading the paragraph which I have just read:

"It follows that the first thing to be done in administering a solvent estate is to set aside out of residue a fund to satisfy the pecuniary legacies. That is the first charge, and it is a charge primarily on residuary personalty rather than on the residuary real estate."

In the present case the charge is solely on the residuary personalty. Therefore, if the schedule is to apply you must set aside out of the residuary personalty the pecuniary legacies and in addition the estate and succession duty on the realty and the legacy duty, on the latter because giving the realty free of duty is to give a legacy along with the realty, so that you have about £38,000 set aside. The learned judge goes on (ibid.):

"The result is notionally to divide the residue into two separate funds, the first to meet pecuniary legacies (and for the purposes of this fund personal estate is the primary fund and only in so far as it is insufficient is there to be any resort to realty) and a second fund consisting of the balance of the residue, including residuary real estate. In meeting debts and testamentary expenses the second fund must be exhausted before the first is touched."

If, than, cl. 6 be a residuary gift, the property included in it ranks with the personalty included in cl. 8 subject to the retention out of the latter of the sum of £38,000 or so to which I have referred, and the result will be that about half the estate duty on the personalty will fall on the realty. This is obviously a topsy-turvy result. It defeats every intention that the testatrix has expressed. She wanted the duty on the realty to be paid by the personalty. The result of her will is said to be that duty on the personalty is borne in part by the realty. That is a most surprising conclusion, but one which, says counsel for the second defendant, is the result of the order of payment in which I am directed by the statute to proceed. A

I have two further matters to consider in that respect. Section 34 (3) of the Act of 1925 was made specifically subject to the provisions, if any, contained in the will and the schedule itself says in para. 8 B

"(a) The order of application may be varied by the will of the deceased." C

Is there then enough in the will of this deceased to alter the order of this application? In my judgment, there is. I think that a will which gives the realty by a general devise of this sort, which is not on the face of it residuary and expressly throws the duty in respect of that realty on to the personalty, is followed by a gift of legacies, and followed again by what is obviously a true residuary clause, shows an intention that the legacies and also the expenses shall not come on to the realty until the personalty is exhausted. That seems to me to be, as a mere matter of construction, the inevitable result of the way in which the testatrix has made her will. D

If I am wrong on that point there arises a question of some nicety, namely: Is this property, the realty, "not specifically devised or bequeathed but included (either by a specific or general description) in a residuary gift within para. 2 of sched. I, Part II, to the Act?" In other words, is cl. 6 a residuary gift? It seems there is much to be said on both sides of the question. It has been pointed out that before the Wills Act, 1837, all devises of realty were specific. A devise had no ambulatory character so as to embrace subsequently acquired realty. That was altered by the Wills Act, 1837, s. 24, which did not give a devise of realty the same effect as a bequest of personalty, but provided that, in reference to the real estate comprised in it, the will should be construed as if executed immediately before the death. In that way the legislature cured that particular blot, because if one treated the devise as if it were made immediately before the death, any real estate which a man acquired in his lifetime must be included in the description of "all my real estate." That was commented on in Lancefield v. Iggulden (2), where the headnote is: "A residuary devise of real estate is still specific notwithstanding s. 24 of the Wills Act." LORD CAIRNS, L.C., after reciting s. 24 said (L.R. 10 Ch. 141): E

"There is nothing in the Act to alter the well-settled rule of law as to the effect of a residuary devise when you know the time at which it was made, namely, that for the purpose of payment of debts it is to rank pari passu with the specific devises." F

He goes on to deal with Hensman v. Fryer (3) which decided that a residuary devise of realty was specific. It is said by counsel for the second defendant, and he cited a passage in JARMAN ON WILLS, 7th ed., vol. 2, p. 916, that that is an inaccurate expression only used as a compendious way of saying that the G residuary realty used to stand on the same footing as specifically devised realty for the purpose of payment of debts. He says the object of the schedule has been to cure that defect. I do not think that is a matter I need discuss further because what I have to consider is whether this is a residuary gift.

H

A In my judgment, cl. 6 of this will, although it contains a general devise of realty, is not a residuary gift. I cannot think that a clause placed as this one is, even though it might have a certain sweeping-up effect by virtue of s. 24 of the Wills Act, 1837, is a residuary gift within the meaning of the Act of 1925. I am supported in that view by a dictum of FARWELL, J., in Re Rowe (4), where he was considering this schedule. The decision was that the law had not been altered by Part II of sched. I to the Act of 1925. The form of the will was: "I devise all my real estate and bequeath all the residue of my personal estate . . ." FARWELL, J., decided (following the decision of CLAUSON, J., in Re Thompson (5)) that real estate there had not been given in one mass with personal estate and that the old rule in Re Boards (6) still applied and went on ([1941] Ch. 348):

C "Accordingly, I hold that the 'property of the deceased not specifically devised or bequeathed but included by a specific or general description in a residuary gift' for the purpose of sched. I, Part II, para. 2, of the Act does not include the real estate of the testator in this case: for according to the construction which I place upon this particular will the real estate is devised, not as part of the residue, but as a specific devise to the named persons, the residue which is given being the residue of the personal estate."

D Having regard to the fact that the will there being construed dealt with the two species of property in one sentence, that case is very much less strong than the present one. Nevertheless, it was held that the real estate devised by that will was not, within the meaning of sched. I, included in the residuary clause. If that be right, it is clear that the present case is a stronger one, and although I am not bound by that decision because it was not necessary for the conclusion E at which he arrived, it is none the less a decision of that learned judge and I should be very sorry to differ from it. I agree with the reasoning: I cannot think that cl. 6 was what is meant in this schedule as being a residuary gift, and if necessary I should be prepared so to hold, but the reason for my decision is that the statutory order has been altered by the terms of the will, and, therefore, it does not apply.

F Order accordingly. Costs of all parties as between solicitor and client to be paid out of the estate in due course of administration.

Solicitors: Withers & Co. (for all parties).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

KNOWLES v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Willmer, J.), April 28, May 1, 2, 3, 1950.]

Legitimation—Declaration of legitimacy—Declaration of legitimacy of uncle—“Ancestor”—Jurisdiction of court to make declaration—Legitimacy Act, 1926 (c. 60), s. 2 (1)—R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 5; Ord. 34, r. 1.

On Feb. 6, 1866, K., the petitioner's grandfather, who was at all material times domiciled in England, married the petitioner's grandmother, who, prior to that date had borne him three sons, R., A., and A.T. On May 23, 1866, the petitioner's father was born. In 1919 R. died without issue, in 1939 A. died, and in 1947 A.T. died, both also without issue. Both A. and A.T., who were ordinarily resident in France, where most of their property was situate, bequeathed their estates to strangers. The petitioner desired to impeach the wills of A. and A.T. in the French courts on the ground of undue influence, and to afford himself locus standi he sought a declaration that A. and A.T. were legitimated on Jan. 1, 1927, by the Legitimacy Act, 1926, s. 1 (1). At all material times the petitioner's grandfather and grandmother were free to marry, and it was not disputed that A. and A.T. had in fact been legitimated by s. 1.

HELD: (i) the court had no jurisdiction to make a declaration of legitimacy either under R.S.C., Ord. 34, r. 1, because that rule contemplated the submission of a Special Case in writing, which was not the procedure adopted in the present case, or under R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 5, or otherwise than in pursuance of s. 2 (1) of the Act of 1926.

Procedure adopted in Jones (R.E.), Ltd. v. Waring & Gillow, Ltd. ([1925] 2 K.B. 612), distinguished.

Warter v. Warter (1890) (15 P.D. 35), followed.

(ii) “ancestor” in s. 2 (1) meant “lineal progenitor” and, therefore, neither A. nor A.T. was a “remoter ancestor” within the meaning of that sub-section; the petitioner had not brought himself within the jurisdiction conferred by the sub-section; and the declaration could not be made.

Zetland (Earl) v. Lord Advocate (1878) (3 App. Cas. 505), distinguished.

[AS TO DECLARATION OF LEGITIMACY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 2, pp. 571-574, paras. 783-785; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 3, pp. 369-372, Nos. 100-130.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Millard v. Millard and Addis, [1945] 2 All E.R. 525; sub nom., M. v. M., [1946] P. 31; 115 L.J.P. 29; 173 L.T. 305; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) C. v. C., [1947] 2 All E.R. 50; 177 L.T. 399; 111 J.P. 442; sub nom., Colquitt v. Colquitt, [1948] P. 19; [1948] L.J.R. 897; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) Jones (R.E.), Ltd. v. Waring & Gillow, Ltd., [1925] 2 K.B. 612; 94 L.J.K.B. 594; 132 L.T. 807; on appeal, [1926] A.C. 670; 95 L.J.K.B. 913; 135 L.T. 548; 35 Digest 149, 470.
- (4) Warter v. Warter, (1890), 15 P.D. 35; 59 L.J.P. 45; 62 L.T. 328; 3 Digest 372, 130.
- (5) Yool v. Ewing, [1904] 1 I.R. 434; 3 Digest 363, 46iv.
- (6) Gunner v. Gunner and Stirling, [1948] 2 All E.R. 771; [1949] P. 77; [1948] L.J.R. 1904; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (7) Zetland (Earl) v. Lord Advocate, (1878), 3 App. Cas. 505; 38 L.T. 297; 21 Digest 96, 702.
- (8) Valentine v. Wetherill, (1860), 31 Barbour 655.

PETITION under the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 188, for a declaration under the Legitimacy Act, 1926, s. 2, or under the inherent jurisdiction of the court pursuant to R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 5, or Ord. 34, r. 1, that certain persons were rendered legitimate by virtue of s. 1 of the Act of 1926 on Jan. 1, 1927.

Salt, K.C., and R. J. A. Temple for the petitioner.

J. E. S. Simon for the Attorney-General.

A WILLMER, J.: The petitioner claims a declaration that two of his uncles were legitimated under the Legitimacy Act, 1926. The prayer in the petition, as originally drawn, was for a declaration in pursuance of s. 2 of the Act, but I have in the course of the argument allowed an amendment claiming a similar declaration in the alternative under the inherent jurisdiction of the court. It is clear to me that the petitioner has an abundant interest in establishing the legitimation of his two uncles. The real question which I have had to decide is whether or not in the circumstances I have jurisdiction to make the declaration asked for. That is by no means a simple or easy problem, and I will say at once that I could have wished to have had an opportunity of thinking it over and of putting my judgment into writing, but it has been represented to me that my view of the matter is required by the petitioner at an early date in view of certain proceedings which are about to take place in France, and it appears obvious to me that, if I take time for consideration, what I might have to say may well be too late to assist in the French litigation.

B The grandfather and grandmother of the petitioner had four children. They were respectively Robert Townley Knowles, who was born in 1856, Alexander Townley Knowles, who was born in 1858, Arthur Townley Knowles, who was born in 1862, and Townley Rigby Knowles, who was born on May 23, 1866. It was proved to my satisfaction that the petitioner's grandfather was, at all material times, domiciled in England. It was also proved to my satisfaction that the petitioner's grandfather and grandmother were, at all material times, free to marry. But they did not in fact marry until Feb. 6, 1866. That meant that the first three of the children whom I have named were born before the marriage, and only the youngest son, Townley Rigby Knowles, was born in wedlock. The petitioner is the only son of Townley Rigby Knowles, that is to say, he is the only son of the only son of his grandfather who was born legitimate. There is no question with regard to the petitioner's own legitimacy. His parents were married on Feb. 2, 1896, and the petitioner was born on Aug. 8, 1896. As to the three brothers of the petitioner's father—apparently none of them had any children, so that the petitioner is the only member of what I might call the third generation. Of the petitioner's three uncles, Robert Townley Knowles died in 1919 and, for all purposes of this suit, passed out of the picture. Arthur Townley Knowles died in 1939 and Alexander Townley Knowles died in 1947. It will be seen, therefore, that the two latter survived the coming into force of the Legitimacy Act, 1926, and it is in respect of them that the petitioner seeks his declaration. Both of those uncles were resident, at any rate for a considerable part of their later years, in France, where they owned property inherited from the petitioner's grandfather at Gan, near Pau.

C It will be convenient to deal first with the history of Arthur who, although the younger, was the first to die. In 1933 Arthur made both French and English wills, the effect of which was to leave all his property to a lady named Léonie Camougrand, who was described in the English will as being the sister of his deceased wife, and it was stated in the English will that it was made in contemplation of his marriage to her. That marriage did not take place, Léonie Camougrand, is now dead, and I am informed that one Dr. Lafitte is the sole beneficiary under her will. Arthur died in France. In 1940, his brother, Alexander, who was also resident in France, commenced proceedings against Léonie Camougrand impeaching the will of his brother, Arthur, on the ground of undue influence. To that action he appears to have joined the petitioner as a co-plaintiff. The petitioner has told me that it was done without his consent or knowledge. The petitioner himself had ordinarily been resident in France, but he came to England at the time of the German invasion, so that at no material time thereafter was he in France until after the war.

The action started by Alexander came on for hearing at Pau, and on Dec. 26, 1941, it was dismissed by the tribunal at Pau who gave judgment in favour of the defendants. Alexander Townley Knowles appealed, but on Feb. 10, 1943, the court of appeal confirmed the decision of the tribunal. Apparently, the French courts decided that they could not entertain the action, because, in the absence of any legitimacy declaration, they could not accept the status of the plaintiffs or their locus standi to pursue the action. It would seem that the French courts took the view that, until a declaration of legitimacy had been made, such as is provided for by s. 2 of the Act of 1926, the plaintiff, Alexander, could not be regarded as being legitimate any more than the deceased uncle, Arthur, could be regarded as being legitimate. Of course, as I have said, the action was decided by the court of appeal at a time when France and England were, unhappily, cut off from each other, and it appears, so I am told, from a perusal of the records, that there is nothing to show that there was any evidence as to English law available to the tribunal at Pau. Alexander, as I have said, has since died, but, before doing so, he appears to have lodged an appeal to the Cour de Cassation, the highest tribunal in France. The petitioner has told me that it is his intention to continue the prosecution of that appeal, but I understand that it is still pending and it is not known at what date that appeal may be heard. However, it seems clear that the petitioner has an interest in establishing the legitimation of his uncle, Arthur, if for no other reason for the purpose of obtaining the status of heir in French law, so as to give him a locus standi for the prosecution of the French proceedings.

So much for the petitioner's interest in his uncle Arthur. So far as the uncle Alexander is concerned, it appears that very shortly before his death, when he was a very old man, he made a will in France where he was then resident. By that will he made a number of bequests, but the principal property which he had to dispose of, namely, the estate where he lived, he left by that will to his farmer tenants, a man called Castaignon and his wife. No residuary legatee was appointed by the will of Alexander, and there is evidence to show that there is some undisposed of residue after the various specific bequests have been dealt with. Apart from anything else, the petitioner wishes to establish his title to be considered as residuary legatee by reason of being the nephew of his uncle Alexander. Moreover, the petitioner seeks to impeach the will of his uncle Alexander, again on the ground of undue influence. It is said that before his death Alexander was very much in the hands of the Castaignons, husband and wife, and that they improperly used their influence over him to persuade him to make a will from which the petitioner appears to be completely cut out, at any rate, so far as concerns Alexander's French estate. The petitioner brought an action in France, and it was tried before the tribunal at Pau in December, 1948. The tribunal decided that action in favour of the petitioner and against the defendant Castaignon. In other words the petitioner's argument that the will was induced by undue influence on the part of Castaignon was accepted by the tribunal. An appeal, however, against that decision has been lodged by Castaignon and I am informed that it is due for hearing, I think, at Pau in the course of the next week. Hence the urgency of the matter before me.

It appears that in the court of appeal at Pau Monsieur Castaignon is about to take the same point as was taken in relation to the litigation over the will of Arthur, namely, that, in the absence of a legitimacy declaration under the Act of 1926, Alexander must be regarded as having continued illegitimate, and, therefore, the petitioner shows no relationship with him, and, consequently, has no locus standi to contest the will or prosecute the French proceedings. I am told that there is reason for fearing that the French court of appeal at Pau may follow the precedent which they set for themselves in the case of Arthur's will, and, if they were to do that, they would, presumably, have to allow the appeal of Monsieur Castaignon. That would mean not only the end of the petitioner's attempt to impeach the will of his uncle Alexander, but, I imagine, it would also be the end of his claim as heir to the residue of his uncle's estate. Clearly, therefore, in relation to his uncle Alexander as well, the petitioner has abundant interest in obtaining a declaration, if he can obtain one, of legitimacy.

The petition was duly served on the Attorney-General, as prescribed by the rules, and, partly as the result of the Attorney-General's plea and partly as the result of the petitioner's own act, it has also been served on the personal representative of Léonie Camougrand and also on Monsieur and Madame Castaignon. None of these parties has elected to appear. The Attorney-General has appeared by counsel to assist me. On behalf of the petitioner it has been argued, and this much has not been contested on behalf of the Attorney-General, that, in dealing with the case about the will of the petitioner's uncle Arthur, the French court acted on a wrong view of English law. It is contended that on the proper view of English law, even without a declaration, both Arthur and Alexander Knowles, having survived Jan. 1, 1927, were automatically legitimated under the provisions of the Legitimacy Act, 1926, s. 1. It is said that had proper evidence of English law been available to the court in France when this matter was determined during the war, the French court could not possibly have come to the conclusion they did.

In support of the proposition that no declaration of legitimacy was necessary Millard v. Millard and Addis (1) and C. v. C. (2) have been cited to me. Having heard the evidence, I am satisfied that the petitioner has proved the necessary facts to bring his uncles Alexander and Arthur within the provisions of the Legitimacy Act, 1926, s. 1. As I say, that part of the case has not been contested by the Attorney-General, and I am satisfied on the evidence with regard to the facts. If this were the only question before me, namely, whether under s. 1 of the Act these two uncles of the petitioner had been legitimated I should have no difficulty in following the decisions of Millard v. Millard and Addis (1) and C. v. C. (2). Indeed, I should feel bound to follow those decisions, and I should have no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that, even without a declaration of legitimacy having been made, the petitioner's uncles, Alexander and Arthur, were, on a true view of English law, duly legitimated by the mere fact of surviving the coming into force of the Act on Jan. 1, 1927. That, however, is not the real point which I have to decide. The question which is raised is whether I have jurisdiction to make a declaration under s. 2 of the Act, or, alternatively, under the inherent powers of the court, and, more particularly, under the provisions of Ord. 25, r. 5, or Ord. 34, r. 1. I think it might be convenient if I dispose first of the alternative claims made under the rules.

In the first place it is contended that this court can make a declaratory judgment, apart altogether from the Legitimacy Act, 1926, s. 2, under the inherent powers of the court as regulated by R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 5. Alternatively, it is said that a similar result can be achieved by following the procedure laid down in Ord. 34, r. 1, which deals with special cases. In support of the latter contention I was referred to Jones (R.E.), Ltd. v. Waring & Gillow, Ltd. (3) ([1925] 2 K.B. 625). I have no difficulty in rejecting the argument in so far as Ord. 34, r. 1, is concerned. The rule contemplates a Special Case in writing, divided into paragraphs, numbered consecutively, and so on. There has been no such thing in this case, nor has the Attorney-General through his counsel seen fit to accept the suggestion that the petitioner's counsel's opening should be treated as an agreed statement of facts. That is more or less what was done in Jones (R.E.), Ltd. v. Waring & Gillow, Ltd. (3), and in the absence of any such concurrence or acceptance of the facts stated by the petitioner, clearly the procedure prescribed by Ord. 34, r. 1, cannot apply. With regard to the alternative claim under Ord. 25, r. 5, that is, perhaps, slightly more formidable although I have no hesitation whatsoever in rejecting the argument that I can make a declaration of this character under the powers regulated by that rule. Be it said at the outset that, if it were competent to make a declaration in that way in pursuance of Ord. 25, r. 5, it would never have been necessary, as I see it, to enact s. 2 of the Act of 1926 at all. It has been pressed on me, and I think properly pressed on me, by counsel for the Attorney-General that a declaration of legitimacy is, if I may use the expression, something peculiarly sacred because it is a judgment binding in rem. It has been pointed out that the court would not shrink from deciding a question of legitimacy inter partes where it is necessary for the proper disposal or determination of some question arising in an action—that, of course, is only a judgment inter partes—but there is good authority for the proposition that the court will not lightly make a declaration binding in rem except where the statute specifically authorises it. I would refer to the decision of BUTT, J., in Warter v. Warter (4) where he dealt with the matter by asking himself this rhetorical question (15 P.D. 36):

“How can you say that this claim for a declaration of legitimacy is brought properly before me, when the Legitimacy Declaration Act prescribes that it shall be brought before me by petition and not by writ?”

That was a case in which a writ had been issued and it was sought to include with another matter a prayer for a declaration of legitimacy, and BUTT, J., ordered it to be struck out. It is said that that decision is no longer binding on me, because it is a decision arrived at with reference, not to the Legitimacy Act, 1926, but to the Legitimacy Declaration Act, 1858, now replaced by the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 188. I confess I do not follow that objection. The only effect of s. 2 of the Act of 1926 is to make available to a wider range of persons the facilities to present a petition which were provided by the Legitimacy Declaration Act, 1858, and preserved in s. 188 of the Judicature Act. It seems to me that a petition under the modern Act is entirely in pari materia with a petition under the previous Act. In those circumstances I think I am precluded by a decision now sixty years old from making a declaration of legitimacy otherwise than in pursuance of the powers conferred by the Act. I think it is proper also to say that I was referred to the Irish case of Yool v. Ewing (5). That case, of course, is not binding on me, but there a similar matter was very carefully considered by the Irish court which came to much the same conclusion as BUTT, J., had come to in Warter v. Warter (4), and, particularly having regard to the care with which the Irish court went into the whole matter and gave its decision, I am bound to treat that decision as one which demands respect. The view of the editors of the ANNUAL PRACTICE is certainly open to no doubt. The learned editors state dogmatically in the notes to Ord. 25, r. 5 (1949 ed., p. 454):

“A declaration of legitimacy cannot be made under this rule: it can only be made on petition under the Judicature Act, s. 188 (Warter v. Warter (4); Yool v. Ewing (5)); or in the case of children legitimated under the Legitimacy Act, 1926, by a petition under s. 2 . . .”

For the reasons which I have given I think the view expressed by the learned editors of the ANNUAL PRACTICE is the right view.

I come back, therefore, to the main question in this case, namely: Is it competent for me to make the declaration asked for under s. 2 of the Act of 1926? The powers of this court to make declarations of legitimacy are, as I have stated, entirely the creature of statute, and those powers are derived from the two statutes to which I have referred—the Act of 1858, which is now embodied in s. 188 of the Judicature Act, 1925, and s. 2 of the Act of 1926. Section 2 (as amended by the Administration of Justice Act, 1928, s. 19 and sched. I) provides:

“(1) A person claiming that he or his parent or any remoter ancestor became or has become a legitimated person may . . . present a petition under s. 188 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, and that Act, subject to such necessary modifications as may be prescribed by rules of court, shall apply accordingly.”

- A In other words, the Act of 1926 extended the relief prescribed by s. 188 of the Judicature Act to the case of persons desiring to claim either that the petitioner or the parent or any remoter ancestor of the petitioner had become legitimated. The question which arises in the present case is whether the petitioner's uncles, Alexander and Arthur, in respect of whom this declaration is sought, can properly be regarded as being “remoter ancestors” within the meaning of s. 2 (1).
B That is the phrase on the consideration of which the whole of this question turns. What is meant by “any remoter ancestor”?

- On behalf of the petitioner it is contended that that expression is apt to include any blood relation in whose legitimacy or in whose legitimation the petitioner has an economic interest, whether by succession or otherwise. In his very careful argument before me counsel for the petitioner rather shrank from drawing an exact line between those included under such a definition and those excluded,
C but he contended that on any view the relationship contemplated must, at least, include the statutory next-of-kin prescribed under the Administration of Estates Act, 1925. Furthermore, he wisely said that it does not really matter for the purpose of this case where you draw the line because, on his contention, on any view this case (being concerned with uncles) must fall well on the right side of the line wherever drawn. I was invited on behalf of the petitioner to view this Act, more particularly s. 2 of the Act, against the background of the property legislation of 1925, and, in the light of that legislation, to give the Act a wide and liberal interpretation. It was pointed out correctly that the Act of 1926, if regarded as a whole, is concerned not only with the status of the petitioner or the legitimated person, but also—and very much concerned—with property rights. It deals specifically with property in s. 2 (2); and it deals specifically with property again in s. 9. Again, s. 3, s. 4 and s. 5 certainly deal with questions of interest in property and succession to property. It is said on behalf of the petitioner, in support of the contention that the Act should be interpreted in a liberal way, that one should follow the precedent of liberal construction adopted by this court in relation to s. 192 of the Judicature Act which deals with the power of this court to vary ante-nuptial or post-nuptial settlements, and it was pointed out that as recently as Gunner v. Gunner and Stirling (6) this court accepted a very loose and popular definition of the word “settlement” for the purposes of that Act—an interpretation which would doubtless shock the practitioners of Lincoln's Inn. That case is cited as a useful analogy, which I might well follow in this case, for giving liberal interpretation to this statute which is described by counsel as an “enabling” statute.
F
G

- So far as this statute is concerned, neither side has been able to produce any direct authority as to the construction of the word “ancestor,” but an authority of the House of Lords was produced by the petitioner with regard to the meaning of “ancestor” in another connection. I refer to Earl of Zetland v. Lord Advocate (7). I do not propose to rehearse the complicated facts of that case. It is sufficient to say that the question at issue was as to the rate of succession duty payable under the Succession Duty Act, 1853. It was a case in which a nephew had succeeded his uncle—an interesting circumstance because the relationship in question in this case is the same. Two rates of succession duty were provided by the Act—one rate if the succession was by virtue of a disposition of the settlor, another, and higher rate, if the succession was by devolution. The decision of the House of Lords was a decision, against the taxpayer, that in the circumstances the succession was by devolution from the uncle, who was held to be an ancestor within the meaning of the Act of 1853. Section 2 of that Act, or the material part of it, provides:
H

"... the term 'predecessor' shall denote the settlor, disponer, testator, obligor, ancestor, or other person from whom the interest of the successor is or shall be derived."

Against the background of that section it is interesting to quote the views of LORD HATHERLEY and LORD SELBORNE on the true construction of the word "ancestor" in relation to that statute. LORD HATHERLEY says (3 App. Cas. 518):

"The expression 'ancestor' is perfectly accurate in a case of this kind. The word 'ancestor' is properly assignable to the person who really preceded in the estate, although that person may not be the progenitor of the successor—he may be, as in this case, his uncle."

LORD SELBORNE said (ibid., 520):

"Devolution by law takes place whenever the title is such that an heir takes under it by descent from an 'ancestor,' according to the rules of law applicable to the descent of heritable estates; and in all cases of descent the estate of the successor is immediately 'derived' from the 'ancestor' from whom the estate descends. The word 'ancestor' does not mean, either etymologically or technically, a lineal ancestor only; in illustration of which proposition, I may refer to a passage in COMYNS' DIGEST as to the English writ of 'mort d'ancestor'; which (it is said) 'does not lie upon the death of any ancestor, except a father, mother, brother, sister, uncle, aunt, nephew, or niece; for, upon the death of another ancestor, an aiel, besaiel, or cosinage, lies.'"

That was put forward as being powerful authority, to which I am bound to pay a great deal of respect, to the effect that the word "ancestor," as used in that statute, has what I may call this extended meaning in relation to the question of succession to property, i.e., something which goes beyond any question of mere lineal descent. Clearly if "ancestor" is capable of that extended meaning in relation to the Act of 1926 the petitioner would be justified in saying that his two uncles were "ancestors." Equally clearly he cannot say so if the expression "ancestor" connotes merely a lineal progenitor.

The reference to the ancient writ of mort d'ancestor made by LORD SELBORNE in his speech in the House of Lords has prompted a good deal of inquiry in this case as to the usage of the writ of mort d'ancestor in mediaeval England. I do not think it is necessary for me to deal exhaustively with the authorities that were presented to me in regard to the early history of that writ. It is sufficient to say that it was a writ available for the relief of a dispossessed heir, and it was equally available whether he was heir to his father or to his uncle or to some other more distant relation. In other words, it covered something other than mere lineal descent. The inquiry into the history of the writ of mort d'ancestor, however, has not altogether been wasted, because I think it has thrown a light on the history of the word "ancestor" itself. Etymologically, as was pointed out and has been accepted by both sides, the word means "antecessor," one who goes before, and in this wider sense it has, I suppose, been replaced in modern times by the word "predecessor." I am tempted to take the view, from the etymological authorities to which I was referred, that the word was imported into this country as part of the Norman-French which the Norman conquerors brought with them, and I can well believe that in the early days of its use its primary meaning was to connote the idea of succession, the "ancestor" being the person prior in succession to the "heir." That is the meaning, as I understand it, which is attributable to the word in connection with the writ of mort d'ancestor. That is, of course, a technical meaning, and it is at least clear that for some purposes that technical meaning has survived,

- otherwise the House of Lords, in dealing with the question of succession duty in the case to which I have referred, could not have come to the conclusion that they did come to, but it is equally clear that, at some time in English history, another, and new, meaning of the word "ancestor" grew up, namely, as being the equivalent of forefather or lineal ascendant, and it is in that sense that it is in common use in ordinary language in modern times. It is interesting to note,
- A as a matter of history, that the ousting of "forefather" in favour of "ancestor" does not seem to have taken place, at any rate, before the seventeenth century because in the authorised version of the Bible we still find the old-English word "forefather" regularly used, but in modern times we talk less of our forefathers and rather more of our ancestors, and there is no doubt, I think, that in ordinary usage in modern times it has replaced the older English word to a large extent.
- B On reference to modern English dictionaries, it appears clearly that in modern times the primary meaning of the word is "progenitor," i.e., it connotes lineal descent—indeed MURRAY'S OXFORD ENGLISH DICTIONARY fails to notice altogether the older and rather more technical meaning of the word which I have endeavoured to describe, and which appears in the House of Lords case to which I have referred.
- C In those circumstances, the question raised by this case is whether, in using the word "ancestor," the draftsman of the Act of 1926 intended to use the word in what I may call its technical sense, or whether he intended to use it in the sense of forefather or lineal progenitor, as I venture to think it would ordinarily and commonly be understood in modern speech. It is contended on behalf of the Attorney-General that, having regard to the modern meaning of the word in ordinary usage, it is of little use, in these days, to refer to the archaic meaning of the word as it was used in connection with the writ of mort d'ancestor. Counsel for the Attorney-General further seeks to distinguish the decision of the House of Lords in Earl of Zetland v. Lord Advocate (7) on the ground that it was a decision under a special Act, dealing specifically with succession duty in relation to succession to property, in connection with which he points
- E out it might very well be that the word was used in its more ancient and more technical sense. At that time, the draftsman of the Act of 1853 had to deal with the old historic rules with regard to succession, and he may well in those circumstances, it was contended, have necessarily had to use words in their ancient, historic and perhaps technical sense. It is said on behalf of the Attorney-General that the Legitimacy Act, 1926, is in an entirely different category.
- F In effect it is to be read as one with that part of the Judicature Act, 1925, which deals with matrimonial affairs, although it is not specifically so described. Nevertheless, it is an Act of a general character, intended to govern the relations of ordinary members of the public in their ordinary lives, and in such circumstances one would expect that prima facie words would be used, not in their technical or ancient sense, but rather in their modern and popular sense. Counsel
- G for the Attorney-General also relied on Gunner v. Gunner (6) because, he said, that was an excellent illustration of the way in which the court in relation to a kindred matter construed a word such as "settlement" in its popular rather than in its technical sense. He, like counsel for the petitioner, confessed himself unable to find any direct authority on the construction of the word "ancestor" in relation to the Act of 1926, but, by way of counter-blast to the House of
- H Lords decision relied on by the petitioner, counsel for the Attorney-General referred me to an American decision in Valentine v. Wetherill (8). Obviously I cannot rely on this American decision as an authority, and, indeed, it was not suggested by counsel that it was in any way binding on me. In any case, he was bound to concede that it was only a decision of the New York Court of Appeal as against a decision of the House of Lords which is produced on the other side. It was a decision in relation to succession, but it does at least show that there are two views on what is meant by the word "ancestor" in relation to the question of succession. In that case, the president of the court, delivering the judgment of the court, said in relation to the use of the word "ancestor" under the American statute to which he was referring (31 Barbour 659):

"The term 'ancestor' is used in its proper sense, in the statute, and designates the immediate not the remote source of the intestate's title. It is not equivalent to the expression 'the parent or other kindred of the intestate,' as used in the statutes of Rhode Island. 'Ancestors,' derived from antecessores, designates the ascendants of the intestate in the right line, as father and mother, grandfather and grandmother, and does not include collateral relatives as brothers and sisters."

That, as I say, is some authority, though not one binding on me, for the construction of the word "ancestor" in what I think anyone would regard as its normal and popular use.

Faced with this difficult problem as I am, it seems to me that what I have to remember is that it is for the petitioner to bring himself within the statute on which he relies. As I have stated, this court has jurisdiction only in so far as it is conferred by statute, and it is for the petitioner who claims relief in pursuance of that statute to satisfy me that he brings himself within it. I accept the argument presented on behalf of the Attorney-General that prima facie in a statute such as this words are to be construed in accordance with their ordinary and natural meaning, and, having regard to the English dictionaries to which I have been referred, I feel bound, at any rate at this date, to accept that "ancestor" in its ordinary and natural meaning connotes a progenitor or one in direct lineal line of descent. In view of the wide usage of the word in that sense in modern times in popular speech, I should have expected the draftsman in 1926, if he desired to use the word in any other sense, in drafting the statute to insert a definition in the "definition clause" of the statute. This statute includes a definition clause, but that clause makes no mention of the word "ancestor," from which I must infer that no unusual or artificial interpretation of the word "ancestor" was intended.

In my judgment, a review of the provisions of the Act as a whole supports what I have said with regard to the prima facie meaning of the word, namely, that it was intended to be used in its natural and ordinary sense of lineal progenitor. If one studies the Act as a whole, one becomes aware of the fact that the legitimation under it of any one person may affect numbers of other persons who claim through him. Equally, and conversely, a number of other persons may be affected by the legitimation of a person through whom they claim. In other words the draftsman of the Act necessarily had to look both upwards and downwards in framing the provisions consequential on the legitimation of this new class of persons. In relation to the former class—i.e., persons who claim through somebody who is to be legitimated under the statute—the scope of the statute is clearly confined to a well-defined class, namely "spouse, children, or remoter issue." That phrase, not always quite in the same words, but substantially that phrase, is used again and again in the Act. It appears in s. 1 (3), in s. 3 (1), in s. 4, in s. 5, and in s. 8 (2). The expression: "parent or any remoter ancestor" occurs only once, namely in s. 2 (1), the section which I have to construe. It is perfectly true, as pointed out by counsel for the petitioner, that most of the Act is dealing with change in substantive law. Section 2, on the other hand, is purely procedural. It provides the remedy for persons affected by the Act. That, to my mind, is no reason against drawing the inference, which, as a matter of construction, I am tempted to draw, having regard to the fact that the draftsman of the Act necessarily had to look both ways, so to speak, upwards and downwards, and that is that those expressions "parent or any remoter ancestor," and "children or remoter issue" must be regarded as correlative with each other. So far as "issue" is concerned, there can be no possible doubt what is meant by that word. Clearly the word "issue" is confined to children and lineal descendants. I have had the benefit of various entries in various dictionaries put before me. I do not think I need enlarge on that point. I think it is obvious that that is the only meaning which the word "issue" is capable of bearing, and, if that is right, it strikes me as being a very strong argument in support of the contention that "ancestor" is being used in the opposite and correlative sense, namely, that of lineal progenitor as opposed to lineal descendant. Furthermore, there is this much extra assistance to be derived from a study of the Act as a whole. As pointed out by counsel for the Attorney-General, if you look at s. 7 of the Act you will find that when the draftsman did desire to go outside the range of lineal progenitors or lineal descendants he changed the language he was using and used instead the words "any relative." Again, that is an argument in favour of restricting the meaning of "ancestor," as used in s. 2, to the narrower meaning which it has in popular speech to-day rather than giving it the extended meaning contended for by the petitioner—a meaning which one would have thought would have been better expressed by the word "relative," the word actually used by the draftsman in s. 7. I think that this construction of the Act is further confirmed having regard to the provisions of the Judicature Act, 1925, s. 188. It appears to me that s. 2 of the Act of 1926 must be read closely with s. 188 of the Act of 1925 because the former is a section which extends the relief or remedy already prescribed by the latter section to the enlarged class of persons brought into existence by s. 1 of the Act of 1926. Indeed, all that s. 2 of the Act of 1926 does is to say that any such person may present a petition under the previous Act. It is, therefore, to my mind, by no means irrelevant to see what the previous Act says. Section 188, reproducing in this respect the provisions of the Legitimacy Declaration Act, 1858, is careful to confine the petitioner seeking relief to a claim that he is a legitimate child of his parents or that the marriage of his father and mother, or of his grandfather and grandmother, was a valid marriage, or that his own marriage was a valid marriage. In other words, s. 188 of the Act of 1925 was concerned only with a limited class of persons, i.e., lineal progenitors or descendants, and there is nothing that I can see in the wording of s. 2 of the Act of 1926 to show that Parliament had any intention of going outside lineal progenitors or descendants in relation to the new class of persons entitled to claim relief.

That, I think, is enough to dispose of this case. There are other points advanced by counsel for the Attorney-General as reasons for adopting this construction of the Act. I do not think it is necessary to deal in detail with the other various arguments which he advanced, and which I have very carefully considered. I have approached this matter primarily as a matter of construction, and, doing the best I can, having regard to the paucity of authority, bearing in mind what I conceive to be the true canons of construction, and, more particularly, having regard to the onus which is on the petitioner to bring himself within the jurisdiction conferred by the statute, I have come to the conclusion that the petitioner has not made out his case, has not brought himself within the range of persons who can petition under s. 2, and is, therefore, not entitled to have the declaration made in his favour.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Rowe & Maw (for the petitioner); Treasury Solicitor.

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

HABERMAN v. WESTMINSTER PERMANENT BUILDING SOCIETY.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., Asquith and Jenkins, L.JJ.), May 3, 4, 1950.]

Rent Restriction—Premium—Recovery—Agreement made after March 25, 1949—Counterclaim for avoidance of lease and for possession—Premium paid and agreement executed before June 2, 1949—Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949 (c. 40), s. 2 (5).

The Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, which came into force on June 2, 1949, prohibits, by s. 2 (1), the taking of a premium as a condition of the grant, renewal or continuance of any tenancy of a dwelling-house to which the Rent Restrictions Acts apply. By s. 2 (5): "Where, under an agreement made after Mar. 25, 1949, any premium has been paid which, or the whole of which, could not lawfully be required under the foregoing provisions of this section (or, if the premium was required before the commencement of this Act, which could not lawfully have been required if this Act had then been in force), the amount of the premium, or so much thereof as could not lawfully be required or have been required, as the case may be, shall be recoverable by the person by whom it was paid: Provided that where an agreement has been made since the said Mar. 25, and before the commencement of this Act, and the agreement includes provision for the payment of a premium which could lawfully be required under the enactments hereby repealed but which, if paid in pursuance of the agreement, would be recoverable, wholly or in part, by virtue of the foregoing provisions of this sub-section, the agreement shall, without prejudice to the operation of this section, be voidable at the option of either party thereto."

On Mar. 30, 1949, the tenant entered into an oral agreement with the landlords to take the lease of a flat for a term of fourteen years at a monthly rent of £6 19s., and to pay a premium of £400. He paid £25 of the premium and was given a receipt for it. The balance of £375 was paid by him on Apr. 4, 1949. On that date the terms of the oral agreement, which had been embodied in the receipt given to the tenant on Mar. 30, were incorporated in a formal lease. The tenant then entered into possession of the flat and paid the rent regularly until January, 1950. On Nov. 3, 1949, the tenant brought an action in the county court claiming the return of the premium paid by him, and the landlords counterclaimed for avoidance of the lease under the proviso to s. 2 (5) of the Act of 1949 and for possession of the flat.

Held: the proviso to s. 2 (5) of the Act of 1949 referred only to cases in which it had been agreed that a premium should be paid, but the agreement had not yet been carried out, and not to cases in which a premium had already been paid, and, therefore, the proviso did not apply and the landlords could not recover possession.

Semble: Per ASQUITH, L.J. (i) the acceptance of rent by the landlords after they discovered that they had an option under the proviso to s. 2 (5) of the Act of 1949 to avoid the tenancy did not amount to an act unequivocally affirming the tenancy and to an election not to avoid it. (ii) if the contractual tenancy were avoided by a valid exercise of the option, that tenancy would be destroyed ab initio, and no statutory tenancy could spring up in its place.

[FOR THE LANDLORD AND TENANT (RENT CONTROL) ACT, 1949, s. 2 (5), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 13, p. 1097.]

APPEAL by the tenant from an order of His Honour JUDGE SIR HENRY BRAUND, sitting at Willesden County Court, dated Feb. 1, 1950.

A The tenant claimed the return of a premium of £400 which was paid by him to the landlords for the grant of a lease for a term of fourteen years under an agreement, dated Mar. 30, 1949, and executed before June 2, 1949, the date when the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, came into operation. The landlords counterclaimed for avoidance of the lease and for possession on the ground that they had validly exercised the option conferred by the proviso to s. 2 (5) of the Act of 1949. The county court judge gave judgment for the tenant for the return of the premium, and for the landlords for avoidance of the lease and recovery of possession. On appeal by the tenant against the judgment on the counterclaim the principal contention made on his behalf was that the proviso to s. 2 (5) of the Act of 1949 applied only to agreements which had not been performed or, in respect of which, though a premium had been stipulated, the premium had not, in fact, been paid. The facts and the relevant provisions of the Act of 1949 appear in the judgment of ASQUITH, L.J.

M. Waters for the tenant.

L. A. Blundell for the landlords.

C ASQUITH, L.J.: This is a tenant's appeal against a judgment upholding the landlords' counterclaim and granting them an order for possession of a flat let by them to the tenant. The tenant had been awarded £400 on his claim, which was practically uncontested and which is not the subject of appeal.

D On Mar. 30, 1949, the tenant orally agreed to rent a flat from the landlords for a term of fourteen years at a rent of £6 19s. monthly and to pay a premium of £400. He paid £25 of that premium on that date and the balance on Apr. 4, on which day the orally agreed terms, which had been embodied in a receipt given on Mar. 30, were incorporated in a formal lease. Shortly afterwards the tenant took possession and remained in occupation, paying rent, till about January, 1950. The Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, which came into operation on June 2, 1949, made, inter alia, any demand for payment of premiums in respect of tenancies within the economic limits of the Rent Restrictions Acts illegal in certain cases where the Rent Acts previously in force had not prohibited such payments, for instance, in the case of tenancies of fourteen years and upwards. The Act also made premiums actually paid recoverable. True, the present agreement of tenancy was made and became operative before the Act of 1949 received the Royal Assent, but some of its provisions, notably certain provisions in s. 2, are retrospective, and it is with the possible application of those provisions that we are concerned in this case.

F Section 2 of the Act provides:

G " (1) A person shall not, as a condition of the grant, renewal or continuance of a tenancy to which this section applies, require the payment of any premium in addition to the rent . . . (3) This section applies to any tenancy of a dwelling-house, being a tenancy to which the principal Acts apply, such that when the dwelling-house is let under the tenancy it is a dwelling-house to which the principal Acts apply."

There is no dispute that this flat is a dwelling-house to which the principal Acts apply. By sub-s. (5), which is the most material provision:

H " Where, under an agreement made after Mar. 25, 1949, any premium has been paid which, or the whole of which, could not lawfully be required under the foregoing provisions of this section (or, if the premium was required before the commencement of this Act, which could not lawfully have been required if this Act had then been in force), the amount of the premium, or so much thereof as could not lawfully be required or have been required, as the case may be, shall be recoverable by the person by whom it was paid: Provided that where an agreement has been made since the said Mar. 25 and before the commencement of this Act, and the agreement includes provision for the payment of a premium which could lawfully be required under the enactments hereby repealed but which, if paid in pursuance of the agreement, would be recoverable, wholly or in part, by virtue of the foregoing provisions of this sub-section, the agreement shall, without prejudice to the operation of this section, be voidable at the option of either party thereto."

The question here is: What is the effect on the tenancy of the proviso to sub-s. (5)? The main part of the sub-section enables the tenant to recover on his claim the premium of £400 which he had paid. The landlords in their counterclaim relied on the proviso as entitling them to possession. They claim to have exercised validly the option conferred by the proviso and so to have avoided the tenancy agreement.

By Aug. 16, 1949, the Act having then come into force, the tenant realised that the Act entitled him to repayment of the premium which he had paid, and his solicitor demanded repayment by letter of that date. The landlords, after disputing at first his right to it, later withdrew their opposition, but by Aug. 26 they, in their turn, had realised that the proviso existed and they wrote to the tenant saying, in effect, that, if he recovered his premium, they would avoid his tenancy. On Nov. 3, 1949, the tenant lodged his plaint. Up to January, 1950, the tenant continued to pay, and the landlords continued to accept, the monthly rent. On Dec. 15 the landlords filed their defence and counterclaim, claiming possession. In para. 3 of their counterclaim they purported to exercise the option conferred by the proviso to avoid the agreement. In his reply and defence to counterclaim, the tenant denied that the landlords had any rights under s. 2 (5), and, alternatively, claimed to be entitled to remain in possession as a statutory tenant.

The argument turns entirely on the construction of the proviso to s. 2 (5). The learned county court judge held that the proviso applied to the facts of this case, that it vested in the landlords an option to avoid the tenancy which was validly exercised by them, and that they did not waive their rights by accepting rent, or otherwise. In the court below and in this court the tenant relied in substance on three contentions. He argued, first, that the proviso only applied to agreements which had not in any degree been performed or, at all events, in respect of which, though a premium had been stipulated, the premium had not, in fact, been paid. In the present case, he said, long before the attempted exercise of the option the premium had been paid, the lease had been executed, and possession had been taken. In support of the limited construction for which he contended the tenant relied mainly on the last few words of the proviso to s. 2 (5):

"Provided . . . the agreement includes provision for the payment of a premium which could lawfully be required under the enactments hereby repealed but which, if paid in pursuance of the agreement, would be recoverable, wholly or in part, by virtue of the foregoing provisions of this sub-section . . ."

The words "if paid . . . would be recoverable" must surely mean if it had been paid, and implies that the proviso is limited to cases in which it is not paid. The alternative construction really involves writing in after the words "would be recoverable" some further words, such as "or has been paid and therefore is recoverable," or "whether or not such premium has in fact been paid." No such words are in the proviso. Indeed, as the Master of the Rolls pointed out at one stage of the argument, if the construction contended for by the landlords were right, the draftsman might have saved himself a lot of pains by simply writing "includes provision for the payment of a premium recoverable under the foregoing provisions of this sub-section." The words "which . . . if paid ... would be recoverable" would then have been a quite unnecessary rigmarole.

- The argument of the tenant assumes that the agreement referred to in the proviso is not a lease which in this case was executed after, and in pursuance of, the precedent oral agreement, but was that oral agreement. It was put to counsel for the tenant that a lease was, inter alia, an agreement, hence the proviso may
- A apply to a lease. He countered this successfully, in my view, by pointing out that the lease in this case, even though an agreement, was not an agreement which provided for payment of a premium, a subject on which it was wholly, and, no doubt, advisedly, silent. I agree with counsel that the material agreement in this case was the oral agreement of Mar. 30, the terms of which are set out in the receipt of that date. It was an agreement whereby, in exchange for a
- B premium of £400 to be paid by the tenant, the landlords agreed to give him a lease of fourteen years at the rent of £6 19s. per month.

- The construction for which the tenant contended has another incidental advantage. If the proviso extends beyond executory agreements to agreements in actual operation, or with a premium actually paid, the question arises: At what point in time does the option to avoid the agreement become exercisable?
- C The proviso is silent on this point. Suppose a tenant after paying the premium remained in occupation under a lease for ten years paying rent regularly, could the landlord then suddenly turn round, avoid the agreement, and oust him, or are we forced to say that the right is only exercisable within a reasonable time of some terminus a quo, and, if so, from what terminus a quo—the passing of the Act or the realisation by the party of his rights? If the right is limited to
- D executory agreements and only subsists so long as they remain executory, then the moment that by payment of the premium or otherwise they are in part performed the option ceases, and everybody knows where he is.

- There is another argument, which I consider merely to put it aside as indecisive, viz., that towards the end of the proviso the words occur, "without prejudice to the operation of this section." In the result those words appear to me to be
- E too obscure to assist either of the rival constructions put forward. Counsel for the landlords suggested that the phrase was inserted to show that if a premium has been paid under an agreement avoided by the proviso, the fact of its avoidance is not to preclude the tenant from recovering his premium. If that was its object, of course, the presence of the words in the proviso is consistent with the suggestion of counsel for the landlords that the proviso applied to cases
- F where the premium had, in fact, been paid as well as to cases where it had not. As my brother JENKINS has pointed out, however, the words might have been inserted for a different purpose. The phrase might mean that if, instead of avoiding the contract, a tenant pays the premium, he is not to be met, when he claims repayment of it, with the argument that avoidance was his only remedy and that he has forfeited his right to recover it back. Therefore, the phrase,
- G according to which of those two views is the true one, is consistent either with the construction of the proviso which limits its application to executory contracts, or with a construction which extends its application to cases where, indeed, the premium has been paid. It remains obstinately neutral and unilluminating. For these reasons, among others, but mainly for the first of them, I am of opinion that the proviso does not apply to the present case where the
- H premium has been paid and the agreement fully executed, and that the learned county court judge was mistaken on this point. Since no option to avoid the tenancy exists except in the event of the proviso applying, this is sufficient to entitle the tenant to succeed.

The second contention of counsel for the tenant, which arises only if the first is wrong, is that the option to avoid the agreement is comparable to, and governed by, the same incidents as the election to which a landlord is put on a "forfeiture"—a breach of covenant by the tenant which entitles the landlord to re-enter. Among the incidents of a forfeiture is that the right to re-enter is waived if an unequivocal act on the part of the landlord affirms the continued existence of the tenancy, an act done at a time when he knows of the breach of covenant, the commonest instance being unqualified acceptance of rent with such knowledge. Here it is said that the landlords discovered their right under the Act to avoid the tenancy at the latest by Aug. 26, since by then they threatened to exercise that right. Yet they accepted rent not only on Sept. 21 and Oct. 23, but on Nov. 23—that is three weeks after the plaintiff had been issued —and again in December after the counterclaim had been filed, and again in January. If they had an option, it is argued that they waived their right. On the view I take on the first point, that they had no option, it is unnecessary to decide this issue, but if it were necessary I should hesitate to decide it in favour of the tenant. The incidents of this statutory option given both to landlord and tenant by the proviso, and exercisable by either of them irrespective of any wrongful act done by the other, need not, it seems to me, be the same as the incidents which govern the rather narrow specialised rule relating to forfeitures, with their unilateral operation, and the necessity of a breach of covenant to set the process in motion. Those were the sort of considerations which impelled the learned county court judge to reject the tenant's argument under this head, and I think he was right. No doubt, the right to avoid could be waived, but I do not feel it would be waived by, say, the acceptance of a single month's rent after the optionor had discovered his rights as it would be in the case of a forfeiture. True, several months' rent were paid and accepted, but this was mostly at a time when it was quite uncertain whether the landlords would disgorge the premium, and the continued acceptance of rent where the circumstances were in such a fluid state could hardly, I should have thought, amount to an act unequivocally affirming the tenancy and electing not to avoid it. Therefore, I think the second argument of the appellant fails.

By his third contention counsel claims, on the footing that he was wrong on both of the preceding points, that, if his contractual tenancy was avoided by a valid exercise of the option in December, 1949, his statutory tenancy sprang up in its place. This surely cannot have been intended. What would be the use of enabling a party to avoid a tenancy and entitling him, prima facie, to say to his tenant: "You must leave," if the automatic result of exercising that option would be to confer on the tenant not only the right to stay on, but a status of comparative irremovability? It should be remembered that no part of s. 2 applies to any premises to which the Rent Restrictions Acts do not apply. Therefore, on the view I am criticising, in every case where the option to avoid could be and was validly exercised by the landlord he would fail to oust the tenant. The Rent Restrictions Acts take away with the left hand what the proviso to s. 2 (5) of the Act of 1949 gives with the right hand. I also think that the learned judge was right in saying that the effect of avoidance of the contractual lease is to destroy it ab initio as never having existed. If it never had existed there could be no contractual tenancy, and no statutory tenancy on its cessation, under the proviso. The contractual tenancy is not stated to be determinable on exercise of the option. It is stated to be voidable, and it is entirely destroyed.

For these reasons, I think that the first contention of counsel for the tenant succeeds, and that the appeal should be allowed.

JENKINS, L.J.: I agree and have very little to add. I confess that, as a matter of first impression, I was attracted by the effect given to the proviso by the learned county court judge, and supported before us by counsel for the landlords. In legislation retrospectively enabling one party to a bargain to recover back part of the consideration he gave, although at the time he gave it the bargain was perfectly lawful, one would expect, in fairness to the other party, a provision to the effect that he, being deprived of part of the consideration agreed on, ought at his option to be able to relieve himself of the burden which he undertook in return for the consideration in question. On those general grounds one might, prima facie, have expected the proviso to s. 2 (5) to have given a landlord a right of avoiding the bargain in every case in which a premium for the first time made unlawful by the Act of 1949 became recoverable by virtue of that Act. On reflection, however, one finds that the matter is not so simple as that. If the proviso was enacted in that general form, the result might well be that many an unfortunate tenant who had lawfully and properly paid a premium with a view to securing much needed accommodation would, by the passing of a retrospective enactment undoubtedly designed to protect him, find himself at risk of being evicted with the perhaps wholly inadequate consolation afforded by the right to recover his premium. I have made these prefatory observations because I think they do indicate that the questions of policy involved in the construction of this proviso are not so one-sided as they would at first sight appear to be. A further general consideration is that, as ASQUITH, L.J., has pointed out, the construction of the proviso adopted by the learned county court judge would give rise to extraordinary difficulties as regards the time within which the right of avoiding the agreement was to be exercisable, and as regards the effect of any creation of rights in third parties by way of sub-letting. In particular as regards time, the right would be one to which it would be difficult to put any exact term. It might be exercised, apparently, at a quite indefinite distance of time. There is, therefore, as it seems to me, to put it at the lowest, no general ground for preferring the construction placed on the proviso by the learned county court judge rather than the construction contended for by the tenant. Treating the matter, therefore, simply as a matter of the construction of sub-s. (5) and the proviso thereto, I find myself driven to the conclusion that the proviso does not extend to agreements under which the premium has been actually paid. ASQUITH, L.J., has pointed out the vital words:

“ . . . which, if paid in pursuance of the agreement, would be recoverable, wholly or in part, by virtue of the foregoing provisions of this sub-section.”

It seems to me that those words state as clearly as language can that the premium with which the proviso is dealing is a premium agreed to be paid and not in fact paid. I would add that I think this conclusion is reinforced when one compares the mode of expression used in the proviso with that used in the body of the sub-section. The body of the sub-section is expressed to deal with cases “ where, under an agreement made after Mar. 25, 1949, any premium has been paid,” and it makes any such premiums recoverable. It is dealing with premiums which have been paid. The proviso is framed in an entirely different way. It does not purport to deal with premiums which have been paid; it deals with the case where an agreement has been made since Mar. 25, 1949, and before the commencement of the Act, and the agreement includes provision for the payment of a premium. That seems to me to be a very significant change of language. In view of that change, I think it is really incredible that the proviso should in truth have been intended to refer to cases in which the premium has been paid. If that had been the intention, it could have been achieved with much greater economy of language. Read in conjunction with the body of the sub-section, the proviso makes it plain that cases, in which a premium has been paid having been dealt with in the body of the sub-section, the proviso deals with a special class of case, namely, the case in which an agreement has been made since Mar. 25, 1949, but before the commencement of the Act, and is still an agreement and nothing more. Where there is an agreement under which a premium payable, but not yet paid, would, if paid, be recoverable by virtue of the Act of 1949, the proviso confers the option on either party to avoid the agreement.

For these reasons, in addition to those given by ASQUITH, L.J., I agree that the appeal should be allowed on the first issue.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSHED, M.R.: I am of the same opinion and think that this appeal should be allowed.

The first point (upon which I think counsel for the tenant is entitled to succeed) is one of pure construction of the proviso to s. 2 (5) of the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949. Neither counsel for the tenant nor counsel for the landlords, to whom we are indebted for their careful argument, have found anything in the books which would help us by reference to any similar words in any similar statute. The grounds which have impelled me to a conclusion different from that of the learned county court judge have been fully stated by my brethren. I entirely agree with their reasoning and add only that the learned county court judge was affected, and not unnaturally, by what he felt to be a capricious result if the right of the landlord was to depend upon the accident whether a premium had, or had not, been paid. But it is to be remembered that in this branch of the law a substantial distinction has always been recognised between agreements which are purely executory and agreements which have been completed by the grant of a lease or a conveyance. Therefore, if there be any validity in the view that the distinction may work capriciously, it is, at any rate, a distinction which seems to a lawyer to be not unnatural. In my judgment, the appeal should be allowed with the result, as I follow it, that the landlord's counterclaim will stand dismissed.

Appeal allowed with costs; counterclaim dismissed. C

Solicitors: Matthew Trackman & Co. (for the tenant); Arnold Lee & Co. (for the landlords).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

BISHOP v. CUNARD WHITE STAR, LTD. APPLEBY v. CUNARD WHITE STAR, LTD. THE QUEEN MARY.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Hodson, J.), March 7, 8, 17, 1950.] E

Negligence—Damages—Measure—Expectation of life—Pain and suffering—Effect of devaluation of pound—Deductions from basic sum—Pension—Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846 (c. 93) to 1908 (c. 7)—Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934 (c. 41), s. 1 (1).

Claims for damages under the Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846 to 1908, and the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934, arising out of a collision during the war between a merchant ship and a warship in 1942 were referred to the admiralty registrar under R.S.C., Ord. 56. The first claim was made by the widow of B., a chief petty officer, aged thirty-nine, on behalf of her child and herself and as administratrix of her husband's estate; and the second was by A., father of a nineteen years old seaman, on his own behalf and as administrator of his son's estate. Objection was entered to the registrar's report on various points concerning the assessment of damages, and it was also contended for the plaintiffs that the discretion of the registrar could not be interfered with by the judge.

HELD: (i) the discretion was the discretion of the judge and not of the registrar, although the judge might properly rely on the skill and experience of the registrar. H

Evans v. Bartlam ([1937] 2 All E.R. 646), followed.

(ii) claims based on the expectation of life must be dealt with in the light of the judgment in Benham v. Gambling ([1941] 1 All E.R. 7), and where men in the prime of life were concerned the measure of damages did not vary with the number of years of the allotted span of life which might be said to be in front of each deceased person.

(iii) the devaluation of the pound could not be taken into account as the damages crystallized at the date of the collision.

(iv) no sum could be awarded for pain and suffering in the absence of clear evidence of reasonably prolonged suffering.

Rose v. Ford ([1937] 3 All E.R. 359), applied.

A (v) in assessing damages under the Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846 to 1908, the principle to be followed was that enunciated by LORD WRIGHT in Davies v. Powell Duffryn Associated Collieries, Ltd. (No. 2) ([1942] 1 All E.R. 657), and the number of years purchase on which the calculation was based must not be materially reduced by consideration of the hazards of a seaman's life in war, which were not conspicuously greater than the risks run by other persons on land.

B (vi) once the basic sum had been ascertained, the necessary deductions must be made from it, and the resulting amount must be apportioned among the family, taking the family as a unit, when claims were made in respect of more than one dependant.

Johnson v. Hill ([1945] 2 All E.R. 272), followed.

C (vii) deductions must be made from the starting sum in respect of any sum awarded under the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934, for loss of the expectation of life; for pain and suffering if there were evidence to show this; for loss of personal effects unless these consisted of articles of which a widow claimant had the use when her husband was at home and continued to enjoy after the death as before; and the rights of women and children to pensions must be taken into account. Sums paid or payable under insurance policies were not deductible by virtue of the Fatal Accidents (Damages) Act, 1908, s. 1. Normally deduction must be made in full if the family interest from stocks and shares and comparable income-producing investments had been accelerated by the death. Where the whole family income was derived from the husband's investments and the widow took the whole estate she had no claim under the Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846 to 1908. Deductions could not be calculated exactly because the starting sum varied in each case.

E (viii) although the damages had to be assessed at the time of the accident in 1942, where there had been delay, as here, and in the meantime pensions which were deductible had been paid, any increases in pension attributable to the higher cost of living since 1942 were not properly deductible pound for pound. In cases where the number of years purchase taken into account in arriving at the starting sum was greater than the number of years in which pension had been paid the amounts paid did not represent the limit of deduction as in such cases there was a reasonable expectation of the continuance of the pension for the unexpired period of the number of years taken.

G (ix) in arriving at the starting sum in the case of B. the registrar rightly took into account the civilian prospects of the deceased who, as a highly skilled craftsman, would, in the normal course, have had many years of remunerative work on discharge from the naval service.

H (x) in the case of A., the dependency was very limited and might never arise in view of the parents' present means, and the starting sum in his case would be reduced from £1,400 to £750.

[AS TO CIVIL RESPONSIBILITY UNDER THE FATAL ACCIDENTS ACTS, 1846 TO 1908, see HALSBURY, Vol. 23, pp. 691-700, paras. 977-988.]

Cases referred to:

(1) Cooper v. Cooper, [1936] 2 All E.R. 542 ; Digest Supp.

(2) Evans v. Bartlam, [1937] 2 All E.R. 646; [1937] A.C. 473; 106 L.J.K.B. 568; 157 L.T. 311; Digest Supp.

- (3) Benham v. Gambling, [1941] 1 All E.R. 7; [1941] A.C. 157; 110 L.J.K.B. 49; 164 L.T. 290; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (4) Rose v. Ford, [1937] 3 All E.R. 827; [1937] A.C. 826; 106 L.J.K.B. 576; 157 L.T. 174; revsg., [1936] 1 K.B. 90; 105 L.J.K.B. 21; 154 L.T. 77; Digest Supp.
- (5) Davies v. Powell Duffryn Associated Collieries, Ltd. (No. 2), [1942] 1 All E.R. 657; [1942] A.C. 601; 111 L.J.K.B. 418; 167 L.T. 74; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (6) Johnson v. Hill, [1945] 2 All E.R. 272; 173 L.T. 38; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (7) Baker v. Dalglish Steam Shipping Co., Ltd., [1922] 1 K.B. 361; 91 L.J.K.B. 392; 36 Digest 140, 943.

MOTION of objection to the report of the Admiralty registrar.

Following on the collision at sea between the S.S. Queen Mary and H.M.S. Curacoa in 1942 in which many of the crew of the warship were drowned a large number of claims made by the dependants under the Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846 to 1908, and the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934, were referred to the Admiralty registrar under R.S.C., Ord. 56. Objection was taken to his report on various grounds in these two cases, which raised points applicable to many others, in order to obtain the ruling of the judge as a guide in further claims. The facts of the two cases considered are set out in the judgment of HODSON, J.

Glyn-Jones, K.C., and Vere Hunt for the plaintiffs.

Nelson, K.C., and Olson for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

Mar. 17. HODSON, J., read the following judgment. These two motions in objection to the registrar's report are brought before the court as raising questions of importance in a large number of claims for damages under the Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846 to 1908, and the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934. These claims arise from a collision between the defendants' vessel, the S.S. Queen Mary, and H.M.S. Curacoa on Oct. 2, 1942, in which unfortunately a large number of those on board the warship were drowned. Some of the points taken do not affect the result in the particular cases under consideration, but the court has been asked by the parties to give rulings, where possible, for the assistance of the registrar in the consideration of other claims where such points may affect the ultimate result. The first point taken on behalf of the plaintiffs, that the discretion is that of the registrar and not that of the judge, is not, I think, open to argument, in view of the approval of the decision of the Court of Appeal in Cooper v. Cooper (1) by LORD ATKIN in the House of Lords in Evans v. Bartlam (2) ([1937] 2 All E.R. 649). Although the discretion is the judge's discretion, he will, however, according to the established practice, not feel compelled to form an independent view on questions of quantum, but will rather rely upon the skill and experience of the registrar who has made his report.

I will deal first with the claim under the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934. The claims based on loss of expectation of life must be dealt with in the light of the judgment of the House of Lords contained in the opinion of VISCOUNT SIMON, L.C., in Benham v. Gambling (3), which may be said to have put a brake on a tendency to award high damages under this head by reducing the damages actually awarded from £1,200 to £200. In considering the age of the victim of the accident VISCOUNT SIMON, L.C., said ([1941] 1 All E.R. 12):

"... the thing to be valued is not the prospect of length of days, but the prospect of a predominantly happy life. The age of the individual may, in some cases, be a relevant factor—for example, in extreme old age the brevity of what life may be left may be relevant—but, as it seems to me, arithmetical calculations are to be avoided, if only for the reason that it is of no assistance to know how many years may have been lost unless one knows how to put a value on the years. It would be fallacious to assume, for this purpose, that all human life is continuously an enjoyable thing, so that the shortening of it calls for compensation, to be paid to the deceased's estate, on a quantitative basis. The ups and downs of life, its pains and sorrows as well as its joys and pleasures—all that makes up 'life's fitful fever'—have to be allowed for in the estimate. In assessing damages for shortening of life, therefore, such damages should not be calculated solely, or even mainly, on the basis of the length of life which is lost."

In dealing with the particular case, he said (ibid., 13):

"The main reason, I think, why the appropriate figure of damages should be reduced in the case of a very young child is that there is necessarily so much uncertainty about the child's future that no confident estimate of prospective happiness can be made. When an individual has reached an age to have settled prospects, having passed the risks and uncertainties of childhood, and having in some degree attained to an established character and to firmer hopes, his or her future becomes more definite, and the extent to which good fortune may probably attend him at any rate becomes less incalculable."

I think that the right conclusion to draw from this passage is that where men in the prime of life are concerned (as in all the claims arising from this accident) the measure of damages does not vary with the number of years of the allotted span which may be said to lie in front of the deceased persons. I was told that the registrar had expressed the contrary view and that this was reflected in the two cases before me, because C.P.O. Bishop was thirty-nine years of age when he died and Denis Appleby was nineteen and a half, and in the former case he awarded £350 and in the latter case £500. If, therefore, the registrar varied the amount simply because of the difference in age of the two men, I think that he was in error. It does not, of course, follow that the figure in each case must necessarily be the same, and I would not be prepared to say that either of these figures was wrong in itself, or, in particular, that either figure is too high in the light of the judgment of the House of Lords in Benham v. Gambling (3). I do not take into consideration the fall in the value of the pound which has occurred since the judgment was given. This, no doubt, would be material if the damages had to be assessed according to the now existing value of the pound, but, since the accident occurred in the year following the House of Lords judgment and thereunder must be approached from the point of view of the time of the accident, when the damage crystalized, this consideration does not materially affect the awards in these cases. In these two cases it makes no difference to the ultimate result whether I alter the figures awarded under this head or not, and I do not propose to make any variation.

I agree with the view taken by the registrar that there is no evidence in these cases to support a claim for damages under the head of pain and suffering. It would be difficult, if not impossible, to ascertain the circumstances in which these men met their death and the length of time that each survived the accident. In the absence of clear evidence of reasonably prolonged suffering there should be no award under this head. I think that this conclusion is consistent with the view taken by the Court of Appeal in Rose v. Ford (4), confirmed on this point by the House of Lords. In that case the plaintiff survived the accident for four days, during the greater part of which she was in a state of coma, and damages under this head were fixed at the sum of £20.

The next claim under the heading of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934, is that for loss of personal property. The registrar has in each case slightly written down the amount claimed. This, I think, he was entitled to do, in the light of his knowledge and experience, even though there was no cross-examination of either plaintiff on their affidavits, although it is right to say, as counsel for the plaintiffs contended, that there should not be anything in the nature of a flat deduction in all cases.

In assessing damages under the Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846 to 1908, it is convenient to start with a sum calculated in accordance with the principles enunciated by LORD WRIGHT in Davies v. Powell Duffryn Associated Collieries, Ltd. (5), where he said ([1942] 1 All E.R. 665):

"It is a hard matter of pounds, shillings and pence, subject to the element of reasonable future probabilities. The starting point is the amount of wages which the deceased was earning, the ascertainment of which to some extent may depend on the regularity of his employment. Then there is an estimate of how much was required or expended for his own personal and living expenses. The balance will give a datum or basic figure which will generally be turned into a lump sum by taking a certain number of years' purchase. That sum, however, has to be taxed down by having due regard to uncertainties, for instance, that the widow might have again married and thus ceased to be dependent, and other like matters of speculation and doubt."

The number of years purchase is left fluid, but I do not think that that number is to be materially reduced in these cases by consideration of the hazardous nature of the occupation of the deceased men. During the last great war the hazards of life at sea were not conspicuously greater than risks run by many other persons on shore. When the necessary deductions from the starting sum have been made, the resulting total should be apportioned amongst the family, taking the family as the unit, when claims are made in respect of more than one dependant. This practice is in accordance with the decision of the Court of Appeal in Johnson v. Hill (6), and should, as a matter of convenient practice, be followed in these cases.

Deductions have to be made in respect of sums awarded under the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934, for loss of expectation of life, for pain and suffering, and also for loss of personal effects, unless (for example) these consist of articles of which a widow claimant would have had the use when her husband was at home. In other words, personal effects are not automatically to be deducted pound for pound any more than the value of the deceased's estate should be so deducted. The estate may consist in the main of a house and furniture, of which the widow claimant continues to enjoy the use after the death as before, and no deduction will be made in this respect. Sums paid or payable under policies of insurance are excluded from account by the Fatal Accidents (Damages) Act, 1908. Where stocks and shares and comparable income-producing investments are concerned and the probable family interest is thereby accelerated, the deduction will normally be made in full. To take the extreme case where the whole family income is derived from the husband's investments, the widow who takes his whole estate on his death will have no claim under the Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846 to 1908. The starting sum will in each case be an inexact sum and exactly calculated deductions cannot normally be made. Damages for loss of expectation of life will be deducted pound for pound, but in their essence are themselves inexact sums. The rights of widows and children to pensions must be taken into account. In Baker v. Dalgleish Steam Shipping Co., Ltd. (7) the principle is stated shortly by SCRUTTON, L.J. ([1922] 1 K.B. 372):

"Just as in assessing the loss by the death the probability of voluntary contribution destroyed by the death of the contributor may be included to swell the claim, so the probability of voluntary contribution bestowed in consequence of the death may be used to reduce the claim by showing what loss the claimant has in fact sustained by the death."

When the assessment of damage, as here, has been delayed, it is impossible to shut one's eyes to what has actually happened by way of payment of pensions and other sums of a like nature, since, although the damage is to be assessed as at the time of the accident, what was then uncertainty has been turned into certainty, in so far as money has been received by claimants. The total payment received is again, however, not a matter of exact deduction, since pension rates have been raised since the time of the accident to meet the increased cost of living. Accordingly, the starting total being based on 1942 figures, increases attributable to the higher cost of living since that date are not properly deductible pound for pound. On the other hand, the amounts actually paid do not represent the limit of deduction in cases where the number of years purchase taken into account in arriving at the starting sum is greater than the number of years in respect of which pension has been paid. There is in these cases a reasonable expectation of the continuance of the pension for the unexpired period of the number of years taken. Pensions are subject to variation in the light of awards given, but the present practice is set out in a letter from the Treasury Solicitor, which was before the registrar. This, in the case of a widow, is to disregard the first ten per cent. of the award, or £50, whichever is the greater, and to convert the balance of the award into a notional annuity which is deducted from the pension, but so that in certain cases the minimum pension is fixed at 30s. a week and in the others at 20s. a week.

Applying these considerations to the two cases under review, I will first deal with the case of C.P.O. Bishop. I quote from the registrar's report.

"At the time of his death C.P.O. Bishop was thirty-nine years of age. He had joined the Navy on Jan. 24, 1920, intending to make it his career, and, had he survived, he would have become entitled to a pension in 1943. As a result of the death of her husband, the widow was compelled to work to supplement her pension, and her son left school earlier than he would otherwise have done, in the praiseworthy desire to ease the burden cast on his mother. The mother got work as a telephonist at £4 a week, and the son, at the age of fifteen and a half entered the bakery trade as a learner at £2 9s. 0d. a week, of which he contributed £1 a week until his marriage in May, 1949. The contribution of the deceased to his wife and son was about £6 a week, or, roughly, £300 a year. On retirement at the end of the war, the deceased, who was a highly skilled craftsman with a very creditable record in the Navy (apart from his technical efficiency he was mentioned in despatches), would certainly have got employment ashore with a high rate of pay in addition to his pension. He would have been only forty-two at the end of 1945, and, with his qualifications, would, in the normal course, have had many years of remunerative work before him. His income would have been such that his wife might look forward to receiving much more than £6 a week."

The registrar considered that an award might be based on fifteen years at £5 a week, that is to say, £1 a week less than the contribution he had made to the family. Counsel for the defendants conceded that, if I accepted the evidence of the widow that contribution had been made at the rate of £6 a week, it would be reasonable to take a number of years purchase (say twelve) of this figure. This number would lessen pro tanto the amount of anticipated pension to be taken into consideration, but would not materially affect the starting sum. Counsel for the plaintiff argued that the starting sum was itself too low. He contended that the approach based on the answer to the question: "What contribution did the deceased make?" is wrong, and submitted that a sum of money should be estimated which would enable the widow to maintain herself in that state of life to which she was used or which she might expect. He argued in this connection that the starting sum did not differentiate sufficiently the present case from the common one of a wage earner without any reasonable prospect of improving his position. It appears, however, from the language of the report which I have read that the registrar took into account the civilian prospects of the deceased, and I think that this consideration is properly reflected in the starting sum of £3,750 reached by him. The prospect of higher wages on shore has to be discounted to some extent by the greater expense which has to be faced there as compared with the lesser expense incurred in a seafaring life. Moreover, high wages are in themselves discounted to a great extent by the incidence of income tax. I see no reason to disagree with the starting sum of £3,750. From this amount deductions have to be made in respect of pension. Although the figure of £713 representing pension actually paid, including, as it does, cost of living increases, is too large to be deducted in full, yet (taking twelve years purchase) payments of reasonably anticipated pension at 30s. a week, to be made in the four years still remaining, the £76 pension paid in respect of the son, and the school fees paid by the Ministry of Pensions, which I was informed amounted to £110 in all, should be taken into consideration. I, therefore, deduct £1,000 in this respect in place of the two sums of £713 and £76 deducted by the registrar. I agree with the deduction proposed of £85, the amount awarded as special damages, and of £350, the amount awarded in respect of loss of expectation of life under the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934. There remains the question of the deduction, if any, to be made in respect of the estate of the deceased, which was taken as £100. This matter has been clarified by a letter dated Feb. 21, 1950, written after the date of the report and attached to the record, which shows that the deceased's estate was of the value of £761. Since the estate consisted almost entirely of a freehold house, where he lived with his wife, and a benefit society death payment, excluded by the Fatal Accidents (Damages) Act, 1908, no deduction should be made under this head. I, therefore, substitute £2,315 for the £2,502 recommended by the learned registrar, to be apportioned between the widow and the infant son as follows: To the widow, £2,155: to the son, £160.

In the case of Denis Appleby, the defendants do not deny that the plaintiff is entitled to some damages under the Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846 to 1908, but contend that the dependency is very limited in his case and may never arise, having regard to the circumstances of the family, including the existence of another son, who is a potential contributor, and the fact that the two parents were in receipt of a pension adequate to their needs. On the other hand, it is contended that the question is one of mere quantum, that the deceased had made a high contribution to his parents, and that the amount awarded was fairly based on the prospects of the particular youth. The facts are summarised in the report of the registrar as follows:

"Denis Appleby, who was born on May 16, 1923, was serving as an ordinary seaman at 3s. 6d. per day on board H.M.S. Curacoa and lost his life as a result of the aforesaid collision on Oct. 2, 1942, and was thus at his death nineteen and a half years old. He had been educated at the Henry Mellish County Secondary School, Nottingham, and, in July, 1939, had passed his school certificate examination. Thereafter he entered into the employ of the Midland Bank as a clerk, and at the time of his call-up to the Navy was receiving £97 10s. 0d. per annum. He lived at home with his parents and out of his salary contributed £72 per annum to the household. Before being called up he had passed part of the Institute of Bankers examination. Had he survived he would now be receiving a salary of about £400 per annum. The plaintiff, the father of the deceased, had been in the employ of the Post Office at a gross salary of £525 a year until he retired on Dec. 21, 1946, on a pension of £270 per annum. This pension is his sole means of support; he has no naval pension in respect of the death of his son. The plaintiff is now 62 years old and his wife 67. At the time of the death of their son the plaintiff and his wife were not dependent upon him, but they relied upon his assurance to help them financially in their old age."

This is, as the registrar found, a problem of difficulty, but I have come to the conclusion on consideration of these facts and estimates that the amount of estimated contribution is so much too high that the court should vary the figure recommended in the report. The registrar has not, I think, sufficiently taken into account the fact that, if the deceased man were living at home, he would be making part of his contribution in respect of his own keep. If, on the other hand, he were living away from home, even unmarried, his contribution would not be expected to be nearly as high as £150 a year out of his total anticipated income. I have come to the conclusion, particularly having regard to the limited nature of the dependency, that the starting sum of £1,400 in this case should be reduced to £750. From this sum of £750 must be deducted the sums of £500, £147 and £42 referred to in the report, making a total award under the Fatal Accidents Acts of £61. With the variations indicated, I confirm the reports in each case. The costs of the motions will be the plaintiffs' in each case.

Reports confirmed according to the judgment, with interest from the date of the registrar's award. Plaintiffs to have costs of the motions.

Solicitors: Botterell & Roche (for the plaintiffs); Hill, Dickinson & Co. (for the defendants).

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

BLUSTON & BRAMLEY, LTD. v. LEIGH (EULER AND ANOTHER, THIRD PARTIES).

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Morris, J.), May 4, 1950.]

Company—Winding-up—Rights of execution creditor—Goods seized by sheriff, but execution not completed, before commencement of winding-up—Notice of meeting of creditors served on sheriff within fourteen days of sale of goods—Notice of meeting at which resolution for voluntary winding-up was to be proposed—Resolution passed for compulsory winding-up—Subsequent order for compulsory winding-up—Duties of sheriff—Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38), s. 325 (1), s. 326 (2).

The plaintiffs were judgment creditors of the debtor company for the sum of £215 12s., and on July 16, 1948, a sheriff executed a warrant under a writ of fieri facias, issued by the plaintiffs against the company. On July 28 a petition to wind-up the company was presented by another creditor of the company, but the sheriff received no notice of the petition until Sept. 1. On Aug. 7 he sold some of the goods which he had seized, realising about £500. On Aug. 19 he received a letter stating: "In reference to s. 326 (2) of the Companies Act, 1948, we enclose notice of meeting of creditors of the [debtor] company under s. 293 of the said Act." The notice, which was expressed to be sent pursuant to s. 293, stated that the meeting (which was to take place on Sept. 17) was to be held for the purposes mentioned in s. 294 and s. 295 of the Act. On Sept. 17 an extraordinary general meeting of the company was held and was adjourned until after the meeting of the creditors so as to ascertain their wishes. When the extraordinary general meeting of the company was resumed, a resolution was passed "that the company be . . . wound-up in compulsory liquidation, and that the directors shall take every action possible to expedite the hearing of the petition in compulsory liquidation issued against the company." On Oct. 18 an order for the winding-up of the company was made on the petition of July 28, and in January, 1949, the sheriff paid to the liquidator sums recovered from the company as a result of several executions. In an action by the plaintiffs against the sheriff to recover part of the proceeds of the executions as representing the amount of their judgment debt and costs, the sheriff contended that, under s. 326 (2) of the Companies Act, 1948, it was his duty to hand over to the liquidator the money which he had received, and he brought in the liquidator and the company as third parties. The plaintiffs contended that the requirements of s. 326 (2) had not been satisfied, but the liquidator contended that, if s. 326 (2) did not apply, the sheriff was entitled to hand the money over to him under s. 325 (1).

HELD: (i) in view of the references to s. 293, the notice served on the sheriff on Aug. 19, together with the covering letter, contained a sufficient notice of the fact that a meeting had been called at which a resolution for the voluntary winding-up of the company was to be proposed, within s. 326 (2) of the Act of 1948, but the sub-section required (a) that the resolution which was subsequently passed should be a resolution for voluntary winding-up and not a resolution for compulsory winding-up, and (b) that, where there had been a notice of a petition, it should be followed by an order for winding-up, and, where there had been a notice of a meeting, it should be followed by a resolution for voluntary winding-up. Therefore, as the meeting which had been called to pass a resolution for voluntary winding-up had passed a resolution for compulsory winding-up, the requirements of the sub-section had not been complied with and the sheriff was not authorised to pay the money to the liquidator under s. 326 (2).

(ii) as the execution had not been completed at the commencement of the winding-up on July 28 (when the petition was presented) under s. 325 (1), the plaintiffs were not entitled to retain the benefit of the execution as against the liquidator; as the proceeds of the execution were still in the hands of the sheriff on Oct. 18, when the winding-up order was made, the effect of s. 325 (1) was to divest the plaintiffs of their right to claim from the sheriff the benefit of the execution and to superimpose statutory provisions on the duties laid on the sheriff by the writ which was directed to him; and, accordingly, under s. 325 (1) he was entitled to hand over the money to the liquidator.

[AS TO EFFECT OF WINDING-UP ON RIGHTS OF EXECUTION CREDITORS, see HALSBURY, Vol. 5 (1949 Edn.), pp. 778-780, paras. 1278-1280; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 10, pp. 964-967, Nos. 6616-6640.

FOR THE COMPANIES ACT, 1948, s. 325 and s. 326, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 3, pp. 707, 708.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Bower v. Hett, [1895] 2 Q.B. 337; 64 L.J.Q.B. 772; 73 L.T. 176; 5 Digest 816, 6937.
- (2) Morland v. Pellatt, (1829), 8 B. & C. 722; 3 Man. & Ry. K.B. 411; 7 L.J.O.S.K.B. 54; 108 E.R. 1211; 21 Digest 508, 833.
- (3) Re Greer, [1895] 2 Ch. 217; 64 L.J.Ch. 620; 59 J.P. 441; sub nom., Re Grier, 72 L.T. 865; 21 Digest 619, 2069.
- (4) Latter v. Jukes and Page, [1927] 1 K.B. 17; 96 L.J.K.B. 137; 136 L.T. 177; Digest Supp.

ACTION for money had and received.

The plaintiffs, who were judgment and execution creditors of a limited company, claimed payment of sums realised on the levy of the execution by the defendant, the sheriff. The sheriff said that he had paid over the proceeds of the execution to the liquidator of the debtor company in accordance with the requirements of the Companies Act, 1948, s. 326 (2), and he brought in the liquidator and the company as third parties. For the third parties it was contended that, even if s. 326 (2) of the Act did not apply, under s. 325 (1) the plaintiffs were not entitled to claim the benefit of the execution, as it had not been completed before the commencement of the winding-up. The plaintiffs contended (i) that s. 326 (2) did not apply, as the requirements of the subsection had not been satisfied, and (ii) that s. 325 did not affect the duties of the sheriff, but dealt merely with the position of execution creditors as against the liquidator of the company. The facts appear in the judgment.

Aronson, K.C., and Panto for the plaintiffs.

Boileau for the sheriff.

Pennyquick, K.C., and J. H. A. Sparrow for the third parties.

MORRIS, J.: The plaintiff company, Bluston and Bramley, Ltd., claim the sum of £215 12s. from the defendant as money had and received. The defendant was at all material times the sheriff of the county of Leicester. The plaintiffs claim that the sheriff received money which he was obliged to pay over to them in their capacity as judgment creditors and execution creditors.

The parties have agreed on a statement of facts, related to the appropriate dates. On July 9, 1948, the plaintiffs obtained judgment against Fred. J. Bailey (Furniture), Ltd., for £215 12s., including costs. Three days later the plaintiffs issued a writ of fiat facias, and on July 16 the sheriff entered into possession and executed the warrant, selling at a later date certain goods which he received. On July 28 J. Goldberg (Furniture), Ltd., presented a petition to wind-up the debtor company on the ground that it was insolvent and unable to pay its debts. On Aug. 7 the sheriff sold by auction certain effects of the debtor company, realising just under £500. On Aug. 19 a notice was served on the sheriff of a meeting of creditors of the debtor company under the Companies Act, 1948, s. 293. The meeting was convened for Sept. 17, 1948. On Sept. 1 a notice was served on the sheriff that a petition to wind-up the company had been filed on July 28. On Sept. 17 there was an extraordinary general meeting of the members of the debtor company which, after a general report, was adjourned until half an hour after the conclusion of the meeting of creditors to be held at eleven o'clock, for the wishes of the creditors to be ascertained so that effect might be given to them. The meeting of creditors was informed of the position in regard to the petition for compulsory liquidation, and a resolution was passed. The extraordinary general meeting of the company was resumed an hour later, at twelve o'clock, and a special resolution was passed in these terms:

"That the company cannot, by reason of its liabilities, continue its business, and that it is advisable to wind-up and that the company be therefore wound-up in compulsory liquidation, and that the directors shall take every action possible to expedite the hearing of the petition in compulsory liquidation issued against the company and the appointment of a provisional liquidator therein."

On Oct. 18, an order was made in the Chancery Division of the High Court to wind-up the company on the petition presented by J. Goldberg (Furniture), Ltd., on July 28.

On Jan. 4, 1949, the sheriff paid to the liquidator of the company a sum of over £1,233, which represented the sums recovered by the sheriff as a result of several executions. The writ in this action was issued on Feb. 16, 1949, and was served on Mar. 16, 1949. The writ is indorsed as a claim for money had and received, and in the statement of claim it is pleaded that the sheriff, by his officer, seized and sold goods of the debtor company and realised the sum of £215 12s., and that he had not brought the money into court, as required by the writ of fieri facias, nor had he paid the money or any part thereof to the plaintiffs. The sheriff says that he acted properly when he handed over the money which he had received to the liquidator of the company. He has issued a third party notice against the liquidator and the company in liquidation, and he claims that, if he is held liable in the action to the plaintiffs, he is entitled to relief as against the liquidator and the company, and he claims certain declarations. The case has proceeded so far only in regard to the position as between the plaintiffs and the sheriff, but, pursuant to the order which was made in the third party proceedings, I invited counsel for the third parties to address me with regard to that part of the litigation.

Much of the argument has been directed to a consideration of the words of the Companies Act, 1948, s. 326 (2), which reads:

"Subject to the provisions of sub-s. (3) of this section, where under an execution in respect of a judgment for a sum exceeding £20 the goods of a company are sold or money is paid in order to avoid sale, the sheriff shall deduct the costs of the execution from the proceeds of the sale or the money paid and retain the balance for fourteen days, and if within that time notice is served on him of a petition for the winding-up of the company having been presented or of a meeting having been called at which there is to be proposed a resolution for the voluntary winding-up of the company and an order is made or a resolution is passed, as the case may be, for the winding-up of the company, the sheriff shall pay the balance to the liquidator, who shall be entitled to retain it as against the execution creditor."

Counsel for the plaintiffs submits that that sub-section has not been complied with, and, therefore, the sheriff was not justified or authorised in paying the balance to the liquidator. Counsel contends (i) that, within the fourteen days, there was no notice of a petition for the winding-up of the company; (ii) that there was no notice "of a meeting having been called at which there is to be proposed a resolution for the voluntary winding-up of the company," within the sub-section, and (iii) that, if there was a notice of a meeting, it was not followed by a resolution for winding-up, and that the words in the sub-section, "and an order is made or a resolution is passed, as the case may be," mean that, if a notice of a meeting is served, then there must also follow a resolution at such a meeting. He contends that the sub-section is not satisfied if there is a notice of a meeting, and that notice is followed, not by a resolution at a meeting, but by an order for compulsory winding-up. Therefore, he submits, the sheriff does not bring himself within the wording of s. 326 (2), and, accordingly, he does not justify his action in handing over to the liquidator.

In Bower v. Hett (1), LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, C.J., said ([1895] 2 Q.B. 56):

"In some cases the judges have said that the moment the sheriff is paid the amount of the judgment debt he becomes a debtor to the execution creditor. For instance, in Morland v. Pellatt (2), LITLEDAL, J., said in the course of the argument, 'When the sheriff received the money, he became liable to an action, for money had and received, by the plaintiff in that suit.' That is a statement to the effect that when once the money was paid, a right of action was vested in the judgment creditor."

It was not submitted, either by counsel for the sheriff or by counsel for the third parties, that that statement was other than an appropriate statement of the position. If, therefore, the sheriff was not right in handing over to the liquidator, the form of action here adopted, viz., a claim for money had and received, appears to be justified.

Counsel for the sheriff has taken three points. He submits (i) that, within fourteen days of the date when the goods were taken in execution, notice was served on him "of a meeting having been called at which there is to be proposed a resolution for the voluntary winding-up of the company," within s. 326 (2); (ii) that a resolution was passed; and (iii) that, whether or not a resolution was passed, there was an order for compulsory winding-up, and the words, "as the case may be," mean no more than that, if either an order is made or a resolution is passed, then the section is to apply—in other words, that the phrase, "as the case may be," merely means "in the events that happened."

These submissions of counsel for the sheriff were adopted by counsel for the third parties, who also made a further submission, based on s. 325 (1) of the Act, which reads:

"Where a creditor has issued execution against the goods or lands of a company or has attached any debt due to the company, and the company is subsequently wound-up, he shall not be entitled to retain the benefit of the execution or attachment against the liquidator in the winding-up of the company unless he has completed the execution or attachment before the commencement of the winding-up: Provided that . . . (c) the rights conferred by this sub-section on the liquidator may be set aside by the court in favour of the creditor to such extent and subject to such terms as the court may think fit."

There having been an order for the compulsory winding-up of the company on Oct. 18, the commencement of the winding-up was on July 28, the date on which the petition was presented. The plaintiffs had not completed execution before July 28, and, therefore (counsel for the third parties submits), under s. 325 the plaintiffs are not entitled to retain the benefit of the execution as against the liquidator. Counsel contends that, if the proceeds of execution were still in the hands of the sheriff on Oct. 18, the sheriff was obliged by operation of law to account to the liquidator, as the effect of s. 325 (1) is that the right which previously vested in the plaintiffs, as execution creditors, became divested, and the sheriff's duty then was to account to the liquidator, and not to the execution creditors. Counsel for the third parties referred to BUCKLEY ON THE COMPANIES ACTS, 12th ed., p. 665, where a note to s. 326 (2) is in these words:

"The execution creditor's right to the fruits of the execution is not contingent. It is vested, but liable to be divested by the liquidation."

The authority cited by the learned editor in support of that note is Re Greer (3), in which CHITTY, J., said ([1895] 2 Ch. 221):

"The result of the authorities, apart from that enactment [the Bankruptcy Act, 1890] is that the sheriff holds the money to the use of the judgment creditor, and is liable to be sued in an action for money had and received. For that proposition it is sufficient to cite the case of Morland v. Pellatt (2). By the enactment referred to the sheriff is directed to retain the money for fourteen days; and in the event of bankruptcy supervening the execution creditor loses his right to the money. The effect is to place a temporary embargo or stop on the money. If more technical language is requisite, I say the execution creditor's right to the money is vested, but liable to be divested. His right to the money is not a contingent right. In this case no bankruptcy supervened. The previous bankruptcy of the execution creditor Fanshawe had been annulled."

Counsel for the third parties concedes, that, if s. 326 (2) does not apply to the facts of the case, between Aug. 21 (i.e., after fourteen days from Aug. 7, when the sheriff sold some of the effects taken in execution from the debtor company) and Oct. 18 (when the compulsory winding-up order was made), the sheriff would have been obliged to account to the plaintiffs for the sum of £215 12s., but he submits that, after Oct. 18, the right which had been vested in the plaintiffs was divested, and, thereafter, it was the duty of the sheriff to pay the money to the liquidator. Counsel for the plaintiffs, on the other hand, contends that s. 325 does not deal with the duties of the sheriff, but that the following section, s. 326, does so, and s. 325 (1) merely says that a creditor shall not be entitled to retain the benefit of the execution against the liquidator. Therefore, he submits, the sheriff is liable in this action to account to the plaintiffs. Section 325 (1), he says, would apply only after the sheriff had accounted to the plaintiffs, and, under proviso (c) to the sub-section, the plaintiffs could apply to the court to set aside the rights conferred on the liquidator.

In my judgment, the effect of s. 325 (1) is to negative the title of the plaintiffs to this money and to superimpose statutory provisions on the duties laid on the sheriff by the writ which was directed to him. Assuming for this part of the case that s. 326 (2) does not apply, the title of the plaintiffs was divested on Oct. 18 by operation of law, and, as a result, any rights which were vested in them until Oct. 18 to claim from the sheriff the benefit of the execution were also divested by the operation of s. 325 (1). It follows, therefore, that the sheriff was entitled to hand over the money to the liquidator.

As I have formed that view, it would be sufficient if I did not proceed to deal with the arguments presented by counsel for the sheriff, but I think it right that I should state my views on the three points which he submitted, as they have been fully dealt with. The first point is whether, within the fourteen days, there was a notice to the sheriff "of a meeting having been called at which there [was] to be proposed a resolution for the voluntary winding-up of the company." The notice that the sheriff received was as follows. On Aug. 19, he received a letter, dated Aug. 18, and addressed to the sheriff's officer, which begins:

"Dear Sir, Fred J. Bailey (Furniture), Ltd.: In reference to s. 326 (2) of the Companies Act, 1948, we enclose notice of meeting of creditors of the above company under s. 293 of the said Act."

It is to be seen that the letter begins by making a reference to s. 326 (2). The enclosure is headed:

"Companies Act, 1948, Creditors' voluntary winding-up: Notice of first meeting of creditors—Fred J. Bailey (Furniture), Ltd. Notice is hereby given pursuant to s. 293 of the Companies Act, 1948, that a meeting of the creditors of the above-named company will be held at the company's registered offices . . . for the purposes mentioned in s. 294 and s. 295 of the said Act."

The company's address is given, with a statement of the time and date of the meeting. Four sections of the Act have, therefore, been referred to, s. 326 (2) and ss. 293, 294 and 295. Section 293 (1) of the Act is in these terms:

"The company shall cause a meeting of the creditors of the company to be summoned for the day, or the day next following the day, on which there is to be held the meeting at which the resolution for voluntary winding-up is to be proposed, and shall cause the notices of the said meeting of creditors to be sent by post to the creditors simultaneously with the sending of the notices of the said meeting of the company."

In my judgment, the actual notice served, together with the letter, contained a sufficient notice of the fact that a meeting had been convened at which a resolution was to be proposed for the voluntary winding-up of the company. Therefore, I think that the first submission of counsel for the sheriff is correct.

His next submission was that a resolution was passed, within the meaning of the words in s. 326 (2):

" . . . and an order is made or a resolution is passed, as the case may be, for the winding-up of the company . . . "

It seems to me that that must mean a resolution for the voluntary winding-up of the company. I have already referred to the resolution of the company which was passed on Sept. 17. Counsel for the sheriff referred to s. 278 (1) which begins:

A "A company may be wound up voluntarily . . . (c) if the company resolves by extraordinary resolution to the effect that it cannot by reason of its liabilities continue its business, and that it is advisable to wind-up."

In my judgment, it cannot be said that the resolution which was passed on Sept. 17 was a resolution for the voluntary winding-up of the company, and I do not consider that the second submission of counsel for the sheriff is correct.

B The third point which he submitted, and which, if it were correct, would be sufficient for him if he is right on the first point, although he is wrong on the second point, is that the phrase, "as the case may be," merely means "in the events which happened." The construction of these words is, in my judgment, by no means easy, but I must endeavour to give the reasonable and fair meaning to them in their context, irrespective of what might be the result, and I have come to the conclusion that the argument of counsel for the sheriff, attractive though it was, does not prevail. It seems to me that no meaning is given to the words, "as the case may be," if his submission is correct. The result may be a little strange. There was, in fact, a petition, and there was, in fact, a meeting "at which there [was] to be proposed a resolution for the voluntary winding-up of the company." Notice was given of the meeting, but notice was not given of the petition, and it was the petition which became the precursor of what later happened, viz., the making of a compulsory winding-up order. It would, therefore, seem that the spirit of s. 326 (2) was fulfilled, when there was notice of the meeting and when afterwards an order for compulsory liquidation was made, but, with some reluctance, I have come to the conclusion that the words, "as the case may be," in s. 326 (2) do not have the meaning ascribed to them by counsel for the sheriff, and that the sub-section contemplates that, where there has been a notice of a petition, it should be followed by an order, and, where there has been notice of a meeting it should be followed by a resolution for voluntary winding-up. As a result of these conclusions, it would appear that the effect of s. 326 (2) is somewhat different from what was possibly intended, particularly in view of some of the observations made in the Court of Appeal by LORD HANWORTH, M.R. ([1927] 1 K.B. 29) and by SCRUTTON, L.J. (ibid., 31) in Latter v. Jukes and Page (4), but these are words in a statute which I must construe, and I have felt obliged to give them the meaning that I have stated. For these reasons, I do not consider that the submission of counsel for the sheriff on the third point is correct, but, for the reasons which I have already stated, under s. 325 (1) of the Act the sheriff was, in my judgment, authorised to hand over the money to the liquidator, and, therefore, the claim in this action fails.

Judgment for the defendant with costs against the plaintiffs. Judgment for the third parties with costs against the defendant, but defendant to recover from the plaintiffs costs of third parties in excess of his own costs.

H Solicitors: Ronald Fletcher & Co. (for the plaintiffs); Field, Roscoe & Co., agents for Freer, Bouskell & Co., Leicester (for the sheriff); Lucien Fior (for the third parties).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re COHEN (A BANKRUPT). Ex parte THE BANKRUPT v.
INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS AND ANOTHER.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., Asquith and Jenkins, L.J.J.), April 28, May 2, 3, 1950.]

Bankruptcy—Rescission of receiving order—Application for rescission after expiration of time allowed for appeal—Circumstances in which application entertained—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (c. 59), s. 108 (1).

The bankrupt, a French national domiciled in France, came to England in 1940 and remained here until 1949. During that period he carried on businesses in England and incurred a considerable liability for income tax. In March, 1949, when he was carrying on business in this country and was being pressed for payment of taxes, he left England and went to his home in France. On Oct. 3, 1949, in proceedings before the registrar, as a result of which an order of adjudication and a receiving order were made, it was alleged by the petitioning creditors, the Inland Revenue Commissioners, that the bankrupt departed out of England with the intent to defeat or delay his creditors, within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 1 (1) (d). Affidavit evidence was admitted at the hearing which was clearly hearsay, and on Nov. 17, 1949, application was made under s. 108 (1) of the Act of 1914 to have the receiving order rescinded. It was conceded that, in reaching its decision on the application, the court was not bound exclusively by the material which was properly before it on Oct. 3, 1949.

HELD: although the jurisdiction of the court under s. 108 (1) to rescind, review or vary its orders was not limited in point of time, nevertheless, if the application under s. 108 (1) was in substance to be regarded as an appeal against the original order and was preferred at a date when, if it had been an appeal under s. 108 (2), it would have been out of time, the court would not exercise its jurisdiction unless it was satisfied that there were special circumstances in the case which would make it proper to hear it, treating it as an appeal out of time. Even assuming in favour of the bankrupt that the court ought to exercise its jurisdiction in the present case, although it might well be that the fact that a foreigner had left England would not by itself be sufficient to raise the inference that he intended to defeat or delay his creditors, the evidence properly before the court in October, 1949, coupled with the additional evidence adduced, left no doubt that the bankrupt had that intention in March, 1949, and, therefore, the application ought to be dismissed.

Per SIR RAYMOND EVERSLED, M.R.: There is no special rule which entitles a petitioning creditor to depart, in seeking to establish his case, in any way from the ordinary rules of evidence. Unless the rules of evidence are properly adhered to, the whole justification for the use of affidavit evidence, instead of oral evidence, is destroyed at a blow.

[AS TO ABSENCE OF DEBTOR FROM COUNTRY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 2, pp. 27-30, paras. 37-40; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST., Vol. 4 pp. 71-74, Nos. 606-633.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Ex parte Brandon, Re Trench, (1884), 25 Ch.D. 500; 53 L.J.Ch. 576; 50 L.T. 41; 4 Digest 74, 632.
- (2) Ex parte Goater, Re Finney, (1874), 30 L.T. 620; 4 Digest 72, 611.
- (3) Ex parte Brown, Re Jeavons, (1874), 9 Ch. App. 304; 43 L.J.Bey. 105; 30 L.T. 108; 4 Digest 538, 4955.
- (4) Ex parte May, Re May, (1884), 12 Q.B.D. 497; 50 L.T. 744; 4 Digest 538, 4947.
- (5) Ex parte Ritso, Re Ritso, (1883), 22 Ch.D. 529; 52 L.J.Ch. 535; 48 L.T. 376; 4 Digest 538, 4956.

APPEAL by the bankrupt from an order of Mr. Registrar CUNLIFFE, dated Jan. 31, 1950, refusing an application made under the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 108 (1), to rescind an adjudication and receiving order made on Oct. 3, 1949.

Aronson, K.C., and Muir Hunter for the bankrupt.

Pennyquick, K.C., and A. F. M. Berkeley for the Inland Revenue Commissioners and the Official Receiver.

- A SIR RAYMOND EVERSLED, M.R.: If this case is not in other respects of any great public interest, it has, at any rate, served usefully to ventilate one matter which is not without importance. In the course of the case, our attention has been drawn to the form of the affidavit supporting the petition, sometimes called, and, I think, unfortunately called, the common form affidavit, and also to the further affidavits sworn on behalf of the Inland Revenue Commissioners, who were the petitioning creditors, which consisted, in truth, of statements almost entirely of a hearsay character and not admissible in evidence. As regards the form of affidavit in support of the petition, it appears that steps have now been taken which will avoid the use in inappropriate cases of the present form, which I think is enshrined as a statutory form annexed and appended to the Bankruptcy Rules, 1915. Counsel for the petitioning creditors has not contended that the way in which the evidence was presented when the matter originally came before the court for adjudication, that is, by the recital of hearsay statements, was justifiable. There is no special rule which entitles a petitioning creditor to depart, in seeking to establish his case, in any way from the ordinary rules of evidence. One can see that there is a temptation, to save trouble or voluminous documentation, to use a form which the rules of evidence do not justify, but I think it is desirable that the court should state quite plainly that the rules of evidence must be properly observed. To depart from them may result in a serious injustice being done to some individual who might suffer adjudication, or the making of a receiving order, on material which turns out afterwards to be quite incorrect, and which should never have been accepted in the first instance. I venture to add this. It is suggested that insistence on oral evidence is, in fact, sometimes a troublesome matter which adds to the burden of costs in litigation, and that there should be much greater facilities for proving the facts in a case by affidavit evidence—the existing rules permit it to a degree which is not, I think, always appreciated—but, unless the rules of evidence are properly adhered to, the whole justification for the use of affidavit evidence, instead of oral evidence, is destroyed at a blow.
- F Affidavit evidence can only be entitled to the same weight as oral evidence if those who swear the affidavits realise that the obligation of the oath is as serious when making an affidavit as it is when making statements in the witness box.

- I turn to the subject-matter of this appeal. The bankrupt appears to be a French national domiciled in France. He came to this country in 1940 to escape the tyranny which was then afflicting his native country, and he remained in this country until the events to which I shall presently allude in the summer of 1949. During that period he engaged himself in a number of businesses. We have been supplied by counsel with a list of the companies with which he associated himself, the greater number of which appear to be at the moment in liquidation. It is the unfortunate fact that this debtor is not the first, and probably will not be the last, of the persons who, having sought asylum in this country, have not thereafter scrupled to take advantage of the protection they had received in spoiling the Egyptians. During the period of a somewhat varied business career, the bankrupt paid nothing, or substantially nothing, in respect of the taxes which his business operations rendered him liable to pay, and by the summer of 1949 the amount owing, as the commissioners allege, amounted to something over £5,000. That is the debt which is alleged to be due to the petitioning creditors.

The act of bankruptcy which is relied on is that referred to in the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 1 (1) (d), that with intent to defeat or delay his creditors he departed out of England. It is not in doubt that he did depart out of England. According to the evidence before the court, he departed out of England on May 5, 1949, but, in fact, he departed at the end of the previous March. The discrepancy is the natural result of the care he took both by himself and his agents to conceal the truth as to his whereabouts during the intervening month of April. Having departed, he went to his Mediterranean home, which boasts no less a name than the Chateau des Fayeres, at Cannes, and it is his case that this castle in France is, and always was, his one and only real home. It has been said, accordingly, that the court cannot properly infer that a national of another country, who does no more than leave these shores and return to his home, did so with intent to defeat or delay the creditors whom he left behind in England. Junior counsel for the bankrupt has warned me that anything I may say on this topic may be cited hereafter in other cases in these courts, and, noting that warning, I shall abstain from attempting to lay down any principle or make any further statement of what I think is the principle beyond what is contained in the cases which have already come before the courts. That is because, in the events which have happened, it is unnecessary to consider or to express a concluded view in this case on the question whether, when this matter was before the registrar on Oct. 3, 1949, and the debtor was adjudicated a bankrupt, there was sufficient material from which the court could infer a departure with intent to defeat and delay his creditors. A B C

One of the illustrations which counsel for the bankrupt cited of the right view to be taken when a foreign national departs to his foreign home was Ex p. Brandon, Re Trench (1) in this court. That was a case where the debtor was an ex-Indian Army general, who had married a lady having French property and had lived with his wife for many years in France, that being for the period in question his one and only home. Some years before, however, he had engaged in some unhappy enterprise in the publication of musical works, and the operations of that business had left him indebted to, among others, a gentleman whom, on a visit to London, he happened to meet on Putney Bridge. According to the evidence, he said he hoped to be able to pay this debt, and would call on the creditor, but he did not do so and returned to his French home. In those circumstances, the question before the court was whether the inference could properly be drawn that, when, following this interview on Putney Bridge, he returned home to France, whence he had shortly before come, and remained there, he did so with intent to delay and defeat his creditors. On those facts, it is not surprising that this court thought the material fell short of that which enabled the inference of intending to defeat and delay creditors to be drawn. I need not read more than a sentence or two from the judgment of LORD SELBORNE, L.C., who presided in this court. He said (25 Ch.D. 503): D E F

"But, if that conversation [on Putney Bridge] was an honest one—and there is nothing to lead to a contrary conclusion—I think the proper inference to be drawn from it is that he really thought that when he was at home at his residence in France with his wife and family, at the place where the people were living who were in the habit of giving him credit, it would be more easy for him to settle with his English creditors than if he were in England. And I cannot leave out of consideration the fact that France is a civilised country, in which creditors can sue their debtors. It does not appear that the petitioning creditors have been in any way baffled by the debtor in the pursuit of their remedies against him there. These are all the facts, and they amount to this, that the debtor stays at home, his home being in a foreign country. Can we, upon the principle that a man must be taken to intend the natural consequence of his acts, say that he remained out of England with intent to defeat or delay his creditors? If a G H debtor had left this country in order to place himself beyond the reach of its laws, the presumption that by so doing he intended to defeat or delay his creditors might arise; but the present case is entirely different and I think that such an intention ought not to be presumed."

A I should observe that there the emphasis lay more on remaining out of England than on leaving England, but, for present purposes, that distinction need not be regarded as material. I emphasise the sentence in which LORD SELBORNE said that there was nothing to prevent the creditors in that case suing their debtor in France. Counsel for the Inland Revenue Commissioners has pointed out that here the claim of the petitioning creditors is for income tax, and, as is well known, it is not the practice of civilised countries, such as France and England, to enforce the revenue laws of the other of them.

B An instance of the inference to be drawn the other way is to be found in Ex p. Goater, Re Finney (2), decided some ten years before the case to which I have just referred. That was a case of an Englishman with his home in England who had been in business as a coal merchant. The occasion for his leaving this country and going abroad was ill-health, as was the case with the bankrupt here. Both went abroad after consulting doctors who gave the not
C unnatural advice: "If you are worried and tired, there is nothing like a holiday in the south of France." The debtor in Ex p. Goater (2) was carrying on business, as was the bankrupt in the present case, until the point of departure, a matter quite different from the facts in Brandon's case (1). Having paid certain creditors, Mr. Finney (the debtor) departed to the south of France leaving the remaining creditors unpaid. MELLISH, L.J., said (30 L.T. 621):

D "It had been the law for a great many years, that, in determining the question of intent, it must be inferred that a man intends the necessary consequences of his own acts. The debtor in the present case must have known perfectly well that the necessary consequence of his departing from England would be to defeat or delay the petitioning creditor and the banking company. His departure would render it impossible for them to issue
E debtors' summonses, or to adopt the summary process under the Bills of Exchange Act."

When the two cases are compared it is not difficult to see why the decision went one way in Brandon's case (1), and the other way in Goater's case (2). It is plain that the question whether the inference can, in any particular set
F of circumstances, be properly drawn that the departure was intended to defeat or delay creditors or not must depend on the facts of the particular case. Though it may well be true, as counsel for the bankrupt have observed, that the mere fact, without more, that a foreigner happens to have left England and gone home abroad is not sufficient to raise the inference, in few cases are the facts ever likely to be confined to that one single circumstance.

G In the present case the first matter is that the bankrupt had gone suddenly to France. Secondly, he went at a time when he was financially embarrassed to a serious extent. Next there was properly before the court the affidavit of a consular clerk, Mr. Pitti-Ferrandi, of Nice, who gave an account, in reference to his attempts to serve the bankrupt with the petition, of the visits he paid to the Chateau des Fayeres. Without going into that affidavit in detail, it is H plain that this chateau, which is said to be the bankrupt's home, was not a place at which it was at all easy to find him. An individual appeared who stated, according to the affidavit, and, apparently, stated untruly, if the affidavit is accepted, that he was not the bankrupt but the bankrupt's brother. That leads at once to the inference that there was—and I borrow the adjective employed by junior counsel for the bankrupt—something surreptitious about the conduct of the bankrupt at or shortly after the time of his departure.

I have already referred to the fact that the petitioning creditors' debt was one not enforceable in the French courts. When all these matters are considered together, I am far from saying that there was not material on which the court could properly infer, as it did infer on Oct. 3, 1949, that the bankrupt did depart from these shores with intent to delay or defeat his creditors. But, as I have indicated, it is not necessary to stop there. This application is made under the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 108 (1), which provides that the court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy under the Act "may review, rescind or vary any order made by it under its bankruptcy jurisdiction." The language of that sub-section, which does not appear for the first time in the Act of 1914, contains no limit as to time—and in that regard it is contrasted with sub-s. (2) as to appeals, when read in conjunction with sub-s. (3) and the Bankruptcy Rules, 1915. The effect, I think, of the decisions on sub-s. (1) and its predecessor—Ex p. Brown, Re Jeavons (3), Ex p. May (4) and Ex p. Ritso (5) were the three cited to us by counsel for the bankrupt—may fairly be stated in this way. Though the jurisdiction of the court to rescind, review or vary its orders is not limited in point of time, nevertheless, if the application under sub-s. (1) is in substance to be regarded as an appeal against the original order and is preferred at a date when, if it had been an appeal under sub-s. (2), it would have been out of time, this court will not exercise its jurisdiction, unless it is satisfied that there are special circumstances in the case which would make it proper to hear it, treating it as an appeal out of time.

There are several special circumstances on which counsel for the bankrupt relied in support of the view that the delay between the date when an appeal could have been brought against the order sought to be reviewed—that is twenty-one days after the order was made, namely, Oct. 24, 1949—and the date, namely, Nov. 17, when the application was first made, can be properly excused. Counsel referred to the fact that the bankrupt went abroad on the advice of his doctor, from which we should infer that he was in a poor state of health, worried and anxious, and, therefore, that it would not be just to expect him to apply his mind with particular despatch to these affairs which were the subject of the application to the court. Then it was said his home was in France and he might not have readily available the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, or the rules made thereunder, or find at the Chateau des Fayeres, at Cannes, anyone who could advise him as to the procedure adopted in bankruptcy matters in London. It was said he left "persons in charge"—those are the words—of this business at 14 Half Moon Street, namely, a brother, or a soi-disant brother at any rate, a lady called Pauline Llewellyn, who, according to what she told Mr. Wilson, intended to follow him to France, and one Knight, who had appeared or had acted for the debtor in reference to his tax troubles. As I shall show presently, whatever the extent of supervision of any or all these persons over the property and business of the bankrupt at 14, Half Moon Street, they certainly did nothing to dispel any suspicions anyone might have had that the bankrupt's departure to France was not entirely attributable to the state of his health and the advice of his doctor. It was said that the brother was given a power of attorney which would have enabled him to pay the debts. If that is so, he did not do so. But it is true that these persons were at some time, at any rate, to be found at 14, Half Moon Street. Finally, it is said, a member of the staff, namely, Miss Pauline Llewellyn, when asked on May 5 where her master was, gave a truthful answer, and told her interlocutor that he had gone to the Chateau des Fayeres in France.

Speaking for myself, I very gravely doubt whether all those matters, when added together, in the circumstances of this case, amount to special circumstances. On the other hand, where the debtor is a foreigner, I think the court will always be disposed to extend a certain latitude to him so that he should not feel under any sense of grievance or be said to suffer any injustice by being made to adhere to the requirements of the law. It is unnecessary to express any view on that, and I certainly do not desire it to be suggested that I am laying down that the circumstances, such as I have tabulated, when found in conjunction in another case, may or may not be special circumstances in that case.

Assuming in the bankrupt's favour that the court ought to entertain the matter and exercise its jurisdiction, it is conceded that the court is not now bound, in arriving at its decision, exclusively by the material which was properly before the court founded on properly admissible evidence on Oct. 3, 1949, but that the court can look at all the material which is now before it in reaching a conclusion whether the intent ought properly to be inferred.

I have said enough to show that there is at least a case for saying, on the facts which I have mentioned, that on Oct. 3, 1949, the inference required by sub-s. (1) (d) might properly be drawn. But in the interim there has been brought out one other matter of such a character as to cast almost a blinding light on the earlier affairs and the earlier acts of the debtor to which I have already alluded. Briefly, but sufficiently, put, this further material consists of correspondence exhibited to an affidavit by Mr. E. R. Trafford, the collector of taxes, and covering a period from Mar. 11, 1949, to May 3, 1949. [His LORDSHIP considered the correspondence which had taken place between the collector of taxes, on the one hand, and the bankrupt and Miss Llewellyn, on the other hand, and continued:] These letters, not only when added to what had gone before, but on their own account, more than amply justify the inference that the bankrupt had departed with intent to delay and defeat his creditors. That they were intended to deceive seems to me too plain for argument. If that is so, the question arises: Why were they intended to deceive, and what is the point of it? To that question, it seems to me only one answer is possible. Junior counsel for the bankrupt suggested that the question what was the intention ought to be determined by reference to matters of fact proved at the time of departure, and that it was not legitimate, by looking at evidence later made available, to reflect back, so to speak, on the previous material, but this correspondence which I have been reading followed immediately the actual departure and preceded the statement on May 5 that Miss Llewellyn first made that the bankrupt had departed. It was, in other words, contemporary correspondence. In any case, it must be plain that the later events may serve to give a true interpretation to what may have appeared earlier as equivocal conduct.

However that may be, when this material is added to the remainder of the matters to which I have already referred, I am left in no doubt whatever that the intent of the bankrupt, or the dominant intent—because I give him the credit of being quite ready to believe that he was far from well and that a stay in the salubrious air of the Mediterranean would do him good—was to defeat and delay his creditors, and the petitioning creditors in particular. For these reasons, I think that the order made by Mr. Registrar CUNLIFFE was right, and I would dismiss the appeal.

ASQUITH, L.J.: I agree. Even if on Oct. 3, 1949, there was not enough admissible evidence to support the receiving order made on that date—a point on which I express no opinion—it was, in my view, open to the registrar, in deciding whether or not to rescind that order, to take into account the additional evidence which came into the picture after Oct. 3. Once this additional evidence (and in particular the damning letters which my Lord read out) was let in, it seems to me that there were very solid grounds for refusing to rescind the order and that the registrar's decision was plainly right. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

JENKINS, L.J.: I also agree, and I have nothing to add.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Theodore Goddard & Co. (for the bankrupt); Solicitor of Inland Revenue.
[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. SOUTH GREENHOE JUSTICES. Ex parte DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys, Byrne, Morris and Finnemore, JJ.), May 3, 1950.]

Justices—Sentence—Committal to quarter sessions—Case tried summarily on application of prosecution—Committal a nullity—Refusal of adjudication by quarter sessions—Power of justices to conclude hearing and pass sentence—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (c. 58), s. 28 (1), s. 29 (1).

By the Criminal Justice Act, 1948, s. 29 “(1) Where, under sub-s. (2) of s. 28 of this Act or s. 24 of the Criminal Justice Act, 1925, a person who is not less than seventeen years of age is tried summarily by a court of summary jurisdiction for an indictable offence, and is convicted by that court of that offence, then if, on obtaining information as to his character and antecedents, the court is of opinion that they are such that greater punishment should be inflicted in respect of the offence than that court has power to inflict, the court may, in lieu of dealing with him in any manner in which the court has power to deal with him, commit him in custody to quarter sessions for sentence in accordance with the following provisions of this section.”

The respondent was charged before a court of summary jurisdiction with seven offences under the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, and the justices, on the application of the prosecution, decided to try the offences summarily under s. 28 (1) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1948. After conviction the respondent asked that six other similar offences should be taken into consideration, and the justices, purporting to act under s. 29 (1) of the Act, decided to commit him to quarter sessions for sentence. Quarter sessions took the view that the justices had no power to commit the respondent for sentence and declined to adjudicate. Subsequently, other summonses were issued against him in respect of the same offences of which he had already been found guilty ordering him to attend before the justices “to answer the said information and be sentenced for the said offence in respect of which you were convicted by the court.”

HELD: as the justices had tried the respondent summarily under s. 28 (1) and had not proceeded under s. 28 (2), his committal under s. 29 (1) was a nullity; there had been no final adjudication on the matter; and the justices had power to require the attendance of the respondent and to pass sentence on him.

[FOR THE PROVISIONS OF THE CRIMINAL JUSTICE ACT, 1948, s. 28 and s 29, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 14, pp. 1,011-1,014.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) R. v. Sheridan, [1936] 2 All E.R. 883; [1937] 1 K.B. 223; 106 L.J.K.B. 6; 155 L.T. 207; 100 J.P. 319; Digest Supp.
- (2) R. v. Grant, [1936] 2 All E.R. 1156; 106 L.J.K.B. 9; 155 L.T. 209; 100 J.P. 324; Digest Supp.
- (3) R. v. Bodmin JJ., Ex parte McEwen, [1947] 1 All E.R. 109; [1947] K.B. 321; [1947] L.J.R. 338; 111 J.P. 47; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (4) R. v. Willesden JJ., Ex parte Utley, [1947] 2 All E.R. 838; [1948] 1 K.B. 397; [1948] L.J.R. 394; 112 J.P. 97; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) R. v. Kenworthy, (1823), 1 B. & C. 711; 107 E.R. 261; 16 Digest 432, 2928.
- (6) Dublin (Dean and Chapter) v. R., (1724), 1 Bro. Parl. Cas. 73; 1 E.R. 425; 16 Digest 346, 1730.
- (7) Pender v. Herle, (1725), 3 Bro. Parl. Cas. 505; 1 E.R. 1462; 16 Digest 347, 1733.

MOTION for an order of mandamus.

After hearing charges under the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, against the respondent, Leonard Pocock, the justices for the South Greenhoe petty sessional division of Norfolk found him guilty of seven offences. The respondent then asked that six similar offences should be taken into consideration, whereupon the justices decided to commit him to quarter sessions for sentence under the Criminal Justice Act, 1948, s. 29 (1). Quarter sessions declined to adjudicate on the ground that the committal by the justices was bad, the justices having agreed, on the application of the prosecution, to deal with the charges against the respondent summarily, and, therefore, were bound to do so under the provisions of s. 28 (1). The respondent was then summoned to appear before the justices for sentence, but, on the submission of the respondent's solicitor that they had no power to sentence the respondent, the justices declined to act, and the present application was made by the Crown for an order of mandamus addressed to the justices directing them to conclude the proceedings and proceed to judgment.

The Attorney-General (Sir Hartley Shawcross, K.C.) and Harold Brown for the Crown.

Christmas Humphreys for the justices.

Widgery for the respondent.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: The Attorney-General moves for an order of mandamus directed to the justices for the petty sessional division of South Greenhoe in the county of Norfolk

" . . . to hear and determine according to law the charges against one Leonard Pocock, set out or referred to in the statement and affidavit hereinafter mentioned; alternatively to direct the said justices to impose a sentence upon the said Leonard Pocock in respect of the offences of which they have convicted him . . . "

Before dealing with the facts of the case I desire to make a few general observations upon s. 28 and s. 29 of the Criminal Justice Act, 1948, because it is by reason of those sections that the questions which fall for determination arise. First, it is convenient to state the various offences in respect of which justices sitting in petty sessions have power to adjudicate. I omit mention of cases where justices are sitting as examining justices for cases triable only on indictment. In respect of other cases there are, first, those which by statute are made summary offences only. In those the justices must adjudicate themselves; no other court has power to adjudicate. Secondly, there are cases which by statute can be dealt with either summarily or on indictment. Thirdly, there are cases, generally referred to as cases under s. 17 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, which are prima facie summary cases, but in which, as the sentence which may be imposed exceeds three months, the defendant has the right to claim to be tried by jury. Fourthly, and most important, are the indictable cases set out in the schedule to the Criminal Justice Act, 1925. If the defendant consents and the prosecution raises no objection, or if, although the prosecution raises objection, the justices so determine, those cases can be dealt with as summary offences.

It was in respect of the last named class of offences that difficulties arose in courts of summary jurisdiction. Before the Criminal Justice Act, 1948, in R. v. Sheridan (1) and R. v. Grant (2) justices had agreed to deal summarily with indictable offences, and, having announced their intention of convicting, they heard evidence of the character of the offender and came to the conclusion that he ought to receive a more severe sentence than they had power to give. Thereupon they committed him to quarter sessions for trial. When the offender appeared for trial at quarter sessions, objection was taken that he had been already convicted, and he entered a plea of autrefois convict. It was held by the Court of Criminal Appeal that that was a good plea in bar, that he had already been convicted, and that quarter sessions therefore had no power to try him again. In an endeavour to remove that difficulty, s. 28 (2) of the Act of 1948 deals with those cases to which I have just referred—indictable cases which may be dealt with summarily with the consent of the accused. By s. 29, it is provided:

“(1) Where, under s. 28 (2) of this Act or s. 24 of the Criminal Justice Act, 1925, a person who is not less than seventeen years of age is tried summarily by a court of summary jurisdiction for an indictable offence, and is convicted by that court of that offence, then if, on obtaining information as to his character and antecedents, the court is of opinion that they are such that greater punishment should be inflicted in respect of the offence than that court has power to inflict, the court may, in lieu of dealing with him in any manner in which the court has power to deal with him, commit him in custody to quarter sessions for sentence in accordance with the following provisions of this section.”

That removed the difficulty which had arisen in R. v. Sheridan (1) and R. v. Grant (2), for it gave the justices power to hear the case and to decide whether or not to convict, and, if they so decide, it gives them power, after hearing the prisoner's antecedents, to send him forward for sentence. That power only exists where the case falls within s. 28 (2) which provides:

“Where the court has begun, in accordance with the last foregoing sub-section, to hear a case as if the offence were punishable on conviction on indictment only, then if at any time during the hearing it appears to the court, having regard to any representations made in the presence of the accused by or on behalf of the prosecutor, or made by or on behalf of the accused, and to the nature of the case, that it is proper to do so, the court may then determine (subject to the following provisions of this section) to try the case summarily.”

Section 28 (1) provides :

“Subject to the provisions of this section, where a person who is not less than fourteen years of age is charged before a court of summary jurisdiction with an offence which, by virtue of any enactment, is punishable either on summary conviction or on conviction on indictment, then if application in that behalf is made by the prosecutor before the charge has been entered upon, the court may then determine to try the case summarily; but if the court does not so determine it shall proceed to hear the case as if the offence were punishable on conviction on indictment only.”

That deals with a variety of offences. A common one is driving to the danger of the public, which may be dealt with either summarily or on indictment, and (as in the case with which we are concerned today) certain offences under the Bankruptcy Act, 1914. If the justices proceed under s. 28 (1) to deal with those offences as summary offences, s. 29 (1) has no application. That sub-section relates only to offences which are indictable and can only be dealt with summarily with the consent of the accused.

In the present case seven charges of offences under the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, were preferred against the respondent. The court was invited by counsel for the Board of Trade to deal with the case summarily. It turned out that there were six other cases against the respondent which, after the justices had announced their decision to convict on the seven, he desired to be taken into consideration. There were, therefore, altogether thirteen cases. We have not heard much about the nature of those cases, but I desire to say what has been said before in this court, more especially in R. v. Bodmin Justices (3), Ex parte McEwen that the fact that justices have power to deal with cases is no reason why they necessarily should deal with them. When a case is of a serious character—and surely a case of a man committing thirteen bankruptcy offences is one of a serious character—that case ought to go for trial. It is not merely a matter of what the sentence may be. It may be that when the case does go for trial, the court of trial will think it necessary only to impose a nominal sentence or even to bind over the offender. That is not the point. Serious cases ought to be dealt with by a superior court, and if the justices had been asked to send the present case for trial in the first instance, there is no reason to suppose that they would not have done so and this trouble would never have arisen. They were, however, asked by counsel representing the Board of Trade, to whom the administration of the Bankruptcy Acts is entrusted, to deal with the case summarily, and it is, therefore, not surprising that they consented to do so.

On hearing that there were no fewer than thirteen charges against the respondent the justices took the view that the sentence which they could give him was inadequate. Thereupon, no one taking any objection, they decided to commit the respondent to quarter sessions under s. 29 to be sentenced. Again the justices were not corrected in that view, and, they being lay justices, I am not going to blame them, but it was remarkable that their clerk did not point out to them that, if they did send him to quarter sessions for sentence, they must, under the terms of the section, send him forward in custody. They allowed him bail, and that, again, was wrong.

When the case came before the quarter sessions counsel for the prosecution pointed out that there had been a complete misconception and there was no power to send the respondent to quarter sessions for sentence because the offence was one covered by s. 28 (1) and not by s. 28 (2). Accordingly, quarter sessions properly said they could not deal with the matter. The respondent having been bailed to appear, and having appeared, at quarter sessions, that court discharged his bail. Further summonses were then issued against him at the instance of the Director of Public Prosecutions in the following terms:

“You are therefore hereby summoned to appear before the court of summary jurisdiction . . . on Monday, February 27, 1950, . . . to answer the said information, and be sentenced for the said offence in respect of which you were convicted by the said court on December 5, 1949.”

On the return day of that summons the respondents' solicitor appeared before the justices and took the objection that they had no power to hear the case because they had already done so. He said that the respondent would not come into court, and, if he did, he would plead autrefois convict, and he also told the justices that, if they proceeded to deal with the respondent, they would render themselves liable to civil proceedings for false imprisonment. One is not altogether surprised, therefore, that the justices said: “We will not do anything unless we are ordered so to do by the High Court.” The question now arises whether the justices on that day could not lawfully have sentenced the prisoner.

The first point made by the Attorney-General is that the decision of the justices to send the respondent to quarter sessions for sentence was a mere nullity, and that, therefore, the proceedings had never been concluded. Counsel for the respondent submitted that the decision of the justices was a judgment, and that, therefore, the justices, having convicted and having proceeded to judgment, were functi officio and no further proceedings could be taken. He likened the case to one (which has so often happened) where justices have imposed a penalty which they had no power to impose. In such cases it has always been held that the conviction is bad on its face. It records a penalty for a crime which the crime does not carry, and this court has always quashed the conviction. In R. v. Willesden Justices, Ex parte Utley (4) the justices imposed a fine of £15 although the utmost penalty that they could impose was a fine of £5, and this court quashed the conviction when it was brought up on certiorari. The first question is: Is this decision of the justices a judgment? In my opinion, it is not. The effect of s. 29 (1) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1948, is that, if the justices, for reasons therein given, have come to the conclusion that their powers are not sufficient, they may abstain from pronouncing judgment and send the case to quarter sessions for quarter sessions to pass judgment. The case is not disposed of. By virtue of this section it has become a sort of composite case in which power is given to one court to convict and to another court to give judgment, and until the judgment is given, the hearing of the case is not complete. It is the judgment which is given by quarter sessions which finally determines the case. It seems to me that, if we were to hold that an order by justices sending a case to quarter sessions for sentence were a judgment, we should be going very near to holding that a committal for trial in an indictable case is a judgment. It cannot be said that it is a judgment. If in an indictable case a committal for trial were a final judgment, then, when justices refuse to send a case for trial, that would equally be a judgment, whereas everybody knows that it is not. If justices sitting as examining justices taking depositions come to the conclusion that a prima facie case is not disclosed and discharge the defendant it is always open to the prosecution, if further evidence comes to their hand, to take subsequent proceedings and to go on with the case. There is no authority, as far as this court is aware, which lays down that a committal for trial is anything but a step in a proceeding. I cannot see how it can be said that a committal by justices to quarter sessions so that they may pass judgment in lieu of the judgment which the justices might have passed can be said to be a judgment. The words of s. 29 (1) are:

“ . . . in lieu of dealing with him in any manner in which the court has power to deal with him . . . ”

The court has received assistance from the old case of R. v. Kenworthy (5). There the record of a trial for perjury at Chester Summer Assizes recited (1 B. & C. 711):

“ . . . it is therefore ordered, that he the said Lawrence Kenworthy be transported . . . ”

It was brought up on error, and there was nothing in the record to show that it had been adjudged. ABBOTT, C.J. (afterwards LORD TENTERDEN) in the course of the argument said (ibid., 712):

“ Perhaps no judgment at all has been given; and if so, there cannot be any reversal.”

I observe that counsel for the accused, in arguing, said (ibid., 712):

“ In 4 Inst., p. 70, there is this passage: ‘ This conclusion followeth, that the King hath committed and distributed all his whole power of judicature to several Courts of Justice, and therefore the judgment must be, “ ideo consideratum est per Curiam ” ’ ”.

There are other authorities which may be found which show that the test of judgment is whether, in the formal record of the court, those words “ ideo consideratum est ” appear. It is for that reason that it has always been held that error did not lie to reverse the decision of a court given on an application for one of the prerogative writs because, said the court, there is no “ ideo consideratum est ” in the order of the court: see Dublin (Dean and Chapter) v. R. (6), and Pender v. Herle (7). In other words, it had never been adjudged.

In R. v. Kenworthy (5) ABBOTT, C.J., giving judgment, said (1 B. & C. 713):

“ By the Act in question, two things are required to be done by the Court before which the party is tried: an order for transportation is to be made, and thereupon judgment is to be given. Now, here, the Court made an order not followed up by a judgment. There is no doubt that, at common law, where the punishment is not discretionary, the record of an Inferior Court may be removed into this Court, and we may pronounce judgment; but in this instance we cannot do so. Inasmuch, therefore, as no judgment has been entered below, and this Court has no power to supply the deficiency, the proper course appears to be for us now to order the Court below to proceed to give judgment on the conviction."

A procedendo was awarded. That seems to me to show what is necessary in finding that there is judgment. It must be something which puts an end to the case. It must be a final adjudication, and here there has been no final adjudication. Therefore, in my opinion, the justices were not functi officio.

Then comes the question what ought to be done. The committal to quarter sessions for sentence was a nullity, and so the case had never been finally determined. It seems to me, therefore, that the case was really in the same position as it would have been if the court, instead of having committed the respondent to quarter sessions, had given no decision, except that they convicted, and had then adjourned the case without giving judgment. The justices must, therefore, finish the case, and all that is necessary is that notice should be given to the respondent that on such and such a day they will proceed further to hear the case. I think that notice can be given quite informally. The summons which was served on the respondent required him to appear and "answer the information." I think it would have been better if those words had not been included, but it does not matter what the form of the notice was which was given him to appear. The case had not been finished. It had to be finished, and if the respondent had been told that the case would be finished on a certain day and that he was to appear and he did not appear, I think that, under the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, the justices could have sentenced him in his absence and then issued their warrant to have him conveyed to prison in accordance with the sentence. At any rate, they could have issued a warrant against him for not appearing in accordance with the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, s. 13. I think, therefore, that on the day in question the justices had not only the power but also the duty to pass sentence on the respondent that these proceedings might be brought to an end by a judgment of the court. As they did not do it, the proceedings were not brought to an end. I think, therefore, the order of mandamus should go directing the justices not to hear and determine, but "to impose a sentence upon the said Leonard Pocock in respect of the offences of which they have convicted him."

F HUMPHREYS, J.: I agree. It is now admitted that the procedure of the justices on the first occasion when the matter was before them was an error of such a character that it was a nullity, as they had no more power to order the respondent to appear before quarter sessions on bail to receive sentence than they had to order him to be executed. Their only power to order him to appear before quarter sessions was that given by s. 29 (1) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1948, which provides in terms the particular cases where they may take that course, and this was not one of them. Therefore, quarter sessions properly held that they had no power to deal with the matter. Quarter sessions having so decided, what power, if any, had the justices to continue the hearing? It is said, on the one hand, that they had no power because they had adjudicated—they had heard the informations and had convicted. The answer seems to me to be that a court of summary jurisdiction does not complete the hearing of an information merely by convicting because that leaves in the air a most important part of a case, viz., the sentence of the court following on that conviction. The duty of the justices was to hear and determine the informations which had been laid against the respondent and not to leave the case until they had done so. They had not completed the hearing by merely convicting the respondent. There was something further they had to do, and, in my view, it is quite wrong to say that they gave a judgment of any sort in the matter. I think that the distinction between judgment and order, which my Lord has dealt with in his judgment, is conclusive as showing that the justices here did not give any judgment on the finding of guilt which they had recorded. That being so, when the matter came back to them, their duty was to complete the adjudication on the informations. There is nothing else I desire to say upon that matter.

The question has been argued what is to happen if the respondent does not come before the justices. The course taken in this case was to serve what were thought to be further summonses upon the respondent. The word "summons" has received a technical meaning as it is used in the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, and I think (and, I think, my Lord is of the same opinion) that it would have been better that the word "summons" should have been omitted so as to make it clear that the justices were not purporting to issue fresh summonses in regard to these matters. They were merely telling a man in regard to whose case it now appeared that no finality had been arrived at, and which was, therefore, sub judice, that he must attend the court so that he might be heard and the court might finally adjudicate on the matter. In my view, a simple note telling him to appear and attend on the court was all that was required, and I think the notice should have informed him that on that day the justices would proceed to hear him and consider the appropriate sentence to be passed. In point of fact, the respondent, did attend. He attended in person so far as the door of the court was concerned, but he did not go inside. He attended by his solicitor, and I have no doubt that, if the justices had decided to go on with the case and pass sentence, his solicitor would have called him in. If the respondent should be unwise enough to pay no attention to a notice to attend next time, I have no doubt that there is ample power both in this court and in the justices to compel him. The justices would then be in the position that they had been ordered by this court to hear a matter which necessitates the appearance of the accused person, or, at all events, make very desirable the attendance of the accused person, and, if the accused person does not attend, I have no doubt whatever that there is ample power in the justices to bring him there. That position has not arisen because, as I said, I do not think that the respondent has ever refused to attend, and I do not suppose he would be foolish enough to refuse to attend on the justices when he gets the notice which I assume he will get. I agree that the order of mandamus should go in the form which my Lord has proposed.

BYRNE, J.: I agree.

MORRIS, J.: I also agree.

FINNEMORE, J.: I agree.

Order of mandamus directing the justices to pass sentence in respect of the offences of which they convicted.

Solicitors: Director of Public Prosecutions (for the Crown); Treasury Solicitor (for the justices); Metcalf, Copeman & Pettefar (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

DEMETRIOU v. DEMETRIOU.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Asquith and Jenkins, L.JJ.), May 5, 1950.]

Divorce—Practice—Second petition—Petition for divorce on the ground of cruelty—Leave to file second petition on the ground of desertion—First petition still on file.

On May 26, 1949, a wife brought a petition for divorce solely on the ground of her husband's cruelty. The parties having separated at the end of July, 1946, the wife was unable to rely on the separation as desertion by the husband because a period of at least three years immediately preceding the presentation of her petition had not then elapsed. On Nov. 22, 1949, the husband filed his answer, alleging cruelty and desertion by the wife, who thereupon applied for leave to file a second petition on the ground of her husband's desertion while her first petition was still on the file.

HELD: (i) although there was no statutory provision providing in terms that a second petition could not be presented while a first petition was still on the file, it was contrary to the long-established practice of the court to allow two petitions by the same party in respect of the same marriage to be on the file at the same time.

Dictum of SIR BOYD MERRIMAN, P., in H. v. H. ([1938] 3 All E.R. 418), approved.

[AS TO PETITIONS ON RECORD, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, p. 695, para. 1034; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 427, 428, Nos. 4348-4355.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Spawforth v. Spawforth, [1946] 1 All E.R. 379; [1946] P. 131; 115 L.J.P. 38; 174 L.T. 260; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) H. v. H., [1938] 3 All E.R. 415; 159 L.T. 525; Digest Supp.
- (3) Onslow v. Onslow, Jones & Campbell, (1889), 60 L.T. 680; 27 Digest 427, 4352.

APPEAL by the wife from a decision of WILLMER, J., dated Mar. 16, 1950, dismissing her appeal from an order of Mr. Registrar COMPTON MILLAR refusing leave to present a petition for divorce on the ground of desertion while a former petition for divorce on the ground of cruelty was still on the file. The facts appear in the judgment of ASQUITH, L.J.

S. Lincoln for the wife.

T. Dewar for the husband.

ASQUITH, L.J.: By a petition dated May 26, 1949, the wife asked for a decree of dissolution of her marriage solely on the ground of her husband's cruelty. Desertion was not alleged, and could not be alleged, since the husband had not left the wife for a period of at least three years immediately preceding the presentation of the petition. The separation between husband and wife took place at the end of July, 1946, and the petition was lodged on May 26, 1949, a period of less than three years afterwards. If the wife had been well advised, she would have waited until August, 1949, when she could have alleged desertion, but, having filed the petition in May, she did so prematurely as far as desertion was concerned.

The husband, in his answer, alleged both cruelty and desertion by the wife, the desertion being for a period of at least three years immediately preceding the presentation of the answer, and he prayed the court to dismiss the wife's petition and grant him a decree. He relied on a separation which he dated at about the same time as that pleaded by the wife in her second petition, but, as his answer was filed on Nov. 22, 1949, he might establish, if he could show that the separation amounted to desertion by the wife, that the wife deserted him for a period of at least three years immediately preceding the presentation of the answer.

The wife, being unable, in May, 1949, to allege that three years had elapsed before the presentation of her petition, and knowing that that could not be remedied by a supplemental petition (see Spawforth v. Spawforth (1)), sought to present a second petition. She appeals now against the refusal of the registrar and the judge to permit her to do so.

The ground of the learned judge's refusal is not stated, but one may assume that it must be that there was already a petition on the file. There is no statutory provision, nor rule among the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947, which provides that this cannot be done, but there is a very emphatic statement by SIR BOYD MERRIMAN, P., in H. v. H. (2). In that case, the facts of which bear little resemblance to those of the present case, the PRESIDENT made this general observation ([1938] 3 All E.R. 418):

"In fact, the old petition was still on the file when this new petition was filed on Jan. 1, and, in accordance with what is acknowledged to be the established practice of the court, dating, it is said, back to the days of the old ecclesiastical courts—at any rate, established by authority and practice for fifty years—it is impossible to have two petitions on the file in respect of the same marriage at the same time, and a fortiori when the two petitions both deal with the same subject-matter."

This statement may well be obiter, but reported cases are exceedingly rare, and such as exist support the statement of SIR BOYD MERRIMAN. Text books lay down the rule and cite in support Onslow v. Onslow, Jones and Campbell (3). In that case (60 L.T. 681) the following passage occurs:

"During the hearing, however, it appeared that the petitioner had, some years before, instituted divorce proceedings against his wife, charging her with adultery with a man named Clark, who was made a co-respondent in that suit. That case was not heard, owing, it was said, to some mistake as to the date, and it was called on in due course, and was struck out. No application had ever been made to reinstate it in the list, or to have it dismissed, and it still remained on the files of the court. Counsel thereupon asked that that suit be now dismissed. BUTT, J., doubted the power of the court to do that. Steps must be taken in the proper way—by summons—to get rid of the first suit. Until that was done no decree could be pronounced in the present suit. This unhappy petitioner had been so bandied about that, solely on his account, and in order to save him further expense in the matter, the court would consent to hear the evidence now. It must, however, be understood that steps should be at once taken on behalf of the petitioner to have the former suit called on and dismissed. Until that had been done the decree would be suspended."

Counsel for the husband led us through a labyrinth of rules going back to 1865 or earlier. He conscientiously explored the whole subject, but for the most part he drew a series of blanks. Rules or statutory provisions referred to other rules which, when examined, were silent on the crucial point. As SIR BOYD MERRIMAN said, there is a long standing practice, fortified by Onslow v. Onslow (3), that a second petition cannot be presented while a first is still on the file. I do not see why in the present case the enforcement of this rule should cause great hardship. On the trial of the first petition and the answer, if the wife can show that the separation in the summer of 1946 amounted to a desertion by the husband, she can defeat his claim, and although she herself cannot get a decree for desertion she can, if and when the first petition has been disposed of in her favour, file a second petition and allege desertion as a ground for the granting of a decree to herself. For these reasons the appeal should be dismissed.

JENKINS, L.J.: I agree. The court is being asked to make a departure from a long-established practice, and applications of this sort are necessarily viewed with a critical eye. If one finds a practice for which it is difficult to account and which has no positive warrant in any statute or rule, one would be disposed to try to find a way out of the difficulty in a case in which adherence to the practice might mean a denial of justice. I agree that in the present case there is no real ground for supposing that any hardship will result if the petitioner is refused leave to file a second petition. All the issues are before the court in the existing proceedings. Should the matter be decided on the issue of cruelty one way or the other, then cadit quaestio. Should it be found that the wife has deserted the husband, then again cadit quaestio. On the other hand, should the wife's defence to the husband's plea of desertion succeed, then it is reasonably plain that she could file her further petition which the husband would then hardly be able to oppose.

It may well be that there is good reason behind this practice, especially when one applies it to the ground for dissolution of marriage consisting of three years' desertion preceding the date of the petition. If a general practice grew up under which a second petition could be filed while the first was still pending, the effect might well be to abridge the statutory period now required to make desertion a sufficient cause. A wife might, for example, before the expiration of the three years file a petition making out, perhaps, a flimsy case of cruelty, and, on the eve of the hearing of that petition, the three years may have possibly run out. Under the practice we are asked to introduce it would then be open to her to file a further petition alleging desertion and consolidate it with the old one on the ground that the two matters should be heard together. Though technically the second petition would be a separate and independent proceeding, in substance the result would be very much the same as if the petitioner were allowed in a supplemental petition to allege and rely on desertion which had not lasted for the full three years at the date of the presentation of the original petition. In view of the long-established practice, and of the fact that adherence to it here will not, as far as I can see, work any hardship on a petitioner, I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed. No order as to costs.

Solicitors: William P. Webb & Co. (for the wife); J. A. H. Powell, Law Society's Services Divorce Department (for the husband).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Reversed. C.A. post p. 1191.

JAWORSKI v. INSTITUTION OF POLISH ENGINEERS IN GREAT BRITAIN, LTD.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Finnemore, J.), May 4, 5, 1950.]

Income Tax—Deduction of tax—Agreement to pay remuneration without deduction of tax—Validity—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), All Schedules Rules, r. 23 (2).

Under a service agreement, evidenced in writing, an employee of an association was entitled to receive his monthly salary "without any deductions and taxes, which will be borne by the association." The employers deducted income tax from his salary in order to account for it to the Inland Revenue. In an action by the employee to recover the amounts deducted, on the ground that the deductions were contrary to the terms of his service agreement,

HELD: on construction, the agreement was one to pay sums of money in full without allowing any deductions for income tax; r. 23 (2) of the

All Schedules Rules under the Income Tax Act, 1918, applied to an agreement for the payment of a monthly salary; and, therefore, the agreement was void and could not be enforced against the employers.

[AS TO AGREEMENTS FOR MAKING ANNUAL PAYMENTS WITHOUT DEDUCTION OF TAX, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 17, p. 258.

FOR THE INCOME TAX ACT, 1918, All Schedules Rules, r. 23, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 12, p. 192.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Saunders, [1898] 1 Ch. 17; 67 L.J.Ch. 55; 77 L.T. 450; 21 Digest 105, 775.
- (2) Re Liverpool School for Indigent Blind, [1898] 2 Ch. 669; sub nom. Lund v. Liverpool School for Indigent Blind, 67 L.J.Ch. 680; 79 L.T. 68; 62 J.P. 728; 28 Digest 88, 515.
- (3) Re Jones' Settlement, [1918] 2 Ch. 54; 87 L.J.Ch. 454; 119 L.T. 114; 28 Digest 66, 343.
- (4) Hartland v. Diggins, [1926] A.C. 289; 134 L.T. 492; 28 Digest 88, 506.

ACTION for repayment of sums deducted from monthly salary for income tax.

In January, 1943, the plaintiff, a Polish subject, entered the employment of the defendants, a body not normally working for profit, who were concerned with placing Polish engineers in the most suitable posts available, having regard to the war effort. The plaintiff agreed with the treasurer of the defendants that he should be paid wages or salary without any deductions for income tax, that agreement being evidenced by a letter dated Jan. 8, 1943, by the plaintiff to the defendants which contained the following passage:

"My remuneration will amount during the initial period, which I treat as a trial period, to £20 net per month, payable in advance, later increased to £25 net per month, without any deductions and taxes, which will be borne by the association."

In May, 1946, the defendants deducted tax from the plaintiff's salary which then amounted to £36 a month. The plaintiff having brought this action to recover the sums so deducted as being in breach of the agreement, the defendants contended that the agreement was unenforceable since it was void under r. 23 (2) of the All Schedules Rules of the Income Tax Act, 1918.

H. B. Grant for the plaintiff.

Stogdon for the defendants.

FINNEMORE, J., stated the facts; held that, if the agreement of Jan. 8 were valid, it provided for payment of remuneration without deduction of income tax; and continued: The second point taken is that such an agreement as that of Jan. 8 is not permissible in this country so that it cannot be enforced and is void. It is agreed that it must be construed according to English law. English law, argued counsel for the defendants, does not allow a person subject to liability for income tax to shift that liability to somebody else. An agreement, therefore, with a person to make, free of tax, a payment which is subject to the Income Tax Acts, cannot be enforced. It is, of course, possible to make an arrangement that such a sum should be paid by way of salary, or under deed, or under an order of the court, as will produce a certain sum after deduction of tax. The position then is that a gross sum will be payable and tax must be paid thereon which reduces it to the smaller sum. It is argued by counsel for the plaintiff that that, in effect, is what the present agreement did. It was, it is said, really an agreement, not for £25 or £20 net per month without deduction of tax, but for such a sum as after payment of tax would leave in the plaintiff's hands the sum of £20, or £25, or, at the material time, the sum of £36.

That, however, can be done only in quite plain terms. If the agreement is for a net sum, that cannot be construed as meaning a gross sum which deductions will reduce to the net sum. One authority for that is Re Saunders (1). There it was held that a provision for a net sum of £2,000 meant what it said and not some sum which, after various transactions, would leave a sum of £2,000. This agreement does not mean: "I am to be paid £x salary, 'x' meaning a sum which after income tax has been paid will leave me with £20 or £25 in my pocket." It is a plain agreement for the payment of sums of money net without any deductions for income tax.

A It is plain that it falls within r. 23 of the All Schedules Rules of the Income Tax Act, 1918, which provides:

"(1) A person who refuses to allow a deduction of tax authorised by this Act to be made out of any payment, shall forfeit the sum of fifty pounds. (2) Every agreement for payment of interest, rent, or other annual payment in full without allowing any such deduction shall be void."

B It is said that under that rule this agreement is made void and cannot be enforced by the plaintiff. In support of that point, counsel for the defendants referred to Re Liverpool School for Indigent Blind (2) a case in some ways not dissimilar from the present. An Act of Parliament set up a school for the blind and provided for a salary to the chaplain without any deductions for taxes or otherwise howsoever. The chaplain paid income tax on his £500, but under the Income Tax Act, 1842, it became the duty of the wardens to deduct income tax from the amounts which they paid. It was held that, notwithstanding that the Act of Parliament said "without any deduction for tax or otherwise howsoever," the wardens were bound to make the deduction.

C The next point is whether or not this rule applies to a salary. I think it does. D On that Re Janes' Settlement (3) is in point. The headnote says ([1918] 2 Ch. 54):

"A fixed weekly payment made payable on a fixed day every week for a period possibly exceeding a year is an 'annual sum' within the Income Tax Act, 1842, s. 102, and the Income Tax Act, 1853, s. 40, so that the person liable to make the payment is entitled to deduct income tax."

E That matter is further dealt with in SIMON'S INCOME TAX, vol. 2, p. 352, para. 486, where it is stated:

"... the expression 'agreement' has been widely interpreted by the courts to include transactions in the nature of settlements... marriage settlements, voluntary agreements for separation between husband and wife, agreements relating to payment of salaries [and Re Liverpool School for Indigent Blind (2) is cited], voluntary agreements giving effect to orders by a divorce court or compromises in a probate action."

I think it is right to say that this rule does apply, despite the argument of counsel for the plaintiff, to the payment of salary and, therefore, to this case.

G The final argument of counsel for the plaintiff was based on Hartland v. Diggins (4). In that case, which went to the House of Lords, the employers voluntarily paid income tax on the salary of an employee, the tax amounting to £80 5s. There was no agreement to do it, either oral or in writing, but, in fact, the employers did it. Those facts being known, the employee was assessed on a sum of £580 5s., that is to say, on a salary of £500 and on £80 5s. It was held that that was a proper assessment since the payment of the £80 5s., which was, in effect, his tax, must be considered as part of the emolument or salary which he received from his employers and must be included for tax purposes. H Counsel for the plaintiff relied on that case, pointing out that it was not said there that, if the employers and the employee had agreed to do what was done, the agreement would have been void. I cannot accept that it is to be implied from that case that, if the parties had agreed that the employers should pay the £80 tax, the employee could have insisted on it. The rule, as I understand it, says plainly that he could not and that the agreement would have been void.

Counsel for the plaintiff argued one other point, that the words "which will be borne" take the present agreement out of the mischief of the rule, since all that the State is concerned with is the payment of the income tax, and, so long as it is agreed that the association will pay it, that is good enough. I do not think that is right in principle. Indeed, one can see how that view, if accepted, would defeat, at all events one very obvious purpose for which this rule exists, and that is that the person assessed cannot shift the liability to somebody else. I have come to the conclusion that this was an agreement to pay a net sum free of tax. As such, it was an agreement which was void within the meaning of r. 23 (2) and cannot be enforced by the plaintiff against the defendants. Therefore, his claim for repayment of income tax properly deducted by the defendants cannot succeed.

Judgment for the defendants.

Solicitors: H. H. Wells & Sons (for the plaintiff); Gaunt, Foster & Hill (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

TURBURVILLE AND ANOTHER v. WESTHAM CORPORATION.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Oaksey, Singleton, L.J., and Wynn-Parry, J.), April 21, 24, 28, 1950.]

Education—Remuneration of teachers—Augmentation of war service pay—New Burnham scales of salary introduced in 1945—Right of teachers on war service to increased scales.

Public Authority—Limitation of action—"Public duty or authority"—Agreement to augment teachers' war service pay—Limitation Act, 1939 (c. 21), s. 21 (1)—Local Government Staffs (War Service) Act, 1939 (c. 94), s. 1 (1).

By a resolution, dated May 23, 1939, notice of which was given to their employees, a local education authority decided to give leave of absence to their employees who joined the forces with their approval and to augment the pay and allowances receivable from the government by those employees "to such a sum as together will equal the amount of the salary . . . received by them at the date of their being called up for training or service, with such increments, if any, of their grades which they would have received but for such leave of absence," but excluding "any bonus owing to the increased cost of living . . . granted by the council" after an employee had been called up. The plaintiffs, two qualified assistant teachers employed by the council, were called up for service with the forces in 1940. Until Mar. 31, 1945, they received from the council the sums to which they were entitled under the resolution. By the Remuneration of Teachers Order, 1945, the Minister of Education directed local education authorities to pay to teachers, as from Apr. 1, 1945, the scales of pay contained in the report of the Burnham Committee for 1945, whereby the scales of salary for qualified assistant teachers were increased, the minimum salary being £300 a year with annual increments of £15. The council did not augment the war service pay of teachers on the basis of the new scales, but on Sept. 7, 1945, and Oct. 26, 1945, they wrote to one of the plaintiffs informing him that, as soon as they had reached a decision on the applicability of the new scales to him, they would make the necessary adjustments in their payments. On Feb. 25, 1946, the council informed the plaintiffs that they could not augment their service pay to bring it up to the new rates, and on

Jan. 23, 1947, the plaintiffs commenced an action against the council claiming the balance of the salaries and increments which, they alleged, were due to them. The council pleaded, inter alia, the Limitation Act, 1939, s. 21 (1).

A HELD: (i) "increments" in the resolution of May 23, 1939, was not confined to the annual increments provided for in the scales of salaries in force before 1945, but included the increments of salary provided by the Order of 1945, and, therefore, the plaintiffs were entitled to have their service pay and allowances augmented to the figure of the salaries provided by the Order.

B (ii) the fact that the Burnham Committee, in recommending the increased scale, might have taken into account the increased cost of living was neither relevant nor proved, and, therefore, the increased scale was not a "bonus owing to the increased cost of living," within the resolution of May 23, 1939.

C (iii) in making the payments which they decided to make by the resolution of May 23, 1939, the council were not acting "in pursuance, or execution, or intended execution of any Act of Parliament, or of any public duty or authority," within the Limitation Act, 1939, s. 21 (1), but were merely giving effect to a private arrangement with the plaintiffs which, but for the Local Government Staffs (War Service) Act, 1939, s. 1, they would not have had power to do, and, therefore, the action was not barred under s. 21 (1).

Bradford Corpn. v. Myers ([1916] 1 A.C. 242), applied.

Griffiths v. Smith, ([1941] 1 All E.R. 66), distinguished.

D (iv) in any event, as the action was commenced within twelve months of Feb. 25, 1946, when the council informed the plaintiffs of their decision not to augment the plaintiffs' war service pay in accordance with the new scales, the council were not entitled to plead the Limitation Act, 1939, s. 21 (1), and the plaintiffs were entitled to the sums claimed by them.

E [AS TO STATUTORY PROTECTION OF PUBLIC AUTHORITIES IN RESPECT OF CONTRACTS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 26, p. 294, para. 612, and 1950 Supplement; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 38, pp. 108-110, Nos. 778-784.]

Cases referred to:

F (1) Griffiths v. Smith, [1941] 1 All E.R. 66; [1941] A.C. 170; 110 L.J.K.B. 156; 164 L.T. 386; 105 J.P. 63; 2nd Digest Supp.

(2) Bradford Corpn. v. Myers, [1916] 1 A.C. 242; 85 L.J.K.B. 146; 114 L.T. 83; 80 J.P. 121; 38 Digest 110, 784.

(3) Sharphington v. Fulham Guardians, [1904] 2 Ch. 449; 73 L.J.Ch. 777; 91 L.T. 739; 68 J.P. 510; 38 Digest 109, 783.

G APPEAL by the defendants, West Ham Corporation, from an order of BYRNE, J., dated Jan. 17, 1950, in an action by two assistant teachers, employed by the defendants, claiming balance of salaries and increments alleged to be due to them from the defendants. The defendants had agreed to grant leave of absence to their employees who were called up for service with the forces during the recent war and to augment their war service pay to the amount of salary and increments (but excluding cost of living bonus) which they would have received but for their leave of absence. By the Remuneration of Teachers Order, 1945, an increased scale of salaries for teachers came into force as from Apr. 1, 1945. On Feb. 25, 1946, the defendants informed the plaintiffs that their war service pay would not be augmented in accordance with the new scale of pay and the plaintiffs commenced the action on Jan. 23, 1947. It was contended by the defendants that the new scale was not applicable to the plaintiffs because (a) it was not an "increment," and (b) it included cost of living bonus. They further pleaded the Limitation Act, 1939, s. 21 (1).

BYRNE, J., held that the plaintiffs were entitled to the increased scale and that the Limitation Act did not apply. The facts appear in the judgments of LORD OAKSEY and SINGLETON, L.J.

Harold Williams, K.C., and Squibb for the defendants.

Gardiner, K.C., and Douglas Lowe for the plaintiffs.

Cur. adv. vult.

Apr. 28. The following judgments were read.

LORD OAKSEY: This is an appeal by the West Ham Corporation from a judgment of BYRNE, J., sitting without a jury. The defendants are the local education authority for the borough, and the action out of which the appeal arises was brought against them by two assistant teachers in their schools, for sums of money alleged to be due to them as augmentation of their pay while they were called up for service during the recent war.

On May 23, 1939, the defendants passed a resolution, notice of which was given to their employees, including the plaintiffs. Clause (c) of the resolution [which dealt with "Council employees called up for training or enlisting for service" with H.M. forces] provided:

"... that all such employees as aforesaid have their pay and any other allowances receivable by them or their families from time to time from government or other sources in respect of such training or service augmented by the council to such a sum as together will equal the amount of the salary or wages received by them at the date of their being called up for training or service, with such increments, if any, of their grades which they would have received but for such leave of absence, subject to the usual deductions in respect of superannuation."

Clause (g) is:

"... that in the event of any bonus owing to the increased cost of living being granted by the council after any of the employees referred to in the foregoing paragraphs have been called up for training or service, such bonus is not to be considered as salary or wages, and shall not be payable to employees so granted leave of absence."

On Sept. 5, 1939, the Local Government Staffs (War Service) Act, 1939, was passed, s. 1 of which provides:

"(1) Where a person serving in any capacity specified in the first column of the schedule to this Act (hereafter in this section referred to as 'his civil capacity') ceases so to serve in order to undertake war service, the appropriate authority shall have power to make to or in respect of him such payments as are hereafter in this section provided. (2) While any such person is engaged in war service, the appropriate authority may pay to him, or to or for the benefit of his wife or other dependants nominated by him, a sum which shall not exceed the remuneration which he would have received if he had continued to serve in his civil capacity, after deducting therefrom the amount of his war service pay."

In cl. 4 of the schedule, "Employee of a local authority otherwise than in war service" is given as one of the civil capacities.

The plaintiffs were called up for service in 1940 and served throughout the war, receiving from the defendants such sums as they were entitled to under cl. (c) of the resolution of May 23, 1939, but not receiving a war allowance which was paid to teachers and other employees who were not called up. In August, 1945, the Burnham Committee reported to the Minister of Education that, in regard to the scales of salary for qualified assistant teachers, a class of teacher to which the plaintiffs belonged, the scale of minimum salary should be £300 per annum with annual increments of £15, and also, by para. 16, it was provided:

"No teacher in service on Mar. 31, 1945, shall receive by reason of the operation of these scales a smaller rate of salary than he/she would have been eligible to receive under the operation of the Burnham Reports as in force on that date. (b) For the purpose of this section the rate of salary shall be computed by adding together (i) scale salary, (ii) war allowance, and (iii) while the teacher remains in the same post, any allowance paid to the teacher on Mar. 31, 1945, under previous Burnham Reports."

The Minister of Education gave effect to this report by the Remuneration of Teachers Order, 1945 (S.R. & O., 1945, No. 1317), and, as from Apr. 1, 1945, this scale of salary has been paid to all teachers not in the forces, but not to the plaintiffs in this case, nor to other teachers in the forces. On Feb. 17, 1945, in anticipation of the new Burnham scales, the defendants asked for the advice of the Burnham Committee whether they ought to augment the salaries of teachers on war service on the basis of the new scales without regard to a war bonus, and on Sept. 7, 1945, and again on Oct. 26, 1945, they wrote to one of the plaintiffs that, as soon as a decision had been reached as to the applicability of the new scales, they would make the necessary adjustment in their payments to him. The matter was taken up by the general secretary of the National Union of Teachers in January, 1946, and it was not until Feb. 25, 1946, that the plaintiffs were informed that the defendants had decided "... that they were unable to depart from the system of augmentation of war service pay of teachers to the level of the basic scales operative prior to the adoption of the new consolidated Burnham scales."

The present action was begun on Jan 23, 1947. In these circumstances four questions have been raised and argued: (i) Do the words, "increments, if any, of their grades which they would have received but for such leave of absence," in cl. (c) of the resolution of May 23, 1939, refer only to the annual increments provided for in the scales of salary then in force, or do they refer also to increments provided for by the scale of salaries introduced as from Apr. 1, 1945? (ii) Should any deduction be made in respect of war allowances on the ground that the scale introduced on Apr. 1, 1945, must be taken to have included a bonus owing to the increased cost of living within the meaning of cl. (g) of the notice? (iii) Does the action fall within s. 21 (1) of the Limitation Act, 1939, which is as follows:

"No action shall be brought against any person for any act done in pursuance, or execution, or intended execution of any Act of Parliament, or of any public duty or authority, or in respect of any neglect or default in the execution of any such Act, duty or authority, unless it is commenced before the expiration of one year from the date on which the cause of action accrued."

I do not think I need set out the proviso. (iv) Is the action barred in the circumstances of these cases?

In my opinion, the scale introduced on Apr. 1, 1945, was an increment within the meaning of cl. (c) of the resolution of May 23, 1939, and the plaintiffs were entitled to be paid accordingly. The word "increments" in cl. (c) is not qualified in any way, and, undoubtedly, the plaintiffs would have received the scale obtaining for their grade of teacher after Apr. 1, 1945, but for their leave of absence. That scale was not, in my opinion, a "bonus owing to the increased cost of living ... granted by the council," within the meaning of cl. (g) of the notice, and the fact that the Burnham Committee, in recommending it, may have taken into account the increased cost of living is neither relevant nor proved, nor is the fact that para. 16 of the Burnham Report uses war allowance as a factor in calculating the minimum salary which any teacher shall receive.

I turn, therefore, to the much discussed question of the construction of s. 21 (1) of the Limitation Act, 1939. Counsel for the defendants does not contend that the neglect complained of was in the execution of the Local Government Staffs (War Service) Act, 1939, which, he concedes, alone made the payments intra vires, but he says that it was in the execution of the Education Act, 1921, which, by s. 148 (1), empowers the local education authority to appoint and pay teachers. I confess that I think counsel was bound to concede that the payment of teachers while on war service was ultra vires under the Education Act, and only became intra vires by virtue of the Local Government Staffs (War Service) Act, 1939. It may, however, be said that the payments were made in execution of that Act, or come within the words used by VISCOUNT MAUGHAM ([1941] 1 All E.R. 76) in Griffiths v. Smith (1):

"It is sufficient to establish that the act was in substance done in the course of exercising for the benefit of the public an authority or a power conferred on the public authority not being a mere incidental power, such as a power to carry on a trade. The words in the section are 'public duty or authority,' and the latter word must be taken to have its ordinary meaning of legal power or right, and does not imply a positive obligation."

So here it may be said that the act of agreeing to pay and of paying, or neglecting to pay, was, in substance, done in the course of exercising for the benefit of the public an authority or a power, though not a duty or positive obligation, conferred on the public authority by the Local Government Staffs (War Service) Act, 1939, and that this was not merely an incidental power, such as a power to carry on trade.

The real question seems to me to be whether the payment was made "for the benefit of the public." It was made by the defendants to all their employees equally, but it was not made on the condition that the employees should return to the service of the defendants after their war service. It appears to me, therefore, that it may more properly be said to have been made for the benefit of the employees, though it may have had an indirect bearing on the morale of the employees who were not called up and on other members of the public. In Griffiths v. Smith (1) the school premises were being used for a purpose which the trial judge had expressly found was a school purpose, and VISCOUNT MAUGHAM said that this finding was crucial. In the present case there is no such finding, nor, in my opinion, could there have been, for the payments were to be made to employees who were no longer employed in the work of the defendants, and who might never again be so employed. It is to be observed that LORD PORTER expressed the view ([1941] 1 All E.R. 91), with which I agree, that, in order that the act done should be held to be done in the exercise of a public duty, there must be a correlative public right. In Griffiths v. Smith (1), there was, in a sense, a correlative right on the part of the parent to be present in the school as an invitee, though the right was not one of positive obligation. Here, however, the teacher had no correlative right to the augmented payments, which were entirely in the discretion of the defendants, and there is no finding that the payment was made in the interests of the school as such, as there was in Griffiths v. Smith (1). On the whole, therefore, though not without hesitation, I come to the conclusion that the section is not applicable to the present case.

On the last question, I am of opinion that in any event the defendants cannot succeed, in view of the correspondence, which shows that they led the plaintiffs to believe that the question whether these payments were going to be made was under consideration until February, 1946, and that, in such circumstances, the defendants cannot be heard to say that there was a cause of action before that date.

SINGLETON, L.J.: The plaintiffs' claim is based on para. (c) of the resolution of the defendants, dated May 23, 1939, and published by them on June 1. That resolution dealt with:

“Council employees called up for training or enlisting for service with H.M. naval, military, air or territorial forces.”

[His LORDSHIP read para. (c) of the resolution, and continued:] The word “increments,” as used in that paragraph, is not a term of art. It bears no direct relation to the “annual increments” mentioned in the report of the Burnham Committee in 1938 [which contained the scales of pay in force in 1939]. The resolution of the defendants was dealing not with teachers only, but with the defendants’ employees generally. The word “increment” means an increase or an addition to something. The result of the resolution was that the defendants undertook to make up the amount of government pay and allowances to the amount of the salary or wages which the employee was receiving at the date of his being called up for service, plus any increase which might be granted to those of the grade which the employee occupied, and which he would have received had he not been given leave of absence to undertake service with His Majesty’s Forces. There were increases after each of the plaintiffs joined the forces, and those were allowed in the calculation of the amounts due to them until Mar. 31, 1945. As from that date, teachers employed by the defendants were paid on a higher scale, as recommended by the report of the Burnham Committee in 1945. It is not disputed that, had each of the plaintiffs remained throughout as a teacher, he would at the material time have been entitled to be paid on the higher scale. To my mind, this was an increase in pay and it is covered by the words “increments . . . of their grades” in para. (c) of the resolution of May 23, 1939.

The plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to succeed in their claim, subject to para. (g) of the resolution, on which the defendants rely. The plea at the end of para. 10 of the amended defence is that the 1945 scales of payment to teachers include war bonus, and that, under para. (g) of the resolution,

“ . . . such bonus is not to be considered as salary or wages, and shall not be payable to employees so granted leave of absence.”

This is in the nature of an exception from the promise made to, or the contract made with, an employee who joined the forces. If the defendants can establish it, they are entitled to relief to the extent to which they show that the increment or increase is a “bonus owing to the increased cost of living . . . granted by the council” after the employee was called up. The proof of that is clearly on the defendants. There is no evidence to show the way in which the Burnham Committee arrived at their conclusions in 1945 or what caused the Board of Education to accept their recommendations. No doubt the committee had in mind the increased cost of living when they reported in 1945, but it seems to me to be impossible to say positively that any part of the increased scale of pay was a “bonus owing to the increased cost of living . . . granted by the council,” within para. (g) of the resolution. The increase in the scale of pay was made to teachers generally after the report of the Burnham Committee in 1945.

I now come to the plea in the amended defence to the effect that the defendants rely on s. 21 of the Limitation Act, 1939. There was some uncertainty in the minds of the defendants as to the effect of the 1945 scale of pay, and on Feb. 17, 1945, they wrote to the secretary of the Burnham Committee a letter inquiring the position. In one paragraph of the letter they say:

“Although the proposed new scales of teachers’ salaries are consolidated and war bonus is not identified as such, the opinion is held that some amount due to increased cost of living was in the minds of the Burnham Committee in formulating the scales, and this gives rise to the point on which the council desire to be informed, which is—are they expected to augment salaries on the basis of the new scales without regard to a war bonus aspect? This would act, it is feared, to the prejudice or unfairly as compared with other employees of the council whose bonus has not been consolidated . . . Therefore, an answer is desired to the questions: Are the council compelled to use the new scales of salaries in connection with augmentation? If so, what amount in the new salaries scales can be regarded as covering the increased cost of living?"

So far as the documents show, no answer was received to that communication, but on May 30, 1945, the defendants issued a notice, which is headed: "To teachers serving in His Majesty's Forces," and that includes the plaintiffs, who still were. At the foot of the document (which was to contain details of the amount to be credited to the teacher), there is a memorandum in these terms:

"The question of the augmentation of your salary to the new Burnham scale is under consideration by the appropriate committee of the council, and up to the moment no decision has been given. In the meantime, payment is being made to all West Ham teachers upon the basis of their March, 1945, salary—subject to any necessary adjustment in due course."

There was further correspondence lasting for some months, and it was not until Jan. 31, 1946, that the defendants arrived at a decision. In a letter of that date, addressed to the general secretary of the National Union of Teachers, they wrote:

"Having carefully considered the matter from all aspects, and also had in mind that the teachers returning from service will be coming back to positions carrying consolidated rates of pay under the new Burnham scales, the committee reported that they were unable to recommend the council to depart from the system of augmentation operative prior to the new consolidated rates being adopted, which is governed by their resolutions dealing with the augmentation of service pay. The report of the committee was submitted to and adopted by the council at their last meeting."

In May, 1946, the defendants received a deputation from the local executive of the National Union of Teachers, and there is further correspondence, but ultimately on Dec. 7, 1946, the claim of the plaintiffs was rejected. The defendants, indeed, wrote a letter which contained this paragraph:

"The committee deplore the further revival of this claim which they cannot regard as being well-founded either in law or equity, and they must reject it."

The writ was issued on Jan. 23, 1947, and I think that it is a matter for regret that a plea under the Limitation Act, 1939, is raised in view of this correspondence and of the negotiations which had taken place owing to the effort of the teachers and the National Union of Teachers to avoid litigation, because people are apt to look on matters of this kind in 1947 in a somewhat different way from that in which they approached them in the middle of 1939. The disposition generally for some years, I think, has been, as far as possible, to negotiate on matters to avoid litigation. The effect of this plea will be somewhat different. One cannot imagine that the National Union of Teachers will be slow to issue a writ in the future, if they have a dispute, as they may well have, with local authorities.

That which has to be decided in the first place is: What is the effect of this correspondence? The defendants say that the question is under consideration by them. The result of their deliberations is shown by the letter of Jan. 31, 1946, to the National Union of Teachers—that was the awaited communication. The action was commenced within one year from that date. The answer to the question depends on the construction of the memorandum of May 30, 1945. That contains a promise that any necessary adjustment will be made in due course. Does it mean: "If you do not take any steps to enforce your rights meanwhile, we will make any necessary adjustment, and in the meantime time shall not run"? No steps were taken by the plaintiffs' advisers until the defendants had signified their decision not to make any adjustment. It is claimed on behalf of the plaintiffs that time does not run until the defendants indicate their decision to them. Certainly, a strong case is made that the defendants ought not to be allowed to take advantage of the plaintiffs' forbearance, in view of the correspondence, and, particularly, in view of the document of May 30, 1945. I prefer, however, to base my opinion on the applicability of s. 21 (1) of the Limitation Act, 1939, on another ground.

A The plea under the statute is in general terms. In the course of the reply of counsel for the defendants I asked him to specify the part of s. 21 (1) under which he claimed that the case fell, and he answered that the defendants' case was that the failure to pay was neglect or default by the defendants in the execution of their duty under the Education Act, 1921. Under s. 148 (1) of that Act, the local education authority is empowered to appoint teachers and to assign salaries or remuneration to them. The claim of the plaintiffs is not in relation to any duty under that section. No complaint is made by the plaintiffs B that the defendants failed in any duty arising under the Education Act. It is said that they owe money by reason of a contract made with, or a promise made to, certain teachers at a time of national emergency. The defendants, like other councils, had issued circulars in the early part of 1939. A question arose whether they had power to make payments of the kind that they were offering to make, and, it may be, in some cases, making. To set this question at C rest, the Local Government Staffs (War Service) Act, 1939, was passed on Sept. 5, 1939. The schedule to that Act embraces a variety of employees of local authorities and others, and it includes teachers. Each of the plaintiffs was, in fact, called up for military service or joined the forces after the passing of this Act. No doubt, it was praiseworthy for local authorities to encourage their employees to join the forces in time of national emergency. I cannot see D that in agreeing to pay them the amounts set out in para. (c) of the resolution of May 23, 1939, they were thereby undertaking a "public duty," within the meaning of s. 21 (1) of the Limitation Act, 1939. They were not bound to make such an agreement with their teachers or with any other employees. They entered into a contract voluntarily, and, when they made payments under such a contract, they did so in pursuance of the contract, and not in the execution E of any public duty. The subsequent failure to pay amounts due is not neglect or default in the execution of a public duty, for there was no such public duty, and, if it should be argued—and it was not—that it was neglect or default in the execution of any public authority, the same reasoning applies. There was authority given by the Local Government Staffs (War Service) Act, 1939, to make the payments, but the authority so given was not a public authority. F It was no more than an authorisation to the appropriate authorities to make payments, without which authorisation the payments might not have been within the power of the appropriate authority. In other words, it was enabling the defendants to do what they had promised by their circulars.

G The principle underlying a plea under the statute is set out in HALSBURY'S LAWS OF ENGLAND, Hailsham edn., vol. 26, p. 294, para. 612, in this way:

"The performance, or breach, of a contract which a public authority has the power, but not the duty, to make, is not within the protection."

H That, in essence, was the submission of counsel for the plaintiffs in the course of his further reply. Counsel for the defendants did not deal very fully with this part of the case when opening the appeal, but in his reply he cited to the court Griffiths v. Smith (1). The words of VISCOUNT MAUGHAM ([1941] 1 All E.R. 76), which have been read by my Lord, provide the strongest argument for the defendants. It is important to notice what kind of case was then under consideration. The action was against the managers of a school and arose out of a defect in the school building, a floor of which collapsed, as the result of which serious injuries were caused to the plaintiff, who was attending, on invitation, an exhibition of work of the pupils, of whom her son was one. VISCOUNT SIMON, L.C., said ([1941] 1 All E.R. 72):

"It is true that St. Clement's school could have been carried on without arranging to hold this display, but that is not the true test. The real question is whether the managers, in authorising the issue of invitations to the display on the school premises after school hours, should be regarded as exercising their function of managing the school. To apply the distinction indicated by SIR WILFRID GREENE, M.R., was the managers' action 'something incidental to, and part of the process of carrying on' their statutory duty? Both the trial judge and the Court of Appeal took the view that in this matter the managers were doing an act which formed part of the operation of carrying on a public elementary school. As SIR WILFRID GREENE, M.R., observed, a gathering such as this is a very familiar type of gathering in schools of all sorts. TUCKER, J., reached his conclusion in a passage ([1938] 3 All E.R. 538) which I must quote: 'In my view, the managers had a material interest in inviting the plaintiff to the premises, in the sense that it was in the interests of the prosperity and success of the school to enlist the support and co-operation of the parents of the pupils in the work done at the school. The display in question consisted entirely of an exhibition of the work done by the pupils and of the singing of songs which they had learnt at the school. I accordingly hold that the plaintiff was an invitee and not a mere licensee. I am further of opinion that on the occasion in question the school was being used as a public elementary school, and not for some extraneous purposes unconnected with its functions as a school.'"

VISCOUNT MAUGHAM said ([1941] 1 All E.R. 74):

"I have nothing to add to what my noble and learned friend VISCOUNT SIMON, L.C., has already said as regards the occasion itself. It was in fact an exhibition of work done by the pupils and a performance of songs which they had learnt at the school. It was held by TUCKER, J., that this was a use for the purposes of a public elementary school. The Court of Appeal agreed with this crucial finding of fact, and I do not think any of your Lordships felt any doubt that that finding was justified."

In another passage in his opinion VISCOUNT MAUGHAM again considered the importance of what the features of that case were, and he referred to the decision of the House of Lords in Bradford Corp'n. v. Myers (2). I do not wish to read again the words of VISCOUNT MAUGHAM (ibid., 76), which have been read by my Lord. I do not regard them as covering this case or the principle stated in the Bradford Corp'n. case (2). In Griffiths v. Smith (1), LORD WRIGHT said ([1941] 1 All E.R. 82) that Bradford Corp'n. v. Myers (2) showed "... that the thing done is not necessarily done in execution of a public duty or authority by a statutory corporation merely because it is intra vires."

Without reading them, I draw attention to the words of LORD PORTER in the same case (ibid., 91).

I think it is desirable that I should refer to Bradford Corp'n. v. Myers (2), as the decision in that case seems to me really to be nearer the present case than is the decision in Griffiths v. Smith (1), having regard to the facts of the different cases. In the Bradford Corp'n. case (2):

"The defendants, a municipal corporation, were authorised by Act of Parliament to carry on the undertaking of a gas company and were bound to supply gas to the inhabitants of the district, and they were also empowered to sell the coke produced in the manufacture of the gas. The defendants contracted to sell and deliver a ton of coke to the plaintiff, and by the negligence of their agent the coke was shot through the plaintiff's shop window. More than six months afterwards the plaintiff commenced an action of negligence against the defendants. The defendants pleaded s. 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, as a bar to the action: Held, that the act complained of was not an act done in the direct execution of a statute, or in the discharge of a public duty or the exercise of a public authority, and that the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, afforded no defence to the action."

A LORD BUCKMASTER, L.C., said ([1916] 1 A.C. 246):

"The difficulty cannot, I think, be resolved by the simple distinction between questions of tort arising out of contract and questions of tort arising independently of contract; but the fact that actions on contract made by the local authorities have been held to be outside the statute shows that the courts have considered the words of the Act to need careful and strict scrutiny. This, indeed, is apparent both from the purpose and the language of the statute. Its effect is to limit, as against the general public and in favour of certain persons, the period for bringing actions already fixed by existing statutes, and at the same time to penalise all persons who bring such actions and fail, by making them pay solicitor and client instead of party and party costs . . . In other words, it is not because the act out of which an action arises is within their power that a public authority enjoy the benefit of the statute. It is because the act is one which is either an act in the direct execution of a statute, or in the discharge of a public duty, or the exercise of a public authority. I regard these latter words as meaning a duty owed to all the public alike or an authority exercised impartially with regard to all the public. It assumes that there are duties and authorities which are not public, and that in the exercise or discharge of such duties or authorities this protection does not apply. This distinction is well illustrated by the present case. It may be conceded that the local authority were bound properly to dispose of their residual products; but there was no obligation upon them to dispose by sale, though this was the most obvious and ordinary way. Still less was there any duty to dispose of them to the respondent. No member of the public could have complained if the respondent had not been supplied; nor had any member of the public the right to require the local authority to contract with him."

With that speech of LORD BUCKMASTER, L.C., LORD DUNEDIN was in complete agreement. VISCOUNT HALDANE used these words (ibid., 252):

F "My Lords, I think that FARWELL, J., was right [in his decision in Sharlington v. Fulham Guardians (3)]. For it seems to me that the language of s. 1 [of the Act of 1893] does not extend to an act which is done merely incidentally and in the sense that it is the direct result, not of the public duty or authority as such, but of some contract which it may be that such duty or authority put it into the power of a public body to make, but which it need not have made at all."

G The neglect or default of the defendants in the present case was not in regard to a public duty, nor in regard to a public authority. It arose out of a failure to fulfil a promise or to carry out the terms of a contract. In making that promise, or in entering into the contract, the defendants were not carrying out any duty under the Education Act, 1921. They were doing something voluntarily, because H they thought it the right thing to do. They were in no sense bound to do it, there was no obligation on them to pass the resolution of May 23, 1939, or to publish it. It was open to them to withdraw it at any time except as to persons who had acted on it, and, if they had done so, they could not have been properly charged with neglect of any public duty. In my view, this case is covered by the decision of the House of Lords in Bradford Corp'n. v. Myers (2), and s. 21 (1) of the Limitation Act, 1939, does not apply. This appeal, in my opinion, should be dismissed.

WYNN-PARRY, J.: I agree. On the question of construction, I would observe that, according to the OXFORD DICTIONARY, the word "increment" is a word of wide meaning. It does not import of itself the limitation that it is referable only to a payment that is annual. In order that it should, in a particular case, bear such a limited meaning, a proper context must be provided. There is nothing on the face of the resolution of May 23, 1939, which provides such a context. It is true that, so far as concerns the rate of payment of certificated assistant teachers, they are entitled to a minimum payment and an annual increment thereon with the limitation of a maximum. On the other hand, the resolution in question extends to all employees of the defendants. Prima facie, the word "increment" should be given the same meaning to whatever class of employee it is applied. It is not shown by the evidence that all classes of employees were employed on the terms that they should be entitled to annual increments, in which case it might be said that the necessary context had been provided for limiting the meaning of increment in the resolution. Many of the employees may well have been employed on different bases. Thus, it follows that the circumstance that the members of a particular class of employees, the assistant certificated teachers, were entitled to annual increments does not provide a sufficient context, even in the case of this class, to limit in the resolution the wide meaning of the word "increment."

I do not desire to add anything to what has been said by the other members of the court on the contention put forward by the defendants under para. (g) of the resolution. As regards the applicability of s. 21 (1) of the Limitation Act, 1939, I agree that the original contracts between the defendants and the respective plaintiffs were made by the defendants in the direct execution of their public duty under the Education Act, 1921, s. 148 (1), and that s. 21 (1) of the Act of 1939 would apply to those contracts. I further agree that the effect of the resolution was to add to the contractual terms between the defendants and the respective plaintiffs. I do not agree, however, with counsel for the defendants that the result follows for which he contends, viz., that those terms are to be read into, or with, the original contracts so that it can be said of them that, just as s. 21 (1) of the Limitation Act, 1939, applies to the original contracts, so it must apply to the added terms. Such a result would be plainly contrary to the facts. Unlike the original contracts, the added terms were not brought into existence under or pursuant to the Education Act, 1921. Indeed, they could not be justified under that Act. They were brought into existence by virtue of the Local Government Staffs (War Service) Act, 1939, s. 1, and the applicability or otherwise of s. 21 (1) of the Limitation Act, 1939, must be tested by reference to that Act. The effect of the Local Government Staffs (War Service) Act, 1939, s. 1, was to do no more than authorise the defendants, if they should think fit, to arrange with the plaintiffs, either as a voluntary act or as a contract, to make the payments mentioned in the section. If and so far as the defendants exercised that authority in any case, they did not do so, in my view, in pursuance or execution of any Act of Parliament or of any public duty or authority. All they did was to enter into a private arrangement with the plaintiffs, which, but for the statutory authority in question, they could not have done.

In Griffiths v. Smith (1) VISCOUNT MAUGHAM said ([1941] 1 All E.R. 76):

"It is sufficient to establish that the act was in substance done in the course of exercising for the benefit of the public an authority or a power conferred on the public authority not being a mere incidental power, such as a power to carry on a trade."

From this, I think, it must follow that, for an authority to be a "public authority," within s. 21 (1) of the Limitation Act, 1939, it must be an authority exercised or capable of being exercised for the benefit of the public. Undoubtedly, s. 1 of the Local Government Staffs (War Service) Act, 1939, gives the defendants an authority, but, in my view, it was no more than a power to do that which otherwise they could not have done (but which they, and probably other councils, had attempted to do), namely, to make payments for the benefit of individual employees, in any case where they thought fit to do so. Thus, although the authority is given to public authorities, it is not a "public authority," within s. 21 (1) of the Limitation Act, 1939. Therefore, that section does not apply in the present case.

A Lastly, I agree that, even had our conclusion on this point been otherwise, the defendants by their conduct are not entitled to rely on s. 21 (1) in this case. In my view, the effect of the correspondence which was read to us was clearly to establish an agreement between the parties that the plaintiffs should hold their hands until the defendants had finally determined their attitude. The B defendants' final determination was not communicated to the plaintiffs until Feb. 25, 1946, less than a year before the issue of the writ on Jan. 23, 1947.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: G. E. Smith (for the defendants); Kenneth Wormald (for the plaintiffs).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

C

D WESTMINSTER CITY COUNCIL v. HASTE.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Danckwerts, J.), May 9, 1950.]

Company—Receiver—Preferential payments—Rates—Failure to pay out of assets coming to receiver's hands—Subsequent loss of assets—Liability of receiver—Companies Act, 1929 (c. 23), s. 78 (1).

E A company owed £63 9s. 8d. for rates in respect of its occupation of premises from Oct. 2, 1939, to Nov. 28, 1939. On May 16, 1940, a receiver of the assets of the company was appointed by the holders of a debenture secured by a floating charge. On June 24, 1940, an order was made for the winding-up of the company, and the appointment of the receiver on behalf of the debenture-holders was authorised by an order made on
F Sept. 30, 1940. On July 9, 1940, the rating authority made a formal demand for payment of the amount due to them. The receiver continued to carry on the business of the company, and until 1945 the receipts were less than the expenditure. In November, 1945, however, the receiver had £91 in hand, but he failed to make any payment to the rating authority, notwithstanding their repeated demands. From 1947 onwards the business
G was run at a loss, and the receiver eventually informed the rating authority that he had no assets out of which to pay them. In an action by the authority claiming damages against the receiver, it was contended by the authority that the receiver had committed a breach of his statutory duty under the Companies Act, 1929, s. 78 (1), and s. 264 (1) (a), by paying away the assets of the company in the course of his trading without making provision for their preferential claim.
H

HELD: s. 78 (1) of the Act of 1929 was not merely a negative provision whereby the receiver was under no duty to make preferential payments so long as he did not pay the debenture-holders, but it required the receiver to pay the preferential creditors out of any assets coming to his hands, and, therefore, as the receiver had assets in 1945 out of which he could have paid the authority, but had not done so, he was liable to them in tort.

Woods v. Winkill ([1913] 2 Ch. 303), considered.

[AS TO PAYMENT OF PREFERENTIAL DEBTS BY RECEIVER, see HALSBURY, Vol. 5, 1949 Edn., pp. 579, 580, para. 918; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 10, p. 793, No. 4982, and Supplements.]

Case referred to:

- (1) Woods v. Winskill, [1913] 2 Ch. 303; 82 L.J.Ch. 447; 109 L.T. 399; 10 Digest 793, 4982.

ACTION by the Westminster City Council claiming damages from the defendant for breach of his statutory duty to them as receiver of the assets of the London Piano and Radio Co., Ltd.

The company owed the sum of £63 9s. 8d. to the plaintiffs in respect of the general rate, on account of its occupation of certain premises from Oct. 2, 1939, to Nov. 28, 1939. In May, 1940, the defendant was appointed receiver of the company by the holders of a debenture secured by a floating charge, his appointment being subsequently authorised by an order of the court. In June, 1940, an order was made for the winding-up of the company, but the defendant continued to carry on the business of the company. On July 9, 1940, the plaintiffs made a formal demand for payment of their claim, and repeated their demand from time to time. Although the defendant had £91 in hand in 1945, he failed to make any payment to the plaintiffs, and, finally, he informed them that he had no assets out of which to pay. The plaintiffs contended that the defendant had committed a breach of his duty to them under s. 78 (1) and s. 264 (1) (a) of the Companies Act, 1929, and was, therefore, liable to them in damages.

J. A. Wolfe for the plaintiffs.

Aronson, K.C., and Wigan for the defendant.

DANCKWERTS, J.: In this case I have to decide rather a curious point arising under the Companies Acts in regard to payments which are to be made by a receiver appointed out of court by debenture-holders. The company concerned is London Piano and Radio Co., Ltd., which occupied at one time certain premises in Oxford Street, London, and carries on business trading in pianos and radio-sets, and, more particularly, carrying out repairs to pianos and radio sets. The plaintiffs are the Westminster City Council, who have a claim for £63 9s. 8d. for rates. On May 16, 1940, the defendant, George Henry Haste, was appointed by debenture-holders to be receiver of the assets of the company, and he took possession. There was a defect in his appointment in that no leave had been obtained for the appointment under the Courts Emergency Powers Act, 1939, but an order was subsequently made on Sept. 30, 1940, authorising the appointment, and he was re-appointed as receiver on Nov. 9, 1940, but he acted as receiver as from May 16, 1940. Meanwhile, on June 11, 1940, a petition for the winding-up of the company had been presented, and a winding-up order was made on June 24, 1940. On July 9, 1940, a formal demand for payment of the rates of £63 9s. 8d. was made by the plaintiffs, and that demand was repeated from time to time. Sometimes no reply was given, but on two occasions a reply was made. Finally, the defendant replied that he had no assets out of which to pay, and the writ claiming damages in this action was issued on Nov. 5, 1948. The contention is that the plaintiffs' claim for rates was a preferential debt under the Companies Acts, and that the defendant has committed a tort by paying away assets of the company in payments to trading and ordinary creditors without making provision for the plaintiffs' preferential claim.

The relevant sections for the purpose of this action are s. 78 (1) of the Companies Act, 1929, which is now replaced by s. 94 (1) of the Companies Act, 1948, and s. 264 (1) (a) of the Act of 1929, now replaced by s. 319 (1) (a) of the present Act, without any substantial change. The provisions of s. 78 (1) of the earlier Act and s. 94 (1) of the present Act are as follows:

A "Where, in the case of a company registered in England, either a receiver is appointed on behalf of the holders of any debentures of the company secured by a floating charge, or possession is taken by or on behalf of those debenture holders of any property comprised in or subject to the charge, then, if the company is not at the time in course of being wound-up, the debts which in every winding-up are under the provisions of Part V of this Act relating to preferential payments to be paid in priority to all other debts, shall be paid out of any assets coming to the hands of the receiver or other person taking possession as aforesaid in priority to any claim for principal or interest in respect of the debentures."

B Section 264 (1) of the Act of 1929, which corresponds to s. 319 (1) of the Act of 1948 (except that the later Act omits the reference to "parochial rates"), provides:

C "In a winding-up there shall be paid in priority to all other debts (a) All parochial or other local rates due from the company at the relevant date, and having become due and payable within twelve months next before that date . . ."

D It appears, from accounts which have been proved by a certified copy in accordance with the provisions of the Companies Acts, and from the evidence of the receiver, that the business of the company has been carried on by the receiver for some ten years after the date of his appointment and the date when the company went into liquidation, and that, while the receipts were rather less than the expenditure in the earlier years, at the end of the period from May 16, 1945, to Nov. 15, 1945, the receipts exceeded the outgoings, and the receiver had, according to the accounts, the sum of £91 in hand on Nov. 15, 1945. At the end of the next six monthly period he had £60 in hand, and on May 15, 1947, he had about £5. Since then there has been a slight loss. The business of the company is still being carried on. It was clear from the evidence E which he gave before me that, in some respects, the receiver misunderstood his position and did not understand his duties. He talked of the "old company," and spoke as though he, as receiver, created some entity, which was a different company from the company which carried on business before his appointment. In regard to that, he was plainly mistaken. There was one company, and one F company only, and the business which the receiver has been and is carrying on is the business of the company, and nothing else, even though the company is in liquidation. Therefore, all he meant when he said that sort of thing was to indicate that he regarded the moneys which he acquired as receiver in 1945 as moneys produced by the efforts of his own management rather than by the efforts of those who previously managed the company before the period of his appointment. That may well have led him to take the wrong view of his G duties in regard to payments which he ought to make in regard to the company's creditors. There is a further point in the present case which is due to the long period of time which has elapsed since the company went into liquidation and the receiver was appointed, viz., a question under the Limitation Act, 1939. In regard to any assets of the company which were in existence when the receiver was appointed, and the payments which may or may not have been H made out of those assets, and, indeed, as regards any assets in the hands of the receiver until Nov. 5, 1942 (i.e., six years before the issue of the writ in this action), the claim of the plaintiffs for breach of the defendants' duty would appear to be barred, by s. 2 (1) (a) of the Limitation Act, 1939, as being based on an action for tort. Therefore, the plaintiffs' claim is really based on the fact that at some date subsequent to Nov. 5, 1942, the receiver had in his hands assets of the company out of which he was bound to pay the plaintiff's preferential claim.

The only authority which appears to touch the point is Wood v. Winskill (1), a decision of ASTBURY, J., in which there was a claim for £234 under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, before the receiver was appointed. Under s. 5 (3) of the Act of 1906 and the provisions of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, this was a preferential claim to the extent of £100 on a winding-up of the company. The company's assets, when the receiver took possession, were £61. The receiver continued to carry on the business of the company, and the assets which he took over on his appointment were all expended in one way and another. The company was wound-up, without the plaintiff's claim having been met, and she brought an action against the receiver complaining that he had applied the company's assets in payment of ordinary creditors without providing for her preferential claim, and she claimed damages accordingly. It should be noticed that this case depended on s. 107 (1) of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, which differed in respect of one word from the provisions of s. 78 (1) of the Act of 1929, and s. 94 (1) of the Act of 1948. The difference is this. In the reference to the preferential payments which are to be made by the receiver, the words in s. 107 (1) of the Act of 1908 are:

" . . . shall be paid forthwith out of any assets coming to the hands of the receiver or other person taking possession as aforesaid in priority to any claim for principal or interest in respect of the debentures."

The word "forthwith" which appeared in that section did not appear in the corresponding section of the Acts of 1929 and 1948. Counsel for the defendant contends that the omission of the word "forthwith" is important, and, indeed, decisive, in regard to the plaintiffs' claim in the present case. In the course of the argument in Woods v. Winskill (1), counsel for the plaintiff said:

"Section 107 requires that the plaintiff's preferential claim 'shall be paid forthwith out of any assets coming to the hands of the receiver'."

Thereupon ASTBURY, J., observed:

"The section goes on 'in priority to any claim for principal or interest in respect of the debentures'. Does it do more than give you priority over the debentures?"

The reply to that question was:

"That construction gives no meaning to the word 'forthwith'."

Counsel for the defendant, in his argument in that case, said:

"[Section 107] merely supplements s. 209 and gives preferential debts as against assets in the hands of a receiver the same priority that they would have in a winding-up."

ASTBURY, J., observed:

"That construction gives no meaning to 'forthwith' out of 'any' assets."

It would thus appear that, in the course of the argument, the learned judge was giving some importance to the presence of the word "forthwith." In his judgment, however, he made no reference to it. He concluded his judgment with the following observations ([1913] 2 Ch. 311):

"Two views have been contended for before me as to the true construction of s. 107. (1) That a receiver and manager with notice of a preferential claim is liable for damages in tort for exhausting the then assets of the company in making payments to ordinary creditors, without first applying the same or a sufficient part thereof in satisfying such preferential claim. (2) That his only obligation thereunder is to avoid applying such assets, after notice, in actual payment of principal or interest to debenture-holders before satisfying thereout the preferential claim. There does not appear to be any direct authority on this point, but in my judgment the former is the correct view."

He then assessed the damages. The learned judge held, therefore, that, under the section as it stood in the Act of 1908, there was not merely a negative obligation on the part of the receiver not to pay the debenture-holders before paying preferential creditors, but there was an obligation on him to pay the preferential creditors out of the assets on the date when he took over, and, if he did not make that payment, but applied those assets towards other liabilities, he became liable in damages. Of course, as it was correctly pointed out, ASTBURY, J., was dealing only with the assets which the receiver took over, and not with moneys which might subsequently come to the hands of the receiver in the course of his management of the company. To that extent, therefore, Woods v. Winskill (1) gives no assistance in regard to the present case.

There are, therefore, two points which make this case different from Woods v. Winskill (1)—(i) the fact that the plaintiffs base their claim on the acquisition of later assets by the receiver, as their claim to be paid out of the assets which were in existence when he was appointed is barred by the Limitation Act, 1939, s. 2 (1) (a); and (ii) the omission of the word "forthwith." As regards the point whether any obligation is imposed on the receiver to pay, it seems to me, that the decision of ASTBURY, J., is of some assistance in this respect. He held that there was an obligation imposed on the receiver to pay preferential claims before making payments to ordinary creditors, and that the receiver was liable if the preferential claims were not paid. He does not seem to me to have placed very much reliance, as far as his judgment shows, on the existence of the word "forthwith" in s. 107 (1) of the Act of 1908, and I do not think that the omission of this word from s. 78 (1) of the Act of 1929 makes any substantial difference to the provisions of the section. There is a direction that the preferential payments which, under a later section of the Act, are:

"... to be paid in priority to all other debts, shall be paid out of any assets coming to the hands of the receiver ... in priority to any claim for principal or interest in respect of the debentures."

To my mind, that is not merely a negative provision to the effect that the receiver is protected if he does not pay the debenture-holders. It is a provision which requires him to pay the preferential creditors out of any assets coming to his hands. Therefore, it seems to me that, if he has had any assets out of which this payment could have been made, he is under a liability in tort to the plaintiffs. In 1945 he had in his hands the sum of £91, which was more than sufficient to make the payment of £63 9s. 8d. to the plaintiffs. He did not make that payment, but went on trading, incurred subsequent liabilities, and, therefore, paid away the moneys in the course of his trading. It seems to me that he committed a tort when he did that, and, therefore, the plaintiffs' claim succeeds. There must be judgment for the plaintiffs for the amount claimed by them, and costs.

Judgment for the plaintiffs with costs.

Solicitors: Allen & Son (for the plaintiffs); Hamblins, Grammer & Hamlin (for the defendant).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re ST. SAVIOUR'S, WALTHAMSTOW.

[CONSISTORY COURT OF THE DIOCESE OF CHELMSFORD (Linton Thorp, K.C., sitting as Chancellor), May 9, 1950.]

Ecclesiastical Law—Ornaments—Crucifix and candlesticks—Position of crucifix—Number of candlesticks—Legality of six candlesticks on the Holy Table or retable.

The use of any candlesticks on the Holy Table, if likely to be the subject of ceremonial use, is unlawful. One candlestick ought to be, and two, but not more, may lawfully be, on the Holy Table. Two candlesticks may be placed either on the Holy Table or on a retable behind the Holy Table, but the use of six candlesticks either on the Holy Table or on a retable is unlawful.

Re St. Saviour's, Hampstead ([1932] P. 134), followed.

Re Church of the Holy Trinity, Woolwich ([1949] P. 369), not followed.

Having regard to the fact that for many years there was a mosaic picture of the crucifixion on the east wall of a church immediately behind the Holy Table, and an assurance having been given that there was no risk of a crucifix being the object of superstitious use, a faculty for its installation in the church would be granted, such crucifix to be on the High Table or retable at the option of the incumbent.

[AS TO THE USE OF LIGHTED CANDLES ON HOLY TABLE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 11, p. 802, para. 1463; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 19, pp. 439, 440, Nos. 2810-2818.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Re Church of the Holy Trinity, Woolwich, [1949] P. 369.
- (2) Re St. Saviour's, Hampstead, [1932] P. 134; Digest Supp.
- (3) Read v. Lincoln (Bp.), [1892] A.C. 644; 62 L.J.P.C. 1; 67 L.T. 128; 56 J.P. 725; affg., [1891] P. 9; 64 L.T. 149; 19 Digest 315, 1146.
- (4) Ridsdale v. Clifton, (1877), 2 P.D. 276; 46 L.J.P.C. 27; 36 L.T. 865; 42 J.P. 148; 19 Digest 314, 1145.
- (5) Martin v. Mackonochie, (1868), L.R. 2 P.C. 365; 38 L.J.Ecl. 1; 19 L.T. 503; 33 J.P. 35; 16 E.R. 603; 19 Digest 450, 2948.
- (6) Capel St. Mary, Suffolk (Rector and Churchwardens) v. Packard, [1927] P. 289; Digest Supp.

PETITION for the grant of a faculty.

On Mar. 28, 1950, at a sitting of a consistory court for the diocese of Chelmsford, Mr. LINTON THORP, K.C., the chancellor, heard the petition of the Reverend C. W. Nye, the incumbent, and Mr. W. H. Phillips and Mr. F. J. Darby, the churchwardens, of St. Saviour's Church, Walthamstow, for the grant of a faculty for the re-furnishing of the church with an altar table, a crucifix and six candlesticks, a communion rail, a sedilia, clergy and choir stalls, and a pulpit.

Wigglesworth for the petitioners.

The petition was unopposed.

LINTON THORP, K.C.: The incumbent and the churchwardens of St. Saviour's Church, Walthamstow, petition for the grant of a faculty for the re-furnishing of that church with the following articles, viz.:—(a) an altar table, (b) a crucifix and six candlesticks, (c) a communion rail, (d) a sedilia, (e) clergy and choir stalls, and (f) a pulpit, at a total estimated cost of £1,105. The church in question was built in 1874. It had on the east wall a representation of the crucifixion of our Lord done in mosaic work. Immediately in front of that was a retable on which were a small cross on a pedestal in the centre and six candlesticks, three on each side of the cross. There were two mosaics on each side of the centre mosaic, and evidence, which I accept, was given that as from 1886 onwards there were always six candlesticks on the retable in the position described. On June 6, 1945, the church was partly destroyed by fire, only the south aisle and a chapel therein escaping. The desire of the petitioners is to restore the church, so far as practicable, to its former state.

In the chapel there is a statue of the Virgin Mary, flanked on either side by two angels, and another statue of the Virgin Mary is immediately outside the chapel, for which there seems to be no record of any faculty having been granted.

- A Reservation of the sacrament is practised in the chapel and there is a sanctus bell, used at the time of the consecration. There are pictures in the church representing the fourteen stations of the cross in the positions usually found in Roman Catholic churches, differing only in that the pictures are not built into or affixed to the walls. Evidence was given that on every Friday in Lent a procession was made round the inside of the church and a short service with an address held at each of the fourteen stations of the cross. It is not known if any faculty had been granted for these stations and the sanctus bell, but, as the diocese of Chelmsford only came into being in 1914, it is possible that some faculties were granted by the consistory court which then had jurisdiction in Walthamstow. The legality of some, at least, of the ornaments in use in this church at the moment may have to be considered at some future date and is
- C not now before the court in these proceedings. They are only recounted to give a general idea of the form of service in this church and to approach the subject-matter of the petition with a knowledge of what use is being made of some ornaments in the church to estimate what use may perhaps be made in futuro of the ornaments sought to be installed.

- D On Jan. 31, 1950, the proposed new altar was dedicated by the LORD BISHOP OF CHELMSFORD, as were also the six candlesticks and the crucifix, all of which were on the altar for the purpose of being dedicated only. On a previous date interim permission to place the crucifix and two only of the candlesticks on the Holy Table at the dedication ceremony had been given, yet all six candlesticks were, without further reference to this court, placed on the Holy Table, four being removed after the dedication.

- E There are no difficulties in connection with (a) the Holy Table, (c) the communion rail, (d) the sedilia, (e) the clergy and choir stalls, and (f) the pulpit. Accordingly, a faculty is decreed for these ornaments to be placed in the church as prayed. In regard to (b) the crucifix and the six candlesticks, the position is by no means so simple. Three questions emerge, viz.:—(i) Should a faculty issue for the crucifix? (ii) Should a faculty issue for the six candlesticks or only
- F for two? (iii) Should the crucifix and candlesticks be placed on the Holy Table or on a retable. In so far as the crucifix is concerned, the court will grant a faculty for its installation in the church having regard to the fact that for many years there was a mosaic picture of the crucifixion on the east wall of the church immediately behind the Holy Table and, the mosaic having been damaged beyond repair, the petitioners seek to have the crucifix in its stead so as to
- G represent so far as possible today some continuity in the appearance of the church. An assurance was given that there was no risk of the crucifix being the object of superstitious use, that there is a crucifix over the pulpit, that a crucifix forms part of a war memorial in the church, and that no difficulty has been encountered in regard to them. The position to be occupied by the crucifix and the candlesticks will be defined later in this judgment.

- H On the question whether the two or the six candlesticks should be authorised, it is not possible, in my view, to reconcile the recent decision of the Chancellor of Southwark (E. GARTH MOORE) in Re Church of the Holy Trinity, Woolwich (1), and that of the then Chancellor of London (F. H. L. ERRINGTON) in Re St. Saviour's, Hampstead (2). Consequently, I find myself obliged to disagree with one of those decisions. This court is not bound by either of those decisions and so an attempt has been made to review, as far as possible, the position of lights on an altar or Holy Table, historically and juridicially, so that I may come to my own decision on the question, particularly as counsel for the petitioners argued that more is known now in regard to the law, use, and custom of lights than was known until comparatively recently. He based his argument on a book called "THE SHAPE OF THE LITURGY," by Dom Gregory Dix and relied on the view of their Lordships in the Privy Council in Read v. Lincoln (Bp.) (3) ([1892] A.C. 666) that it would be a matter for grave consideration how far new materials were available since the earlier decisions on the subject. In that case the Privy Council, when considering Ridsdale v. Clifton (4), explained, however, that that view was limited to an examination of the law on the subject and pointed out (ibid., 654):

"... the importance of establishing and maintaining a clear and unvarying interpretation of rules the stringency and effect of which ought to be easily ascertained and understood by every clerk before his admission to holy orders."

Such clear and unvarying rules could not be effective were individual chancellors to interpret the law from year to year as fresh historical facts are brought to light by research and study.

If the view of Dom Gregory Dix be correct, and it is certainly fortified by the fruits of considerable study and research, precedents are available for any number of lights on a Holy Table from one to twenty, excepting only seven and nineteen for which no precedent has so far been found. The impression gathered from his book is that the bulk of the precedents cited is to be found in cathedrals or collegiate churches, and not in parish churches such as St. Saviour's, Walthamstow. Similarly, in Re Church of the Holy Trinity, Woolwich (1) references are made to the King's College Chapel, Cambridge, and the reconstructed Guards Chapel, London, both of which are, of course, peculiars. In Martin v. Mackonochie (5) it is stated (L.R. 2 P.C. 387):

"There is a clear and obvious distinction between the presence in the church of things inert and unused, and the active use of the same things as a part of the administration of a sacrament or of a ceremony."

The same case is an authority for the proposition that the lighting of candles for the purpose of giving light is lawful, but the use of candles or any other lights for ceremonial or superstitious purposes in any part of the church is forbidden. That decision was prior to Read v. Lincoln (Bp.) (3) and the advice of the Privy Council in that case so far as candles on the Holy High Table were concerned in no way differed from the decision in Martin v. Mackonochie (5), but proceeded solely on the fact that the then Lord Bishop of Lincoln had not committed any ecclesiastical offence by taking part in the celebration of divine service in a church in which unlawful ornaments were present and that His Lordship by merely taking such part did not necessarily use them as a matter of ceremony.

In 1222 a constitution of a council at Oxford, apparently under Archbishop Stephen Langton, provided as follows :

"Tempore quo missarum solemnia peraguntur, accendentur duae candela, vel ad minus una cum lampade."

One light at least being necessary to signify that "Christus est splendor lucis aeternae." A constitution of the council at Oxford under Walter, Archbishop of Canterbury, in 1322, obviously copying that previous constitution, enacted:

"... tempore, quo missarum solemnia peraguntur, accendentur duae candela, vel ad minus una."

The injunctions of Edward VI, issued in 1547, although not having the force of a statute, prescribed in terms:

“ . . . but only two lights on the high altar before the sacrament, which for the signification that Christ is the very true light of the world, they shall suffer to remain still.”

Lynwood also states in his PROVINCIALE, p. 236: “candela . . . ardens significat ipsum Christum qui est splendor lucis aeternae.” According to a manuscript at Canterbury in Archbishop Parker’s INVENTORY OF ARTICLES LEFT FOR A CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL there appear “(ii) candlesticks copper and gilt,” the figure “(vi)” having originally been in the draft inventory and struck out and the “(ii)” substituted. An interesting analogy, albeit remote, to this case. Between 1559 and 1603 two lights were by virtue of the present rubric continued in all Queen Elizabeth’s chapels throughout her reign and also between 1550 and 1595 in Lord Burleigh’s chapel. Doubtless these also were peculiars,
B but it is highly doubtful if either Her late Majesty Queen Elizabeth or Lord Burleigh would have countenanced any ornament calculated to be the subject of superstitious use.

In Re St. Saviour’s, Hampstead (2) Mr. CHANCELLOR ERRINGTON, probably having some, if not all, of these matters in mind, took the view ([1932] P. 140) that at least one light should be on the Holy Table to signify that our Lord was indeed the very True Light of the world, a view which has of course been expressed in many cases prior and subsequent to that decision. In Martin v. Mackonochie (5), their Lordships of the Privy Council clearly held (L.R. 2 P.C. 389) that the two constitutions of 1222 and 1322 must be taken to have been repealed by the Act of Uniformity, 1558-9, s. 4, and that the effect of that statute was to declare illegal the use of any lighted candles at all if it were a ceremonial act
D and was forbidden by that Act and our present Prayer Book. If viewed, however, as mere ornaments and no more, then it must be observed that the judgment of the Privy Council in Martin v. Mackonochie (5), when dealing with the argument of the respondent’s counsel that there was nothing in the Prayer Book of the second year of EDWARD VI making it unlawful to continue the use of lighted candles, stated (ibid., 391):

“All this may be conceded, but it is in reality beside the question. The rubric of our Prayer Book might have said: Those ornaments shall be retained which were lawful, or which were in use in the second year of Edward VI, and the argument as to actual use at the time, and as to the weight of the injunction of 1547, might in that case have been material. But the rubric, speaking in 1661, more than a hundred years subsequently,
F has, for reasons which it is not the province of a judicial tribunal to criticise, defined the class of ornaments to be retained by a reference, not to what was in use de facto, or to what was lawful in 1549, but to what was in the church by authority of Parliament in that year; and in the Parliamentary authority which this committee has held, and which their Lordships hold, to be indicated by these words, the ornaments in question are not found
G to be included. Their Lordships have not referred to the usage as to lights during the last three hundred years, but they are of opinion that the very general disuse of lights after the Reformation (whatever exceptional cases to the contrary might be produced), contrasted with their normal and prescribed use previously, affords a very strong contemporaneous and continuous exposition of the law upon the subject.”

H The cases cited by Dom Gregory Dix may well be regarded as exceptional, and some of them are prior to the Reformation. In the result the Privy Council found the charge as to lights had been sustained. That charge was simply and unequivocally:

“ . . . using lighted candles on the communion table during the celebration of the Holy Communion, when such candles are not wanted for the purpose of giving light.”

This case was not cited, apparently, to the courts which decided Re St. Saviour's, Hampstead (2), and Capel St. Mary, Suffolk (Rector and Churchwardens) v. Packard (6), in the former of which Mr. CHANCELLOR ERRINGTON confirmed the placing of two candlesticks on the retable and did not require the removal of the other four candlesticks from the church on an undertaking as to their use. In the latter case the then Dean of the Arches (SIR LEWIS DIBDIN) did not require counsel for the respondent to address him as to the retention of two candlesticks, it having been pointed out that counsel for the appellants did not attempt to argue that six candlesticks on the retable could be retained. The result was that the learned Dean of the Arches limited the order for the removal of the six candlesticks to the removal of four only so that it might remain possible to have two lights on the Holy Table at Holy Communion for the signification that Christ is the very true light of the world. In CRIPPS ON CHURCH AND CLERGY, 8th ed., p. 230, the editor, Mr. Chancellor MacMorran, K.C., states:

"The old English use in parish churches being to place not more than two, and at least one light on the Holy Table in service time, this was retained at the Reformation. Consequently the use of six lights is unlawful."

He cites the above two last mentioned cases as authorities for that proposition. Immediately above that proposition the learned editor states, however, on the authority of Martin v. Mackonochie (5), that the placing of two lighted candles on the Holy Table during the celebration of Holy Communion, when such candles were not wanted for the purpose of giving light, had been held by the Privy Council to be unlawful whether as a ceremony, as an ornament, or as subsidiary to the service, a finding dissented from by the Archbishop of Canterbury in Read v. Lincoln (Bp.) (3) ([1891] P. 88). In Re Church of the Holy Trinity, Woolwich (1) the Chancellor of Southwark (E. GARTH MOORE) expressed his view ([1949] P. 371) that no rule of law or usage could be laid down with regard to the number of lights on the altar. He ignored with considerable doubt in his mind the decision of the late Chancellor of London (F. H. L. ERRINGTON) in Re St. Saviour's, Hampstead (2) and considered that in Capel St. Mary, Suffolk (Rector and Churchwardens) v. Packard (6) the question was not argued and, therefore, had been allowed to go by default. With great respect I do not think that the latter case should be regarded as having gone by default simpliciter. Doubtless the learned Dean of the Arches (SIR LEWIS DIBDIN) would ex proprio motu have considered whether the six lights or only two of them should be allowed to remain before making his final order. Further, I do not take the view that it was held in Read v. Lincoln (Bp.) (3) that two lights were lawful, as in the Privy Council, at any rate, the ratio decidendi of the case was that the Lord Bishop of Lincoln had not been guilty of any ecclesiastical offence merely because His Lordship took part in a ceremony in a church where there were two lights on the altar. In the result, the Chancellor of Southwark (E. GARTH MOORE) granted the faculty for six candlesticks subject to the direction that not more than two lights should be on the altar at the same time, leaving the petitioners to approach the bishop and discuss the number with him, thus, it would seem, leaving the decision as to the number of lights at any given moment to the directions of the ordinary—and holding that the question of more than two lights was a matter of good order and was the primary concern of the diocesan and not of the chancellor. It was also stated that a further order would be granted if the bishop permitted six or four lights. In effect, the learned chancellor really did not in terms decide the issue before him, but left it to the diocesan to decide, a procedure for which I can find no authority and which seems to conflict in principle with the ratio decidendi in Read v. Lincoln (Bp.) (3), where LORD HALSBURY, L.C., delivering the judgment of the Privy Council, pointed out ([1892] A.C. 668, 669)

A that the only alternative open to a clergyman in the circumstances of such a case, whatever his own views, and whatever his rank in the church, would be to refuse to join in the administration of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper to the congregation, because there was a light burning when no light was necessary. This course would be in keeping with the action of Bishop Ridley on Apr. 12, 1550, in declining to enter St. Paul's Cathedral, London, until the "Lytte of the Aulter" was extinguished, although it seems possible, if not probable, that such light was not on the altar, but was suspended before it.

Considering the above decisions and also the texts and engravings indicating usage as to lights set forth in the appendix to Read v. Lincoln (Bp.) (3), I feel compelled to hold that the use of more than two lights on the Holy Table or on a retable is unlawful and, accordingly, the faculty prayed for in the petition to place six on the Holy Table must be refused. In coming to this conclusion it must be conceded that the evidence as to the stations of the cross, the sanctus bell, the statutes of the Virgin Mary, and the services on the Fridays in Lent before the stations of the cross have led the court to apprehend with some anxiety the possibility of a ceremonial user being made of these candlesticks. During the argument the possibility of the six candlesticks and the crucifix being put on a retable, as was the case before the fire in this church, was adumbrated, and the court was informed that the retable formerly in use in this church, although damaged, was capable of repair. Indeed, counsel for the petitioners opened this case as one in which it was sought so far as possible to restore the church to its former state, which connoted, not the placing of the crucifix and candlesticks on the Holy Table, for which permission is now sought in the petition, but the placing of them on the old repaired or a new retable. It is clear that the advice of their Lordships in Martin v. Mackonochie (5) drew no distinction between the Holy Table and a retable or ledge of wood placed on the Holy Table. If I may say so, the use of a retable as opposed to the Holy Table does seem somewhat of a distinction without much difference in that in many instances it is not possible a few paces away to see if the articles be, in fact, on a retable or on the Holy Table, and it savours of seeking to obey the letter of the law and ignore the spirit of it.

Considering the cases referred to and the law, I have reached the conclusion that the use of any candlesticks at all on the Holy Table, if likely to be the subject of ceremonial use, is illegal; that one candlestick ought to be, and two, but not more, may lawfully, be on the Holy Table provided they are not used in any ceremonial way, but merely to signify, that our Lord is indeed the very True Light of the world; that two candlesticks may be placed for that purpose either on the Holy Table or on a retable or ledge behind the Holy Table; but that the use of six candlesticks either on the Holy Table or on a retable is not lawful.

Solicitors: Trollope & Winckworth (for the petitioners).

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

HOLMES v. ASHFORD AND OTHERS.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker, Somervell and Singleton, L.JJ.), May 8, 9, 1950.]

Negligence—Dangerous goods—Liability of manufacturer—Hair dye—Warning given by manufacturers to hairdresser—Character of preparation not brought to knowledge of customer—Failure of hairdresser to take precautions—Injury to customer.

A
A hairdresser treated the plaintiff's hair with a dye, and as a result the plaintiff contracted dermatitis. The dye had been delivered to the hairdresser in labelled bottles together with a small brochure of instructions. Both the labels and the brochure contained a warning that the dye might be dangerous to certain skins, and a recommendation that a test should be made before it was used. The hairdresser had read the labels and the brochure and was aware of the danger, but he made no test and did not warn the plaintiff. The plaintiff claimed damages against the hairdresser and the manufacturers, and was awarded judgment against both. On appeal by the manufacturers,

B
C
D
HELD: a manufacturer who puts a dangerous article on the market must take reasonable steps to prevent any person coming into contact with it from being injured, but it is not necessary in every case that precautions should be taken to insure that the ultimate recipient of the article is warned of the danger; in the present case the manufacturers had given the hairdresser a warning which was sufficient to intimate to him the potential danger of the dye, and it was not necessary that they should have warned the plaintiff; and, therefore, they had discharged the duty which was on them.

Dictum of SCRUTTON, L.J., in Hodge & Sons v. Anglo-American Oil Co. (1922) (12 Ll.L. Rep. 188), applied.

[AS TO DUTY TO WARN IMPOSED ON VENDOR OF DANGEROUS GOODS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 23, pp. 631, paras. 886, 887; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 36, pp. 56-58, Nos. 353-364.]

E
Cases referred to:

- (1) Anglo-Celtic Shipping Co., Ltd. v. Elliott and Jeffery, (1926), 42 T.L.R. 297; 36 Digest 57, 363.
- (2) Burfitt v. Kille (A. & E.), [1939] 2 All E.R. 372; [1939] 2 K.B. 743; 108 L.J.K.B. 669; 160 L.T. 481; Digest Supp.
- (3) Farrant v. Barnes, (1862), 11 C.B.N.S. 553; 31 L.J.C.P. 137; 142 E.R. 912; 8 Digest 135, 894.
- (4) Levy v. Langridge, (1838), 4 M. & W. 337; 150 E.R. 1458; sub nom., Levi v. Langridge, 7 L.J.Ex. 387; 39 Digest 458, 852.
- (5) Hodge & Sons v. Anglo-American Oil Co., (1922), 12 Ll.L. Rep. 183; Digest Supp.

G
APPEAL by the second defendants, the manufacturers of a hair dye, from an order of CROOM-JOHNSON, J., made on Feb. 16, 1950, whereby he awarded the plaintiff £600 damages against the first defendant, a hairdresser, for breach of contract and negligence, and against the second defendants for negligence.

H
On Sept. 3, 1948, the plaintiff was treated by the first defendant with "Inecto," a hair dye manufactured by the second defendants. The plaintiff contracted dermatitis. At the trial the first defendant, having admitted liability, was called as a witness by the plaintiff, and he stated that he had read the instructions enclosed with the dye warning users that it might be dangerous to certain skins and advising that a test should be made before use, but that, notwithstanding that warning, he had applied the dye to the plaintiff's hair without a test. CROOM-JOHNSON, J., found against the second defendants on the ground that the first defendant had not been given adequate notice of the dangerous nature of the dye and that the second defendants had not taken reasonable steps to bring the nature of the article to the knowledge of the plaintiff.

Melford Stevenson, K.C., and Ryder Richardson for the second defendants, Rapidol, Ltd.

C. H. Duveen for the plaintiff.

- TUCKER, L.J., stated the facts and continued: A number of authorities
- A have been cited to us by counsel for the plaintiff in support of the proposition that a manufacturer who puts a dangerous article on the market must take reasonable precautions to ensure that the ultimate recipient is warned of the danger. I think that that is not the correct way of stating the proposition. Every person who puts on the market a dangerous article (and the learned judge has found this to be a dangerous article) must take reasonable steps in all the
- B circumstances. This is not an article the nature of which can be ascertained by intermediate examination, and, therefore, it is an article which requires some warning. The question in this case is: Was the warning attached to this bottle a sufficient and adequate warning to be given in cases where the material is supplied to hairdressers for use on their customers? We must presume that the material is supplied to reasonable people, and the first defendant has said
- C that he read the warning, appreciated what it meant, and ignored it. I find it, therefore, impossible to hold that the warning which was, in fact, given in the present case was insufficient. Cases may possibly arise where criticism may be made that the warning is not in sufficiently large print, or complaints may be made where the substance is used by a woman on her own hair, and by holding that the warning was sufficient in the present case I must not be taken
- D to imply that a similar warning would be sufficient in those circumstances. The question is whether it was sufficient in the circumstances of this particular case, and, it having been established that the warning came to the knowledge of the man who was going to use it, namely, the first defendant, I think that it is impossible to say that the second defendants were in breach of their duty to take reasonable steps to give sufficient warning of the nature of the substance
- E which they were putting on the market by delivering it to hairdressers to use on their customers.

- With regard to the authorities, we have been referred to passages in some textbooks which are not altogether borne out by the cases which are supposed to be an authority for them. We were referred to the decision of ROCHE, J., in Anglo-Celtic Shipping Co., Ltd. v. Elliott and Jeffery (1) from which I do not
- F think counsel for the plaintiff derived much assistance. It is not, I think, an authority for what is stated in PROFESSOR WINFIELD'S "TEXTBOOK OF THE LAW OF TORT," 4th ed., p. 540, where the learned author says:

- "Anglo-Celtic Shipping Co., Ltd. v. Elliott and Jeffery (1) illustrates the rule. C owned a ship and sent it to B to clean the condenser. He told B to use a cleaning fluid, 'pluperfect liquid'. This was manufactured
- G by A and, if it came in contact with cast iron, it generated an explosive gas. Neither C nor B knew this, but A either knew, or ought to have known, it. An explosion occurred in the use of the liquid on cast iron and ROCHE, J., held that A was liable to C. Until 1932 it was not certain whether it is sufficient for A to warn B the first recipient of the chattel or whether he must also warn C, the ultimate transferee. ROCHE, J., held that he must warn C, but he admitted that only the House of Lords could settle the point."
- H

When one looks at the case I do not think that it is an authority for the proposition. ROCHE, J., said (42 T.L.R. 299):

"As to the second defendants, the law where a dangerous thing had been put into circulation had often been discussed, and he would not discuss it further; he agreed with an observation of SCRUTTON, L.J., in a recent case that if it was to be discussed again it should be in the House of Lords. It was sufficient for him to assume the truth of the proposition that if the thing sold was of a dangerous nature a warning ought to be given. It was not necessary to discuss the case where an article sold did not belong to a class of things which were dangerous in themselves, but was dangerous because of some defect in the individual article. Nor was it necessary here to consider any duty to take care in other respects besides giving warning. He was satisfied that the pluperfect liquid was dangerous of itself; it was sold under a fancy name, its composition was not disclosed, and it was disguised by a particular smell which was purposely imparted to it. The different analyses which had been given in evidence suggested that there were irregularities in manufacture. And not only was the article dangerous in itself, but the instructions failed to give any adequate warning. So there must be judgment for the plaintiffs as against the second defendants, with costs."

The learned judge does not deal with the question whether a warning had got to be brought to the notice of C, or whether it would have been sufficient if the warning had been made known to B.

I pass over Burfitt v. Kille (A. & E.) (2) to which we were referred, as I do not think much assistance is to be obtained from that case. Farrant v. Barnes (3) was much relied on by counsel for the plaintiff. The facts in that case, as set out in the headnote, were as follows (11 C.B.N.S. 553):

"The defendant being desirous of sending a carboy of nitric acid to Croydon, his foreman gave it to one R., the servant of a railway carrier, who (as the railway company would only carry articles of that dangerous character on one day in each week), handed it to the plaintiff, the servant of a Croydon carrier, without communicating to him (and there being nothing in its appearance to indicate) its dangerous nature. Whilst being carried by the plaintiff to the cart, the carboy from some unexplained cause burst, and its contents flowed over and severely injured the plaintiff:—Held, that the defendant was liable for the injury thus resulting from his breach of duty."

It appears (ibid., 556) that R.

"... knew that it was acid, and dangerous, but not that it was nitric acid; and that he told the plaintiff to be careful of it."

In the course of his judgment, ERLE, C.J., said (ibid., 561):

"The application to the plaintiff being an application to take charge of and to carry and deliver a dangerous article, it was the duty of the defendant, who knew the danger, to take care that the dangerous character of the article should be made known to all persons who were to be concerned in the carriage of it. The jury have found that he did not do so. There was no evidence as to how the accident occurred—probably it was from the explosive nature of the article. But, be that as it may, if notice had been given of the dangerous character of the article, greater precaution possibly might have been used in the handling of it. I think the plaintiff is brought into such direct contact with the defendant that the distinction relied on to take the case out of the principle upon which the decision in Langridge v. Levy (4) proceeded fails. The defendant, knowing the dangerous character of the article, and omitting to give notice of it to the plaintiff, so that he might exercise his discretion as to whether he would take it or not, was guilty of a clear breach of duty."

WILLES, J., said (ibid., 563):

"I apprehend that, as a matter of legal duty, a person who gives another dangerous goods to carry, goods which require more care and caution than ordinary merchandise, and which are likely in the absence of such caution to injure persons handling them, is bound to give notice of their dangerous character to the party employed to carry them, and is liable for the consequences which are likely to ensue from the omission to give such notice."

Lastly, we were referred to Hodge & Sons v. Anglo-American Oil Co. (5). In that case a barge, the property of the Anglo-American Oil Co., was used by the company for the carriage of petrol and BANKES, L.J., came to the conclusion that, owing to the presence of petrol in it, the barge was a dangerous thing. The facts set out in the headnote (12 Ll.L. Rep. 183) show that the plaintiffs, Messrs. Hodge & Sons, were ship repairers and wharf owners at Millwall, who appealed from a judgment given in favour of the defendants, the Anglo-American Oil Co., and Messrs. Donald Miller & Co., barge repairers, of London, in an action by the plaintiffs claiming in respect of damage arising out of an explosion on the Anglo-American Co.'s oil tank barge Warwick, at Millwall, when she was being repaired by the plaintiffs, to whom she had been sent for that purpose by Miller & Co. The question was whether or not sufficient warning had been given of the condition of the barge, the condition being known to Messrs. Miller, but there being controversy whether or not it was known by Messrs. Hodge. BANKES, L.J., in the course of his judgment, said (ibid., 184):

"It is in these circumstances that the question of liability arises. The Anglo-American Oil Co. were, in my opinion, under a double duty, (a) the duty of using reasonable means for securing the efficient cleaning out of the tank, and (b) the duty of giving any necessary warning of the dangerous character of the tank even after a proper and sufficient cleaning. The first duty, in my opinion, extended to all those who necessarily came into contact with the tank in the course of carrying out the repairs, including therefore the plaintiff Wilmott. With regard to the second duty, a warning would not, in my opinion, be required where the person who would otherwise be entitled to warning was already aware of the danger, or who might reasonably be assumed to be aware of it . . . I think that the Anglo-American Oil Co. were entitled to assume that Messrs. Hodges needed no warning as to that danger. It would appear from the evidence of Messrs. Hodges' manager that he was in fact sufficiently aware of the danger of working on the barge to know that it was wrong to let the men go to work before the tank was properly ventilated."

SCRUTTON, L.J., said (ibid., 188):

"The law, therefore, seems to be: (1) That if the barge which has carried petrol is an article dangerous in itself, it is the duty of the owners to take proper and reasonable precautions to prevent its doing damage to people likely to come into contact with it. These precautions may be fulfilled by entrusting it to a competent person with reasonable warning of its dangerous character, if that danger is not obvious. If such precautions are not taken, the owner will be liable to third persons with whom he has no contract for damage done by the barge, which they could not have avoided with reasonable care."

ATKIN, L.J., dissenting with regard to one aspect of the case, said (ibid., 191):

"It becomes unnecessary in this view to decide the question whether, assuming that there was only a duty to warn, that duty was excused on the ground that the employer of the injured men must be deemed to have known that the barge was in a dangerous condition, and therefore there was no duty to warn him or his men. It is probably a question of fact in each case whether a duty to warn is effectively performed by a warning to an employer. In some cases that may be the only reasonable warning possible; or, at any rate, a sufficient warning; in other cases it may well be that notice to the employer should be supplemented, as, for instance, where a dangerous chattel is being sent on a long land transit, e.g., by rail, and may be handled by many of the employers' servants working at a great distance from him."

I think that it is a question of degree and a question of fact in every case whether sufficient warning has been given. I would apply to this case the words of SCRUTTON, L.J., that, if the article—the barge—

"... which has carried petrol is an article dangerous in itself, it is the duty of the owners to take proper and reasonable precautions to prevent its doing damage to people likely to come into contact with it. These precautions may be fulfilled by entrusting it to a competent person with reasonable warning of its dangerous character, if that danger is not obvious."

In the present case the substance was not entrusted to a competent person, but it was supplied to a hairdresser with the knowledge of the manufacturers, and it must have been in the contemplation of the manufacturers supplying these goods to hairdressers that hairdressers may be expected to interpose their judgment and reason whether they are going to use a hair dye or not. In my view, if they give a warning which, if read by a hairdresser, is sufficient to intimate to him the potential dangers of the substance with which he is going to deal, that is all that can be expected of them. I think it would be unreasonable and impossible to expect that they should give warning in such form that it must come to the knowledge of the particular customer who is going to be treated. Counsel for the plaintiff says they must take reasonable steps to see that it will come to the notice of any customer. I cannot contemplate any steps which could be calculated to bring a matter of this kind to the knowledge of any person who is treated with the preparation. The most that can be expected of the manufacturers of goods of this kind is to see that the hairdresser is sufficiently warned.

I have not found it necessary to refer to the brochure, and the labels on the bottles, because the first defendant said that he had read them and understood them. I think they indicate sufficiently to any person who reads them, at any rate to a reasonable hairdresser, that the substance he is concerned with is of the nature alleged in the statement of claim, namely, that it is a dye which is "a dangerous article in that when applied to the heads of certain persons it would or might cause acute dermatitis." I think that that quality of the dye "Inecto" was sufficiently brought to the notice of the first defendant by the notices which have been put in evidence. For these reasons, I think that the plaintiff has failed to establish a case of liability on the part of the second defendants and that the appeal should succeed.

SOMERVELL, L.J.: I agree with the reasons and conclusions given by TUCKER, L.J.

SINGLETON, L.J.: I also agree.

Appeal allowed with costs in the court below. No order as to costs in the Court of Appeal.

Solicitors: Macdonald & Stacey (for the second defendants); M. A. Jacobs & Sons (for the plaintiff).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

EAST END DWELLINGS CO., LTD. v. FINSBURY BOROUGH COUNCIL.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Devlin, J.), May 8, 1950.]

Compulsory Purchase—Compensation—Interest in war-damaged hereditament—Flats subject to Rent Acts demolished by enemy action—Whether compensation to be assessed on the basis that rents controlled—Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (c. 51), s. 53 (1) (a).

Before 1944 the claimants had owned a block of flats, all of which were subject to the Rent Restrictions Acts, having become controlled in 1939, and most of which were held on statutory tenancies. On June 24, 1944, the flats were completely demolished by enemy action, and a cost of works payment in respect of the damage was determined to be appropriate. The vacant site was compulsorily purchased by the local authority, and the question arose of the amount of compensation payable to the claimants having regard to the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, s. 53 (1) (a), which provides that in such a case the value of the interest for the purposes of the assessment of compensation shall be taken to be the value which it would have if the whole of the damage had been made good before the date of the notice to treat. It was accepted that, if the flats had been re-built by the claimants, they would not have been obliged to let them at the standard rents.

HELD: "made good" in s. 53 (1) (a) was apt to include re-building the premises in substantially the same form as the previous building, but nevertheless the notional new building in this case was to be treated as being premises which had never before existed for the purposes of the Rent Acts, and, therefore, the compensation ought to be assessed on the basis that the rents of the notional building would not be restricted to the amount of the former standard rents.

Ellis & Sons Amalgamated Properties, Ltd. v. Sisman ([1948] 1 All E.R. 44), applied.

[FOR THE TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING ACT, 1947, s. 53 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 40, p. 291.]

Case referred to :

(1) Ellis & Sons Amalgamated Properties, Ltd. v. Sisman, [1948] 1 All E.R. 44; [1948] 1 K.B. 653; [1948] L.J.R. 929; 2nd Digest Supp.

MOTION to set aside or remit an award of an arbitrator on the ground that it contained an error of law.

The claimants were owners of land on which flats subject to the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Acts, 1920 to 1939, had been completely demolished as a result of enemy action and had not been re-built. The respondent local authority, Finsbury Borough Council had acquired the land, and, in assessing the compensation, the arbitrator purported to proceed on the assumption prescribed by the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, s. 53 (1) (a), that the whole of the war damage had been made good before the date of the notice to treat. On this basis he had assumed that the rents legally recoverable in respect of the flats in the newly constructed building would not have been subject to the statutory limits imposed by the Rent Restrictions Acts on the rents up to the date of the demolition, and he fixed the amount of compensation at £32,000. The respondent local authority contended that the words "made good" in s. 53 (1) (a) were inconsistent with the idea of a loss of identity of the original building by the construction of a new building in its place, and that for the purpose of the enactment, the building must be regarded as retaining its identity with the consequence that the old restrictions on rents would apply.

Rowe, K.C., and Squibb for the claimants.
Lawrence, K.C., for Finsbury Borough Council.

DEVLIN, J.: The claimants in this arbitration which took place before the official arbitrator, whose award I have now to consider, are the freeholders of two pieces of land situate in Collier Street and Killick Street, in the borough of Finsbury, the respondent being the local authority for that borough. The claimants had, before the war and until June 24, 1944, owned some buildings on the said land known as Winton Houses, which consisted of working-class flats. These flats were completely demolished as a result of enemy action on June 24, 1944. Up to that time they had all been let either on statutory tenancies, or, in a few cases, on contractual tenancies subject to the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Acts, 1920 to 1939. All the dwellings were, by reason of the rateable values thereof on Apr. 6, 1939, subject to the provisions of those Acts and they were, therefore, let at rents which did not exceed the standard rents with permitted increases payable under the Acts, which I can conveniently refer to as the 1939 standard rents. That being the position, if the claimants, as owners of the building, had re-built the premises with the aid of a cost of works payment under the War Damage Act, 1943, or out of their own resources, they would not have been required to let the flats so re-built at the 1939 standard rents. The decision of the Court of Appeal in Ellis & Sons Amalgamated Properties, Ltd. v. Sisman (1) appears exactly to cover that situation. Winton Houses having been completely demolished, a new building erected in its place—I will assume that it exactly resembled it—would be a different building, and no previous statutory tenant would have the right to say that his statutory tenancy in his particular reconstructed flat continued. I need not trouble with the small number of contractual tenancies, which I do not think seriously affect the argument in the present case. Whether they subsisted or not might depend on whether or not they had been terminated by notice at some particular time, but the most favourable assumption which I think I can make for the argument of counsel for the borough council is that all the tenancies were statutory tenancies. The re-constructed building being a new building, the claimants could have let it at rents higher than the 1939 standard rents. The Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, might have operated to restrict the rents which the claimants could demand, but, nevertheless, those rents would, as I think counsel accepts, have been higher than the 1939 standard rents.

That is the position apart from the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947. Before Winton Houses were re-built the land was acquired by the borough council who, accordingly, had to pay compensation to the claimants. The arbitrator had to assess the amount of that compensation under the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, the only part of which I am concerned with is s. 53 (1) (a), which provides that the value of the interest for the purposes of the compensation payable in respect of the compulsory purchase shall be taken to be the value which it would have if the whole of the damage had been made good before the date of the notice to treat.

If the whole of the damage had been made good before the date of the notice to treat, the claimants would, on that site, have re-built Winton Houses, and one of the questions which the learned arbitrator had to determine was whether or not the value of Winton Houses, notionally re-built, was to be assessed on the basis that the flats could not have been let at more than the 1939 standard rents. In his award he proceeded on the assumption that the flats could be so let, as is set out at the beginning of the award, in the following terms:

“I assess the compensation payable in respect of the said land, on the assumption that, if the whole of the said war damage had been made good before the date of the said notice to treat, the rents legally recoverable in respect of the said dwellings would not be subject to the statutory limits imposed by the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Acts, 1920 to 1939, at the sum of £32,000.”

I have been told that, if he had proceeded on the other assumption, the figure agreed between the parties would have been £20,000.

This motion is to set aside or remit this award on the ground that it contained an error of law in the assumption which the arbitrator made. In my judgment, there is no error of law, and I think that the arbitrator has proceeded on the right assumption. As I understand the very full and able argument which I have heard from counsel for the borough council he accepts that the position under the Rent Restrictions Acts, if one were relying on that alone, would be that, there being a new building, the landlord would not be obliged to let the flats at the 1939 standard rents. He is bound to accept that, at any rate before me, having regard to the decision of the Court of Appeal in Ellis & Sons Amalgamated Properties, Ltd. v. Sisman (1). His argument, therefore, has been that the same result is not to be arrived at when one is considering a notional re-building under the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, s. 53. That section, he says rightly, only applies if the damage has not been made good at the date of the notice to treat, but it goes on to state that one is to assume that the war damage has been made good immediately before the date of the notice to treat. On that hypothesis it seems to me that one would look at the matter in this way. The landlord, having completely re-built the premises, is making out a schedule of the rents which he desires to charge for the re-built flats, and just as he has completed that task he is served with a notice to treat. Would the schedule, in such circumstances, properly be a schedule of 1939 standard rents, or could it be for such higher rents as the landlord might properly ask, subject to the provisions of the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949. It seems to me that, when one is assessing the value on the hypothesis that is laid down in s. 53, it must be on the further hypothesis that the landlord would not be charging the 1939 standard rents.

Counsel for the borough council has placed great reliance on the words "made good" in s. 53 (1), which, he says, in effect are consistent only with the idea that the building which is made good has retained its identity. They are inconsistent, he argues, with the conception of the loss of identity, and although, therefore, loss of identity has certain results in a case under the Rent Restrictions Acts (see Ellis & Sons Amalgamated Properties, Ltd. v. Sisman (1)), when one finds the words "made good" in s. 53 one must assume a continuous identity. Otherwise, counsel says, those words cannot be given any proper meaning. I do not accept that view. Once one postulates, as one must because it is found in the facts in the award, that the building was completely demolished, and that the appropriate payment under the War Damage Act, 1943, is a cost of works payment (and unless it were s. 53 (1) would not apply), it seems to me to follow that the only "making good" which can be meant by that section is a re-building or reinstating of the old building in something either exactly or closely resembling the old form. It does not appear to me that the words "made good" are by themselves inconsistent with the idea of reinstatement in that way. Indeed, as counsel pointed out to me, they are so used in s. 8 (2) of the War Damage Act, 1943, which provides as follows:

"If the war damage is made good by reinstating the hereditament in the form in which it existed immediately before the occurrence of the damage, the amount of the payment shall be an amount equal to the proper cost of the works executed for the making good thereof."

I see, therefore, nothing at all inconsistent between the idea of making good in the sense of reinstatement and the idea of the building so made good and so reinstated being something that is different from and not identically the same as the old building, and, therefore, not within the provisions of the Rent Restrictions Acts. I observe that in Ellis & Sons Amalgamated Properties, Ltd. v. Sisman (1) the house was being reinstated, the cost of reconstruction being met out of payments by the War Damage Commission, which, presumably, means that it was being dealt with on a cost of works basis. For those reasons I think that the arbitrator was right in his conclusion, and, therefore, there is no error of law on the face of the award and the motion fails.

Award upheld with costs.

Solicitors: George C. Carter & Co. (for the claimants); John E. Fishwick, clerk and solicitor of Finsbury Borough Council (for the borough council).

(Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.)

GARDINER v. SEVENOAKS RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Morris, J.J.), May 10, 1950.]

Cinematograph — Film — Storage — Inflammable substance—Storage in cave — “Premises” within the Celluloid and Cinematograph Film Act, 1922 (c. 35), s. 1 (1).

The respondents served on the appellant a notice under the Celluloid and Cinematograph Film Act, 1922, calling on him to comply with certain safety regulations at a cave where he had stored films. Described in the notice as “premises,” the cave consisted of an underground chamber formed artificially as the result of quarrying and excavations and entered through a cutting which was closed by a wooden door. It was contended by the appellant that the cave was not “premises” within the Act and, therefore, the notice did not apply. On appeal, HELD: the cave constituted “premises” within s. 1 (1), and, therefore, the appellant must comply with the provisions of that sub-section.

[FOR THE CELLULOID AND CINEMATOGRAPH FILM ACT, 1922, s. 1, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 13, pp. 977, 978.]

CASE STATED by Sevenoaks (Kent) justices.

The respondents, as the local authority, served on the appellant a notice under the Celluloid and Cinematograph Film Act, 1922, requiring him to comply with certain safety provisions at a cave where he had stored films. On appeal by the appellant, the justices made an order that the appellant should within twenty-eight days give notice to the respondents of his intention to carry out the requirements, with certain exceptions, to their satisfaction or otherwise cease to use the premises for storing celluloid films. It was contended for the appellant that the caves were not “premises” within the meaning of s. 1 (1) of the Act, and that the word “premises” referred only to buildings or structures.

Manningham-Buller, K.C., and L. R. Miller for the appellant.

E. H. P. Wrightson for the respondents.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This is a Case stated by Kent justices sitting to hear an appeal brought by the appellant against Sevenoaks Rural District Council who had served on him a notice of certain requirements with regard to the storage of films under the Celluloid and Cinematograph Film Act, 1922. Under that Act a local authority can serve on the owner of premises notice to comply with various matters, and if he feels aggrieved he can appeal to a court of summary jurisdiction. In this case one question only arises—whether the place where the films in question were stored constitutes “premises” within s. 1 (1) of the Act.

It appears from the Case Stated that the appellant took a lease of the Chipstead Caves for a term of fourteen years at a yearly rent of £100, a condition of the lease being that the caves should be used for no other purpose than the storing of films. These caves are underground and have been in existence for some fifty years. They are not caves in the natural sense, having been formed by excavating and quarrying for sandstone. Entrance to them is by means of a cutting. The most important thing in the findings is that the entrance is closed by a wooden door which is the only means of entrance and exit, and, therefore, they are an enclosed place.

A Section 1 (1) of the Act provides: "No premises shall be used for any purpose to which this Act applies" unless certain information has been given. Throughout the Act the word "premises" is used with regard to the place where the film is to be stored. Counsel for the appellant argued that "premises" in this Act must be construed as a house or building, or as something ejusdem generis with a building, and that it cannot apply to caves which have been
B formed in this way. "Premises" is, no doubt, a word which is capable of many meanings. How it originally became applied to property is, I think, generally known. It was from the habit of conveyancers when they were drawing deeds of conveyance referring to property and speaking of "parcels". They set out the parcels in the early part of the deed, and later they would refer to "the said premises," meaning strictly that which had gone before, and gradually
C by common acceptance "premises" became applied, as it generally is now, to houses, land, shops, or whatever it may be, so that the word has come to mean generally real property of one sort or another. There is no doubt that from time to time the word "premises" has been given different meanings, either extended or more restricted.

D With regard to the Celluloid and Cinematograph Film Act, 1922, the first thing to remember is that it is what I may call a "safety Act" and the provisions which it contains and the regulations which are made under it are designed, not only for the safety of persons living in the immediate neighbourhood of where the films are stored, but also for the safety of those working at the place of storage. People may have to go into the store from time to time
E either to arrange or remove the films. Speaking for myself, I think that in using the word "premises" in this Act Parliament intended to use the widest possible word. I do not say that every cave would come within the term "premises" in this Act, if, for instance, it was an open cave which would be open to the outside air the whole time. This, however, was not that class of place. It was a place with a door, and, in fact, the excavations had been turned F into a closed warehouse. Having regard to that fact, in my opinion, the justices were right in holding that these caves were properly within the expression "premises" as used in this Act. Consequently, I think this appeal fails.

HUMPHREYS, J.: I agree.

MORRIS, J.: I agree.

G Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: W. G. Street & Co. (for the appellant); W. H. House & Sons, Sevenoaks (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re OPPENHEIM'S WILL TRUSTS. WESTMINSTER BANK, LTD.
v. OPPENHEIM AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Harman, J.), May 12, 1950.]

Will—Forfeiture clause—Income payable to beneficiary “so long as he shall be able to give a personal discharge”—Appointment of receiver in lunacy of beneficiary's estate.

By his will, dated Oct. 13, 1936, the testator gave his residuary estate to trustees on trust to pay the income thereof to his nephew H. “during the rest of his lifetime so long as he shall be able to give a personal discharge for such income and shall not have become bankrupt or assigned or charged such income in favour of any other person or corporation in any of which events the trusts in his favour shall determine.” The testator died in 1946, and the income of the residue was paid to H. until the end of 1948 when he was certified to be a person of unsound mind. On Jan. 25, 1949, a reception order under the Lunacy Act, 1890, was made, and, subsequently, a receiver of his estate was appointed under the Act.

HELD: the object of the forfeiture clause was to prevent the income getting into other hands, and the clause was not intended to operate where the income would remain for the benefit of H.; as the receiver was H.'s statutory agent and could give a good receipt for H.'s income, H. could give “a personal discharge” through the receiver; and, therefore, he had not forfeited his interest in the income of the testator's residue.

Re Marshall ([1920] 1 Ch. 284), applied.

[AS TO FORFEITURE CLAUSES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 34, pp. 421-423, paras. 468, 469; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 39, pp. 50, 51, Nos. 613-618.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Marshall, [1920] 1 Ch. 284; 89 L.J.Ch. 204; 122 L.T. 673; 39 Digest 50, 618.
- (2) Re Westby's Settlement, [1950] 1 All E.R. 479.
- (3) Re Greenwood, [1901] 1 Ch. 887; 70 L.J.Ch. 326; 84 L.T. 118; 44 Digest 1234, 10665.
- (4) Re Custance's Settlements, [1945] 2 All E.R. 441; [1946] Ch. 42; 114 L.J.Ch. 293; 173 L.T. 195; 2nd Digest Supp.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine (inter alia) whether, on the true construction of the testator's will and in the events that had happened, an interest in the income of the testator's residuary estate, given by cl. 7 of the will, had been forfeited. The interest was expressed to last “so long as [the beneficiary] shall be able to give a personal discharge” for the income. A reception order, dealing with the beneficiary as a person of unsound mind, was made, under the Lunacy Act, 1890, on Jan. 25, 1949, and, subsequently, a receiver of his estate was appointed under the Act. The facts and the relevant provisions of the will appear in the judgment.

R. Cozens-Hardy Horne for the plaintiffs, executors and trustees under the will.
Cross, K.C., and G. D. Johnston for the defendants other than the tenant for life.

Montgomery White, K.C., and J. A. Brightman for the tenant for life.

HARMAN, J.: The testator, Henry James Oppenheim, died on Dec. 17, 1946, leaving a considerable estate. The executors and trustees of his will, which was made on Oct. 13, 1936, are the plaintiffs, Westminster Bank, Ltd., and the testator's brother, Augustus, who is the first defendant to this summons. The testator had, at all material times, only one nephew, the second defendant, Hugo Charles Henry Oppenheim, who was born on Sept. 9, 1917, and was, therefore, an infant under the age of twenty-one when the will was made. The testator also had a sister, Rosalinda, now Mrs. Campbell (a defendant), and two other brothers, Alfred and Robert. Alfred died in 1927, leaving issue two daughters, Mrs. Waugh and Mrs. Kersley, who are also defendants, and Robert died sine prole in 1941.

A The testator explains in cl. 2 of his will that he is not leaving any share of his estate to his brothers, as they would be receiving other benefits on his death under the will of their father, and he goes on to say:

“ . . . my main consideration is that my nearest nephew in the male line and a son of him should benefit.”

B After giving certain pecuniary and specific legacies, by cl. 7 of his will he gave the residue of his estate on trust for sale and to pay an annuity to his sister Rosalinda, and subject thereto, “ if my nephew Hugo Oppenheim born on Sept. 9, 1917 (son of my brother Augustus) shall survive me ” on various discretionary trusts for the application of the income by the trustees for the benefit of Hugo until he should attain the age of twenty-five:

C “ . . . and upon further trust when my said nephew shall attain the age of twenty-five years to pay to him the income of my residuary estate during the rest of his lifetime so long as he shall be able to give a personal discharge for such income and shall not have become bankrupt or assigned or charged such income in favour of any other person or corporation in any of which events the trusts in his favour shall determine.”

D By cl. 8 of his will the testator dealt with the trusts which were to arise on the death of Hugo or the sooner determination of his interest under cl. 7, viz., that the capital and income should be held on trust for such of certain persons as should be then living. This provision indicates that the class which is to take on the proposed defeasance is to be ascertained at the moment of defeasance.

E After the testator died the income was duly paid to Hugo, who had attained the age of twenty-five years, but at the end of 1948 Hugo entered a mental institution as a voluntary patient. In due course he was certified, and a reception order under the Lunacy Act, 1890, dealing with him as a person of unsound mind, was made on Jan. 25, 1949. Within the last day or so a receiver of his estate has been appointed, and that receivership, I take it, dates back to the time when his disability began. The question which I have to decide is: Has F the event, which has happened, of his being certified to be a person of unsound mind unable to manage his own affairs, brought about a cesser or determination of his interest, which is expressed to last “ so long as he shall be able to give a personal discharge ” for the income? It is contended by counsel for the beneficiaries other than Hugo that a person who cannot give a valid receipt, because he is under the disability of lunacy, cannot give “ a personal discharge,” G and, therefore, that Hugo's interest determined on the day when he ceased to be able to sign a valid receipt, i.e., either on the date of his certification or on the date of the reception order, as to which there might have to be an inquiry. On the other hand, it is contended on behalf of Hugo that the forfeiture clause was intended to apply where there was a deprivation of the enjoyment of the income by the recipient of it and that an event like lunacy, which deprives H him of no part of the income, is not within the mischief of the clause. Moreover, it is said that “ a personal discharge ” does not mean that he himself must write the receipt for the income, but he can give his discharge by an agent, no less than by himself.

In Re Marshall (1), EVE, J., held ([1920] 1 Ch. 288):

“ The person appointed to act as a receiver under s. 116 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, is not strictly a receiver but the statutory agent of the person of unsound mind, and his receipt is receipt by such person and certainly not the less so where, as in this case, the whole income is directed to be applied for the maintenance of such person."

This decision does not seem to have been doubted, and has, indeed, been accepted by the Court of Appeal, in Re Westby's Settlement (2). On the decision in Re Marshall (1) is based the argument of counsel for Hugo that, as the receiver can give a good receipt for income of the patient—which, undoubtedly, he can—that receipt is the patient's receipt through his statutory receiver and, therefore, his "personal discharge." I am also asked to take into account what FARWELL, J., said in Re Greenwood (3), which is referred to by SIR RAYMOND EVERSLED, M.R., in Re Westby's Settlement (2), the latest decision on this subject. SIR RAYMOND EVERSLED, M.R., cited ([1950] 1 All E.R. 483) the words of FARWELL, J., in Re Greenwood (3), where he said ([1901] 1 Ch. 891):

"... we must bear in mind that the courts do not construe gifts on forfeiture so as to extend their limits beyond the fair meaning of the words unless they are actually driven to it. Forfeitures are not regarded with favour, and there can be no particular desire to extend the terms of a forfeiture clause to a gift such as the present."

In Re Greenwood (3), a creditor of the tenant for life had served a garnishee order on the trustees, and FARWELL, J., held that it was not within the mischief of the forfeiture clause. In Re Westby's Settlement (2) the Court of Appeal overruled Re Custance's Settlements (4), in which COHEN, J., held that a statutory charge, viz., expenses of a receiver, caused a forfeiture. The Court of Appeal held that that was not the kind of charge that was contemplated by forfeiture clauses and, therefore, it did not, in their opinion, work a forfeiture. [See now the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949, s. 8.]

In the case now before me, the testator directs that the income is to be paid to Hugo "so long as he shall be able to give a personal discharge for such income," and then follow the words, "and shall not have become bankrupt or assigned or charged such income." One is led to suppose that "to give a personal discharge" is something different from inability to do so arising out of bankruptcy, assignment or a mortgage. This supposition tends to support the argument of counsel for Hugo, but I am asked by counsel for the other beneficiaries to say that the words exactly fit that which has happened, i.e., that, owing to his disability, Hugo can no longer give "a personal discharge" for the income, and, therefore, a forfeiture has come about. On the whole, I do not feel able to accept the contention of counsel for the other beneficiaries. I think that a person who has a statutory agent, as Hugo has, can give "a personal discharge" by his agent, even as, e.g., if he were on the top of Mount Everest, his banker could give a personal discharge on his behalf. It seems to me, also, that the forfeiture was not intended to operate in a case where no one else would be entitled to the benefit of the income in the event which had happened, as the clause was intended to prevent the income getting into other hands. In this case, the whole of the income would remain for the maintenance and support of Hugo, and for his use if, as may be hoped and as the report does not suggest to be impossible, he recovers. In my opinion, therefore, the forfeiture clause has not come into operation and Hugo continues to be entitled to the income.

Declaration accordingly. Costs of all parties as between solicitor and client to be paid out of the residuary estate.

Solicitors: Norton, Rose, Greenwell & Co. (for the plaintiff and the defendants other than the tenant for life); Petch & Co. (for the tenant for life).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

PENNY v. NICHOLAS.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Morris, JJ.), May 9, 1950.]

Street Traffic—Excessive speed—Proof of speed—Evidence by one police officer of speedometer reading—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 10 (3) (as substituted by Road Traffic Act, 1934 (c. 50), s. 2 (3)).

A The appellant was convicted of the offence of driving a motor car in a built-up area at a speed exceeding thirty miles per hour contrary to the Road Traffic Act, 1934, s. 1 (1). The only witness called for the prosecution, a police constable, stated that he followed the appellant's car over a measured distance, keeping an even space between him and the appellant, and that the speedometer in the police car showed a speed of forty miles per hour. Tests of the speedometer had been carried out before and after the day of the alleged offence by other officers who informed the witness of the result of those tests, but did not give evidence themselves. For the appellant it was contended that the constable had no personal knowledge of the correctness of the speedometer and that any evidence of communications received by him from the other officers was hearsay and inadmissible.

B
C HELD: a person might be convicted of exceeding the speed limit on the evidence of one police officer if it was supported by evidence of the reading of a speedometer or some other mechanical means by which the officer's evidence became evidence of fact and not of mere opinion; in the present case the constable alleged that his speedometer registered a speed of forty miles an hour; and that was evidence on which, if so minded, the justices might act, even though there was no admissible evidence that the speedometer had been tested.

D Observations of LORD HEWART, C.J., and CHARLES, J., in Melhuish v. Morris ([1938] 4 All E.R. 99, 100), not approved.

Cases referred to:

- E (1) Melhuish v. Morris, [1938] 4 All E.R. 98; Digest Supp.
(2) Weatherogg v. Johns, (1931), cited in 95 J.P.Jo. 364.
(3) Russell v. Beesley, [1937] 1 All E.R. 527; 101 J.P. Jour. 37; 183 L.T. Jo. 68; Digest Supp.
(4) Young v. Bristol Aeroplane Co., Ltd., [1944] 2 All E.R. 293; [1944] K.B. 718; 113 L.J.K.B. 513; 171 L.T. 113; affmd., [1946] 1 All E.R. 98; [1946] A.C. 163; 115 L.J.K.B. 63; 174 L.T. 39; 2nd Digest Supp.
F (5) Gorham v. Brice, (1902), 18 T.L.R. 424; 42 Digest 870, 198.
(6) Plancq v. Marks, (1906), 70 J.P. 216; 94 L.T. 577; 42 Digest 870, 199.

CASE STATED by justices.

G The appellant was convicted and fined £1 by the Marlborough borough magistrates on a charge of unlawfully driving his car at a speed greater than thirty miles an hour in a built-up area at Marlborough on Oct. 2, 1949. He contended that the justices erred in law in convicting him because only one witness was called for the prosecution and his evidence was not corroborated in the manner required by the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 10 (3) (as substituted by the Road Traffic Act, 1934, s. 2 (3)), and also because that witness gave evidence of the correctness of the police car speedometer which was based on statements made to him by other officers, and was, therefore, hearsay.

H Skelhorn for the appellant.

Widgery for the respondent (the prosecutor).

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This is a Case stated by Marlborough borough justices before whom the appellant was charged that he " . . . did unlawfully drive a motor car on a certain road in a built-up area there situate at a speed greater than thirty miles per hour, contrary to s. 1 of the Road Traffic Act, 1934."

The justices convicted the appellant and fined him £1 and ordered his licence to be endorsed.

The question, at first sight a simple one, has developed into an interesting argument in which we have to consider certain authorities. I will read first the facts which the justices found.

"(1) that on Oct. 2, 1949, at 4.45 p.m. P.C. England was driving alone in a police car and followed the appellant's car from High Street, Marlborough, to the end of the built-up area along the Bath Road; (2) that P.C. England kept an even distance behind the appellant's car; (3) that the appellant's car was being driven by the appellant; (4) that from a point in the Bath Road opposite the Marlborough College Memorial Hall to the end of the built-up area, a distance of four-tenths of a mile, the speedometer in the police car showed an even speed of forty m.p.h.; (5) that on August 4, 1949, and Oct. 14, 1949, tests of the speedometer of the said police car were carried out [with the aid of a stop-watch]."

The Case sets out that those tests were made by a sergeant and another police constable who informed P.C. England that the speedometer was correct.

For the appellant it was contended:

". . . that the evidence of P.C. England, who was the only witness for the prosecution, was not corroborated in the way required by the Road Traffic Act, 1934, s. 2 (2) and (3), or at all, and our attention was drawn to the decision mentioned in para. 6 below—[i.e., Melhuish v. Morris (1)]. (2) It was contended that there was no proof as to the correctness of the speedometer in P.C. England's car as P.C. England could only prove that he was concerned in driving a car at a given speed over a measured distance, he had no personal knowledge of the stop-watch readings or of the correctness of those readings or of the correctness of the stop-watch, and, therefore, could not give admissible evidence as to the correctness of the speedometer. (3) It was further contended that anything the police sergeant may have said to P.C. England was hearsay and not admissible and the justices were not entitled to take into consideration anything that the police sergeant said to P.C. England."

The justices then say:

"We being of the opinion upon the evidence of P.C. England that the speed alleged by P.C. England was recorded on the speedometer and that the speedometer was accurate, and, having regard to Weatherhogg v. Johns (2), that we had before us more than the evidence of one witness to the effect that in the opinion of that witness the speed limit was being exceeded, held that the objection on behalf of the appellant could not be sustained and convicted him."

They ask:

"(a) Whether we rightly admitted the evidence of P.C. England as to the tests of the speedometer which he carried out jointly with other police officers, and in the course of which he relied on the observations of and information given by such officers who did not give evidence before us. (b) Whether, on the above statement of fact, we came to a correct determination and decision in point of law."

I do not know by whom the actual drafting of the Case was carried out, but, prima facie, it would look as though, if we gave a strict meaning to question (a) the justices are asking us whether hearsay is rightly admissible in evidence. Of course it is not, and we should have no difficulty in answering that question. We do not, however, think we can dispose of the case in that way, but we think we shall have to send it back to the justices to consider it in the light of what we are now going to say with regard to evidence and proof in these cases. The first case to which I need refer is Russell v. Beesley (3), which is authority for saying that the evidence of more than one police officer is not needed if it is supported by a speedometer or some other means by which the evidence given by the officer becomes evidence of fact and not of mere opinion. Section 10 (3) of the Road Traffic Act, 1930 (as substituted by s. 2 (3) of the Road Traffic Act, 1934), provides:

- A "A person prosecuted for driving a motor vehicle on a road at a speed exceeding a speed limit imposed by or under any enactment shall not be liable to be convicted solely on the evidence of one witness to the effect that in the opinion of the witness the person prosecuted was driving the vehicle at a speed exceeding that limit."

- B Therefore, if there is only the evidence of a police officer or any other person who says: "I saw the car, and, in my opinion, it was exceeding thirty miles an hour," that is not enough, although if two people give that evidence, it is in law sufficient to justify a conviction. Russell v. Beesley (3) and other cases show that, if the evidence of the one person relates to the reading of a speedometer, a mechanical device for recording speed, the justices can act on it and need not have the evidence of two persons. The justices in Russell v. Beesley (3) had
- C found in these terms ([1937] 1 All E.R. 528):

- "We being of opinion that in cases of this kind [not in this particular case] it is not desirable that the evidence of a police officer checking a person's speed from the speedometer in his own car should be accepted unless corroborated by another witness present at the time, dismissed the
- D information without giving any opinion upon the legal point raised."

- The court said that the justices were wrong, and that it was not necessary to call two witnesses, provided that the evidence given by the one witness who was called was not evidence of mere opinion. In that case it was supported by the fact that his speedometer showed a certain speed which he gave in evidence, and it is only fair to say, in view of the argument of counsel for the
- E present appellant, that there was evidence in that case that the speedometer had been tested.

- The case on which counsel for the appellant relied is Melhuish v. Morris (1), which, he contended, laid down that the court can only act on the evidence of one police officer supported by a speedometer reading if that speedometer has been tested. For reasons which I am going to develop in a moment, I
- F think that case goes too far. The justices, of course, need never accept any evidence if they do not believe it or feel that for some reason they cannot accept it. It may be that in any particular case the justices may say: "We are not going to accept the evidence of this speedometer," but the question that arises is whether or not it is necessary as a matter of law, before the speedometer reading can be accepted, that the court must have evidence before it that the
- G speedometer has been tested. That was the effect of the judgment of CHARLES, J., and LORD HEWART, C.J., in that case. In fact, CHARLES, J., said ([1938] 4 All E.R. 99):

- "Therefore, the case rested upon the accuracy of the speedometer, which had not been tested . . . It does not matter if five officers glued
- H their eyes to the speedometer if evidence is not given as to its accuracy."

Much the same was the opinion of LORD HEWART, C.J., who said that the police were relying on a mechanical device. MACNAGHTEN, J., took a different view, but that case is not very satisfactory because, as LORD HEWART, C.J., pointed out, only one side was present to argue. Counsel for the appellant said, however, that, at any rate so long as it stands, it is a decision which this court cannot overrule. We can, however, always differ from a case on the ground that it has not been argued on both sides. It has been laid down by the Court of Appeal in Young v. Bristol Aeroplane Co., Ltd. (4) that where material cases or sections of statutes were not cited to the court in a case, the court need not follow the decision if those cases or enactments might have influenced it had they been cited. Two cases were not cited to the court in Melhuish v. Morris (1), which might have been cited if the case had been argued on both sides, and they would, I think, have had a very considerable influence on the decision.

The question in the present case is whether, if evidence is given that a mechanical device, such as a watch or speedometer, recorded a particular speed or a particular time, that recording is prima facie evidence on which the court can act. In a particular case the court might refuse to act on it, but here counsel for the respondent called our attention to the fact that the difference is very great. The offence is driving at a speed exceeding thirty miles an hour, and the evidence is that the speedometer showed that the appellant was exceeding that speed by ten miles an hour. It would be a very considerable error if the speedometer was as much out as that. A B

The first case to which I call attention as not being cited to the court in Melhuish v. Morris (1) is Gorham v. Brice (5), which arose out of the Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896. There a constable had timed a man with a stop watch. It was argued by counsel for the appellant in the case (18 T.L.R. 424) C

"... that the magistrates ought not to have admitted the evidence given by the constable as to the result shown by his timing the pace at which the appellant was travelling, because the watch had not been tested and there was nothing to show that it was accurate, and that, such evidence having been improperly admitted, the conviction should be quashed."

The court refused to accept that view. LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J., in giving judgment, disposed of the case in rather a summary manner because he is reported as having said (ibid.): D

"... he was unable to understand the motives with which such appeals were brought or what automobilists thought to gain by suggesting there was no evidence as to speed, when, as in practically every case, they did not like the findings of magistrates... They had the evidence given by the constable before them, and no suggestion was made that he was a person who ought not to be believed. The appeal was an attempt to turn a question of fact into a question of law." E

There the police officer said: "I had a stop watch in my hand, I timed the man, and I say he was going at such and such a pace." It was said that the court ought not to accept that evidence because there had been no test of the watch. The police officer was using a mechanical device—just the same as the speedometer—and that was what was decided in that case. F

The next case which was not cited to the court in Melhuish v. Morris (1) was Plancq v. Marks (6). There again evidence was given as to the rate of speed by means of stop watches, the court accepted the evidence, and the conviction stood. G

Those two cases seem to show that the expressions used by CHARLES, J., in Melhuish v. Morris (1), and by LORD HEWART, C.J., went too far, and that it is admissible evidence if an officer says: "I followed this man and observed from my speedometer that I was progressing at the rate of forty miles an hour. Therefore, he must have been progressing at that rate because I kept an even pace behind him." No one is saying that that is more than prima facie evidence. There may be cross-examination; there may be evidence given on the other side. The defendant may say: "That is all very well, but my own speedometer showed that I was only going at twenty-five or thirty miles an hour." Then the justices have to make up their minds between the parties, and it may be that, after seeing the witnesses and hearing their evidence, they may prefer the evidence given by the defendant to the evidence given by the police. H

The question is whether or not, if a police officer says: "I was following this man and the speedometer on my car showed that he was going, not at thirty and a half, or just over thirty miles an hour, but at forty miles an hour," that is not evidence on which the justices can act, although it is not strictly proved before them that the speedometer has been tested. Therefore, we propose to send the case back to the justices and to ask them whether, apart from the test that was afterwards carried out, they would have held on the evidence of P.C. England and his observation of the driving and his speedometer on October 2, the day of the offence, they were satisfied that the appellant was travelling over thirty miles an hour. They can say, if it is desired, that the evidence of the test was strictly not admissible, but the justices must make up their minds whether they were satisfied, apart from the test, that the car was being driven at a speed exceeding thirty miles an hour. This case is of some importance because we have made a considerable inroad on Melhuish v. Morris (1), a case in which, as I say, not only was the respondent not represented, but the cases to which I have referred were not brought to the attention of the court.

HUMPHREYS, J.: I agree with the result proposed by my Lord, and for the reasons given by him.

MORRIS, J.: I agree.

Case remitted to the justices.

Solicitors: McKenna & Co., agents for Moger & Couch, Taunton (for the appellant); Collyer-Bristow & Co., agents for P. A. Selborne Stringer, Trowbridge (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Affirmed. H.L. [1951] 2 All E.R. 869.

TAMPLIN & SON'S BREWERY BRIGHTON, LTD. v. NASH (INSPECTOR OF TAXES).

[COURT OF APPEAL (Somervell and Singleton, L.JJ., and Roxburgh, J.), March 20, 21, 22, May 1, 10, 1950.]

Income Tax—Deductions against profits—Brewery company—Tied houses—Premises held under long leases—Rent exceeding net annual value—Premises sub-let at rents lower than net annual value—Deduction of rent forgone—Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), sched. D, Cases I and II, r. 3 (m)—Finance Act, 1940 (c. 29), s. 17 (2).

The taxpayers, a brewery company, were leaseholders of licensed houses under leases granted for a term exceeding fifty years, which were "long leases" within the meaning of s. 17 (1) of the Finance Act, 1940. The taxpayers sub-let the licensed houses to tied tenants who, in consideration of the tie, paid a rent less than the full annual value, and less, in the aggregate, than the amount which the taxpayers paid by way of rent to their lessor. In computing the amount of their profits to be charged to income tax the taxpayers sought to deduct the "rent forgone," namely, the difference between the rents which they received from the tied tenants and the rents which would have been received by them if they had sub-let the houses free from the burden of the tie. The Crown contended that the taxpayers were prohibited by the effect of s. 17 (2) of the Act of 1940 and r. 3 (m) of the Rules Applicable to Cases I and II of sched. D from deducting the rent paid by them.

HELD: in computing their profits for assessment to tax, the taxpayers were entitled to deduct the "rent forgone" on the letting of the tied houses.

Usher's Wiltshire Brewery, Ltd. v. Bruce ([1915] A.C. 433), applied.

Per SINGLETON, L.J.: "When a trader tenant has paid his rent (and that rent is not taken into account in the computation of his profits) and when he has paid the sched. A tax, he, as a trader, is in just the same position as if he were the owner of the freehold. He can then set the annual value of the premises against his profits as the freeholder does. There is nothing in s. 17 (2) [of the Finance Act, 1940] to prevent this. The result is that the trader who has a long lease is in precisely the same position as to tax as he was before the Act of 1940, and the Crown in effect obtains tax on the rent. This achieves the object of the section, which was not devised to place an additional burden on traders, but was meant to ensure that, when premises were let on long lease at a rent higher than the annual value, the landlord should be charged to tax on the rent."

[AS TO DEDUCTIONS AGAINST PROFITS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 17, pp. 149-156, paras. 309-320; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 28, pp. 56, 57, Nos. 284-291.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Usher's Wiltshire Brewery, Ltd. v. Bruce, [1915] A.C. 433; 84 L.J.K.B. 417; 112 L.T. 651; 6 Tax Cas. 399; 28 Digest 56, 287.
- (2) Lowry v. Consolidated African Selection Trust, Ltd., [1940] 2 All E.R. 545; [1940] A.C. 648; 109 L.J.K.B. 539; 164 L.T. 56; 23 Tax Cas. 259; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) Collyer v. Hoare & Co., Ltd., (1928), 17 Tax Cas. 169; revsd., [1931] 1 K.B. 123; 100 L.J.K.B. 249; 144 L.T. 71; 17 Tax Cas. 184; revsd., [1932] A.C. 407; 101 L.J.K.B. 274; 146 L.T. 469; 17 Tax Cas. 209; Digest Supp.
- (4) Stevens v. Boustead (E.) & Co., [1918] 1 K.B. 382; 87 L.J.K.B. 321; 118 L.T. 294; 7 Tax Cas. 107; 28 Digest 45, 229.
- (5) Gillatt and Watts v. Colquhoun, (1884), 2 Tax Cas. 76; 28 Digest 47, 244.
- (6) Russell v. Aberdeen Town and County Bank, (1888), 13 App. Cas. 418; 58 L.J.P.C. 8; 59 L.T. 481; 53 J.P. 244; 2 Tax Cas. 321; 28 Digest 45, 227.

APPEAL by the taxpayers from a decision of CROOM-JOHNSON, J., dated Oct. 24, 1949, dismissing an appeal by the taxpayers from a decision of the Special Commissioners.

The taxpayers, a brewery company, held licensed houses under long leases at rents in excess of the net annual values and let them to tied tenants at rents lower than the net annual values. The Special Commissioners held that, in computing their profits for assessment to tax, the taxpayers were not entitled to deduct the difference between the rents which could have been obtained from the properties if let without the burden of the tie and the rents actually receivable under the tie. CROOM-JOHNSON, J., upheld the decision of the Special Commissioners. The Court of Appeal now allowed the appeal of the taxpayers. The relevant facts are set out in the judgment of SINGLETON, L.J.

Cyril King, K.C., Talbot, K.C., and Oliver Shaw for the taxpayers.
Grant, K.C., and R. P. Hills for the Crown.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 10. The following judgments were read.

SOMERVELL, L.J.: This is an appeal by the taxpayers from a decision of CROOM-JOHNSON, J., upholding a decision of the Special Commissioners for Income Tax. The appeal turns on the ratio of the decision in Usher's Wiltshire Brewery, Ltd. v. Bruce (1). That case was concerned, as is this, with tied houses let by a brewer to a tenant. The tenant was, of course, carrying on his business in the tied house of which he was in occupation. The brewer, however, claimed, and claimed successfully, that a tied house, let to a tenant, be treated as held and used by him, the brewer, in the course of his business, so that he could bring in expenses in respect of it under his sched. D, Case I, computation. As LORD ATKINSON put it ([1915] A.C. 455):

A "The publican's trade is the vending of the landlord's beer and none other. The house is the market-place for that beer and none other . . . The two trades are as dependent upon and as connected with each other as they well can be."

B The Crown in that case contended that there were two distinct trades, the brewer's, of making and selling beer to, inter alios, their tied tenant, and the tenant's of selling the beer which he bought to the public. The brewer, as I have said, succeeded. The first and simplest deduction claimed and allowed was in respect of money spent on repairs to the houses. The second deduction claimed and allowed, on which the present argument arises, was stated in this way (ibid., 434):

C "Difference between rents of leasehold houses or sched. A assessment of freehold houses on the one hand, and rents received from tied tenants on the other hand."

D In the bargain made between the brewer and the tied tenant the tenant undertook to get all his beer from the brewer, he undertook to pay a somewhat higher price for the beer than that paid by other customers, and he got the house at a rent less than it would have commanded if let as a free house—in other words at a rent less than its full annual value. As appears from the second deduction claimed, some of the houses let to tied tenants were freeholds and some leaseholds.

E The present argument arises in this way. The taxpayers leased a number of licensed houses from a company called Tamplins Licensed Properties, Ltd. The lessor company was a wholly owned subsidiary, but no point turned on this before this court. A rent of £40,000 paid by the taxpayers to the lessor company covered the houses with which we are concerned and others with which we are not concerned. No difficulty arises as to this, as, subject to the points of law, figures have, I understand, been agreed. It is also agreed that the proportion of the rent referable to these houses exceeded the annual value. F The premises in question were sub-let to tied tenants on terms similar to those I have stated. The taxpayers claim, under their sched. D computation, to deduct a sum equal to the difference between the rents received by them in respect of these houses and the rents which would have been received if the houses had been let free of the tie.

G The rent paid by the taxpayers to their lessor is, it is agreed, rent under a long lease within the meaning of s. 17 of the Finance Act, 1940, the material parts of which are as follows:

H "(1) This section applies to the following payments, that is to say (a) rents under long leases; . . . (2) Rules 1 and 4 of No. VIII of sched. A shall not apply to any payment to which this section applies, but any such payment shall, so far as it does not fall under any other Case, be charged with tax under Case VI of sched. D and be treated for the purposes of such of the provisions of the Income Tax Acts as apply to royalties paid in respect of the user of a patent as if it were such a royalty."

Rules 1 and 4 of No. VIII of sched. A to the Income Tax Act, 1918, are the rules which provide for the deduction from rent or other annual payments charged on land of a proportionate amount of the sched. A assessment paid by the occupier. The effect of treating rents paid under long leases as royalties is, by reason of the provisions of r. 3 (m) of the Rules Applicable to sched. D, Cases I and II, to prohibit this deduction for the purpose of a Case I or II computation. Sums paid in respect of royalties fall under the All Schedules Rules, r. 19 and r. 21. If, therefore, the rent under a long lease is paid out of profits and gains brought into charge the payer is entitled to deduct and retain the tax.

I will consider the working of s. 17 (2) of the Act of 1940 in more detail later, but the main line of the argument can now be stated. If the deduction allowed by Usher's case (1) is that of rent paid, giving credit for rent received, then counsel for the Crown submits that this is prohibited by s. 17 (2) and r. 3 (m), at any rate in a case like the present, where the rent exceeds the annual value. If, on the other hand, what is allowed by Usher's case (1) is a notional sum arrived at by taking the difference between what could have been got for the house as a free house and what is paid by the tied tenant, then counsel for the taxpayers submits that s. 17 (2) does not affect the right. The rent under the long lease does not come into the calculation.

Before considering Usher's case (1) in more detail, I will consider the effect of s. 17 (2) in the case of an ordinary trader who holds under a long lease the premises which he occupies for the purpose of his trade. It is necessary to do this, as counsel for the Crown based an argument on the intention of the section to be gathered from its application in such a case. In the present case it was agreed that the rent under the long lease exceeded the sched. A annual value, and I will make this assumption in the figures which I will use. A trader's profit before deducting rent is £1,000. The rent under a long lease of the trade premises is £200. The annual value, as assessed for sched. A, is £100. Before the Act of 1940 it is agreed by counsel for the Crown that the trader could have deducted the long lease rent as a disbursement, reducing his taxable profits to £800. The trader will also have paid sched. A tax on the annual value, that is to say £100. He will recoup himself in respect of this by deducting it from the £200 paid to his landlord. The trader, therefore, bears tax on £800, his net profit. The landlord bears the sched. A tax on the annual value, but prior to 1940 the excess rent over and above the annual value escaped taxation. A trader who owns and occupies his business premises is entitled to deduct the annual value for the purpose of his sched. D computation. I am considering the ordinary case in which the premises are in this country and the trader is assessed to sched. A tax. If he holds the premises on lease at a rent below the sched. A annual value, it is agreed that he is entitled to deduct a sum equal to the annual value. There is a dispute which arose in the second appeal* whether he is to be treated as deducting first the rent and then the difference between that rent and the annual value or whether one treats the deduction as one of annual value simpliciter. The result is that prior to 1940 a trader lessee of business premises could deduct the rent or the amount of the annual value, whichever was the higher. On the figures which I have put, counsel on behalf of the Crown agrees that, after 1940, the trader remains entitled to deduct the amount of the annual value. This reduces the £1,000 profit to £900. He pays tax on this sum under sched. D. He also bears sched. A tax on the annual value, £100. He has, therefore, paid tax so far on £1,000. The provisions of s. 17 (2) entitle him to deduct and retain tax on the whole of the £200 rent. He, therefore, bears tax, as before, on £800. His position is unaffected, but the landlord suffers tax by deduction on the whole £200 instead of only on £100. The section has taxed the excess rent which previously escaped.

In Usher's case (1) there was no suggestion that the amount of the rent paid by the brewer was other than the sched. A annual value, nor was there any suggestion that that value was not the amount by which the house could have been let as a free house. As EARL LOREBURN said ([1915] A.C. 446):

* Webbs (Aberbeeg), Ltd. v. Davies the subject-matter in which case was the same as in Tamplin's case. The appeal succeeded, being covered by the decision in the present case.

"... no argument was offered to show that the rent paid by the brewery company is other than the proper annual value."

Counsel for the Crown submits that the basis of the deduction in the case of the leasehold houses in Usher's case (1) was the rent paid by the brewer to be deducted as a disbursement, diminished by the rent received from the tied tenant. As a long lease rent cannot now be deducted by reason of s. 17 (2) of the Finance Act, 1940, the basis of any Usher deduction in the case of premises held under long leases has gone. Counsel for the Crown relied particularly on the exposition of Usher's case (1) given by LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN in Lowry v. Consolidated African Selection Trust, Ltd. (2). LORD RUSSELL said ([1940] 2 All E.R. 560):

"... so far as concerns the leaseholds, the position seems to present no abnormal features. It is a plain case of entering actual income and actual outgoings."

The actual outgoing, says counsel for the Crown, is the rent, which, if it is a long lease rent, cannot now be deducted as an outgoing.

Counsel for the taxpayers submits that an examination of the speeches in Usher's case (1) and of equally authoritative expositions of the decision show that this was not the basis. He submits that the deduction allowed is not based on a rent paid, but is the difference between the proper annual value—the value in the market of the house let as a free house—and the rent received from the tied tenant. He relies on the description of the Usher deduction as "rents forborne" in the speech of LORD WARRINGTON OF CLYFFE ([1932] A.C. 415) in Collyer v. Hoare & Co., Ltd. (3). LORD TOMLIN (ibid., 419) described the deduction as "rent forgone."

In Lowry's case (2) VISCONT MAUGHAM, commenting on some observations by LORD SUMNER in Usher's case (1) in which the expression "rent forgone" occurred, said ([1940] 2 All E.R. 555):

"The second sentence contains the words 'rent forgone,' but I think that the words in their context mean only rent which might have been, but was not actually, received."

In Usher's case (1) EARL LOREBURN said ([1915] A.C. 446);

"In consideration of this 'tie' the tenants occupy at rents less than the annual value [i.e., in the case of the freehold houses] and less than the rents which the brewery company itself has to pay for the houses, and the sum claimed to be deducted must be taken to represent in each case the difference between the rents actually received from the tied tenants and the proper annual value."

The words which I have italicised support the argument of counsel for the taxpayers. The speech of LORD ATKINSON also supports counsel's argument, as admittedly does LORD SUMNER'S, where the expression (ibid., 469) "rent foregone" is to be found. LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON describes the deduction in the case of leasehold houses (ibid., 463) as:

"... the difference between the rent they [the brewers] pay and the rent they receive."

This supports the argument of counsel for the Crown.

If I may say so with respect, as that case proceeded on the basis that the rent, the sched. A annual value, and the rent which could have been obtained if the house had been let as a free house were all the same figure, it is, perhaps, not surprising that the deduction is described in somewhat differing words.

The principle is best seen by considering a case where the brewer owns the freehold of the tied house. I assume the annual value is £100, and this is accepted as the figure at which the brewer could let the house as a free house. He gets £40 rent from his tied tenant, on which he suffers sched. A tax by deduction. He is entitled under the decision in Usher's case (1) to deduct £60 in his sched. D computation. In other words, he is not treated as making any profit until he has got back in profits on the beer he sells the £60, being the difference between the rent he could get and what he charges the tied tenant. He has not, of course, paid any tax on this £60, as he would have done if he had himself occupied the premises through a manager. Therefore, as it seems to me, the deduction is accurately described by the words "rent forborne" or "rent forgone." If the rent the brewer pays is equal to, or higher than, the sum at which the house could be let as a free house, I should have thought that the principle applicable must still be the same, namely, rent forborne. Assuming however, that counsel for the Crown is right and that in such a case the brewer could deduct rent paid, as he would wish to if it was higher than the annual value, as an ordinary outgoing, giving credit for the rent he receives, I do not think that that would lead to the conclusion that s. 17 (2) prohibits the Usher deduction altogether. On this basis, the position of the brewer qua a tied house would be aptly described by the following formula. He is entitled to deduct the rent at which the house could be let free or the actual rent he pays, whichever is the higher, giving credit for the rent received. This is analogous to the position of a trader-occupier, who can deduct the annual value or the rent he pays, whichever is the higher. Counsel for the Crown agreed that in the case of an ordinary trader-occupier lessee s. 17 (2), having prohibited the deduction of the rent, has not taken away the right to deduct the annual value. As the figures quoted earlier show, if this were not so, s. 17 (2) would have put the ordinary trader-occupier in a worse position. On analogous reasoning, the brewer can still, I think, deduct rent forgone.

I, therefore, come to the conclusion, subject to further arguments which I shall consider in a moment, that, having regard to the principle in Usher's case (1) and to what was said in the majority of the speeches in that case and the later speeches referred to, the basis of the Usher deduction is in all cases rent forgone, and is, therefore, unaffected by the provisions of s. 17 (2). If I am wrong to this extent, that, where the rent actually paid led to a larger deduction (this was allowable before the Act of 1940), I do not think that the prohibition by s. 17 (2) of that basis precludes the taxpayers relying on the alternative of rent forgone, as claimed in the present case.

The Crown submitted figures, which counsel for the taxpayers did not dispute, to show that, if any Usher deduction was allowed in the case of a brewer paying rent under a long lease, the brewer paid less tax as a result of the application of s. 17 (2) than he did before. This, the Crown submitted, was clearly not intended. I am inclined to agree, but I do not think this would justify the court in giving the decision in Usher's case (1) a basis other than that which is, in my opinion, to be extracted from it, nor in making s. 17 (2) prohibit a deduction which it does not prohibit. The matter is admittedly a complicated one, and Parliament may well have overlooked the repercussions of s. 17 (2) on the facts of the present case.

Finally, the Crown submitted that since the decision in Usher's case (1) amendments to what is now r. 5 (1) of the Rules Applicable to Cases I and II of sched. D have destroyed the basis on which Usher's case (1) was decided, and that decision was no longer applicable. Rule 5 (1) at present reads as follows:

"The computation of tax shall be made exclusive of the annual value of lands, tenements, hereditaments, or heritages occupied for the purpose of the trade or profession and separately assessed and charged under sched. A."

The last eight words have been added since Usher's case (1) was decided, by the Finance Act, 1926, s. 36 (I) and sched. IV. There is, I think, a difficulty in that argument at the outset. There are observations in Usher's case (1), particularly in the speech of LORD ATKINSON, comparing the position of a tied tenant with a manager and showing how similar the position is from the point of view of the brewer's trade. Nevertheless, it was plain that the tied house was in the occupation of the tied tenant. It was not occupied by the brewer for the purpose of his trade. This is emphasised in the argument of the Attorney-General ([1915] A.C. 441). I doubt whether the predecessor to r. 5 (1) was the basis of the decision in Usher's case (1) for that reason, and also from the analysis given of what seems to me its principle. At the date when Usher's case (1) was decided the predecessor of r. 5 was r. 2 of the Rules Applicable to Cases I and II of sched. D to the Income Tax Act, 1842 (DOWELL'S INCOME TAX LAWS, 1913 edn., p. 294). The relevant words are:

"The computation of the duty to be charged in respect of any trade . . . shall be made exclusive of the profits or gains arising from lands, tenements or hereditaments occupied for the purpose of such . . . trade."

Section 9 of the Finance Act, 1898, also dealt with this subject, but does not seem to me to affect the issue. In 1917 it was decided that this rule allowed the deduction of the annual value of premises abroad occupied for the purposes of the trade: see Stevens v. Boustead (4). The concluding words in the present r. 5 would negative any such claim today, because the lands would not have been assessed and charged under sched. A. There are further answers to the Crown's argument. If I am right, the House of Lords, in Usher's case (1), was not basing itself on the rule allowing the deduction of annual value. It was on the very special relationship of brewer and tied tenant allowing a deduction of rent forborne. Secondly, these tied houses were separately assessed and charged under sched. A. Counsel for the Crown, if he reaches this stage, has, as it seems to me, to add these words: "to the extent to which that charge is paid or borne by the person claiming the exclusion."

I, therefore, think that the appeal succeeds. The Special Commissioners and the learned judge took the view that the Usher allowance was a claim to the deduction of the lease rent paid by the brewer, credit being given for the rent received, and was, therefore, prohibited by s. 17 (2) of the Finance Act, 1940. They relied on the observations of LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN in Lowry's case (2), which I agree support the Crown's argument. This subject is, at any rate to me, a complicated one, and I have given my reasons to the best of my ability for coming to a different conclusion.

SINGLETON, L.J.: The taxpayers appealed against additional first assessments raised on them in respect of their profits from carrying on the trade or business of a brewery. The question to be determined depends on what effect, if any, s. 17 of the Finance Act, 1940, has on the assessment of a brewery company in so far as its tied houses are concerned. The houses are owned by another company, Tamplin's Licensed Properties, Ltd., and under an agreement for lease they are held by the taxpayers for a term of sixty-one years computed from Oct. 1, 1933, the taxpayers paying a block rent of £40,000 a year to Tamplin's, Ltd. The taxpayers let each of the houses to a tied tenant on terms which are commonly to be found as between brewers and their tied tenants. The object of the lettings was to enable the taxpayers to obtain a better market for their beer, and, as one would expect the rents paid by the tied tenants are much less than the sched. A assessment of the houses and much less in the aggregate than the sum of £40,000 paid to the holding company.

For the purpose of making up their annual accounts for the year ended Apr. 30, 1941, the taxpayers included as a debit item the block rent of £40,000, and as a credit item the sum of £5,329 received as rent from the tied tenants. It is now admitted that the agreement for lease under which the houses were held from Tamplin's, Ltd., was a long lease within the meaning of s. 17 of the Finance Act, 1940, and it is claimed by the Crown that under sub-s. (2) of that section the rent payable by the taxpayers must be treated as if it were a royalty paid in respect of the user of a patent which, under the provisions of rule 3 (m) of the Rules Applicable to Cases I and II of sched. D, may not be deducted in computing the amount of the profits to be charged. This is not really in dispute, but the claim of the taxpayers is that they are entitled, in arriving at their profits, to a deduction in respect of the properties which they let on tied tenancies, namely, a sum equal to the difference between the rents they receive from the tied tenants and the rents which would have been received by them if the houses had been let separately free from the burden of the tie—the annual value.

The system of tied houses is of long standing, and was followed by the taxpayers in order to obtain a better market for their beer, from which it is to be assumed that the profit from sales would be the greater. If the houses were not tied, the taxpayers would get higher rents, but lower sales, or less profit, from their sales of beer. They are a commercial undertaking looking for profit. Tax in respect of each of the houses is, of course, charged on the annual value under sched. A. The tax chargeable on the taxpayers under sched. D is to be computed on the full amount of the balance of the profits or gains arising from their trade. In Gillatt and Watts v. Colquhoun (5) the Solicitor-General (Sir Farrer Herschell) in his argument said:

“Where a man owns premises, and uses them for business purposes, he may be considered as paying the rent to himself which he would otherwise pay to somebody else. The ownership of the premises may be looked upon as something apart from the carrying on of the business, and it may be that he is entitled to treat the matter as if he paid himself just what anybody else would pay as the rent of the premises.”

That was a case in which leasehold premises had been acquired and used for trade purposes. It was held that the deduction from the assessment on the trade profits in respect of such premises must be limited to the existing annual value thereof, whatever the premium originally paid might have been. SMITH, J., in his judgment, said (2 Tax Cas. 85):

“... I am bound by the finding in this case in para. 5, where they say ‘The premises in question are assessed under sched. A of the Income Tax Acts at the sum of £1,000, which for the purposes of this case is to be taken as the “annual value” of the premises.’ Now upon the statement of this case how much is to be set off against the gross takings . . . ? It seems to me it should be £1,000 and not £1,775.”

From this it appears clear that the same principle applies in the case of leasehold property as in the case of freehold property. In computing the balance of the profits or gains the trader who makes use of his own freehold or leasehold property for the purposes of his business is entitled to a deduction in respect of the annual value of the property, namely, the sched. A assessment.

In Russell v. Aberdeen Town and County Bank (6), it was not disputed that the annual value of the premises owned by the bank was the proper measure of the deduction if the premises were exclusively used for the purposes of the trade or business of banking. LORD FITZGERALD, after defining profits, said (13 App. Cas. 429):

“... the annual value of them [i.e., the premises] forms a proper deduction in estimating the balance of profits . . . ”

Usher's Wiltshire Brewery, Ltd. v. Bruce (1) was before the House of Lords in 1914, and the decision provides strong support for the submission made on behalf of the taxpayers. The brewery company there were the owners or lessees of a number of licensed houses, which they let to tied tenants. They claimed (inter alia) that in the computation of their profits they should be allowed as a deduction the differences between the rents of leasehold houses, or sched. A assessments, on the one hand, and the rents received from tied tenants, on the other hand; and they were successful. No particular point seems to have been made in that case of leasehold houses as between sched. A assessments and the rents which the company were paying. EARL LOREBURN said ([1915] A.C. 446):

A "In consideration of this 'tie' the tenants occupy at rents less than the annual value and less than the rents which the brewery company itself has to pay for the houses, and the sum claimed to be deducted must be taken to represent in each case the difference between the rents actually received from the tied tenants and the proper annual value. For no argument was offered to show that the rent paid by the brewery company is other than the proper annual value. And it is agreed that this letting at reduced rents is made solely . . . to swell the profits of the brewery business. On ordinary principles of commercial trading such loss arising from letting tied houses at reduced rents is obviously a sound commercial outlay. Therefore this item must be deducted."

B
C No good purpose would be served by further citations from the speeches in that case, except to notice the expression "money forgone" used by LORD SUMNER (ibid., 469). I shall refer to the effect of the decision later. I do not think that CROOM-JOHNSON, J., was right in saying that the taxpayers' case was dependent solely on the speech of LORD SUMNER. It seems to me that support for it is to be found from the decision of the House and from most of the speeches.

D In Collyer v. Hoare & Co., Ltd. (3) it was decided that, in determining the amounts to be allowed as deductions in respect of deficiencies of rent, each tied house must be considered separately, and that, in computing the deduction to be made, account must be taken of premiums paid as well as of rent—from which it would appear that the matter was treated on the basis of the company's form of accounts. That case is of importance as showing the way in which the decision in Usher's case (1) was regarded. In the court of first instance ROWLATT, J., said (17 Tax Cas. 180):

E "It [Usher's case (1)] said there is no distinction in the particular case of a tied house between a manager and the tenant."

F In the House of Lords LORD BUCKMASTER said ([1932] A.C. 410):

G "So far as the tied houses are concerned, if in any case rent paid by the tenant is less than the amount of the assessment under sched. A, it has been decided in Usher's case (1) that the appellants are entitled in preparing their accounts for assessment under sched. D to deduct as an expense the difference between the rent received and the sched. A assessment . . . They are in fact regarded as business premises of the undertaking. The decision referred to places that point beyond controversy."

LORD ATKIN said (ibid., 416):

H "Whether the expense allowed in Usher's case (1) is based upon a deduction of the sched. A valuation as on premises used in the brewer's business, mitigated by the sum received from the tied tenant, or whether it is regarded as a notional sum paid for the advantage of the tie, it is allowed as an expense incident to the particular house in respect of which it is incurred."

LORD TOMLIN said (ibid., 419):

"In Usher's case (1), where tied houses of a brewery company were held by the tenants at rents below the sched. A valuations, your Lordships'

House . . . treated the difference between the rent and the valuation in the case of each house as rent forgone, or money spent exclusively for the purpose of earning profits, and held that expense to be one which could be deducted for the purpose of ascertaining profits and gains under sched. D.'

Lowry v. Consolidated African Selection Trust, Ltd. (2) is not really in point, except for the criticism ([1940] 2 All E.R. 562) by LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN of part of the speech of LORD SUMNER in Usher's case (1), on which criticism CROOM-JOHNSON, J., may be said to have based his judgment in favour of the Crown. VISCOUNT MAUGHAM said (ibid., 555), that LORD SUMNER in Usher's case (1) by the words "rent forgone," meant "only rent which might have been, but was not actually received" adding that Usher's case (1) had no application to the case which was then being considered by the House of Lords.

The position arising from the authorities to which I have referred may be summarised in this way: (i) A trader who owns the premises on and from which he carries on his business is entitled, in computing the balance of his trading profits or gains, to make a deduction of the annual value of the premises. (ii) In this regard no distinction has been drawn between the case of the freeholder and that of the leaseholder: see per LORD ATKINSON in Usher's case (1) ([1915] A.C. 455). (iii) The decision in Usher's case (1) placed the brewer who let his houses on tied tenancies in an exceptional position. They are to be regarded as business premises of the undertaking. (iv) The amount of the deduction allowable to the brewer is the rent forgone—words interpreted by VISCOUNT MAUGHAM as meaning rent which might have been received but was not actually received. Hence the importance of the sched. A assessment, or the rack rent at which the premises are worth to be let by the year—the "potential rack rent," as LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN described it ([1940] 2 All E.R. 560) in Lowry's case (2).

A trader's accounts are made up of receipts on the one hand and payments on the other hand, and one type of payment is rent, be it under lease or under agreement. In Usher's case (1) no distinction was drawn between leasehold rents and sched. A assessments. In practice, the amount of the payment out is the important factor to the trader, and his accounts are made out accordingly. In the ordinary case a deduction in respect of the user of his premises has been allowed to the trader on the basis of the rent he was paying. That was the commercial and the natural way of arriving at his profit. Rule 3 of the Rules Applicable to Cases I and II of sched. D recognises that, when a deduction is permissible, it may be calculated according to the rent or the annual value. It points to an alternative, and it is reasonable to assume that the trader would choose the one which suited him the better, if and when he was allowed to do so.

Section 17 (2) of the Finance Act, 1940, has brought about an alteration in this, at least in relation to premises let on long leases. The question for consideration is how far, if at all, it has affected the principle of Usher's case (1). The question is stated in para. 13 of the Case in this way:

"Whether the [taxpayers were] entitled in arriving at [their] profits to a deduction in respect of those properties held by [them] on long lease from T.L.P. which were sub-let by [them] on tied tenancies, the amount of the deduction claimed by the [taxpayers] being a sum equal to the difference between the rents received by the [taxpayers] for such properties and the rents which would have been received by [them] had they been let separately free from the burden of the tie."

It is to be noticed that the sole question raised is as to rent forgone—as stated, the difference between tied rents and annual values. It was admitted that Usher's case (1) governed the case of a freeholder, but it was said that a change had been made in the case of a leaseholder under a long lease who let the premises to a tied tenant. If the principle of rent forgone is right, I fail to see any distinction between the case of the freehold house and of the leasehold house in the hands of a trader and used by him for the purposes of his trade.

Sub-section (2) of s. 17 of the Act of 1940 reads:

"Rules 1 and 4 of No. VIII of sched. A shall not apply to any payment to which this section applies, but any such payment shall, so far as it does not fall under any other Case, be charged with tax under Case VI of sched. D and be treated for the purposes of such of the provisions of the Income Tax Acts as apply to royalties paid in respect of the user of a patent as if it were such a royalty."

The object of this is to make the landlord chargeable to tax on the rent he receives as distinct from the sched. A assessment of the premises. It is agreed that the block rent of £40,000 is a payment to which the sub-section applies. The payment is therefore to be treated as if it were a royalty paid in respect of the user of a patent. This brings into play r. 19 (2) of the All Schedules Rules, under which, when such a royalty is paid wholly out of profits brought into charge (as in this case), the person paying is entitled to deduct and retain the amount of the tax. Furthermore, r. 3 (m) of the Rules Applicable to Cases I and II of sched. D forbids the deduction against profits of any royalty, and it was not disputed that the rent for leasehold houses did fall within s. 17, and was, accordingly, not allowable in computing the profits of the taxpayers for the material years. The claim of the taxpayers was based on the decision in Usher's case (1) and, as I have said, was in respect of the amount of rent forgone.

The change made by s. 17 (2) can be seen more readily if one takes the case of the ordinary trader apart from any question of tied houses. Before the change the trader who owned the freehold of the premises from which his business was carried on was entitled to deduct the annual (or sched. A) value from his profits. The trader who paid rent for the premises was normally allowed to deduct the rent if it was greater than the annual value, though naturally he deducted the annual value if it was higher than the rent. Section 17 (2) does not touch the position of the trader who owns the freehold, nor does it mention annual value as such. It deals with rents under long leases. The first result is that by reason of r. 3 (m) the trader can no longer deduct the payment of rent in computing the balance of his profits or gains. The second result, arising from r. 19 (2) of the All Schedules Rules, is that, if he pays the royalty wholly out of profits, he is entitled, when paying his landlord, to deduct the amount of the tax and to retain it. At first sight his position appears to be the same as it was beforehand, but he has paid sched. A tax, and the commencing words of s. 17 (2) take away from him the right which he otherwise would have had of deducting sched. A tax when paying his rent. Indeed, it must be clear that he could not deduct both tax on the rent and sched. A tax. The position can be illustrated by taking the cases of four traders, each of whom occupies for the purposes of his trade premises of an annual value of £100 and each of whom makes a profit of £1,000 on a year's trading. A owns the freehold. His position is not effected by s. 17 (2). He pays sched. A tax on the land which he owns. He is entitled to set against his profits the annual value of the land (£100) so that he pays tax under sched. D on £900. B, C and D have each a long lease of their premises. I assume that each is charged to tax under No. VIII of the Rules Applicable to sched. A and pays sched. A tax. B pays £100 a year rent. Before the Act of 1940 he would have been able to set the rent or the annual value (£100) against his profits, which at 9s. in the £ would have meant a saving of tax of £45. Under the Act of 1940, when he pays his landlord, he is entitled to deduct and retain tax on the rent, £100—that is £45. He has, however, already paid £45 sched. A tax. C pays £200 a year rent. Before the Act of 1940 he would have set the £200 against his profits, thus saving £90 in tax.

He can no longer do that, but he is entitled on paying his landlord to deduct tax of £90 and to retain it. He, too, has paid £45 sched. A tax which prior to 1940 he could have deducted from his rent. D pays a nominal rent, £1. Before 1940 he would have set the annual value, £100, against his profits, thus saving £45 in tax. He can deduct 9s. on paying his rent. The position under sched. A tax is virtually as before in that he bears almost the whole of it. Thus, unless there is some compensating advantage elsewhere, B, C and D are each the amount of the sched. A tax worse off than they were before the Act of 1940. I know of no provision under which that can be recovered directly. I fail to see any reason for penalising the trader who has a long lease while the position of the trader who owns the freehold is unchanged; and this is especially noticeable in the case of D, who is practically in the position of a freeholder. Again, in the cases of B, C and D the Crown has collected at the expense of landlord and tenant tax on the total rent as well as on the sched. A assessment of the premises.

The answer seems to me to be that, when the trader tenant has paid his rent (and that rent is not taken into account in the computation of his profits) and when he has paid the sched. A tax, he, as a trader, is in just the same position as if he were the owner of the freehold; he can then set the annual value of the premises against his profits as the freeholder does, there being nothing in s. 17 (2) to prevent this. The result is that the trader who has a long lease is in precisely the same position as to tax as he was before the Act of 1940, and the Crown in effect obtains tax on the rent. This, I believe, achieves the object of the section, which was not devised to place an additional burden on traders but was meant to ensure that, when premises were let on long lease at a rent higher than the annual value, the landlord should be charged to tax on the rent. It seems a long way round, but the Income Tax Acts form a complicated structure. If the rent is higher than the annual value the Crown collects additional tax at the expense of the landlord; if the rent is the same as, or less than, the annual value the position neither of the landlord nor of the tenant (the trader) is affected. It is not necessary to consider this aspect of the matter further in view of the agreement of counsel on the resumed argument that this is a correct statement of the position. None the less, it is useful to have before one the effect of s. 17 (2) in the case of the ordinary trader before coming to a conclusion as to how far it affects the decision of the House of Lords in Usher's case (1). In that case LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON pointed out ([1915] A.C. 463) that the appellants claimed "... the sched. A assessment value or the rent they pay as a deduction, giving credit on the other side of the account for the rent paid by the tenants of the tied houses."

That claim was upheld.

If a trader uses his own premises for the purposes of his trade he is entitled to set-off the annual value of the premises against profits, otherwise he would be getting no return in respect of the premises on which he is assessed for the purposes of sched. A. He could let the premises, but instead he uses them for the purposes of his trade. In a sense that is a case of rent forgone. LORD BUCKMASTER in Collyer's case (3) commenting on the decision in Usher's case (1), said ([1932] A.C. 411), that tied houses of a brewery company are to be regarded "as business premises of the undertaking." That is the basis of the decision in Usher's case (1). Each tied house is then theoretically worth its annual value to the company, and the company is entitled to a deduction in respect of that; but it receives a tied rent for which credit must be given: consequently the difference between the annual value and the tied rent is the amount of rent forgone, and the amount of the deduction to which prima facie the company is entitled. It is not surprising that complications arise when premises which are really in the possession of the tied tenants are to be regarded as business premises of the brewery company.

A I do not see that s. 17 (2) of the Finance Act, 1940, has altered the principle of the decision of the House of Lords in Usher's case (1). It has deprived the trader of an option which he had in relation to rent, but it leaves untouched the right in the ordinary trader to set the annual value of the premises against his profits; and it is from this that the right to deduct rent forgone arises. If the brewery company received nothing from the tied tenants it would normally be allowed to set off the annual value against its profits: if it receives something by way of rent or otherwise that must be taken into account. In the ordinary case it may be sufficient to deduct the rent received from the annual value; in some cases it will be necessary to examine the tenancy agreements in order to arrive at the true position. In my view, the question raised by para. 13 of the Case should be answered in the affirmative, and the appeal should be allowed.

B ROXBURGH, J.: I agree, and I can state briefly the basis of my agreement. Counsel for the Crown has not convinced me that Usher allowances have been abolished in the case of freehold premises let by brewers as tied houses. He suggested that they had been abolished because alterations had since been made in what is now r. 5 of the Rules Applicable to Cases I and II of sched. D. I agree with my Lords in rejecting that argument. If, then, a brewer with freehold tied houses is entitled to deduct the difference between their annual value and the rent he receives for them, what commercial or logical reason could there be for denying to a brewer who held the house on a long lease at perhaps a nominal rent the right to make a similar deduction? If the allowance is to be related to annual value, why should it not be so related when he pays a rent above the annual value? These difficulties disappear if the Usher allowance is related in every case, not to the rent paid by the brewer, but to the true annual value or potential rack rent; and I agree with my Lords that it ought to be, for the reasons stated by them. I agree also that s. 17 (2) of the Finance Act, 1940, may have had an unexpected repercussion.

E Appeal allowed with costs. Case to be remitted to the Special Commissioners to adjust the figures in accordance with the judgment.

Solicitors: Godden, Holme & Co. (for the taxpayers); Solicitor of Inland Revenue (for the Crown).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Affirmed. C.A. post, p. 549.

BANQUE DES MARCHANDS DE MOSCOU (KROUPETSCHESKY)

(In liquidation) v. KINDERSLEY AND ANOTHER.

G [CHANCERY DIVISION (Harman, J.), April 25, 26, 27, May 17, 1950.]

Company—Winding-up—Jurisdiction—Company not carrying on business in England, but having substantial assets here—Method of service of petition—Companies Act, 1929 (c. 23), s. 338 (1).

H In 1932 a Russian bank, which had been dissolved by decree of the Soviet regime in 1918, and which, while it had carried on business in England only through agents, had large assets in this country, was wound-up by an order of the Chancery Division under the Companies Act, 1929, s. 338, service of the petition having been made by advertisement. In 1943, K., on behalf of a partnership firm, which had been dissolved and of which he had been a partner, sought to prove in the liquidation against the bank for a sum which he alleged was the balance due to the firm from the bank. In 1949 the liquidator of the bank, by leave of the registrar under s. 191 of the Act of 1929, issued a writ against the surviving partners of the partnership firm claiming payment of a consolidated balance of moneys alleged to be due to the bank on various accounts. On Jan. 9, 1950, the liquidator served notice on the said defendants rejecting the proof which K. had sought to make in 1943. The defendants issued a summons for an order dismissing or staying the action, or to have the name of the bank struck out, on the ground that the bank (in liquidation) was non-existent and that the action had been commenced without authority. The defendants argued that the winding-up was a nullity because the bank had never had a place of business nor carried on business in England except through agents, and because the petition had not been properly served.

HELD: (i) by seeking to prove in the liquidation, the defendants had unequivocally recognised the validity of the winding-up and the title of the liquidator, and, therefore, it was not open to them in the present proceedings to refuse to recognise the winding-up.

(ii) there was no authority binding the court to hold that the existence of substantial assets belonging to the bank in England (which could only be administered by means of a winding-up) was not alone sufficient to give the court jurisdiction to wind-up the bank.

Re Tovarishestvo Manufactur Liudvig-Rabenek ([1944] 2 All E.R. 556), and Re Dendre Valley Railway & Canal Co. Ex p. Moss (1850) (19 L.J.Ch. 474), applied.

Re Lloyd Generale Italiano (1885) (29 Ch.D. 219), distinguished.

(iii) even if the point were open to anyone but the bank itself, there was no ground for saying that service by advertisement was not proper in the circumstances.

[AS TO COMPANIES WHICH CAN BE WOUND-UP UNDER THE COMPANIES ACT, 1929, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 5, pp. 844-848, paras. 1461-1467; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 10, pp. 816, 817, 1206-1208, Nos. 5317-5324, 8535-8553.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Russian Commercial and Industrial Bank v. Comptoir d'Escompte de Mulhouse, [1925] A.C. 112; 93 L.J.K.B. 1098; 132 L.T. 99; Digest Supp.
- (2) Banque Internationale de Commerce de Petrograd v. Goukassow, [1925] A.C. 150; 93 L.J.K.B. 1084; 132 L.T. 116; Digest Supp.
- (3) Lazard Bros. & Co. v. Banque Industrielle de Moscou, [1932] 1 K.B. 617; 101 L.J.K.B. 65; 146 L.T. 240; Digest Supp.
- (4) Russian and English Bank v. Baring Bros. & Co. Ltd., [1932] 1 Ch. 435; 101 L.J.Ch. 157; 146 L.T. 424; Digest Supp.
- (5) Re Russian and English Bank, [1932] 1 Ch. 663; 101 L.J.Ch. 226; 147 L.T. 57; Digest Supp.
- (6) Russian and English Bank and Florance Montefiore Guedalla v. Baring Bros. & Co., Ltd., [1936] 1 All E.R. 505; [1936] A.C. 405; 105 L.J.Ch. 174; 154 L.T. 602; Digest Supp.
- (7) Re Tovarishestvo Manufactur Liudvig-Rabenek, [1944] 2 All E.R. 556; [1944] Ch. 404; 113 L.J.Ch. 250; 171 L.T. 66; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (8) Re Dendre Valley Railway & Canal Co. Ex p. Moss, (1850), 19 L.J.Ch. 474; 15 L.T.O.S. 246; 14 Jur. 754; 10 Digest 1207, 8539.
- (9) Re Union Bank of Calcutta, Ex p., Watson, (1850), 3 De G. & Sm. 253; 19 L.J.Ch. 388; 15 L.T.O.S. 389; 64 E.R. 467; 10 Digest 1207, 8540.
- (10) Re Lloyd Generale Italiano, (1885), 29 Ch.D. 219; 54 L.J.Ch. 748; 10 Digest 1208, 8549.
- (11) Re Tea Trading Co. K. & C. Popoff Bros., [1933] Ch. 647; 102 L.J.Ch. 224; 149 L.T. 138; Digest Supp.

PROCEDURE SUMMONS.

In an action brought by the liquidator of the Banque des Marchands de Moscou the defendants applied for an order dismissing the action, or an order that all further proceedings in the action be stayed, or that the name of the alleged plaintiff be struck out so as to bring the action to an end, on the ground that the alleged plaintiff was non-existent, and that the action had been commenced without authority.

A Russell, K.C., and R. Gwyn Rees for the defendants.

Upjohn, K.C., and R. H. Walton for the plaintiff, the Banque des Marchands de Moscou (in liquidation).

Cur. adv. vult.

May 17. HARMAN, J., read the following judgment. This summons is one more strand in the tangled legal skein involving a number of companies, chiefly banking companies, which were corporations in Russia under the Tzarist regime, and were, as it is now recognised, dissolved by decrees of the Soviet government in 1918. Since 1925 the law reports have been eloquent of the difficulties involved in the fact that these so-called Russian banks have, in several instances, had large assets or claims in this country, and, in others, creditors here. The difficulty arises out of the fact that as corporations the banks have ceased to exist, and, therefore, prima facie cannot sustain any action.

A comparatively early instance is Russian Commercial and Industrial Bank v. Comptoir d'Escompte de Mulhouse (1). In that case the House of Lords declined to accept the evidence that the Russian banks were dissolved, but held also, which is more pertinent for the present purpose, that, if the defendant relies on lack of authority to bring an action, that is not a point to be taken by way of defence, but by way of preliminary objection on a motion to strike out or on a summons to stay. A similar decision was reached in Banque Internationale de Commerce de Petrograd v. Goukassow (2). The story was carried further in 1932 when the partnership firm of Lazard Brothers & Co., surviving members of which are the defendants in the present suit, brought an action against a Russian bank and obtained a judgment by default, on the strength of which they obtained a garnishee order against the Midland Bank which held certain funds belonging to the Russian bank: see Lazard Bros. & Co. v. Banque Industrielle de Moscou (3). On appeal, it was decided that the Russian bank had ceased to exist, at any rate in 1930 when the judgment was obtained; that the judgment was, therefore, a nullity; and that it and the garnishee order must be set aside and the amount obtained on it by Messrs. Lazard paid back. The importance of that case for the present purpose lies chiefly in the observation made by SCRUTTON, L.J., where he says ([1932] 1 K.B. 627):

“The present Russian company had no branch in England, or anywhere else outside Russia. No English court had any jurisdiction to wind it up.”

This observation is obiter dictum.

G In the same year an action came before EVE, J., brought in the name of another Russian dissolved corporation: Russian and English Bank v. Baring Bros. (4). That action was stayed on the preliminary point taken by the defendants that the plaintiffs no longer existed either in Russia or in Great Britain. The bank in that case at one time had a branch in London. The learned judge at the hearing suggested that the bank's claim against Baring Brothers might, nevertheless, be pursued if it were wound-up under s. 338 (2) of the then newly enacted Companies Act, 1929. This sub-section seems to have been framed to fit the case of dissolved Russian corporations, but it is limited by its terms to such a corporation “which has been carrying on business in Great Britain.” The suggestion of EVE, J., was acted on and a petition to wind-up the company came before BENNETT, J., in the same year: Re Russian and English Bank (5). The learned judge made a winding-up order in that case, but he made it, not under s. 338 (2), but under s. 338 (1) (d), which is a re-enactment of the provisions or the Companies Acts going back to 1862. The learned judge held that s. 338 (2) had not altered the law. I shall have to return to this section later. It is to be observed that the petition last mentioned was served by advertisement in the same way as has been done in a petition to wind-up the plaintiff company in this case. The Russian and English Bank having been wound-up, as I said, a liquidator was appointed who obtained authority under the Companies Act, 1929, s. 191, to bring an action against Baring Brothers, but this action was stayed by CLAUSON, J., whose order was affirmed by the Court of Appeal, and the plaintiffs' solicitors were ordered to pay the costs. On appeal, however, to the House of Lords, a majority decided (Russian and English Bank and Florance Montefiore Guedalla v. Baring Bros. & Co., Ltd. (6)) that such an action would lie, and it is on the pattern of that action that the present suit is founded. A

The plaintiff in this action was wound-up by an order made by EVE, J., in 1932, and this action has been brought by the liquidator by leave of the registrar under s. 191 of the Act of 1929 against the defendants as the surviving partners within the jurisdiction of the firm of Lazard Brothers & Co. before mentioned. The action is to recover a balance said to be due from the partnership as a result of banking or analogous transactions. It is not denied that there was a long business association between the plaintiff and Messrs. Lazard, but the defendants have taken out this summons to stay the action and to obtain an order for costs against the plaintiff's solicitors or the liquidator on the grounds that the plaintiff is non-existent and that the action has been launched without proper authority. That the plaintiff is non-existent as a corporation, and has had no existence since 1918 is not in dispute, but that, having regard to the decision of the House of Lords in Russian and English Bank v. Baring Bros. & Co., Ltd. (6) in 1936, would be no bar to this action if the winding-up proceedings were valid and leave to bring the suit properly obtained. B C D

It is on the first point that the defendants rely. They allege that the winding-up was a nullity, first because the plaintiff never had a place of business nor carried on business in this country except through agents, and, secondly, because the petition was not properly served. The defendants did not seek to set aside the winding-up order, but I think it is rightly urged on their behalf that as debtors or supposed debtors they are strangers to the winding-up and not bound by it if it was improperly obtained: see the observations of LORD BLANESBURGH to this effect in Russian and English Bank v. Baring Bros. & Co., Ltd. (6) ([1936] 1 All E.R. 510). The defendants, however, are, according to their own contentions, not only not debtors to the plaintiff, but are creditors of the plaintiff. In this latter capacity they are bound by the winding-up order which must be valid as against them unless and until they set it aside by properly constituted proceedings. E F

It seems to me that this constitutes the answer to this summons, for the defendants have, by seeking to prove in the liquidation, unequivocally recognised the validity of the winding-up and the title of the liquidator. By an affidavit made on Sept. 23, 1943, the first defendant, on behalf of the former firm, sought to prove in the liquidation against the company for over £26,000 which he swore was the balance of the firm's account against the company. This proof was not dealt with by the liquidator until Jan. 9, 1950, when he served notice on the defendants rejecting the proof. The defendants did not accept this decision, and on Jan. 25, 1950, took out a summons in the winding-up to have the time for appeal against the rejection of their proof extended until after the trial of the present action. That application was refused by the registrar and an appeal against his refusal is still pending before WYNN-PARRY, J. G H

In these circumstances, as the defendants have been, and still are, asserting that they are creditors of the plaintiff and entitled to recover their debt or a dividend on it in the winding-up, it seems to me quite wrong that they should be allowed to refuse to recognise the winding-up proceedings in the present action.

It is true that their claim has not been admitted, neither has it been withdrawn, and, if they are right in their present attitude, they can recover the money due on one side of the account or a dividend on it from the liquidator, but decline to allow him credit or a set-off for moneys on the other side of the account. In other words, they are claiming to be entitled to receive, but never to pay. This is an attitude of which I cannot approve, nor do I think that in law the defendants are entitled to adopt it. They are, as the Scottish lawyers have it, approbating and reprobating, or, in the more homely English phrase, blowing hot and cold.

This is enough to dispose of the present application, but as other points were carefully argued before me I think I ought to say something about them. The main point relied on by the defendants was that EVE, J.'s order was made without jurisdiction, the reason being that this company never carried on business within the jurisdiction. Now if one turns to s. 338 of the Act of 1929 it provides, so far as material for this purpose:

"(1) Subject to the provisions of this Part of this Act, any unregistered company may be wound-up under this Act, and all the provisions of this Act with respect to winding-up shall apply to an unregistered company, with the following exceptions and additions . . . (d) The circumstances in which an unregistered company may be wound-up are as follows:—(i) If the company is dissolved, or has ceased to carry on business, or is carrying on business only for the purpose of winding-up its affairs."

It is agreed that the words "is dissolved" mean "has been dissolved" and a first reading of the section leads to the conclusion that there is no territorial limit to the jurisdiction in a suitable case, but the earlier part of the section talks about the principal place of business of an unregistered company, and it has been said that, reading the section as a whole, there is no jurisdiction under it unless the business was carried on in this country—witness the observation of SCRUTTON, L.J., in Lazard Bros. & Co. v. Banque Industrielle (3) ([1932] 1 K.B. 627) referred to earlier.

The main authority on which counsel for the defendants relied for this proposition was Re Tovarishstvo Manufactur Liudvig-Rabenek (7). There, a dissolved Russian corporation, which alleged that it had an asset in this country, namely, a fund held by the plaintiffs in the present case (an assertion which the House of Lords has recently negatived), was the respondent to a petition to wind-up. In that case, COHEN, J., inquired into the question whether the company ever carried on business in England. That was the investigation he was asked to make, and that company was able to satisfy him that it did so carry on business within the meaning of s. 338 because its directors from time to time stayed at an hotel in England and conducted the business thence. The learned judge certainly assumed that it was necessary to found jurisdiction to find that business had been so carried on. To that he was invited by counsel for the petitioner: see ([1944] 2 All E.R. 559). He was not asked to wind-up the company on the ground that, although it had no place of business here and did not, except through agents, carry on business here, there were large assets which, except through a winding-up, there was no means of administering, so that creditors would be without a remedy. It would, in my judgment, be most unfortunate if the existence of such assets does not confer jurisdiction. I should not, however, be prepared to hold on the authority of COHEN, J., that the mere existence of assets here is insufficient. In the first place, the section is on the face of it unlimited by this consideration, and, in the second, it seems to me that under similar words the court held that it had jurisdiction as long ago as 1850 when WIGRAM, V.-C., made an order under the Winding-Up Acts, 1848-1849, in Re Dendre Valley Railway and Canal Co. (8) which had no offices or place of business in England and was domiciled at Brussels: see also Re Union Bank of Calcutta (9), a petition under the same Acts, where KNIGHT BRUCE, V.-C., assumed that he had jurisdiction though he declined to exercise it.

The case on the other side, namely, Re Lloyd Generale Italiano (10), as explained by COHEN, J., in Rabenek's case (7) ([1944] 2 All E.R. 561), turned on the fact that there were no assets in this country, and, no doubt, in such a case there was no jurisdiction and indeed nothing to wind-up. In the present case there are very large assets and no other means of administering them but a winding-up. Moreover, I am asked to declare incompetent an order made by EVE, J., nearly twenty years ago under which many proceedings have been taken, including proceedings in the House of Lords. I should be very slow to do this. I was confronted with a transcript of the proceedings on the petition, and it was urged on me that the learned judge really ruled as founding his jurisdiction on the fact of a registration made here in 1920 after the date when, as it is now recognised, the company had been dissolved. No doubt, that would have been a bad ground, but it was by no means the only consideration before the learned judge, and one of those considerations was that there were large assets here which could not otherwise be administered. No formal judgment was delivered and I cannot say what was in the mind of the judge when he gave his decision. I should not feel myself at liberty now to disregard it.

Some evidence was filed on the present application on the question whether this company ever did carry on business in England. As to that, I say only that I am not satisfied that it did, but, at this distance of time, that is a matter which is very difficult to prove or disprove, and I am far from saying that, if the petitioners had been called on to prove it in 1932, they might not have been able to do so.

The second reason why the defendants said that the winding-up order was a nullity was because it was not properly served, and for this purpose they relied on a decision of MAUGHAM, J., in Re Tea Trading Company K. and C. Popoff Brothers (11). That was a petition to wind-up another dissolved Russian corporation, but it had had a place of business in this country, namely, a branch in London. In those circumstances, the judge decided that the proper way to serve such a petition was not by advertisement, but under the Companies (Winding-Up) Rules, 1929, r. 28, by service at the principal or last known place of business of the company. This his Lordship described as "the best if not the only way of dealing with an unregistered company which has been dissolved." I am content to agree that where such a company has had a place of business here that may be right, but where there has been no place of business—as in Rabenek's case (7)—I cannot think that no resort can be had to substituted service. In fact, this is a highly metaphysical question, the premise being that the respondent has no existence and the inquiry is to effect service on a non-existent entity. As well inquire how many angels can stand on a needle's point. If the object be to bring the petition to the notice of any former director or shareholder, it seems to me that advertisement may be more effective than service on a former place of business. At any rate, substituted service has been allowed in most of the Russian bank cases, and I am not going to say that it was not good service even if, which I doubt, this point is open to anybody but the company which was respondent to the petition. For these reasons, in addition to the first reason on which I base my judgment, I should be prepared to hold that the defendants are not entitled to the relief claimed.

Order accordingly. Plaintiff's costs to be costs in the cause.

Solicitors: Linklaters & Paines (for the defendants); Slaughter & May (for the plaintiff).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

PAYNE AND ANOTHER v. COE.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Danckwerts, J.), May 11, 1950.]

Building Society—Society in dissolution—Annual meeting—Duty of trustees to summon—Building Societies Act, 1874 (c. 42), s. 32—Building Societies Act, 1894 (c. 47), s. 9.

On Apr. 2, 1940, the dissolution of a building society was commenced by means of an instrument of dissolution signed pursuant to the Building Societies Act, 1874, s. 32, para. 3. The trustees thereof applied to the court for the determination of the question whether they ought to call annual general meetings of members until the dissolution should have been completed.

HELD: there was no provision in the Building Societies Acts, 1874 and 1894, which either expressly or by necessary implication imposed on the trustees the duty in the circumstances to call annual general meetings, and, therefore, they were not bound to do so.

Kemp v. Wright ([1895] 1 Ch. 121), explained.

[AS TO THE DISSOLUTION OF A BUILDING SOCIETY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 3, pp. 441-444, paras. 838-843; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 7, pp. 502, 503, Nos. 286-300.]

Case referred to:

(1) Kemp v. Wright, [1895] 1 Ch. 121; 64 L.J.Ch. 59; 71 L.T. 650; 59 J.P. 133; 7 Digest 503, 296.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine whether the plaintiffs, the surviving trustees of an instrument of dissolution of the Pall Mall Building Society, ought to call an annual general meeting of the members of the society each year until the dissolution of the society should be completed.

Montgomery White, K.C., and M. J. Albery for the plaintiffs, the surviving trustees of the instrument of dissolution.

J. A. Brightman for the defendant, a member.

DANCKWERTS, J.: This case arises on the provisions of the Building Societies Acts, 1874 and 1894, which, like the Friendly Societies Acts, are conspicuous more for the things which they do not say than for those which they do. The Pall Mall Building Society was incorporated on Oct. 4, 1932. On Apr. 2, 1940, an instrument of dissolution of the society was executed pursuant to the provisions of the Building Societies Act, 1874, s. 32, and the plaintiffs are the two survivors of the three trustees for whom provision was made in that instrument. After the execution of the instrument of dissolution an action was begun by the Royal Mutual Benefit Building Society in respect of certain operations of one Charles William Neville, who was a director of this society and others, against a number of building societies, including the building society which is concerned in these proceedings. The writ in that action was issued on Sept. 8, 1943, and at one time it was thought that there was a possibility of this society's being subjected to considerable liabilities if that action terminated in a certain way. It is also worth noting that the trustees, the plaintiffs in the present application, were originally parties to that action, and an order was obtained from a master in chambers in the King's Bench Division joining instead the society in dissolution. Whether that order was the right procedure or not may be open to doubt. At any rate, it cannot decide the point which I have to decide in these proceedings.

On Feb. 21, 1946, the trustees made an application by originating summons which was heard by VAISEY, J., on Apr. 17, 1947, and he authorised* the calling of a meeting by the trustees for the compulsory winding-up of the society. By the order then made the court declared

* See Payne v. Coe, [1947] 1 All E.R. 841.

"that a meeting of the members of the above-mentioned society can and ought to be called by the plaintiffs for the purpose of considering and if thought fit passing a resolution under s. 32, para. 4, of the Building Societies Act, 1874, for authorising a member to present a petition on behalf of the said society for the winding-up of the society by the court,"

but the question whether the trustees had the power to call any such meeting does not seem to have been considered by the learned judge. However, a compromise was reached by the society, or by the trustees, with the Royal Mutual Benefit Society. This was brought before VAISEY, J., for approval on Apr. 12, 1948, and was then approved, and the order directed execution of the trusts of the instrument of dissolution, which provision was intended to protect the trustees from any contingent and unascertained claims which might be made by reason of the action to which I have referred. The trustees were absolved from the duty of calling the meeting which I have mentioned, although that does not appear in fact in the order. Subsequently, a letter was received from the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies suggesting that annual meetings of the society ought to have been called, and ought to be called, notwithstanding that at an earlier date he had expressed the view that annual meetings no longer needed to be called, and the question which I have to decide to-day is whether, in the position in which the society now is, of being in dissolution, the plaintiffs ought to call annual general meetings of the members each year until the dissolution shall be finally completed.

The Building Societies Act, 1874, s. 32, provides:

"A society under this Act may terminate or be dissolved—1. Upon the happening of any event declared by its rules to be the termination of the society. 2. By dissolution in manner prescribed by its rules. 3. By dissolution with the consent of three-fourths of the members, holding not less than two-thirds of the number of shares in the society, testified by their signatures to the instrument of dissolution . . . 4. By winding-up, either voluntarily under the supervision of the court or by the court, if the court shall so order, on the petition by any member authorised by three-fourths of the members present at a general meeting of the society specially called for the purpose to present the same on behalf of the society . . ."

Paragraph 1 would only apply to a terminable society which was to come to an end in a certain event. This society is a permanent society and therefore it has no fixed date for termination. This society has been dissolved pursuant to its rules, combined with para. 3, i.e., by an instrument signed by three-fourths of the members holding not less than two-thirds of the number of shares in the society. The society, therefore, either has been dissolved or is in process of dissolution. At the conclusion of s. 32 the following provision appears:

"Notice of the commencement and termination of every dissolution or winding-up shall be sent to the registrar, and registered by him."

The Building Societies Act, 1894, s. 11, also refers to "the commencement of the dissolution" and "the termination of the dissolution." That curious provision is not supported by any definition or other statutory provision indicating when a dissolution may be considered to have terminated. It is easy enough to see when it may have commenced, but it is very difficult to see what exactly is meant by "the termination of the dissolution."

There is no doubt that the society has either been dissolved, or has been put into dissolution so that it is no longer operative as a society in the sense of a going concern. If and so far as I am unhampered by statutory provisions or any necessary deductions from them, I should reach the conclusion without difficulty that it was inconsistent with the present position that annual general meetings of the members should continue to be held, but I have to consider whether there is any statutory provision, or any provision in the rules of the society, which compels me to come to the conclusion that, notwithstanding the present position of the society, there is still a duty to call the members of the society together once at least in every year for the purpose of an annual general meeting.

The Building Societies Act, 1874, s. 16, deals with matters which are to appear in the rules of a society. It provides:

A “The rules of every society hereafter established under this Act shall set forth—1. The name of the society, and chief office or place of meeting for the business of the society . . . 3. The purposes to which the funds of the society are to be applied, and the manner in which they are to be invested . . . 5. The manner of altering and rescinding the rules of the society, and of making additional rules: 6. The manner of appointing, remunerating, and removing the board of directors or committee of management, auditors, and other officers: 7. The manner of calling general and special meetings of the members: 8. Provision for an annual or more frequent audit of the accounts, and inspection by the auditors of the mortgages and other securities belonging to the society . . . 12. The powers and duties of the board of directors or committee of management and other officers . . . 14. The manner in which the society, whether terminating or permanent, shall be terminated or dissolved.”

B

C

Section 16 (6) appears to indicate that directors are “officers.”

I turn to the rules of the society. Rule 1 provides for the name. The rules further provide:

D “2. The object of the society which is permanent shall be to raise, by the subscriptions of the members, a fund for making advances to members out of the funds of the society, upon security of freehold or leasehold estate, by way of mortgage. 3. The funds shall be raised by shares, to be called uncompleted and completed shares. The value of every share shall be £10. Shares may be issued from time to time in the discretion of the board, but no preferential shares are to be issued. 4. Every person subscribing for a share shall be a member . . .”

E

Rule 5 provides for subscriptions and there are provisions relating to interest and transfer. The rules also provide:

F “21. The business of the society shall be conducted by not less than five nor more than ten directors one of whom may be a managing director. The remuneration of the board shall be fixed by the members at the annual meeting. One-third of the board, or as near that proportion as possible, and those appointed by the board (if any) during the year shall go out of office at every annual meeting, but shall be eligible for re-election without a re-nomination, and the vacancies shall be filled up annually as provided by these rules. Every nomination for the office of director shall be signed by ten members duly qualified to nominate and be sent to the secretary in the month of April next before the annual meeting . . . The secretary shall be appointed by the directors who shall fix his remuneration and may remove him from office on just cause being shown. 22. At every annual meeting the members shall elect and appoint an auditor, who must be a practising accountant, who shall audit the accounts of the ensuing year, and shall inspect the mortgages and other securities belonging to the society. The remuneration of the auditor shall be fixed by the members at the annual meeting. The board shall have power to remove an auditor and to appoint another in his place. 23. Notices of all meetings of the members shall be sent to all members at least seven days before such meetings. 24. Meetings of the members may be held at such place in the county of London as the board shall approve. 25. A meeting of the members shall be held annually not later than Mar. 31 in each year to receive the annual account and statement and report of the directors, and for general purposes. 26.

G

H

Special meetings shall be held whenever directed by the board, and the board shall give such direction at any time upon the written request of twenty members of the society, who shall give to the board written notice of the proposals to be made in such special meeting, and deposit with the secretary such sum of money as the board shall deem sufficient to pay the expenses of convening and holding such meeting, and the members present at such meeting shall decide whether such expenses shall be paid out of the funds of the society or out of the money so deposited as aforesaid . . . 39. The board shall, at the end of the year, prepare, or cause to be prepared, a general statement of the funds and effects of or belonging to the society, in the form prescribed by the chief registrar, in accordance with the Building Societies Acts, together with an account of the money received and expended since the publication of the preceding periodical statement, and such statement shall be certified by the auditor and countersigned by the secretary, and every member shall be entitled to a copy . . . 42. The society may be dissolved in any manner prescribed by the Building Societies Act, 1874, s. 32, para. 3 or para. 4, and the Secretary of State's regulations."

The rules contain a definition of "year," which shall mean the society's official year, and every year shall be taken to expire on Dec. 31; and "by the word 'board' shall be understood board of directors."

The Building Societies Act, 1874, s. 21, provides:

"The rules of a society under this Act shall be binding on the several members and officers of the society, and on all persons claiming on account of a member, or under the rules, all of whom shall be deemed and taken to have full notice thereof."

Section 23 is about officers giving security, and s. 24 about officers accounting; s. 25 is "Investment of surplus funds", and s. 26 is about transfer of stock, all of which are powers which are conferred on the board of directors. I have already referred to s. 32. Section 40 provides:

"The secretary or other officer of every society under this Act shall, once in every year at least, prepare an account of all the receipts and expenditure of the society since the preceding statement, and a general statement of its funds and effects, liabilities and assets, showing the amounts due to the holders of the various classes of shares respectively, to depositors and creditors for loans, and also the balance due or outstanding on their mortgage securities (not including prospective interest), and the amount invested in the funds or other securities; and every such account and statement shall be attested by the auditors, to whom the mortgage deeds and other securities belonging to the society shall be produced, and such account and statement shall be countersigned by the secretary or other officer; and every member, depositor, and creditor for loans shall be entitled to receive from the society a copy of such account and statement, and a copy thereof shall be sent to the registrar within fourteen days after the annual or other general meeting at which it is presented, and another copy thereof shall be suspended in a conspicuous place in every office of the society under this Act."

That section must be read with s. 2 of the Act of 1894 which provides:

"(1) Every annual account and statement under s. 40 of the Building Societies Act, 1874, shall be made up to the end of the official year of the society to which it relates, and shall be in such form and shall contain such particulars as the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies may from time to time, with the approval of a Secretary of State, direct, either generally or with respect to any society or class of societies. The form of annual account and statement prescribed for general use by the chief registrar under this section, and every alteration of that form, shall as soon as practicable be laid before each House of Parliament, and shall not come into operation until the expiration of forty days from the date at which it is so laid. Provided that every such account and statement shall set forth . . .”

certain things. Sub-section (2) provides for the certificate of an auditor, and sub-s. (3) provides:

- A “A copy of every such annual account and statement shall be sent to the registrar within fourteen days after the annual or other general meeting at which it is presented, or within three months after the expiration of the official year of the society, whichever period expires first.”

- B So, there is a provision under which the annual account is to be transmissible to the registrar notwithstanding that the annual meeting of the society has not yet been held. There follows in sub-s. (4) a provision defining the “official year.” Section 5 contains provisions which enable the registrar, with the consent of the Secretary of State, to summon a meeting of the society in certain conditions either (s. 5 (1)) on the application of one-tenth of the whole number of members of the society or (s. 5 (5) (c)):

- C “Where evidence is furnished by a statutory declaration of not less than three members of a society, of facts which, in the opinion of the registrar, call for investigation, or for recourse to the judgment of a meeting of the members.”

Finally, s. 9, which is of great importance, provides:

- D “Where a society under the Building Societies Acts is being dissolved in manner prescribed by its rules or in pursuance of the consent of three-fourths of the members, the provisions of the Building Societies Acts shall continue to apply in the case of the society as if the liquidators or other persons conducting the dissolution of the society or the trustees appointed under the instrument of dissolution were the board of directors or committee of management of the society.”

- E Counsel for the trustees has argued that there is no obligation on the trustees of the instrument of dissolution to summon a general meeting of the society, either annual or otherwise, because, if there is such an obligation, it must be found, he says, either in the instrument of dissolution, or in the rules, or in the statutory provisions. To deal, first of all, with the instrument of dissolution, s. 32 provides what is to appear therein, but there is nothing in its provisions which requires the instrument of dissolution to contain anything about meetings. This instrument of dissolution, after certain statements which are in the nature of recitals and referring to depositors and other creditors and stating “such moneys shall be paid out of the first moneys which shall be received by the trustees hereby appointed,” contains paras. 4 and 5 which tell the trustees what they are to do. Paragraph 4 provides:

- G “After payment of the claims of depositors and other creditors, the funds and property of the society shall be appropriated and divided among the members thereof in the proportion of the amount standing to each member's credit in the books of the society.”

- H Paragraph 5 simply appoints the trustees and directs what remuneration they are to receive. There is nothing in those paragraphs or elsewhere in the instrument of dissolution which in terms requires any annual or other meeting to be called.

It is said, however, that the Building Societies Act, 1894, s. 9, requires the trustees to carry out the duties which were imposed on the board of directors under the rules of the society, and, therefore, to call annual meetings and to submit annual accounts in accordance with the provisions of the rule. Counsel for the defendant, in support of that argument, referred me to Kemp v. Wright (1), which, he said, shows that after a society has gone into dissolution the rules of the society remain operative, and, therefore, he argued, the rules of the society which provide for annual accounts and the calling of annual meetings are still in operation in the present case. I think that Kemp v. Wright (1) decided only that the rights of the members of the society depend on the rules, in the sense that, immediately prior to the dissolution, their rights in the assets of the society are fixed by those rules, and that the dissolution did not alter their rights. Of course, the contract between the members of the society inter se depends on the rules of the society, and to that extent the rules of the society must remain operative after the society has gone into dissolution, but that does not in the least decide the question whether provisions as to meetings and so on remain any longer in operation, and, as counsel for the trustees observed, s. 9 simply provides that the trustees appointed under the instrument of dissolution are to continue to be subject to the provisions of the Act as if they were the board of directors or committee of management of the society. There is in terms no reference to the rules of the society at all; but, says counsel for the defendant, you have to read the rules of the society in conjunction with the provisions of the Act. Therefore, he says, if you refer to r. 39, you find a provision under which the board are to prepare a general statement of the funds and effects of the society at the end of every year, and, as by s. 40 of the Act of 1874 an annual account of that kind is to be prepared by the secretary or "other officer" of the society, for the purposes of s. 40 the board of directors must be treated as together the "other officer" referred to in that section. There are, it follows, still annual accounts to be taken, and by implication those accounts are to be audited and sent to the registrar within a certain time. They must be approved by an annual meeting of the society, and, therefore, r. 25 imposes on the trustees, as it did on the board of directors, the requirement of calling an annual meeting of the society to deal with the annual accounts.

The point is not without difficulty, and I can see the force of the arguments which are put forward in support of that proposition, but it seems to me that there is in fact no provision in the Act which leads necessarily to that result. There are a number of provisions in the rules which are quite incompatible with their operation at the present time. Indeed, there are several provisions of the Act which are unworkable if you translate literally "board of directors" into "trustees of an instrument of dissolution"—for instance, s. 26 of the Act of 1874. On the whole, it seems to me that, if there is to be imposed on the trustees the duty of calling annual meetings of the society and producing annual accounts for submission to the Registrar of Friendly Societies, which might, be it observed, render them subject to heavy penalties under the Building Societies Act, 1894, s. 21, some specific provision in, or some necessary implication from the provisions of, the Acts must be found. I am unable to find any such provision or any such implication, and, therefore, I come to the conclusion that there is nothing in the Building Societies Acts which imposes on the trustees under the instrument of dissolution any obligation to call annual meetings of the society for the purposes of the Acts.

Declaration accordingly. Costs of all parties to be taxed as between solicitor and client and paid out of the funds of the society.

Solicitors: Callingham, Griffith & Bate (for all parties).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re R. (deceased).

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Willmer, J.), April 18, 19, May 12, 1950.]

Probate—Defence—Want of knowledge and approval—Circumstances giving rise to suspicion—Need to be attendant on, or relevant to, preparation and execution of will—Allegation of immoral conduct between deceased and beneficiary struck out—Contentious Probate Rules, r. 40A—R.S.C., Ord. 19, r. 25 (a), r. 27.

The plaintiffs, as executors, claimed to establish the will of the deceased under which the sole beneficiary was R.F. The defendants, in attacking the will, alleged, inter alia, that the deceased at the time of executing it did not know and approve of its contents, and in their substance of case they pleaded that the deceased and R.F. had been associated for a long time in acts of immorality. On an application by the plaintiffs for an order that this allegation be struck out of the defence under R.S.C., Ord. 19, r. 27, because of its scandalous nature,

HELD: (i) in dealing with a plea of want of knowledge and approval the circumstances held to excite the suspicion of the court must be circumstances attending, or, at least, relevant to, the preparation and execution of the will; the present will was drawn up by solicitors; in the absence of any evidence to show that R.F. or his parents were concerned in the preparation or execution of the will the allegation of scandalous conduct was not relevant to the question whether the deceased knew and approved of its contents; and, accordingly, it must be struck out.

Rule in Barry v. Butlin (1838) (2 Moo. P.C.C. 480), applied.

(ii) the allegation was also in direct contravention of the last sentence of r. 40A of the Contentious Probate Rules, since no other plea (e.g., a plea of lack of testamentary capacity or of undue influence), under which the allegation might have been made, was included in the defence.

[AS TO OPPOSITION TO PROBATE FOR WANT OF KNOWLEDGE AND APPROVAL, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 14, pp. 229, 230, paras. 389-391; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 23, pp. 130-133, Nos. 1291-1321, and Digest Supp.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Christie v. Christie, (1873), L.R. 8 Ch. App. 499; 42 L.J.Ch. 544; 28 L.T. 607; Digest, Pleading, 63, 536.
- (2) Barry v. Butlin, (1838), 2 Moo. P.C.C. 480; 1 Curt. 637; 12 E.R. 1089; 23 Digest 130, 1294.
- (3) Fulton v. Andrew, (1875), L.R. 7 H.L. 448; 44 L.J.P. 17; 32 L.T. 209; 23 Digest 133, 1317.
- (4) Tyrrell v. Painton, [1894] P. 151; 70 L.T. 453; 23 Digest 132, 1304.
- (5) In the Estate of Musgrove, Davis v. Mayhew, [1927] P. 264; 96 L.J.P. 140; 137 L.T. 612; 44 Digest 284, 1159.
- (6) Guardhouse v. Blackburn, (1866), L.R. 1 P. & D. 109; 35 L.J.P. & M. 116; 14 L.T. 69; 23 Digest 111, 1044.
- (7) Low v. Guthrie, [1909] A.C. 278; 78 L.J.P.C. 126; 23 Digest 132, 1306.
- (8) Shrewsbury (Earl) in the Estate of, McLeod v. Shrewsbury (Earl) [1922] P. 112; 91 L.J.P. 46; 126 L.T. 415; 23 Digest 129, 1278.

APPEAL from a decision of Mr. Registrar COMPTON MILLER refusing to make an order to strike certain allegations out of the defence under R.S.C., Ord. 19, r. 27, in a probate action. WILLMER, J., adjourned the summons into open court that the matter might be fully argued.

The plaintiffs, as executors, claimed to establish the will of the deceased, dated Dec. 24, 1946, under which one R.F. was sole beneficiary. The defendants, the brothers of the deceased, opposed probate on various grounds including the contention that at the time of executing his will the deceased was unaware, and did not approve, of its contents. In support of that plea they alleged a homosexual relationship between the deceased and R.F. and this allegation the plaintiffs applied to have struck out as scandalous.

J. E. S. Simon and C. Trevor Reeve for the plaintiffs.

John Mortimer for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 12. WILLMER, J., read the following judgment. This is an appeal from a decision of the registrar dismissing an application of the plaintiffs for an order that certain words contained in the substance of case under para. 3 of the defence be struck out. When the matter was before me in chambers it appeared to me that the questions raised were of such widespread and general importance that, at the request of counsel for the plaintiffs, I adjourned the matter into court for argument. After a full argument from counsel on both sides I thought it right to take time to consider my judgment.

The action is brought by the plaintiffs as executors under the will of the deceased, dated Dec. 24, 1946, claiming to have the will established. The sole beneficiary under the will is one R.F., whom for reasons which will be obvious I refrain from calling by his full name. R.F. was not related in any way to the deceased, but was the son of a local innkeeper and his wife. The defendants are the lawful brothers of the deceased, and by their defence they attack the will on three grounds. First, they put the plaintiffs to proof that the will was duly executed in accordance with the provisions of the Wills Act, 1837. Secondly, they allege that at the time of making the will the deceased was not of sound mind, memory, and understanding. The substance of the case under this heading alleges that during the latter years of his life the deceased was a chronic alcoholic, with the result that his intellect was weakened and his memory became defective. For the purposes of this application no question turns on this allegation. Thirdly, the defendants allege that at the time when the will purports to have been executed the deceased did not know and approve of its contents. It is in respect of the allegations made in the substance of the case under this heading that the present application is made.

It is not either necessary or desirable to recite in detail the allegations which are objected to and sought to be struck out. It will be sufficient to summarise them as follows. It is alleged that for some years before the making of the will the deceased professed and openly boasted of a homosexual attraction to R.F. Allegations are made of conduct on the part of the deceased from which it might be inferred that acts of intimacy of a homosexual character in fact took place between the deceased and R.F. It is alleged that the deceased made daily visits to the inn where R.F. resided with his parents and there habitually indulged in excessive drinking. Lastly, it is alleged that the deceased complained of the meanness of R.F.'s parents who, he said, had had all his money. In addition to the allegations objected to, the defendants repeat the substance of the case under para. 2, and claim that in the circumstances the plaintiffs must be put to strict proof that the deceased knew and approved of the contents of the will. It is important to observe that no allegation is made either of fraud or undue influence on the part of R.F. or his parents. Nor is it alleged that either R.F. or his parents prompted or took part in the preparation or execution of the will, or that they even so much as knew of its existence. The inference to be drawn from an examination of the document itself is that it was prepared by solicitors, and it purports to have been attested by two clerks in the employment of the plaintiffs' solicitors.

The application is made under R.S.C., Ord. 19, r. 27, which is in the following terms:

"The court or a judge may at any stage of the proceedings order to be struck out or amended any matter in any indorsement or pleading which may be unnecessary or scandalous or which may tend to prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial of the action . . .”

A That the allegations objected to impute to the deceased conduct of a scandalous character there can be no doubt, but that circumstance does not necessarily make the pleading “scandalous,” so as to be objectionable within the meaning of the rule. It is, furthermore, contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that the pleading in its present form does tend to prejudice and embarrass the fair trial of the action, because it may well be that rather than face the scandal and publicity of having these allegations made in open court, the beneficiary under the will, R.F., may prefer that the plaintiffs should not proceed with the action. I can well believe that this may be so. It is conceded, however, by B counsel for the plaintiffs that a pleading cannot be ordered to be struck out under this rule, however unpleasant the allegations may be, unless it is shown that they are completely irrelevant and wholly unnecessary for the due prosecution of the action. As was said by LORD SELBORNE, L.C., in Christie v. Christie (1) (L.R. 8 Ch. App. Cas. 503):

C “The sole question in such a case is whether the matter alleged to be scandalous . . . would be admissible in evidence to show the truth of any allegation in the bill that is material with reference to the relief that is prayed.”

D In these circumstances it appears to me that the question which I have to decide is whether these allegations could conceivably be admissible in evidence on the issue whether the deceased knew and approved of the contents of the will.

E On behalf of the plaintiffs it was contended that these allegations, however relevant they might be on the question of the testamentary capacity of the deceased (in relation to which they are not pleaded), or on an issue of undue influence (which is not raised), could not in any circumstances be relevant, and, therefore, could not be admissible in evidence, in relation to the question whether the deceased knew and approved of the contents of the will. Reliance was also placed by the plaintiffs on the provisions of r. 40A of the Contentious Probate Rules. The effect of this rule is, subject to the leave of the court, to limit a defendant in an action such as this to five pleas, as follows: (1) that the will was not duly executed in accordance with the provisions of the statute; (2) that the deceased was not of sound mind, memory, and understanding; (3) that F the execution of the will was obtained by undue influence; (4) that the execution of the will was obtained by fraud; (5), lastly, that the deceased did not know and approve of the contents of the will. The rule, as set out in TRISTRAM AND COOTE’S PROBATE PRACTICE, 19th ed., p. 170, then proceeds as follows:

G “Any party pleading the last of the above pleas shall therewith (unless otherwise ordered by the judge) deliver to the adverse parties and file in the registry particulars in writing, stating shortly the substance of the case he intends to set up thereunder; and no defence shall be available thereunder which might have been raised under any other of the said pleas, unless such other plea be pleaded therewith.”

H On behalf of the defendants it was contended that the facts set out in the allegations objected to were such as (if established) would be likely to raise in the mind of the court a suspicion whether the alleged will was that of a free and competent testator who was in a position to exercise, and did exercise, thought, judgment and reflection in relation thereto. Such facts, if known to a solicitor drawing the will would, it was alleged, be bound to put him on inquiry, and were such as it would be the duty of counsel to bring to the attention of the court. If so, it was contended that it was not only proper, but necessary, that they should be pleaded. It was pointed out, in my judgment rightly, that it is not for me, at this stage, to say whether the facts alleged do raise a suspicion. That will be for the judge at the trial to decide. I can only order the allegations to be struck out in limine if I am satisfied that they are incapable of raising a suspicion such as would influence the decision of the court. It is further contended on behalf of the defendants that r. 40A of the Contentious Probate Rules is no longer in force, but must be regarded as superseded by R.S.C., Ord. 19, r. 25 (a), by which alone, it is said, pleading of defences in probate actions is now governed.

To arrive at a conclusion as to the validity of those contentions I think it is necessary to examine with some care the nature of the plea of want of knowledge and approval. There are two situations in which such a plea may be raised. The first is where it can be alleged that the execution of the will has been attended by some bona fide mistake—for example, a mistake in drafting or copying—which the testator omitted to notice when executing the will. It is not suggested that any question of that sort arises in the present case. The other situation in which the plea of want of knowledge and approval is commonly raised is where the circumstances attending the execution of the will are such as to excite suspicion, under the rule laid down by the Privy Council in Barry v. Butlin (2). It is within this class that it is sought to bring the present case. The circumstances in Barry v. Butlin (2) were that the deceased's solicitor, who prepared the will, was himself a substantial beneficiary under it, and the question which had to be decided was whether the suspicion engendered by this circumstance, as well as by the provisions of the will itself, had been satisfactorily dispelled by the party propounding the will. In delivering the judgment of the Privy Council, PARKE, B., enunciated two rules, which have since been universally accepted and applied as governing cases of this character. The first rule is (2 Moo. P.C.C. 482):

" . . . that the onus probandi lies in every case upon the party propounding a will; and he must satisfy the conscience of the court that the instrument so propounded is the last will of a free and capable testator."

So far as this rule is concerned, PARKE, B., explained (ibid., 484), that the onus

" . . . is in general discharged by proof of capacity, and the fact of execution, from which the knowledge of and assent to the contents of the instrument are assumed."

The second rule is (ibid., 482):

" . . . that if a party writes or prepares a will, under which he takes a benefit, that is a circumstance that ought generally to excite the suspicion of the court, and calls upon it to be vigilant and jealous in examining the evidence in support of the instrument, in favour of which it ought not to pronounce unless the suspicion is removed, and it is judicially satisfied that the paper propounded does express the true will of the deceased."

It will be observed from the words which I have just quoted that this second rule was limited by PARKE, B., to cases in which the will was prepared by a person taking a benefit under it. It is true that in reviewing the particular facts of the case he refers to the circumstance that the deceased was a person of weak mind, but he does not treat this as being of itself a circumstance to arouse suspicion, for he says (ibid., 487):

" . . . the only consequence will be, that it adds to the suspicion which unquestionably belongs to the circumstance of the attorney who prepared the will, taking no less than a fourth of the estate, and the legatees taking the whole to the exclusion of his own family, and calls upon us to watch the proof of the will itself with increased jealousy and suspicion."

The rule in Barry v. Butlin (2) was approved and applied by the House of Lords in Fulton v. Andrew (3), which was, again, a case in which the will was prepared by persons who took a substantial benefit under it. In that case LORD HATHERLEY took the opportunity of re-stating the rule in the following terms (L.R. 7 H.L. 471):

- A “There is one rule which has always been laid down by the courts having to deal with wills, and that is, that a person who is instrumental in the framing of a will, as these two persons undoubtedly were, and who obtains a bounty by that will, is placed in a different position from other ordinary legatees who are not called upon to substantiate the truth and honesty of the transaction as regards their legacies. It is enough in their case that the will was read over to the testator and that he was of sound mind and memory, and capable of comprehending it. But there is a farther onus upon those who take for their own benefit, after having been instrumental in preparing or obtaining the will. They have thrown upon them the onus of shewing the righteousness of the transaction.”
- B

- C With one exception, to which I will presently refer, in all the subsequent cases in the reports in which the rule in Barry v. Butlin (2) has been applied, the circumstance giving ground for suspicion has been the fact that the will was prepared, or its execution produced, by a person taking a benefit under it. The exception is Tyrrell v. Painton (4), where the will was prepared by the son of the defendant, the defendant being the person in whose favour the will was made. In that case the Court of Appeal held that the rule in Barry v. Butlin (2) is not, to quote the words of LINDLEY, L.J. (ibid., 157),

- D “. . . confined to the single case in which a will is prepared by or on the instructions of the person taking large benefits under it, but extends to all cases in which circumstances exist which excite the suspicion of the court.”

- E LINDLEY, L.J., however, goes on to make it clear that the circumstances to which he was referring must be circumstances attending the preparation or execution of the will, for he goes on to say (ibid., 157):

“Here the circumstances under which the will of the 9th was prepared and signed are such as to cause the gravest suspicions.”

- F In a previous passage (ibid., 156) he had said substantially the same thing. A. L. SMITH, L.J., speaks of (ibid., 158)

“. . . the grave suspicions surrounding the will,”

and a little lower down the page uses the significant phrase:

“. . . especially a will brought into existence as this will was.”

- G DAVEY, L.J., neatly and concisely sums up the rule which the Court of Appeal were laying down in the following words ([1894] P. 159):

“. . . the principle is that whenever a will is prepared under circumstances which raise a well grounded suspicion that it does not express the mind of the testator, the court ought not to pronounce in favour of it unless that suspicion is removed.”

- H The conclusion which I draw from these authorities is that in dealing with a question of knowledge and approval of the contents of a will the circumstances which are held to excite the suspicions of the court must be circumstances attending, or at least relevant to, the preparation and execution of the will itself. This view is, I think, confirmed by the decision of the Court of Appeal in In the Estate of Musgrove (5), where it was held that a suspicion engendered by extraneous circumstances, arising subsequent to the execution of the will, was not a sufficient reason for rebutting the presumption of due execution of a will regular on its face. In the course of an exhaustive judgment LORD HANWORTH, M.R., said ([1927] P. 280):

"What of the suspicion? It is not such as attaches to the document itself in the sense in which SIR JAMES WILDE uses the term in Guardhouse v. Blackburn (6), or as it arose in Tyrrell v. Painton (4) in the preparation of the will. The wide definition of suspicion stated by LINDLEY, L.J., in the latter case, that it 'extends to all cases in which circumstances exist which excite the suspicion of the court,' appears to have been used in reference to the preparation of the will, its intrinsic terms, and the circumstances surrounding its preparation and execution, and DAVEY, L.J., seems to have had the same matters in mind. Their judgments were not intended to alter, but to affirm the principles laid down in the cases I have cited."

There is some authority in MORTIMER ON PROBATE LAW AND PRACTICE, 2nd ed., p. 76, for the proposition that in some circumstances matters extraneous to the preparation and execution of the will may properly be held to excite the suspicion of the court whether the deceased knew and approved of its contents. It is there stated:

"Again the following circumstances may require satisfactory explanation, especially where the person who prepared the will was a beneficiary thereunder: the fact that the testator gave no instructions for the will, and was without independent advice, legal or otherwise; that persons who benefited assumed authority over him, while he was weak or debilitated; excluded his relations and friends; obtained money from him; and assumed control of his affairs. Any one of these circumstances, standing alone, may admit of explanation, but their cumulative effect would be to raise a strong suspicion that the testator was a mere passive instrument in their hands."

It is with hesitation that I venture to criticise an authority which is entitled to such well-deserved respect, but if the author means by this passage that circumstances such as he refers to, if not in some way concerned with, or shown to be relevant to, the preparation and execution of the will are such as ought to excite the suspicion of the court, I doubt whether the views expressed are consistent with the rule as defined in Barry v. Butlin (2) and the subsequent cases to which I have referred. It is to be noted that all the authorities cited in support of the proposition in the text are anterior in date to Barry v. Butlin (2).

Turning to the allegations in this case to which exception is taken, there is nothing to show that the beneficiary, R.F., or any of his family, had any part whatsoever in the preparation of this will. On the contrary, as I have already stated, it would appear that the will was prepared by solicitors. The allegations are not connected in any way with the preparation and execution of the will. In these circumstances, is counsel for the defendants well founded in contending that the matters alleged are such that they will have to be brought to the attention of the court? The answer must be: Only if they are relevant in some way to the preparation and execution of the will—that is, only if they go to show that the will was prepared in circumstances capable of raising a well-founded suspicion that it did not express the mind of the testator, to quote the phrase used by DAVEY, L.J., in Tyrrell v. Painton (4). In so far as the allegations go to show an attachment to, or an affection for, the beneficiary, R.F., the inference is rather the other way, for in such circumstances the testator might well have desired to benefit R.F. in preference to other persons. If it be said that the relations alleged between the deceased and R.F. at least go to show eccentric behaviour on his part, this might well be used in support of the allegation that he was lacking in testamentary capacity. The same may be said of the allegation that the deceased habitually drank to excess in the inn kept by R.F.'s parents, but, unless these eccentricities of the deceased go to

A show a lack of testamentary capacity, I do not see in what other way they can possibly be relevant to the question whether he knew and approved of the contents of the will. The allegation that the deceased complained of the parents of R.F. having had all his money might have been relevant to a suggestion that the will was procured as the result of undue influence on their part, but undue influence has not been alleged. It is one of the complaints made by counsel for the plaintiffs that the pleading in its present form proceeds by way of innuendo—that it tends to suggest undue influence without actually alleging it. The pleader, he says, is willing to wound, but afraid to strike. That, it is contended, offends against the principle laid down by LORD LOREBURN, L.C., in Low v. Guthrie (7), when he said that the rule—that is, the rule laid down in Barry v. Butlin (2) and applied in Fulton v. Andrew (3)—is not to be ([1909] A.C. 282)

B “... used as a screen behind which one man was to be at liberty to charge another with fraud or dishonesty without assuming the responsibility of making that charge in plain terms.”

C If it is intended to allege undue influence on the part of R.F. or his parents, such an allegation should, in my judgment, be pleaded in plain and unambiguous terms. In the absence of such a plea and in the absence of anything to show that R.F. or his parents were in any way concerned with the preparation and execution of this will, I do not see how the allegations put forward can possibly be relevant to the question whether the deceased knew and approved of the contents of the will.

D It is obvious that in the nature of things a fair measure of latitude must be allowed to the pleader in alleging facts in support of a plea of want of knowledge and approval, but after careful and anxious consideration I have come to the conclusion that this pleading goes too far, and that, having regard to the manner in which the application of the rule in Barry v. Butlin (2) has been limited in the authorities to which I have referred, the facts alleged in this case in the passage objected to cannot, in the circumstances of the particular case, possibly be relevant to the issue of want of knowledge and approval. Being of a scandalous nature, and such as may tend to prejudice the fair trial of the action, I think that they ought to be struck out. Having regard, however, to what I have said as to the possibility of these allegations being relevant to the testamentary capacity of the deceased, or to a possible plea of undue influence, my order will be without prejudice to any application for amendment that may hereafter be made.

F I have reached this conclusion, as will be seen, quite independently of the provisions of r. 40A of the Contentious Probate Rules. I think I should add, however, that, in my judgment, the allegations sought to be struck out are also objectionable as being in direct contravention of the last sentence of that rule. G I do not assent to the proposition that r. 40A has been now entirely superseded by the provisions of R.S.C., Ord. 19, r. 25A. Clearly the editors of the ANNUAL PRACTICE do not take that view, for in the notes to Ord. 19, r. 25A, they specifically refer to r. 40A of the Contentious Probate Rules. As recently as 1922, in In the Estate of Shrewsbury (Earl) (8), r. 40A was treated by SIR HENRY DUKE, P., as being still in force: see [1922] P. 117, where, however, the learned H President refers erroneously to the rule as r. 40: By s. 103 (1) of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, reproducing s. 21 of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1875, it is provided as follows:

“Save as is otherwise provided by this Act or by rules of court, all forms and methods of procedure which, under or by virtue of any law, custom, general order or rules whatsoever, were formerly in force in any of the courts the jurisdiction of which is vested in the High Court or the Court of Appeal respectively, and which are not inconsistent with this Act or with rules of court, may continue to be used in the High Court and the Court of Appeal respectively in the like cases and for the like purposes as those in and for which they would have been applicable in the former respective courts."

It is obvious that by R.S.C., Ord. 19, r. 25A, which was first made in 1901, a subsequent amendment was made with regard to the pleading of defences in probate actions, but Ord. 19, r. 25A, does not by any means cover the whole ground covered by r. 40A of the Contentious Probate Rules, and, in particular, it does not deal at all with the matter covered by the last sentence of that rule, which is what the plaintiffs rely on in this case. Certainly it does not expressly revoke r. 40A, and, seeing that it does not purport to cover the whole of the ground covered by r. 40A, I do not think it can be taken to have revoked that rule by implication. I prefer to follow the view expressed by SIR HENRY DUKE, P., and to treat r. 40A as being still in force, except in so far as its provisions have been amended by R.S.C., Ord. 19, r. 25A. If that is the right view, it appears to me to be an additional reason for holding that the allegations objected to in this case should be struck out. As already indicated, it appears to me that these allegations could have been raised under the plea of testamentary incapacity, or, possibly, under a plea of undue influence. If so, it is not open to the defendants, under the rules, to raise them on a plea of want of knowledge and approval. For these reasons my conclusion is that this appeal succeeds, and there will be an order striking out the passage particularised in the summons, without prejudice to any further application for amendment which may hereafter be made.

Appeal allowed. Order to strike out passages objected to in summons. Costs in cause.

Solicitors: Ellis, Bickersteth Aglionby & Hazel (for the plaintiffs); Hasties (for the defendants).

(Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.)

LOESCHER v. DEAN. SAME v. SAME AND WOODBRIDGE & SONS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Harman, J.), May 10, 16, 1950.]

Solicitor—Costs—Lien—Money in "client account"—Charging order—Plaintiff awarded decree of specific performance subject to payment of money to defendant—"Property recovered or preserved" through solicitor's instrumentality—Solicitors Act, 1932 (c. 37), s. 69.

The plaintiff obtained a decree of specific performance of a contract to convey certain property, subject to the payment by him of £268 4s. 9d. to the defendant, and was awarded costs. On Apr. 17, 1950, the money was paid to the defendant's solicitors who attended the completion on the defendant's behalf, and the conveyance was made to the plaintiff. On the same day the plaintiff applied for and obtained an order nisi to garnishee all debts due from the defendant's solicitors to the defendant in respect of the plaintiff's costs, which had been taxed at £268 16s. 5d. On Apr. 19, 1950, the garnishee order having been served on them, the defendant's solicitors took out a summons in the action for a charging order in respect of their own costs under the Solicitors Act, 1932, s. 69.

HELD: (i) although (as they were bound to do) the solicitors had placed the money received by them from the plaintiff in the "client account" opened by them, they had a lien on it for the amount of their costs incurred on the defendant's behalf, and, as by a garnishee order the creditor could not be put in any better position than the debtor, the garnishee order nisi must be discharged to the extent of the solicitors' lien.

Stumore v. Campbell & Co. ([1892] 1 Q.B. 314), distinguished.

(ii) the money paid by the plaintiff pursuant to the order for specific performance was not "property recovered or preserved through [the solicitors'] instrumentality" within s. 69 of the Act of 1932, and, therefore, the solicitors were not entitled under that section to a charging order in respect of their costs in the specific performance proceedings.

Hyde v. White ([1933] P. 105), considered.

[AS TO SOLICITOR'S LIEN AND CHARGING ORDER, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 31, pp. 238-261, paras. 264-282; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 42, pp. 259-264, 290-297, Nos. 2925-2990, 3250-3308.]

Cases referred to:

(1) Plunkett and Another v. Barclays Bank, Ltd., [1936] 1 All E.R. 653; [1936] 2 K.B. 107; 105 L.J.K.B. 379; 154 L.T. 465; Digest Supp.

(2) Roberts v. Death, (1881), 8 Q.B.D. 319; 51 L.J.Q.B. 15; 46 L.T. 246; 21 Digest 629, 2131.

(3) Hancock v. Smith, (1889), 41 Ch.D. 456; 58 L.J.Ch. 725; 61 L.T. 341; 43 Digest 1022, 4615.

(4) Stumore v. Campbell & Co., [1892] 1 Q.B. 314; 61 L.J.Q.B. 463; 66 L.T. 218; 21 Digest 620, 2081.

(5) Brandao v. Barnett, (1846), 3 C.B. 519; 12 Cl. & Fin. 787; 7 L.T.O.S. 525; 136 E.R. 207, H.L.; reversg. S.C. sub nom., Barnett v. Brandao, (1843), 6 Man. & G. 630, Ex. Ch.; restg. Brandao v. Barnett, (1840), 1 Man. & G. 908; 3 Digest 285, 878.

(6) Miller v. Attlee, (1849), 3 Exch. 799; 13 L.T.O.S. 121; 13 Jur. 431; 42 Digest 259, 2930.

(7) Hyde v. White, White v. Hyde, [1933] P. 105; 149 L.T. 96; sub nom., Re White, 102 L.J.P. 71; Digest Supp.

PROCEDURE SUMMONSES.

In an action for the specific performance of a contract to convey certain property, the plaintiff was awarded a decree of specific performance subject to his paying to the defendant £268 4s. 9d. The plaintiff tendered the money to the defendant's solicitors, and, in order to secure payment of his costs, immediately obtained a garnishee order nisi in respect of all debts owed to the defendant by his solicitors. The plaintiff issued a summons to have the order nisi made absolute. The defendant's solicitors issued a summons in the action for a charging order in respect of the £268 4s. 9d. under the Solicitors Act, 1932, s. 69.

Skone James for the plaintiff.

Lindner for the garnishees, the defendant's solicitors.

HARMAN, J.: This matter arises out of a decree in a specific performance action which was made by me on Feb. 13, 1950, in the common form for such orders in these days. It was ordered that the agreement be specifically performed, and that, on the plaintiff's paying to the defendant the sum of £268 4s. 9d., the defendant should convey certain real property to the plaintiff.

It was also ordered that the defendant do pay the plaintiff his costs of the action to be taxed. On Apr. 17 the plaintiff tendered his £268 4s. 9d. and he received a conveyance duly executed by the defendant, and the other proper documents accompanied it. The money was paid in the ordinary course of completion at the plaintiff's solicitor's office, was received by the defendant's solicitor who attended the completion as attorney for the defendant, and was paid by him into his client account where it now is. On the same day the plaintiff applied for a garnishee order to garnishee all debts due from the defendant's solicitors to their client in respect of the plaintiff's costs which had then been taxed at £268 16s. 5d.—practically the same sum as was in fact in the client account—and they obtained an order nisi accordingly. That order was served on the defendant's solicitors, who, on Apr. 19, took out a summons in the action for a charging order on this same sum under the Solicitors Act, 1932, s. 69. The two summonses came together before the master and have been adjourned to me.

The first question is whether this is good subject-matter for garnishee proceedings at all. By a garnishee order the creditor cannot be put in a better position than the judgment debtor himself, and, therefore, if the defendant could not claim this money as his as against his solicitor, neither can the plaintiff, who is the creditor, attach it in the hands of the solicitor, because it is not a debt due and owing from the solicitor to the defendant. This is money which is in the solicitor's client account, and under the Solicitors' Accounts Rules, 1935, made under the Solicitors Act, 1933, s. 1, it is compulsory for a solicitor to keep a client account. A "client account" is defined in the rules as:

"... a current or deposit account at a bank, to be kept in the name of the solicitor, in the title of which the word 'client' appears."

Under r. 3, the solicitor is bound to pay such money as that in question here into the client account, and he may only pay into it trust money, or money belonging to the solicitor necessary for opening the account, and certain other sums. He may only draw from a client account in the case of client's money either money required to pay the client or money to pay a debt due to the solicitor from the client—that is not a debt, I think, for costs—or money drawn on the client's authority, or money for his costs after he has told his client that he intends to draw on the client's account for his bill.

In 1936 DU PARCQ, J., decided Plunkett v. Barclays Bank, Ltd. (1), where a question was raised as to the rights between the solicitor and the bank in respect of money in a client account, and it was held that that was money due from the bank to the solicitor and, therefore, a garnishee order nisi could properly be made on it, although, when it came to making the garnishee order absolute, no doubt if the money in the account was wholly client's money, no final order would be made because it would not be the money of the debtor. In the course of his judgment DU PARCQ, J., said ([1936] 1 All E.R. 657):

"The sum of £48 5s. which was the only money paid into the account [the client account] had been paid into the bank in the shape of notes and coin. It followed that unless the plaintiff had broken the law, which ought not to be assumed, the sum of £48 5s. was 'money held or received on account of a client' within [r. 4] (a). It was accordingly trust money as is the money recovered by a judgment creditor in an action which he brings as trustee for another person (see Roberts v. Death (2)) or the money paid by a stockbroker into an account into which he pays nothing but moneys received on behalf of clients (see Hancock v. Smith (3))."

Therefore, although that was not the point he was deciding, the learned judge did assume that money in a client account is trust money, and so in a sense no doubt it is, but the question remains whether, notwithstanding that, a solicitor has any lien on it. Counsel for the plaintiff urged on me that he had no lien, mainly, I think, on the authority of Stumore v. Campbell & Co. (4). There the plaintiff applied to attach in the hands of a firm of solicitors money deposited with those solicitors for a special purpose which had failed. The solicitors claimed that they had a lien on that money against the debtor, notwithstanding the failure of the special purpose, because he owed them money in respect of litigation on some other subject, and, therefore, they said that in a claim he made to the return of the money they could set off their right, but it was held that, as the special purpose had failed, the money they had was trust money and no lien attached to it. LORD ESHER, M.R., reversing the judgment of A. L. SMITH, J., said ([1892] 1 Q.B. 316):

- A “It appears that some money was placed in the hands of the defendants, who are solicitors, for a particular purpose. So long as that purpose existed there was a trust imposed on them, and they were bound, if they accepted the money at all, to employ it or lay it out in the particular way indicated by the trust. That trust failed, and the result of that failure was that another trust arose immediately to pay back the money to the person who gave it. It is admitted that, being trustees, no lien would attach in their favour, because the money was intrusted to them for a specific purpose. Brandao v. Barnett (5) is conclusive on this point.”
- B So that there it was admitted that there was no lien, but merely a right of counter-claim in an action. That seems to me to be quite a different case from the present. Here the money was not entrusted to the solicitor for any specific purpose. It was paid to him in the ordinary course of his business as solicitor for the client. He received it as the client's agent, and he paid it into the client account as he was bound to do. But the question is whether that releases it from his lien.
- C Counsel for the plaintiff says that so long as he has not delivered his bill and notified the client of his intention to withdraw the money to pay it he has no lien because he could not immediately take the money out of the account. I agree that he could not take the money out of the account, because the rules say that he may not do so until he has gone through certain steps, but I cannot accept that he has not got a lien on it as any solicitor has on any client's property
- D that he has in his hands until his bill is paid. It is difficult to find authority for the proposition that the ordinary solicitor's retaining lien, which goes back to long before the Solicitors Acts, is a thing which extends to money, but in MR. CORDERY'S book on the LAW RELATING TO SOLICITORS, 4th ed., p. 455, where he is discussing the liens of solicitors, he points out that there are two of them:
- E “. . . one is a right to retain property already in his possession until he has been paid costs due to him in his professional character; the other is a right to ask the court to direct that personal property recovered under a judgment obtained by his exertions stand as security for his costs of such recovery.”
- F He points out that the latter right is a statutory right. The other right still remains and is independent of the statute—he calls it the “retaining lien”—and he says:
- “The retaining lien is founded on the general law of lien which springs from possession, and is in general governed by the same rules as other cases of possessory lien.”
- G The text continues (ibid., 456), after the heading: “Property which may be subject to lien”:
- “The lien attaches [to various chattels] or money, but money being divisible the lien only attaches on the amount actually due.”
- H The authority for that is Miller v. Attlee (6), and there all that appears is that PARKE, B., held there was no lien in favour of a solicitor on any part of the money beyond the amount of his debt. It was assumed or conceded that the solicitor had a lien on the money to the extent of his debt. I do not see why a solicitor, if he has money in his possession, has not got an ordinary lien on it. The fact that he puts it in a client account does not mean that it is any the less his account although it is earmarked in that way, and it seems to me that the client could not come to him and ask for the handing over of the money. It would be an answer to say: “You have not paid my bill and I shall not pay you your money until you have." Consequently, the money not being money which the debtor could obtain from the solicitor without paying his bill, neither can a creditor obtain it, and, therefore, in my judgment, I must discharge the garnishee order nisi against this money to the extent, at any rate, of the solicitors' right to their lien. At the present moment I do not know what that may amount to.

Supposing I am wrong about that and this money in the client account is in trust and no lien attaches on it, another question arises, and that is whether the statutory right under the Solicitors Act, 1932, applies so as to give the solicitors, Messrs. Woodbridge, a charging order under s. 69 of the Act. This empowers the court to declare that a solicitor is entitled to "... a charge on the property recovered or preserved through his instrumentality for his taxed costs in reference to that suit ..."

That is a limited right, and the question is whether this is a good subject-matter for such an order as being "money recovered or preserved" through the instrumentality of the solicitor in the suit. It is rather a topsy-turvy point because the money has come into the solicitor's possession, in spite of the best efforts of the solicitor and the defendant who resisted the action till the last moment. They refused, until ordered, to convey. They did not want the money. The money, as it were, was put on them, because there was no order on the plaintiff to pay it. The order merely said that on payment of that money the plaintiff was entitled to ask for a conveyance. The plaintiff did tender the money and did get the conveyance, and that is the money which has, therefore, come into the possession of the defendant through his solicitor. In my judgment, that is not in any reasonable sense of the term "money recovered or preserved" in the suit by the solicitors.

Counsel for the garnishees asked me to hold that it was, mainly, I think, on the authority of a probate case, Hyde v. White (7), in which it was held that a share under an intestacy was "money recovered or preserved" by the solicitors for the party propounding the wills. The probate suit was unsuccessful because the will was rejected, and as a result the deceased was intestate and a sum of money was due to the plaintiff notwithstanding that she was unsuccessful in her suit. LORD MERRIVALE, P., said ([1933] P. 107):

"The property in question is the estate of Henry Benjamin White, who is dead, and it has not previously been vested by any judicial or administrative act in any other person. There were persons who had inchoate rights in it and one of the persons who had those rights was his sister, the plaintiff, who had issued a writ ... in the Probate Division."

The sister claimed, as he says, under the wills, but, they being pronounced against, she became entitled as under an intestacy. I question whether her rights were inchoate rights. The rights were uncertain, but not inchoate. It does not seem to me that that is authority for saying that money paid to the defendant against his will in a specific performance suit, and as a result of his losing it, is "money recovered or preserved." So that, if I thought that this were good subject-matter for garnishee proceedings, I should think the solicitors would not be entitled to a charging order under the Act, but as my decision goes, that question does not arise.

Garnishee order, but subject to the right of the solicitors to a lien in respect of the sum properly due to them for costs at the date of the order nisi. Inquiry directed as to the amount of that sum. Summons for charging order dismissed. No order for costs.

Solicitors: Woodroffes (for the plaintiff); Speechly, Mumford & Craig, agents for Woodbridge & Son, Uxbridge (for the garnishees).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

PRIESTMAN COLLIERIES, LTD. v. NORTHERN DISTRICT VALUATION BOARD AND ANOTHER.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Morris and Finnemore, JJ.),
May 1, 2, 12, 1950.]

Coal—Nationalisation of industry—Valuation of transferred interests—Price if sold “in the open market by a willing seller to a willing buyer”—“All relevant circumstances”—Regulations controlling prices—Coal Industry Nationalisation Act, 1946 (c. 59), s. 13 (4), s. 13 (5).

The claimants were the owners of mining stocks and stores, including a quantity of mining timber, which were transferred to the National Coal Board under the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act, 1946, and were comprised in a “compensation unit.” In determining the value of the compensation unit under s. 13 of the Act the district valuation board held that they had to take into account the existence on Jan. 1, 1947 (the date of the notional sale under s. 13 (4)), of the Control of Timber (No. 35) (Mining Timber Prices) Order, 1944, whereby fixed prices were imposed for imported mining timber, and, where the sale was to the owner of a coal mine situate in Great Britain when buying for use in the coal mine, the price was lower than on a sale to any other buyer. Accordingly, they fixed the value of the mining timber at £4,862 10s. 10d. The claimants contended that the phrase “open market” in s. 13 (4) contemplated a market in which a seller could expect to receive the highest unlimited price resulting from the free competition of all potential buyers, and, therefore, account should not be taken of the Order of 1944 controlling prices. It was agreed by the claimants and the district valuation board that “the sale of this unit would be at the site where the various items lay and that the purchaser who would offer the best price would be a purchaser who was going to use the articles comprised in the unit on that site.”

HELD: (i) the phrase “open market” in s. 13 (4) of the Act of 1946 contemplated, not a purely hypothetical market which was to be regarded as exempt from any restrictions imposed by law, but a market in which a willing buyer and a willing seller could legitimately have operated on Jan. 1, 1947; under s. 13 (5) in determining the value of the unit regard was to be had to “all relevant circumstances”; and, therefore, the board were obliged to take into account the existence of the Order of 1944 controlling prices at the material date.

(ii) the agreement between the parties that the purchaser who would offer the best price was one who was going to use the articles on the site where the various items lay postulated that the purchaser who would give the best price would be a purchaser of the coal mine, and, therefore, the scale on which the amount of the valuation was to be determined was that laid down in sched. I, Part I, col. 3 of Tables 1 and 2, to the Order of 1944, viz., that of the prices on the sale to the owner of a coal mine situate in Great Britain when buying for use in the mine.

[FOR THE COAL INDUSTRY NATIONALISATION ACT, 1946, s. 13, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 16, pp. 295, 296.]

Case referred to:

(1) Swift & Co. v. Board of Trade, [1925] A.C. 520; 94 L.J.K.B. 629; 133 L.T. 49; 25 Digest 138, 558.

SPECIAL CASE stated by a referee under the Coal Industry Nationalisation (Valuation of Compensation Units) Regulations, 1947, reg. 40 (1).

The claimants were a colliery company whose interests were transferred to the National Coal Board under the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act, 1946. These transferred interests were comprised in a “compensation unit” which was the subject of a draft valuation fixed by the Northern District Valuation Board by notice on June 30, 1949. The claimants gave notice that they required to be heard on the part of the draft valuation relating to the value of stocks of timber, and at the hearing on Sept. 16, 1949, the board confirmed that value at £4,862 10s. 10d. The claimants gave notice that they desired to have the value reviewed by a referee, and the hearing of the reference took place on Jan 17, 1950. The claimants contended (a) that, as the value to be ascertained was the amount which the timber might have been expected to realise if the Act had not been passed and if the timber had been sold in the open market by a willing seller to a willing buyer, in arriving at the value the prices fixed by the Control of Timber (No. 35) (Mining Timber Prices) Order, 1944, should be disregarded, and, therefore, the correct value was £8,125 16s. 3d.; and (b) that, if the prices fixed by the Order were to be regarded, the value was the sum obtainable on a sale to a buyer other than the owner of a coal mine, and was £6,317 7s. 1d. The referee held that the maximum price fixed in the Order should be disregarded, and awarded compensation at £8,125 16s. 3d. Alternatively, if he were wrong in this, he valued fifty per cent. of the timber at the amount obtainable on a sale to a mine owner and the other fifty per cent. at the amount obtainable on a sale to another buyer.

The Attorney-General (Sir Hartley Shawcross, K.C.), Pearson, K.C., and Marnham for the Minister of Fuel and Power.

MacKenna, K.C., and Featherstone for the claimants.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 12. MORRIS, J., read the following judgment of the court. This is a Special Case, stated pursuant to the provisions of reg. 40 (1) of the Coal Industry Nationalisation (Valuation of Compensation Units) Regulations, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 1345), by which certain questions of law are formulated for the decision of the court. These question arose in the course of a review by the learned referee of a determination made by the Northern District Valuation Board, which was established under the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act, 1946, s. 12 (5).

It is provided by s. 10 (1) of the Act that compensation is to be made, as set out in the Act, in respect of the transfer to the National Coal Board of the "transferred interests." By s. 10 (5) it is provided that for the purposes of compensation the "transferred interests" are to be dealt with in "compensation units," each one of which is to be allocated to one of the valuation districts. The compensation unit which is the subject of the present proceedings comprises certain transferred interests of Priestman Collieries, Ltd., the claimants. The unit consists of a large quantity of mining stocks and stores, including a quantity of mining timber. A draft valuation of the unit was made by the Northern District Valuation Board. No dispute arose in regard to the valuation of the greater part of the unit, but the claimants objected to the valuation of the stocks of timber on the ground that the value attributed to them was not the correct value in accordance with the provisions of the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act, 1946. A hearing took place before the Northern District Valuation Board, who confirmed the valuation made. By a notice given under reg. 27 of the Coal Industry Nationalisation (Valuation of Compensation Units) Regulations, 1947, the claimants required to have the determination of the board reviewed. A hearing then took place before the learned referee who was selected and appointed for the purposes of the review.

By s. 13 (1) of the Act of 1946:

"As soon as may be after a compensation unit has been allocated to a valuation district, and it has been determined under s. 11 of this Act whether and to what extent the value of each transferred interest included therein is attributable to usefulness for activities relevant to district wages ascertainties, the district valuation board for the district shall determine the value of the unit and determine how much of that value is coal industry value and how much of it is value for subsidiary purposes."

Section 13 (4) is as follows:

"For the purposes aforesaid the value of a compensation unit shall be taken to be the amount which it might have been expected to realise if this Act had not been passed and it had been sold on the primary vesting date in the open market by a willing seller to a willing buyer, no allowance being made on account of the vesting of the transferred interests comprised in the unit being compulsory."

A There follows a proviso which is not material for present purposes. Section 13 (5) provides:

"For the purposes of the last preceding sub-section, the sale of a compensation unit to be assumed shall be a sale thereof (with all property and rights which are to vest in the board, by virtue of regulations made under or by virtue of s. 5 or s. 6 of this Act, with the transferred interests included in the unit) subject to all matters subject to which those interests are to vest in them, but free from any charge or lien for securing money or money's worth or other matters free from which those interests are to vest in them; and regard shall be had to all relevant circumstances, and, amongst those circumstances, (a) to the state of the things in which the transferred interests subsisted at the date of their vesting in the board; (b) to all relevant facts known at the time of the determination or review which were in existence on the primary vesting date, notwithstanding that any of them would not have been known at that date."

D The primary vesting date was Jan. 1, 1947. On that date there was in force the Control of Timber (No. 35) (Mining Timber Prices) Order, 1944 (S.R. & O., 1944, No. 920). By that Order fixed prices were imposed for imported mining timber and maximum prices for home-grown mining timber. The learned referee sets out in the Special Case that it was agreed before him that, if this Order applied to the mining timber which was the subject of the review, then the valuation of £4,862 10s. 10d. arrived at by the Northern District Valuation Board was correct if calculated on the basis of a sale to the owner of a coal mine situate in Great Britain, and that, if the Order did not apply, then the proper figure was £8,125 16s. 3d., representing the economic value in the open market at the material date, i.e., Jan. 1, 1947.

The first question which arises for the opinion of the court is formulated by the learned referee as follows:

F "Whether, in determining the value of the stocks of mining timber in question, the Northern District Valuation Board must or must not take into account the existence of the Order controlling prices at the material date and determine the value in accordance with the provisions of that Order."

G A second question is formulated which arises if the court is of opinion that the terms of the Order controlling prices are applicable. In regard to the first question, the matter depends on the meaning of the phrase "open market" as used in its context in s. 13 (4) of the Act of 1946. The main submission made on behalf of the Minister of Fuel and Power was that the value to be ascertained was the amount which the unit might have been expected to realise on Jan. 1, 1947, if voluntarily sold by a willing seller to a willing buyer under conditions H then actually existing and subject to any and all restrictions that would on that date apply to anyone who chose to sell or to anyone who chose to buy. On behalf of the claimants it was submitted that, because of the existence of price regulation for mining timber under the Control of Timber (No. 35) (Mining Timber Prices) Order, 1944, and because of the fact that, by the Control of Timber (No. 32) (General Provisions) Order, 1944 (S.R. & O., 1944, No. 917), limitations were imposed on the class of those who could buy or sell timber, no open market could be said to exist. It was submitted that there can be no open market where prices are fixed or maximum prices are imposed and there are bidders prepared to go beyond such prices. It was further contended that the phrase "open market" pre-supposed and contemplated a market in which a seller could expect to receive the highest unlimited price which resulted from the free competition of all potential buyers.

In the opinion of the court, the phrase "open market," in s. 13 (4), does not contemplate a purely hypothetical market which is to be regarded as exempt from any restrictions imposed by law. The section does not postulate conditions wholly divorced from reality. The directed inquiry in effect is: "What would the seller of the unit have realised on Jan. 1, 1947?" In pursuing that inquiry it must be assumed that on that date the seller was willing to sell and that the buyer was willing to buy. Any notion of a compulsory sale must be ignored. The seller must be deemed to have done as well as a willing seller would reasonably have been expected to do on Jan. 1, 1947, but that does not mean that he should be regarded as a person not bound by the law. It must be assumed that he would deal in the market on Jan. 1, 1947, subject to the law of the land. Any restriction or limitation imposed on him by law, or imposed on any willing buyer, must be recognised and taken into account. The sale to be regarded for the purposes of s. 13 (4) must be a notional one, but a notional sale in the market in which, and subject to the conditions under which, willing buyers and sellers could legitimately have operated on Jan. 1, 1947. It is enjoined by s. 13 (5) that regard should be had "to all relevant circumstances." What is contemplated, therefore, is a sale that might have taken place in the actual market on the prescribed date—rebus sic stantibus.

The court was referred to certain authorities. We are of opinion, however, that, when deciding the meaning in its context of the phrase now under consideration, no direct or conclusive assistance is derived from authorities which deal with other phrases in other contexts. Thus, in Swift & Co. v. Board of Trade (1), consideration was given to words of a regulation which applied to the assessment of compensation to be paid for requisitioned food. The words were:

"... but in determining the amount of the compensation the arbitrator shall have regard to the cost of production of the article and to the allowance of a reasonable profit, without necessarily taking into consideration the market price of the article at the time."

It was held that the regulation did not warrant the awarding of an amount more than could have been legally realised by an actual sale and that an arbitrator had to ascertain what the requisitioned goods would have produced under all the conditions which existed at the time when they would have been sold, including the maximum controlled prices. It is not without interest to note that, in his speech in that case, LORD SUMNER said ([1925] A.C. 545):

"Compensation is not given for the requisitioning of the article itself, for the compulsory acquisition, for disadvantage arising from maximum prices or other war measures, or for the lapse of time between the original requisition and the publication of the award, and as the entire transaction is sui generis, these things must either be expressly given by the regulation or they are not given at all."

Later in his speech he said (ibid., 547):

"He must not give compensation for any form of loss except for the article requisitioned itself, and he must not put upon it for purposes of compensation a price, which it would have been illegal for the merchant to realise if left to himself."

The court is of opinion, however, that the present question is essentially one of the construction of the particular provisions of s. 13 of the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act, 1946, and, for the reasons assigned, the court answers the first question presented for its opinion in the affirmative. The result is that the Northern District Valuation Board were obliged to take into account the existence of the Order of 1944 controlling prices at the material date and to determine the value of the stocks of mining timber in accordance with its provisions.

The second question for the opinion of the court is stated by the learned referee as follows:

A "If the terms of the Order are applicable, then should the scale on which the amount of the valuation is determined be that of the prices to the owner of a coal mine situate in Great Britain when buying for use in that mine, or that of the prices to any other buyer, or any and, if so, what combination of the two?"

B On behalf of the claimants it was submitted that the wording of s. 13 (4) of the Act of 1946 does not postulate, or necessarily postulate, the sale of a compensation unit being made as a sale in one lot, and that, if the unit were broken into lots and sold in lots, the mining timber might have been sold to someone other than a coal owner. The practical significance of these contentions results from the fact that in the Control of Timber (No. 35) (Mining Timber Prices) Order, 1944, sched. I, Part I, one range of prices is fixed for imported timber in the case of a sale to the owner of a coal mine situate in Great Britain when buying for use in such a coal mine, whereas a higher range of prices is fixed in the case of a sale to any other buyer.

C In this particular case the hearing before the Northern District Valuation Board proceeded on the basis that the notional purchaser would be the owner of a coal mine. In the written reasons of the Northern District Valuation Board, it is recited:

D "It was agreed by both sides that the sale of this unit would be at the site where the various items lay and that the purchaser who would offer the best price would be a purchaser who was going to use the articles comprised in the unit on that site."

E This very reasonable agreement seems to postulate that the purchaser who would give the best price would be a purchaser of the coal mine. Counsel for the claimants advanced the further contention that, even on a concurrent sale of the timber and the coal mine to the same purchaser, the lower range of prices would not operate, because the sale of the timber would not be a sale to someone who was at the time of the sale already "the owner of a coal mine." In the opinion of the court, this last contention proceeds on too narrow a basis to make it reasonable or acceptable, and, in any event, a purchaser of the coal mine and of the stores and stocks could in practice so arrange the dates and sequences of his purchases that he would qualify to purchase the imported mining timber at the lower range of prices.

F In the opinion of the court, this second question is, in this case, concluded by the common agreement of the parties on the basis of which the matter proceeded before the Northern District Valuation Board. Accordingly, the court answers the second question by deciding that the scale on which the amount of the valuation is determined is that of the prices to the owner of a coal mine situate in Great Britain. The court is in agreement with the decision of the Northern District Valuation Board when they determined

G "... that the value of the stocks of mining timber comprised in this unit on the primary vesting date as between a willing buyer and a willing seller in the open market is that prescribed by the [Control of Timber (No. 35) (Mining Timber Prices) Order, 1944] and that the value for imported timber is that laid down in sched. I, Part I, col. 3 [of Tables 1 and 2], and that the value for home grown market timber is the maximum price prescribed by sched. I, Part II."

Order accordingly. No order as to costs.

Solicitors: Treasury Solicitor (for the Minister of Fuel and Power); Watson, Burton, Booth & Robinson, Newcastle-on-Tyne (for the claimants).

[Reported by F. A. AMES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

BENNETT, WALDEN & CO. v. WOOD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., Asquith and Jenkins, L.J.J.), May 11, 1950.]

Agent—Estate agent—Commission—Contract to pay commission on “securing an offer”—Offer subject to contract.

The plaintiffs, a firm of estate agents, after being instructed by the defendant to negotiate the sale of his property, wrote to him: “We thank you for your instructions . . . to act as your agents in the sale of [your] property, and beg to confirm that in the event of our securing for you an offer . . . our commission will be at the recognised Auctioneers and Estate Agents Institute scale . . .” Later, the plaintiffs introduced a potential purchaser who signed an agreement to buy the house subject to contract, but the defendant did not proceed to completion and the bargain went off.

Held: on a proper construction of the words “securing for you an offer” the word “offer” meant a firm offer which by acceptance would give rise to a contractual relationship. An offer subject to contract lacked that essential characteristic, for its acceptance did not create a contract, and the plaintiffs were, therefore, not entitled to commission.

Dictum of LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN in Luxor (Eastbourne), Ltd. v. Cooper ([1941] 1 All E.R. 47), applied.

[AS TO REMUNERATION OF AGENT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 1, pp. 256-263, paras. 431-436; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 1, pp. 488-493, Nos. 1664-1692, and pp. 512-514, Nos. 1770-1776.]

Cases referred to :

- (1) Graham and Scott (Southgate), Ltd. v. Oxlade, [1950] 1 All E.R. 856.
- (2) Dennis Reed, Ltd. v. Goody, [1950] 1 All E.R. 919.
- (3) Luxor (Eastbourne), Ltd. v. Cooper, [1941] 1 All E.R. 33; [1941] A.C. 108; 110 L.J.K.B. 131; 164 L.T. 313; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (4) Dennis Reed, Ltd. v. Nicholls, [1948] 2 All E.R. 914; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the defendant from an order of His Honour JUDGE GRANVILLE-SMITH, made at Edmonton County Court, and dated Feb. 8, 1950, giving judgment for the plaintiffs on their claim to commission on the introduction by them to the defendant of a prospective purchaser of the defendant's house.

On Oct. 7, 1948, the plaintiffs, who were estate agents, received instructions from the defendant to sell his property, 92, Amberley Road, Bush Hill Park, Enfield, at the price of £2,900 or some such offer as would be acceptable to the defendant. On the same day the plaintiffs wrote to the defendant: “We thank you for your instructions . . . to act as your agents in the sale of the above property, and beg to confirm that in the event of our securing for you an offer of £2,900 or some such offer as shall be acceptable to you our commission will be at the recognised . . . scale.” On Jan. 17, 1949, the plaintiffs introduced a Mrs. Anderson as a potential purchaser. Mrs. Anderson offered to purchase the house for £2,525 subject to contract and paid a deposit of £20 to the plaintiffs as agents for the defendant. The defendant accepted the offer, but subsequently did not proceed to completion. The county court judge found that there was a contract of agency on the terms of the letter dated Oct. 7, 1948, and held that the plaintiffs were entitled to commission.

Wilson, K.C., and Wakley for the defendant.

P. A. Bruce (for L. R. Miller) for the plaintiffs.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSLED, M.R.: This appeal provides another illustration of the problems arising out of contracts relating to estate agents' commission, two other examples of which have been recently before this court in Graham & Scott (Southgate), Ltd. v. Oxlade (1) and Dennis Reed, Ltd. v. Goody (2).

Let me say at once that I do not propose in the present case to embark on any general observations about the nature of contracts of this character. For present purposes the question is a short point, namely, what is the proper significance to be given to the phrase "securing for you an offer"?

A Before I come to that, however, I must state rather more fully the circumstances which have given rise to the case. The plaintiffs sued the defendant for commission and based their claim on the terms of a letter dated Oct. 7, 1948, which, they say, was accepted by the defendant as constituting the terms of the agency. There is no doubt, to my mind, that the plaintiffs were accepted or appointed as the agents of the defendant on some terms. In the court below (to judge from the notes of the judgment of the learned county court judge) a considerable issue was fought on the question whether there was a contract in the terms of the letter to which I have referred. On that he found B in the plaintiffs' favour. In this court and by his notice of appeal, the defendant has sought to challenge that finding on various grounds. He has also suggested a number of arguments based on the assumption that the terms of the agency were those to be found in the letter of Oct. 7. The plaintiffs do not on any view put their case higher than by resting it on the terms of the letter, and in C the circumstances I have thought it convenient to deal first with the construction of the document, and, therefore, to assume in the plaintiffs' favour that the bargain was in fact in the terms recorded in the letter of Oct. 7. In the event, I have not found it necessary to embark on the other problems.

D I will read the letter of Oct. 7 in full. It is addressed to the defendant. It is headed 92, Amberley Road, Bush Hill Park (the defendant's house which he was proposing to sell), and it reads as follows:

E "We thank you for your instructions dated Oct. 7, 1948, to act as your agents in the sale of the above property, and beg to confirm that in the event of our securing for you an offer of £2,900 or some such offer as shall be acceptable to you our commission will be at the recognised Auctioneers and Estate Agents Institute scale. We would be obliged if you would inform us if (i) the house is sold, (ii) there is a change in the price asked, (iii) if any of our applicants appear to be interested or make an offer."

F It is signed by the plaintiffs. An interval of some three and a half months elapsed, and on Jan. 17, 1949, the plaintiffs appeared at the defendant's house with a Mrs. Charlotte Anderson and then and there another document came into existence. It is addressed to Messrs. Bennett, Walden & Co., the plaintiffs, as agents for Mr. Herbert Stanley Wood, the defendant. It goes on:

G "Dear Sirs, Re 92, Amberley Road, Bush Hill Park, Enfield. I hereby agree to purchase the above named freehold property at a purchase price of £2,525 subject to contract. I enclose cheque for £20 being deposit and in part payment of the purchase money, which you are to hold as stakeholders. The completion to take place on or before Feb. 7, 1949."

It is signed by Mrs. Anderson. Underneath the signature appears:

"I accept the above offer. Signed, H. Wood, vendor."

H Because of that last line, it is, I think, plain that agency on the part of the plaintiffs, which Mr. Wood was disposed to dispute, was established. His agreement to, or acceptance of, the offer in that form was necessitated at least for the reason that the price of £2,525 was less than the £2,900, which was the specified price mentioned in the document of Oct. 7. The essential feature for present purposes of the document of Jan. 17, 1949, is that Mrs. Anderson only made her offer or proposal to purchase "subject to contract," and it is now too well established to need more than reference that, by executing the document in that form, she did not make a firm offer at all, and, notwithstanding the acceptance by the defendant, she was not bound in law as the result of this document. They had clothed in the form of an agreement that which amounted to no more than a record of a stage in the negotiations then reached.

To decide the present case, that (subject to one matter which counsel for the plaintiffs has rightly emphasised) is all I need refer to of the facts of the case. The question is solely this: By the phrase in the letter of Oct. 7, "securing for you an offer," is it contemplated that something short of what is ordinarily called a firm offer will do? Is it sufficient, in order that the agents shall earn their commission, that they should provide or produce something which, though expressed to be an agreement to purchase on the terms of an offer, is, in truth, no more than a proposal in the negotiations? To my mind, the answer to that question is in the negative. Counsel for the plaintiffs rightly points out that parties may agree between themselves on a bargain in such terms and producing such result as they think proper. There is no reason why a man should not (if he chooses) agree with agents to pay commission on the happening of any event which they may name. It is to be observed that VISCOUNT SIMON, L.C., in Luxor (Eastbourne), Ltd. v. Cooper (3) draws attention to the fact that a bargain to pay commission on receipt of an adequate offer forms an example of one category of contracts for remunerating agents distinct from contracts to pay commission on the agent "finding a purchaser," or other words which indicate that the commission is only due when there has come into existence a completed sale or its equivalent. COHEN, L.J., in Graham and Scott (Southgate), Ltd. v. Oxlade (1), sets out that passage ([1950] 1 All E.R. 858) from the speech of VISCOUNT SIMON, L.C., where he said ([1941] 1 All E.R. 40):

"It may be useful to point out that contracts under which an agent may be occupied in endeavouring to dispose of the property of a principal fall into several obvious classes. There is the class in which the agent is promised a commission by his principal if he succeeds in introducing to his principal a person who makes an adequate offer, usually an offer of not less than the stipulated amount. If that is all that is needed in order to earn his reward, it is obvious that he is entitled to be paid when this has been done, whether his principal accepts the offer and carries through the bargain or not."

LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN in the Luxor case (3) observed that, if the contract is designed to attract commission on no more being done than the provision of an offer, then that result must be stated in quite clear and precise terms. That part of the speech of LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN ([1941] 1 All E.R. 47) also appears in the judgment of COHEN, L.J., in Graham & Scott (Southgate), Ltd. v. Oxlade (1) ([1950] 1 All E.R. 859):

"It is possible that an owner may be willing to bind himself to pay a commission for the mere introduction of one who offers to purchase at the specified or minimum price, but such a construction of the contract would, in my opinion, require clear and unequivocal language."

In the present case the contract is in terms plainly directed to creating an obligation on the securing of an offer. The form of words is different from the forms of words which were adopted in the recent cases I have mentioned, and which, perhaps, are the more common, namely, words indicating an obligation to pay on "finding a purchaser" or "on finding a person willing and able to purchase." Numerous variations have come into existence of that latter class of case and in Dennis Reed, Ltd. v. Goody (2) DENNING, L.J., in his judgment ([1950] 1 All E.R. 925), treated all these formulae, "find a purchaser," "find a party prepared to purchase," "find a purchaser able and willing to complete the transaction" etc., as synonymous. But the examples given do not include among them a formula such as we have here, which, as I have already said, seems to be treated by both VISCOUNT SIMON, L.C., and LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN in Luxor's case (3) as by nature being in a somewhat different category. I think it is probably desirable that in contracts of this kind the court should not, by drawing fine distinctions between one formula and another, lead to all kinds of different results which may be capricious in their operation. On the other hand, parties contracting in particular words must be assumed to intend the ordinary meaning of those words, and we are here construing, as counsel for the plaintiffs has emphasised, the words "securing for you an offer," and no others. All that is, however, generality.

- A The vital question is what is meant by "securing for you an offer." As I have indicated, and following the language of LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, a contract providing a commission in such circumstances as counsel for the plaintiffs suggests must be looked at carefully, and, if the contention of the plaintiffs in the action is correct, it must be clearly manifest from the language. Certainly the argument of counsel for the defendant, on the one hand, and
- B counsel for the plaintiffs, on the other, makes it plain that that characteristic cannot, at any rate, be confidently asserted of this letter. Applying the proper test of construction, viz., what is the ordinary, straightforward, meaning of the language, it seems to me reasonably clear that the answer here is that by "offer" is meant a firm offer. In the ordinary sense of the term in business matters an offer is something which by acceptance creates a bargain. An offer subject
- C to contract lacks that essential characteristic, for its acceptance does not create a contract. Prima facie when the word "offer" in such a document as this is used, what is meant is something, which, if accepted, gives rise to a contractual relationship. I think that that view is supported by the use of the word "securing"—making sure—for something which amounts to no more than a step in the negotiations provides no kind of assurance or security for the principal.
- D Counsel for the plaintiffs conceded that a contract in this form was not intended to provide and ought not to be construed so as to provide the opportunity of more than one commission in respect of the same subject-matter for the agent, but, if there is here to be no such requirement as I have indicated, namely, if "offer" means, not a firm offer, but a mere proposal, then there will be the greatest possible difficulties in identifying the particular proposal which attracts
- E the commission. It is true that that has not arisen in this case, but it is a legitimate way to test the matter.

It seems to me, therefore, tolerably plain that by "offer" is here meant what I have described as a firm offer. I do not think the result of that is necessarily to produce the same result as would have been produced had the words been "find a purchaser." I am not saying what would be the precise

F result if a firm offer had been made here and for one reason or another the contract so confirmed had broken down at a later stage. I certainly do not, as at present advised, assent to the view that the construction I put on this document makes this formula synonymous with the other formulae I have mentioned.

- G If I am right so far, then plainly the document of Jan. 17 lacked the essential characteristic. It has been also said that, notwithstanding the form of the document of Jan. 17, Mrs. Anderson, by her own evidence, showed that right up to a stage when, through the uncertainty in the mind of the vendor which was communicated to her, the bargain went off, she was perfectly ready, willing, and, indeed, anxious, to complete the purchase on the terms which she proposed. It may be that she was, but that does not affect the question the court has to
- H determine. We are not here considering whether and to what extent Mrs. Anderson was a willing buyer, but whether the essential event had occurred of a firm offer having been made. Nothing which Mrs. Anderson said in the witness box at the trial converts what had occurred in January, 1949, from a mere proposal into a firm offer. I should add, in reference to the authorities, that the industry of counsel for the defendant has failed to find any case where this formula of securing an offer or its equivalent has come before the courts save one case, and a rather unsatisfactory one, of Dennis Reed, Ltd. v. Nicholls (4).

There the bargain contained as part of the formula the mystic symbol, "o.n.o." which, being interpreted, means "or near offer." The decision was one of LYNSEY, J., but it is not clear from the report whether the offer which was in fact made, was, or was not, subject to contract. In Dennis Reed, Ltd. v. Goody (2) it was treated as though the offer was subject to contract, and on that footing the conclusion arrived at, which was favourable to the estate agent, was later disapproved. I am not at all satisfied that that does justice to LYNSEY, J., but it does not help us in the present case, where there is no doubt that the so-called offer was subject to contract.

For the reasons I have stated it seems to me that the inevitable conclusion, in the present case must be adverse to the plaintiffs. In the county court by far the greater part of the notes of the judgment are devoted to the other question, namely: What were the terms of the contract of agency, if any? On the matter with which we have been concerned all that the learned county court judge is recorded as having said is:

"It is unnecessary to deal with the other arguments. I cannot agree to introduce a condition that the offer must be by a person who does not afterwards withdraw it."

At the time of the judgment the learned county court judge had not had the advantage of the more recent decisions to which I have alluded, but I do not think, with all respect, that any question arises of implying or introducing any such condition as the learned county court judge mentioned. There is nothing further in the judgment which throws any light on the grounds on which he based his conclusion on this point. Had the two cases mentioned been available before him I think it is more than probable the form of his judgment would have been different. However that may be, I think in the circumstances this appeal must be allowed and the action must be dismissed.

ASQUITH, L.J.: I agree both with the reasoning and conclusions of the Master of the Rolls.

JENKINS, L.J.: I agree.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Hamilton-Hill & Evershed (for the plaintiffs); Robinson & Bradley (for the defendant).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Explained and Distinguished. R. v.
FULHAM ETC. RENT TRIBUNAL. Ex p.
ZEREK. [1951] 1 All E.R. 482.

R. v. HACKNEY, ISLINGTON AND STOKE NEWINGTON RENT TRIBUNAL. Ex parte KEATS.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Morris, JJ.), May 11, 1950.]

Rent Control—Powers of rent tribunal—Rectification of written tenancy agreement—Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949 (c. 40), s. 1.

Premises were let on a tenancy for one year at a rent of £169, the tenant agreeing to use them for the purpose of tailoring only. The tenant applied to a rent tribunal under the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, which refers to dwelling-houses only, and the tribunal, notwithstanding objections by the applicant made on the ground that the premises were not a dwelling-house, decided that the provision in the agreement was a sham and determined the reasonable rent of the premises under the Act.

HELD: the tribunal had no jurisdiction to determine whether or not the agreement was genuine, and its order must be quashed.

[FOR THE LANDLORD AND TENANT (RENT CONTROL) ACT, 1949, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 13, pp. 1094-1110.]

MOTION for certiorari.

The applicant was the landlord of premises let to the tenant under a tenancy agreement which provided for the premises to be used for the purpose of tailoring only. On an application by the tenant a rent tribunal held that certain provisions of the agreement were a sham and proceeded to determine a reasonable rent for the premises under the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, which applied to dwelling-houses only. For the respondents, the rent tribunal, it was submitted that the application for an order of certiorari should be adjourned pending the determination of the Chancery Division with respect to the agreement.

Marshall, K.C., and F. R. McQuown for the applicant.
J. P. Ashworth for the respondents.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: Counsel for the applicant has moved for an order of certiorari to bring up and quash a determination of the Hackney, Islington, and Stoke Newington Rent Tribunal made on Mar. 17, 1950, whereby the tribunal purported to determine the reasonable rent of premises consisting of the first floor of 127 Southgate Road, London, N.1. The premises are the subject of a written tenancy agreement made on Dec. 17, 1949, between the applicant, the landlord, and the tenant, by which a tenancy thereof was granted for a term of one year beginning on Dec. 17, 1949, at the yearly rent of £169. There was a provision with regard to repairs and so forth, and the tenant agreed to use the premises for the purposes of tailoring only. The agreement contained this declaration:

"It is hereby declared that no warranty is given in the granting of this agreement that the premises will not attract a development charge or require permission under any statutory instrument. The landlord will in no circumstances indemnify the tenant against any charges, actions or proceedings directly or indirectly arising out of statutory instruments."

The significance of that passage is that under the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, a development charge might become payable if a dwelling-house were turned into commercial premises, as it would be if used for tailoring operations. The premises having been previously used as a dwelling-house, the applicant was protecting herself by saying: "If a development charge becomes payable owing to your use of the premises for tailoring, I am not going to pay it. You must take your own precautions or make your own arrangements about that." This is clearly an agreement to use the premises, not as a dwelling-house, but for tailoring only, and so long as it stands, the tribunal has no jurisdiction to interfere with the rent or other of its terms. The Landlord and Tenant Act, 1949, relates to dwelling-houses only.

As soon as the tenant's application became known by the applicant her solicitors suggested to the tribunal that they had no jurisdiction to entertain the proceedings and stated that the applicant was not going to take any part in them, but when the tribunal sat, counsel for the applicant attended and very properly took this point. The applicant did not attend to give evidence. Why should she? There was the written agreement between the parties. The tribunal, who have no power to take evidence on oath, proceeded to invest themselves with the power of deciding whether this was a genuine agreement or not. A more dangerous usurpation of power by one of these tribunals it is impossible to imagine. As soon as this agreement was put forward, the chairman said that he was well aware of the rule of law that one cannot contradict a written agreement by parol evidence, but the tribunal had formed the view that the provision in the lease that the premises were to be used for tailoring was a sham. If they formed that view, they formed it on unsworn evidence, but, in any event, it was not a matter for them to decide and they should have told the tenant that they declined to enter on the case, and, if he said that the agreement was not a true agreement or did not truly represent the bargain made, he must go to a court of equity and get it rectified. The tribunal had no jurisdiction to proceed unless and until that agreement had been found to be a sham or not properly and truly to contain the terms of the bargain made. The tribunal, however, without being able to take sworn evidence or have any pleadings before them, or, for all I know, without being able to understand the doctrines on which the court of equity proceeds when it has to exercise this very delicate jurisdiction of rectifying written agreements, proceeded to rectify this document themselves in the sense that they held that it did not represent the terms of the contract between the parties. They had no power for a moment to decide that question.

This order has been made without jurisdiction. It is an order which has many repercussions and far-reaching effects. If an order has been made by a tribunal without jurisdiction, it is the plain duty of this court to issue its order of certiorari to bring up the order and quash it. In my opinion, this is a clear case where the order of certiorari must go, and the order of the tribunal will be quashed.

HUMPHREYS, J.: I agree.

MORRIS, J.: I agree.

Order of certiorari issued, applicant to have costs.

Solicitors: J. C. Fox, Gamble & Son (for the applicant); The Solicitor, Ministry of Health (for the respondents).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Applied. PERRY v. DEMBOWSKI.
[1951] 2 All E.R. 50.

GAMMANS v. EKINS.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., Asquith and Jenkins, L.JJ.), May 15, 1950.]

Rent Restriction—Death of tenant—“Member of the tenant’s family”—Reputed husband of tenant—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (1) (g) (as amended by Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), s. 13, and Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1935 (c. 13), s. 1).

For some twenty years the defendant had lived with the tenant of a dwelling-house to which the Rent Restrictions Acts applied. He had never been married to her, but he had adopted her name and had posed as her husband, and he remained in the house after her death. In an action by the landlord for possession of the house, the defendant claimed the protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts on the ground that he was a “member of the tenant’s family” within the meaning of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, s. 12 (1) (g) (as amended by the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, s. 13, and the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1935, s. 1).

HELD: the word “family” in s. 12 (1) (g) of the Act of 1920 was used in the ordinary, popular, sense of the word, and it was impossible to say that the defendant was a “member of the tenant’s family” within the meaning of the section.

Brock v. Wollams ([1949] 1 All E.R. 715), applied.

Per JENKINS, L.J. If there are children of two parties living as husband and wife, or of one of them, there may be said to be de facto an actual family consisting of children and their natural parent or parents. It is possible that in such a case either of the de facto parents could properly be held to be a member of the other's family.

[AS TO STATUTORY TENANTS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 334, 335, paras. 400, 401, and 1950 Supplement; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 575, 576, Nos. 7226-7255, and Supplements.]

A Cases referred to :

- (1) Brock v. Wollams, [1949] 1 All E.R. 715; [1949] 2 K.B. 388.
- (2) Jones v. Truman, [1949] C.L.Y. 3385.

APPEAL by the landlord from an order of His Honour JUDGE TYLOR, K.C., made at Portsmouth County Court, and dated Mar. 2, 1950, dismissing an action for possession of premises to which the Rent Restrictions Acts applied.

B The county court judge held that the defendant, who had been living with the statutory tenant of the premises, a Mrs. Smith, as her husband up to the date of her death, was a member of her family within the meaning of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, s. 12 (1) (g). The facts appear in the judgment of ASQUITH, L.J.

L. A. Blundell for the landlord.

C Seymour Collins for the defendant.

ASQUITH, L.J.: This is a landlord's appeal against a refusal of an order for possession, the learned judge holding that the defendant was a member of the tenant's "family" within s. 12 (1) (g) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 [as amended by s. 13 of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, and s. 1 of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1935]. That provision, so far as material, reads thus:

E "... the expression 'tenant' includes the widow of a tenant who was residing with him at the time of his death, or, where a tenant leaves no widow or is a woman, such member of the tenant's family so residing as aforesaid as may be decided in default of agreement by the county court for not less than six months immediately before the death."

The defendant had lived for some twenty years in close, but unmarried, association with a Mrs. Smith. He adopted her name and posed as her husband. They shared the premises involved. She died. He was sued for possession, and he set up s. 12 (1) (g) of the Act of 1920, claiming that he was a member of the deceased woman's family. In that contention he has been supported by the learned county court judge.

H It has been held that "family" in the sub-section should be given its popular meaning: see Brock v. Wollams (1). Consanguinity is not a pre-requisite of membership of the same family. On the authorities not only are children members of their parents' family, but a husband is a member of his wife's family, an adopted child is a member of the adoptive parents' family, and a husband, on unusual facts, has been held to be a member of the same family as his wife's niece. Counsel for the landlord was right in saying that the material decisions limit membership of the same family to three relationships—first, that of children; secondly, those constituted by way of legitimate marriage between husband and wife; and, thirdly, relationships whereby one person becomes in loco parentis to another. Beyond that point the law has not gone. I do not think we should be justified in saying that the defendant was a member of Mrs. Smith's family. If the relations between them had been platonic I can see no principle on which one could say that they were members of the same family which would not require the court to predicate the same of two old cronies of the same sex innocently sharing a flat. If, on the other hand, the relationship involves sexual relations, it seems to me anomalous that a person can acquire a "status of irremovability" by having lived in sin, even if the liaison has been, not a mere casual encounter, but one protracted in time and conclusive in character. I would, however, decide the case on a simpler view. To say of two people masquerading, as these two were, as husband and wife—there being no children to complicate the picture—that they were members of the same family, seems to me an abuse of the English language, and I would, accordingly, allow the appeal.

JENKINS, L.J.: I agree. If the matter were free from authority, I would have little hesitation in holding that the defendant was not a member of Mrs. Smith's family within any ordinary accepted use of that expression or within the meaning of s. 12 (1) (g) of the Act of 1920. There have, however, been a series of decisions, each of them addressed to the particular facts of the case before the court, which, taken together, have so extended the meaning of the word "family" for the purposes of the sub-section as to make it possible to argue with a considerable degree of plausibility that there is no reason why the benefit of the sub-section should not be extended also to the defendant. When the cases are examined, it will be found, however, that none of them goes so far as we are invited to go in the present case. The defendant was not, in my view, a member of Mrs. Smith's family in any reasonable sense whatever. The parties, for reasons of convenience, had chosen to live together, and the defendant had taken the name of Smith. The neighbours assumed that they were husband and wife and accepted them as such. I cannot regard this as giving the defendant the same claim to be considered a member of Mrs. Smith's family as if they had been lawfully man and wife.

The point has been taken that, if it be right that an adopted child may be a member of a statutory tenant's family, or that even an illegitimate child may be such a member, it would be illogical to exclude a reputed husband, or, in other words, a man living with a woman as his wife without having gone through a legal ceremony of marriage. I do not agree. It seems to me that as soon as children of two such parties, or one of them, come into question, there may be said to be de facto an actual family consisting of children and the natural parent or parents of those children. It is then easy to see how the children could properly be brought within the expression "family" according to the ordinary and popular meaning of the word. It is possible, but it is a matter for decision when it arises, that in such a case either of the de facto parents could properly be held to be a member of the other's family, because, although there is no legal tie in such a case, nevertheless, it might be said that the so-called husband was a member of the so-called wife's family as being the father of her children, and vice versa. The situation assumed would present de facto what might be described as the equivalent of a marriage with the natural consequences of a marriage. Cases of that kind, it seems to me, must provide far stronger ground for the view that the man or woman, as the case may be, should be considered as a member of the woman's or the man's family than a case where there is no more than liaison between two elderly people who choose to pose as a married couple when they in fact are not. In my judgment, that would be extending this section beyond all reason and I am not disposed to allow such an extension. If the learned county court judge's decision were to stand, it seems to me an alarming vista would be opened up. If, for instance, brothers and sisters are members of the tenant's family, I see no reason why two friends should not set up house together, one changing his or her name to that of the other, and then to give out that they were sisters or brothers or brother and sister as the case might be, in which event, provided they were accepted as such in the neighbourhood, there would, by parity of reasoning, be no ground why, when one of them, being a statutory tenant of the house in which they both resided, died, the other should not claim to be a member of the statutory tenant's family on account of the artificial relationship they had chosen for their own purposes to adopt. I agree that the appeal should be allowed.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSHED, M.R.: At first the problem presented by this appeal seemed to me not very difficult for, applying the test laid down by COHEN, L.J. ([1949] 1 All E.R. 718), in Brock v. Wollams (1) (viz., would an ordinary man, addressing his mind to the question whether the defendant was a member of the tenant's family, answer it "yes" or "no") it appeared that the answer must be "no," and it was, indeed, difficult to imagine any context in which, by the proper use of the English language, such a man living in such a relationship with the tenant could be described as of her family. The language of the Act is, however, peculiar in that the husband of a female tenant must, I think, be intended to be covered by the word "family." In the case of a childless marriage I should certainly not have thought it natural to refer to the husband as a member of the wife's family.

As my brethren have indicated, the decisions under s. 12 (1) (g) of the Act of 1920 have made it clear that, when one leaves the parents and looks further afield to find an answer to the question I have already mentioned, the phrase is certainly not to be taken as confined to children born in wedlock. The contention of counsel for the landlord that there is a distinction in favour of persons to whom the tenant stood in loco parentis may or may not be right, though I wonder whether it would be exhaustive of every case. If, however, children who are not children born in wedlock, whether illegitimate or adopted, are covered by the phrase, the question arises whether the word can also extend to a consort, even though that consort is not joined in matrimony to the tenant. Counsel for the defendant did not suggest that where a man and woman had lived more or less casually together the intention of Parliament could be to give protection to the survivor of the two of them, but in the present case, as he emphasised, the two persons had lived as man and wife for some considerable time and had been accepted by the neighbourhood as such. In those circumstances, counsel said, there is no ground for expecting the section to avail the defendant, or any ground of public policy compelling the court to hold that it does.

I think that there is considerable force in this argument, and I have felt greater difficulty than my brethren in arriving at an answer. On the whole, I have come to the conclusion that the right test is that laid down by COHEN, L.J., in Brock v. Wollams (1), which has commended itself to my brethren, namely, to ask whether in the ordinary use of language the defendant had been a member of the family of the late tenant. As it seems to me, the answer remains negative after allowing for all the very forcible arguments which have been put on the other side. In Jones v. Truman (2) the position was the other way round. There a man and woman had lived together as man and wife and they had had children, but they were never married. According to the very brief report, the county court judge came to the conclusion that, the man having been the tenant, the woman was entitled to the protection of the Rent Acts as being a member of his family, or, that, if he were wrong in that, one or other of the children was entitled to that protection. It is unnecessary to say whether that decision was rightly decided or not, but certainly where there are children of such a union the considerations may not be the same as are applicable in the case of a childless union. In the present case, as ASQUITH, L.J., observed, we are not beset by any complication of that character. It may not be a bad thing that it is shown by this decision that in the Christian society in which we live one, at any rate, of the privileges which may be derived from marriage is not equally enjoyed by those who are not married.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Bower, Cotton & Bower, agents for H. Morgan Gammans, Portsmouth (for the landlord); Kingsford, Dorman & Co., agents for Blake, Laphorn, Roberts & Rea, Portsmouth (for the defendant).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

ROGERSON v. STEPHENS.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Parker, JJ.), May 17, 1950.]

Street Traffic—Insurance against third party risks—Charge of using motor vehicle and trailer while uninsured—Wrong description of offence—Charge not amended—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 35 (1).

The respondent was charged with using a motor vehicle and trailer on a road without having in force in relation to the user thereof a policy of insurance or security in respect of third-party risks, contrary to the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 35 (1). The respondent's insurance policy covered the use by him of a motor car in connection with his business or profession.

HELD: it was an offence against s. 35 (1) of the Act of 1930 to use a motor car, but was not an offence to use a motor car and a trailer, on a road without there being in force in relation to its user a policy of insurance in respect of third-party risks. The information, therefore, disclosed an offence which was not known to the law and was bad.

[FOR THE ROAD TRAFFIC ACT, 1930, s. 35 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 23, p. 636.]

CASE STATED by Cambridge justices.

At a court of summary jurisdiction sitting at Cambridge an information was preferred by the appellant against the respondent charging him with using a motor vehicle and trailer on a road without having in force, in relation to the user thereof, such policy of insurance or such security in respect of third-party risks as complied with Part II of the Road Traffic Act, 1930, contrary to s. 35 (1) of the said Act. On Nov. 10, 1949, a motor car, owned and driven by the respondent and drawing a trailer, the property of his employers, collided with a motor van. The respondent's insurance policy covered the use by him of the motor car in connection with his business or profession. The trailer was covered by a policy of insurance issued to the respondent's employers, but the policy covered the trailer only while it was being drawn by a motor car belonging to the employers. The respondent contended (inter alia) (i) that the charge as laid was bad in that (a) there was no offence known to the law in using a motor vehicle and trailer in the manner charged, (b) the motor vehicle and trailer did not together form a single entity, (c) the law did not require a policy of insurance in respect of a trailer; and (ii) that the respondent's policy covered him in respect of the motor car, and the said policy was not invalidated by reason of the fact that at the material time the motor car was drawing a trailer. The appellant did not apply to have the information amended by striking out the words "and trailer." The justices, being of opinion that the charge as laid in the information was good, overruled the respondent's contentions on this point. They took the view, however, that, as there was nothing in the respondent's insurance policy specifically prohibiting the use of a trailer with the motor car, the insurance was not invalidated by the fact that the trailer had been attached, and dismissed the information. The appellant appealed.

Malcolm J. Morris for the appellant.

The respondent did not appear.

LORD GODDARD, C.J.: This is a Case stated by justices for the borough of Cambridge before whom the respondent was charged with

"using a motor vehicle and trailer on a road without having in force a policy of insurance or security in respect of third-party risks, contrary to the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 35."

The particulars of offence stated:

"On Nov. 10, 1949, at and in the said borough [the respondent] did use a motor vehicle, to wit, a motor car and trailer, on a certain road there, named Newmarket Road, without having in force in relation to the user of such vehicle . . . such a policy of insurance."

A It is clear that a trailer is not a motor car. There is also no doubt that a motor car and trailer attached are not one vehicle but two, one of which has to be licensed and on which duties have to be paid under the Finance Act, 1920, s. 13 (1), while the other has not to be licensed. In the course of the case objection was taken by counsel for the respondent that the charge as laid was bad in that (a) there was no offence known to the law in using a motor vehicle and trailer in the manner charged, (b) the motor vehicle and trailer did not together form a single entity, (c) the law did not require a policy of insurance in respect of a trailer. The justices were of the opinion that the charge as laid in the information was good, and overruled the respondent's objection on this point. The case then proceeded on the question whether the respondent's policy of insurance covered the use of his motor car with a trailer attached, and the justices found that it covered that use. On that, I intend to express no opinion, because, in my view, the justices were wrong in overruling the objection which was taken to the information. I can only read the information as alleging that it is an offence under the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 35 (1), to use a motor vehicle and trailer on a road without having in force a policy of insurance. It is contrary to s. 35 (1) to use a motor vehicle, but it is not contrary to that section to use a motor vehicle and trailer, and, if the use of the trailer is to be regarded as a constituent of the offence, both the statement of the offence and the particulars of the offence seem to me to allege that it is an offence to use a motor vehicle and trailer unless there is in force in relation to their user a policy of insurance. The offence is using a motor vehicle, not using a motor vehicle and trailer. Therefore, I think the information discloses an offence which is not known to the law. The appellant could have asked the justices to amend the information by striking out the words "and trailer", but he chose to rely on the information as it stood, and the justices ruled that it was good. In my opinion, it was bad, and the justices ought to have indicated that they would be prepared to amend it if they were asked. We cannot now send this case back with directions to amend, because the justices have heard and determined the matter, have dismissed the summons, and have asked us whether their determination was right. The dismissal of the summons was right, although for different reasons from those which the justices gave. In my opinion, therefore, this appeal fails.

F HUMPHREYS, J.: Having heard the grounds on which my Lord is of opinion that this information should be dismissed, I am disposed to agree with his view. At first sight it seemed to me that to hold that the information was bad was so highly technical that I was not inclined to allow the case to be concluded on such a ground. On the peculiar facts of this case, however, it seems to me that the question which arose is not altogether technical.

G The respondent took the point that the information was bad on the ground that it charged an offence not known to the law. It is essential that those who prosecute in these cases should follow the words of the statute where they are charging a person with a statutory offence, and that they should not add or subtract anything from the words of the statute. In this case the obvious answer to the objection was that, if the words "and trailer" were thought to be unnecessary, they should be struck out. The appellant, however, took the view that the motor vehicle and trailer could form one single entity, and, therefore, that the entity in respect of which he was prosecuting was rightly described as a motor car and trailer. That being so, one of the questions which the justices had to decide was: Is a motor car and trailer one vehicle, or are they two vehicles? That was a matter of substance which was seriously argued before the justices.

I would not like to say anything which would lead to the idea that the concluding words of the second proviso to s. 1 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, are to be lightly disregarded. They provide, first, that "... no objection shall be taken or allowed to any information, complaint, or summons, for any alleged defect therein in substance or in form ..."

The second proviso then deals with the question of variance between the information and the evidence, concluding with

"... but if any such variance shall appear to the justice or justices present and acting at such hearing to be such that the party so summoned and appearing has been thereby deceived or misled, it shall be lawful for such justice or justices ... to adjourn the hearing ..."

Those words indicate that words which are mere surplusage may be disregarded unless they have misled the party summoned—which they have clearly not in this case—in which case the justices may not dismiss the information but may adjourn. Here, it is not so much a variance between the information and the evidence, nor is it an objection in substance. The objection which was made was that the respondent was summoned for an offence which does not exist. On those special grounds I think that the justices ought to have told the appellant that, unless the words "and trailer" were struck out, they would have to consider whether the use of a "motor car and trailer" was an offence. In effect, they have decided that there is such an offence in law as using a motor car and trailer. In that, I think, they were wrong.

PARKER, J.: I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Blyth, Dutton, Wright & Bennett, agents for King, Metters & Harrison, Cambridge (for the appellant).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

ABDUL KARIM BASMA v. WEEKES AND OTHERS.

[PRIVY COUNCIL (Lord Simonds, Lord MacDermott, Lord Reid, Sir John Beaumont and Sir Lionel Leach), March 23, 27, May 3, 1950.]

Sale of Land—Memorandum of contract—Parties—Agent of purchaser contracting in own name—Knowledge of agency by vendor—Right of purchaser to maintain action for specific performance—Vendors tenants in common—One vendor having no power to convey interest—Right of purchaser to order against other vendors in respect of their shares.

By an agreement, dated Nov. 29, 1946, the first three respondents agreed to sell two houses in Freetown, Sierra Leone, of which they were tenants in common, to W., who was acting, with the knowledge of the respondents, as agent for the appellant, but the agreement contained no reference to the appellant or to the fact that W. was purchasing as an agent. On Dec. 2, 1946, the first three respondents, with the concurrence of the first respondent's husband, conveyed the property to the fourth respondent, who already had notice of the agreement of Nov. 29. In an action by the appellant for specific performance of the agreement of Nov. 29, the first three respondents contended inter alia (a) that the appellant had no right of action against them as the agreement was not a sufficient memorandum within the Statute of Frauds, 1677, s. 4, and (b) that, under the law of Sierra Leone, the first respondent, being a married woman, had no power to enter into a contract without the concurrence of her husband, and, therefore, as the contract could not be performed in its entirety, there could be no order for specific performance against the other respondents.

HELD: (i) an agent, who contracted in his own name, did not cease to be contractually bound because it was proved that the other party knew, when the contract was made, that he was acting as agent, and the agreement which was made in his name did not cease, in that event, to contain the names of the contracting parties so as to satisfy the Statute of Frauds; the terms of the agreement of Nov. 29, 1946, were such that W. was contractually bound; and, therefore, the agreement satisfied s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds, and, as W. could have sued thereon, so could the appellant, as his principal.

Higgins v. Senior (1841) (11 L.J.Ex. 199) and Calder v. Dobell (1871) (L.R. 6 C.P. 486), applied.

Dictum of LUXMOORE, L.J., in Smith-Bird v. Blower ([1939] 2 All E.R. 407), disapproved.

(ii) although the first respondent had no power to convey her interest, there were no special circumstances which would make it wrong to grant specific performance of the contract in regard to the interests which belonged to the second and third respondents, and, therefore, the appellant was entitled to enforce the contract against the second and third respondents so as to require conveyance to him of their two one-third shares, with abatement of the purchase price in respect of the interest of the first respondent.

Horrocks v. Rigby (1878) (9 Ch.D. 180), applied.

Lumley v. Ravenscroft ([1895] 1 Q.B. 683), distinguished.

[AS TO SUFFICIENCY OF MEMORANDUM IN REGARD TO DESCRIPTION OF PARTIES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 7, pp. 118-120, paras. 166-169; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 12, pp. 146-148, Nos. 991-1014.]

Cases referred to:

(1) Smith-Bird v. Blower, [1939] 2 All E.R. 406; Digest Supp.

(2) Higgins v. Senior, (1841), 8 M. & W. 834; 11 L.J.Ex. 199; 151 E.R. 1278; 1 Digest 639, 2599.

(3) Jones v. Littledale, (1837), 6 Ad. & El. 486; 1 Nev. & P.K.B. 677; Will. Woll. & Dav. 240; 6 L.J.K.B. 169; 112 E.R. 186; 1 Digest 629, 2527.

(4) Magee v. Atkinson and Townley, (1837), 2 M. & W. 440; Murph. & H. 115; 6 L.J. Ex. 115; 150 E.R. 830; 1 Digest 628, 2526.

(5) Calder v. Dobell, (1871), L.R. 6 C.P. 486; 40 L.J.C.P. 224; 25 L.T. 129; 1 Digest 577, 2188.

(6) Lovesy v. Palmer, [1916] 2 Ch. 233; 85 L.J.Ch. 481; 114 L.T. 1033; 12 Digest 144, 984.

(7) Filby v. Hounsell, [1896] 2 Ch. 737; 65 L.J.Ch. 852; 75 L.T. 270; 12 Digest 144, 983.

(8) Rossiter v. Miller, (1878), 3 App. Cas 1124; 48 L.J.Ch. 10; 39 L.T. 173; 42 J.P. 804; 12 Digest 147, 1002.

(9) Jarrett v. Hunter, (1886), 34 Ch.D. 182; 56 L.J.Ch. 141; 55 L.T. 727; 51 J.P. 165; 12 Digest 146, 991.

(10) Horrocks v. Rigby, (1878), 9 Ch.D. 180; 47 L.J.Ch. 800; 38 L.T. 782; 42 Digest 579, 1452.

(11) A.-G. v. Day, (1749), 1 Ves. Sen. 218; 27 E.R. 992; 42 Digest 519, 833.

(12) Lumley v. Ravenscroft, [1895] 1 Q.B. 683; 64 L.J.Q.B. 441; 72 L.T. 382; 59 J.P. 277; 28 Digest 162, 199.

(13) Price v. Griffith, (1851), 1 Do. G.M. & G. 80; 21 L.J.Ch. 78; 18 L.T.O.S. 190; 42 E.R. 482; 42 Digest 453, 236.

(14) Thomas v. Dering, (1837), 1 Keen 729; 6 L.J.Ch. 267; 48 E.R. 488; 42 Digest 471, 395.

(15) Hexter v. Pearce, [1900] 1 Ch. 341; 69 L.J.Ch. 146; 82 L.T. 109; 42 Digest 473, 403.

APPEAL by the plaintiff from an order, dated Apr. 8, 1948, of the West African Court of Appeal (LUCIE-SMITH, C.J., BEOKU-BETTES, J., and KINGSLEY, J., Sierra Leone), setting aside an order, dated May 24, 1947, of WRIGHT, J., in the Supreme Court of Sierra Leone, in an action for specific performance of an agreement, dated Nov. 29, 1946, for the sale of property of which the first three defendants were tenants in common, the property having been conveyed by them to the fourth defendant on Dec. 2, 1946. The first three defendants contended inter alia (a) that the agreement was not a sufficient memorandum within the Statute of Frauds, 1677, s. 4, to enable the plaintiff to sue on the contract, and (b) that the contract could not be performed in its entirety as, under the Law of Sierra Leone, the first defendant, being a married woman, was unable to convey her share without the concurrence of her husband, and, therefore, there could be no order for specific performance against the other defendants. The learned judge found on the oral evidence that there was sufficient proof of a contract with the plaintiff, and held that the plaintiff was entitled to specific performance of the agreement to the extent of the interests of the second and third defendants, with an abatement of one-third of the purchase price in respect of the interest of the first defendant. The second, third and fourth defendants appealed, and the West African Court of Appeal held that the first three defendants knew before entering into the agreement that the purchaser named in the agreement was acting as agent for the plaintiff, and that, as the agreement failed to identify the plaintiff in any way, it was not a sufficient memorandum within the Statute of Frauds, and they allowed the appeal. The facts appear in the judgment of the Board delivered by LORD REID.

R. O. Wilberforce for the appellant.

Patrick O'Connor for the respondents.

The Board took time for consideration.

May 3. The following judgment of the Board was delivered by LORD REID: This is an appeal from a judgment of the West African Court of Appeal, dated Apr. 8, 1948, which set aside a judgment of WRIGHT, J., in the Supreme Court of Sierra Leone, dated May 24, 1947. The appellant, who was plaintiff in the action, alleged that by an agreement, dated Nov. 29, 1946, the first, second and third respondents agreed to sell to him two houses in Freetown for £1,900 and that thereupon the sum of £633 6s. 8d. was paid to each of these respondents in full satisfaction of the purchase price. The appellant further alleged that by deed of conveyance, dated Dec. 2, 1946, these respondents purported to convey the two houses to the fourth respondent. The appellant's claim was to have specific performance of his agreement with the first three respondents. The defence was a denial of this agreement. At the opening of the trial the respondents were allowed without objection to amend their defence by adding the words:

"If at all there was such an agreement, which is not admitted, the alleged agreement does not comply with the requirements of the Statute of Frauds."

Evidence was then led and the appellant's case closed. At that stage counsel for the respondents, after having made an unsuccessful submission that there was no evidence of the alleged agreement, sought to amend the defence further by adding: "The defendant Gladys Muriel Weekes and the defendant Ettie Spaine are married women." Objection was taken, but the amendment was allowed and the respondents' evidence was then led.

The appellant's case was based on a document in the following terms:

"No. 2 and 2A, Kissy Street, Freetown. We, the undersigned, the owners of the above premises hereby agree that we have to-day sold the above premises Nos. 2 and 2A, Kissy Street, Freetown, to Mr. C. B. Rogers Wright, of 27, Liverpool Street, Freetown, at the price of £1,900, which he has completely paid in three separate sums of £633 6s. 8d. to each of us. We also hereby agree that we will execute the deed of conveyance to the said premises whenever it is prepared and that in the meantime Mr. Wright shall be in possession of the said premises as from the date hereof. Dated Nov. 29, 1946. (Sgd.) Gladys Weekes, Henrietta Spaine, John Kabia Williams."

Their Lordships will refer to this document as the agreement of Nov. 29.

- A The first three respondents did not deny that they had signed this document. They relied on three different defences: (i) that the property had already been sold by them to the fourth respondent before Nov. 29; (ii) that the agreement of Nov. 29 was not a sufficient memorandum to enable the appellant to sue on the contract; and (iii) that the first respondent, Mrs. Weekes, had no power to enter into the contract, and that, as the contract could, therefore, not be performed in its entirety, there could be no order for specific performance against the other respondents. The first of these defences is not now maintained. On this matter WRIGHT, J., did not accept the respondents' evidence. He held that the agreement of Nov. 29 had been made and signed before the first three respondents agreed to sell the property to the fourth respondent and that, when this agreement was made, the fourth respondent had notice of the earlier agreement to sell to the appellant. These findings have not been challenged. With regard to the second defence, it appears from the judgment of WRIGHT, J., that it was argued for the respondents that the only agreement proved was an agreement between Mr. Wright and the first three respondents. WRIGHT, J., rejected this argument, holding that oral evidence had sufficiently proved that Mr. Wright was acting as agent for the appellant and that there was, therefore, sufficient proof of a contract with the appellant. The third defence was founded on the fact that before 1932 the law of Sierra Leone with regard to the capacity of a married woman was the same as the law was in England before the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, and that the Imperial Statutes (Law of Property) Adoption Ordinance, 1932 (No. 44 of 1932), preserved any right which a husband had acquired before that date. WRIGHT, J., found himself unable to deal with this defence because the evidence was insufficient and he, therefore, allowed further evidence to be called. In fact, no further evidence was called. It is not clear what further submissions were made by the parties at that stage, but in his reasons for his final judgment WRIGHT, J., said:
- D
- E
- F

"Counsel for the plaintiff having agreed to accept judgment for specific performance, the court, therefore, declares that the plaintiff is entitled to specific performance of the agreement, dated Nov. 29, 1946, mentioned in the pleadings, to the extent of the interests of Mrs. Spaine and John Williams with an abatement of one-third of the purchase price in respect of the interest of Mrs. Weekes."

- The argument before their Lordships proceeded on the footing that the respondents, Mrs. Weekes, Mrs. Spaine and John Williams, were tenants in common of the property in question, that Mrs. Weekes, who was married in 1931, had no power to enter into the agreement of Nov. 29, but that Mrs. Spaine, who was not married until 1944, was under no such disability. It was admitted that the sums paid to these three respondents by the appellant had been repaid to him and that, if the appellant is to have specific performance of the agreement to the extent of the interests of Mrs. Spaine and John Williams, he must pay the sum of £1,266 13s. 4d. It was not disputed that this sum should in that event be paid to the fourth respondent who has taken a conveyance of the property from the first three respondents with the concurrence of Mrs. Weekes' husband, and has paid to them the price of the property. The second, third and fourth respondents appealed to the West African Court of Appeal. That court allowed the appeal on the ground that the agreement of Nov. 29, was not a sufficient memorandum within the Statute of Frauds, 1677, s. 4. Against that decision the present appeal is taken.
- G
- H

The agreement of Nov. 29 apparently satisfies the requirements of the Statute of Frauds. It names the vendors and the purchaser, it specifies the subjects sold and the price, and it is signed by the vendors, the parties to be charged. Further, it states that Mr. Wright, who is named as the purchaser, has paid the price and is entitled to immediate possession. Mr. Wright is a solicitor and, admittedly, it was proved by oral evidence that he was acting in this matter as agent for the appellant. There is, however, nothing in the document to suggest that Mr. Wright was acting otherwise than as principal. The first question in this case is whether it is relevant to inquire whether the vendors, when they made the agreement, knew that Mr. Wright was acting as agent for the appellant, and whether, if such knowledge is proved, the fact that the agreement does not identify the appellant as purchaser makes it insufficient to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. WRIGHT, J., did not deal with this question—probably the point was not taken before him—but the West African Court of Appeal held that the vendors were aware that Mr. Wright was purchasing as agent for the appellant. There is evidence to support this finding and their Lordships will assume that it is correct. After so holding, the judgment of the Court of Appeal proceeds:

“It follows, therefore, that the memorandum to enable the respondent [now the appellant] to sue on it must have contained his name either as a principal or in some other way to identify him. As it clearly fails to do so, we hold that the document was not a sufficient memorandum within the Statute of Frauds.”

The authority on which the Court of Appeal rely is the judgment of LUXMOORE, L.J., in Smith-Bird v. Blower (1), and there is in that judgment a passage which is directly applicable to the present case. Before proceeding to examine that judgment, however, their Lordships must refer to certain earlier cases, the authority of which has never been doubted, but which do not appear to have been cited to LUXMOORE, L.J.

In Higgins v. Senior (2), there was an agreement in writing for the sale of goods above the value of £10, which purported on the face of it to be made by the defendant and was subscribed by him, but the defendant sought to avoid liability by proving that he made the agreement as agent for a third person and that this was known at the time to the plaintiff. It was held that this did not enable the defendant to escape liability. PARKE, B., in delivering the judgment of the court, stated the principle as follows (8 M. & W. 844):

“There is no doubt, that where such an agreement is made, it is competent to show that one or both of the contracting parties were agents for other persons, and acted as such agents in making the contract, so as to give the benefit of the contract on the one hand to, and charge with liability on the other, the unnamed principals: and this, whether the agreement be or be not required to be in writing by the Statute of Frauds: and this evidence in no way contradicts the written agreement. It does not deny that it is binding on those whom, on the face of it, it purports to bind; but shows that it also binds another, by reason that the act of the agent, in signing the agreement, in pursuance of his authority, is in law the act of the principal. But, on the other hand, to allow evidence to be given that the party who appears on the face of the instrument to be personally a contracting party, is not such, would be to allow parol evidence to contradict the written agreement; which cannot be done. And this view of the law accords with the decisions, not merely as to bills of exchange signed by a person, without stating his agency on the face of the bill; but as to other written contracts, namely, the cases of Jones v. Littledale (3), and Magee v. Atkinson (4). It is true that the case of Jones v. Littledale (3) might be supported on the ground that the agent really intended to contract as principal: but LORD DENMAN, in delivering the judgment of the court, lays down this as a general proposition [6 Ad. & El. 490], ‘that if the agent contracts in such a form as to make himself personally responsible, he cannot afterwards, whether his principal were or were not known at the time of the contract, relieve himself from that responsibility.' And this is also laid down in STORY ON AGENCY, s. 269."

- In Calder v. Dobell (5), Cherry, a broker, contracted in his own name to buy goods from the plaintiffs, having previously disclosed to them that he was acting as agent for the defendant. It was held unanimously by the Court of Common Pleas and in the Exchequer Chamber that the plaintiffs were entitled to sue the defendant on this contract. It was argued for the defendant that there is a distinction between the case where one party is not aware, when making the contract, that the other is acting as an agent and the case where he is aware of that fact but, nevertheless, the contract is made by the agent in his own name, and that the principal could be sued in the former case but not in the latter.
- This argument was rejected. It was held that in this respect there is no distinction between the two cases, and the authority of Higgins v. Senior (2) was fully recognised. KELLY, C.B., said (L.R. 6 C.P. 499):

- "The contract was made in the name of Cherry, the agent: but the case shows that it was made on behalf of a principal who was named at the time. I think the plaintiffs had a right to sue either the agent or the principal, at their election."

- The circumstances in Smith-Bird's case (1) were that the defendant wished to sell two houses, that a certain Mr. Brown, who had been authorised by the plaintiffs to buy the houses, was introduced to the defendant and after some negotiation agreed to buy the houses for £510, and that the document relied on as a memorandum of this agreement contained nothing to indicate that the plaintiffs were the purchasers or that Mr. Brown was acting otherwise than on his own behalf. LUXMOORE, L.J., having held that there was an oral contract to sell the houses, said ([1939] 2 All E.R. 407):

- "... the further question arises whether there is a sufficient memorandum of that contract to comply with the requirements of the statute. In this connection, it is necessary to determine whether the defendant was aware that Mr. Brown was acting as agent only, and not as principal, for, if the defendant knew that Mr. Brown was only an agent, the memorandum, in order to comply with the statutory requirements, must either contain the names of the plaintiffs as principals or otherwise identify them, whereas, if the defendant was not aware of the fact that Mr. Brown was acting as agent for anyone, but considered that Mr. Brown was contracting on his own behalf, the position is different, and the plaintiffs as undisclosed principals can rely on any sufficient memorandum in which Mr. Brown's name appears as principal, although there is no reference therein to the plaintiffs."

- The learned lord justice cited as authority for this proposition Lovesy v. Palmer (6) and Filby v. Hounsell (7).

- In Lovesy v. Palmer (6) the plaintiff claimed a declaration that there was a binding contract between the defendants and himself with regard to the lease of a theatre. One question was whether there was any memorandum of the alleged agreement sufficient to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. The facts were complicated and a number of documents were alleged to form together such a memorandum.
- In these documents the plaintiff's solicitor was named, but he only purported to contract on behalf of unnamed "clients." YOUNGER, J., held ([1916] 2 Ch. 242) that at no time could this solicitor have sued or been sued on the contract. There was no reference in the documents to the plaintiff as a contracting party, and, therefore, it was impossible to identify from the documents any person who could sue the defendants or be sued by them on the alleged contract, and YOUNGER, J., held, rightly in their Lordships' judgment, that there was no memorandum sufficient to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. It had been argued for the plaintiff that Filby v. Hounsell (7) had decided that it was enough that the solicitor purported to act on behalf of "clients" and that the "clients" were identified by parol evidence. With regard to this case YOUNGER, J., said ([1916] 2 Ch. 244:

"... if it was in fact decided in Filby v. Hounsell (7) that there could within the statute be a sufficient memorandum of an agreement where the principal was not named and the agent was not bound, then I do not think that the decision can stand with the other authorities, such as Rossiter v. Miller (8) and Jarrett v. Hunter (9), or with the statute as I read it. But I think, when one looks carefully at the case of Filby v. Hounsell (7), that ROMER, J., really gave the judgment he did because he assumed that the agent was liable on the contract. I cannot myself see for reasons I have given that the assumption was well founded, but if that was the basis of the learned judge's decision, then the case presents no further difficulty and is in entire harmony with all the authorities."

Their Lordships agree with this interpretation of Filby v. Hounsell (7) and they are unable to find either in that case, so interpreted, or in Lovesy v. Palmer (6) anything to justify the distinction stated in the passage quoted from the judgment in Smith-Bird v. Blower (1). Those cases decide that to satisfy the statute the agreement or memorandum must name or identify two parties who are contractually bound to each other. They do not decide that, where two such parties are named or identified, the statute ceases to be satisfied if it is proved that one of them was known by the other, when the contract was made, to be acting as agent for a third party. No doubt, that result would follow if it were the law that an agent who contracts in his own name is not contractually bound if the other party knew at the time that he was acting as agent. If that were so, the agreement or memorandum would, on proof of such knowledge, cease to contain the names of two contracting parties and would, therefore, cease to satisfy the statute. It is, however, clear from Higgins v. Senior (2) and Calder v. Dobell (5) that that is not the law. An agent who contracts in his own name does not cease to be contractually bound because it is proved that the other party knew, when the contract was made, that he was acting as agent. So the agreement which is made in his name does not cease in that event to contain the names of contracting parties and, therefore, does not cease to satisfy the statute. Their Lordships are satisfied that in the present case the terms of the agreement of Nov. 29 are such that Mr. Wright was contractually bound, and, therefore, the agreement satisfies the Statute of Frauds. Therefore, Mr. Wright could have sued on the agreement and, if he could sue, so can his principal, the appellant.

The other question in this appeal is whether the appellant is entitled to have specific performance of a part of his contract. He agreed to buy two houses which were owned by the first, second and third respondents as tenants in common. He cannot enforce this contract against the first respondent because she had no power to make the contract. Can he enforce it against the second and third respondents so as to require conveyance to him of the two one-third shares which belonged to these respondents? Cases have not infrequently arisen where a single vendor has been unable to give a good title to all that he has contracted to sell. The general rule in such a case has been stated by LORD ST. LEONARDS thus (SUGDEN ON VENDORS AND PURCHASERS, 14th ed., p. 317, and p. 316):

"... a purchaser generally, although not universally, may take what he can get, with compensation for what he cannot have ... In regard to the limits of the rule, that a purchaser may elect to take the part to which a title can be made at a proportionate price, it has not been determined whether under any circumstances of deterioration to the remaining property, the vendor could be exempted from the obligation of conveying that part to which a title could be made; but the proposition is untenable, that if there is a considerable part to which no title could be made, the vendor was therefore exempted from the necessity of conveying any part."

In the present case there are three vendors. One of them cannot convey her interest, but there is nothing to prevent the conveyance of the interests which belonged to the others. This type of case is less common, but one example is Horrocks v. Rigby (10), where two persons agreed to sell a public house and it was found on investigation that one of them had no interest in it, but that a moiety belonged to the other. In an action by the purchaser against the latter vendor for specific performance, FRY, J., said (9 Ch.D. 182):

"I think that where an agreement is entered into by A and B with C and it afterwards appears that B has no interest in the property, A may nevertheless be compelled to convey his interest to C. I should have come to that conclusion upon principle, for I do not see why a purchaser is to lose his right against a vendor who can complete, because from a circumstance of which the purchaser had no knowledge, he has no right against persons who cannot complete. But I am very much fortified in that conclusion by a passage in the judgment of LORD HARDWICKE in A.-G. v. Day (11)."

In this passage, which is quoted by FRY, J. (9 Ch.D. 182), LORD HARDWICKE, L.C., said (1 Ves. Sen. 224):

"On the other hand; if on the death of one of the tenants in common, who contracted for a sale of the estate, the purchaser brings a bill against the survivor, desiring to take a moiety of the estate only, the interest in the money being divided by the interest in the estate, I should think (though I give no absolute opinion as to that) in the case of a common person he might have a conveyance of a moiety from the survivor, although the contract cannot be executed against the heir of the other."

Their Lordships would have no hesitation in following these authorities but for the judgment of LINDLEY, L.J., in Lumley v. Ravenscroft (12). In that case the two defendants, who appear to have been tenants in common, had agreed through their agent to grant a lease of certain premises to the plaintiff. The plaintiff brought an action for specific performance or, alternatively, for damages, and applied for an injunction to restrain the defendants until after the trial of the action from leasing the premises to any other person. It appeared that one of the defendants was an infant. DAY, J., granted an injunction, but an appeal from this order was allowed. LINDLEY, L.J., in the leading judgment of the Court of Appeal, said ([1895] 1 Q.B. 684):

"Specific performance is out of the question. You cannot get specific performance against an infant; and upon the evidence before us no case is made out for specific performance against the other defendant either. This case is not within the exception as to misrepresentation or misconduct stated in Price v. Griffith (13) and Thomas v. Dering (14), but comes within the general rule that where a person is jointly interested in an estate with another person and purports to deal with the entirety specific performance will not be granted against him as to his share. The plaintiff's only remedy is by way of damages."

Neither Horrocks v. Rigby (10) nor A.-G. v. Day (11) was cited to the court. Indeed, Price v. Griffith (13) and Thomas v. Dering (14) appear to have been the only authorities cited in argument, the argument for the plaintiff, as reported, being very meagre. Both Price v. Griffith (13) and Thomas v. Dering (14) were cases of an unusual character. Price v. Griffith (13) was discussed and explained by FARWELL, J., in Hexter v. Pearce (15). In Price v. Griffith (13) two tenants in common were alleged to have agreed to grant a mineral lease. The plaintiff failed to prove any agreement at all with one of them and, as FARWELL, J., points out ([1900] 1 Ch. 345) in Hexter v. Pearce (15), the case was really decided on the ground that the agreement with the other was void for uncertainty. But KNIGHT BRUCE, L.J., said (1 De. G.M. & G. 84) with regard to the claim of the plaintiff to have specific performance against only one of the two tenants in common:

"If he [the tenant in common] intended to contract at all, he intended to contract for a lease of the whole colliery. Cases may be conceived where a person, who has contracted to convey more than it is in his power to convey, ought to be decreed to convey what he can, either with or without compensation to the vendee for such part of the subject-matter of the contract as the vendor is unable to convey. But a lease of an undivided moiety of a colliery is a very different thing from a lease of a whole colliery . . ."

That passage might be read as affording support for the general rule stated by LINDLEY, L.J., in Lumley v. Ravenscroft (12), but in Hexter v. Pearce (15) FARWELL, J., read it in a narrower sense. He said with regard to it ([1900] 1 Ch. 345):

"In a sense, with great deference to the lord justice, that is a truism; but the meaning, I think, is that in that case the intention of the lessor was to grant a lease of the entirety and nothing else. There would have been a certain hardship in compelling him to grant a lease of a moiety only when he did not intend it, having regard to the fact that it was a lease of mineral property. I think that is all the lord justice meant."

So interpreted, Price v. Griffith (13) is not an authority for any general rule. In Thomas v. Dering (14) there was only one vendor, and their Lordships do not think it helpful to examine the case closely, as they have found nothing in it to throw light on the position where there are more than one vendor and one of the vendors cannot complete the contract. Their Lordships have reached the conclusion that the weight which must otherwise be given to a judgment of LINDLEY, L.J., is in this case seriously diminished by the circumstances to which they have adverted, and that the decision in Lumley v. Ravenscroft (12) cannot be regarded as having impaired the authority of Horrocks v. Rigby (10) or of the opinion of LORD HARDWICKE in A.-G. v. Day (11). In the present case there appear to be no special circumstances which would make it wrong to grant specific performance, and their Lordships hold that the decision of WRIGHT, J., was correct in principle. It was not argued that the form of the order made by WRIGHT, J., should be altered in any way. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed and the order of WRIGHT, J., restored. The respondents, other than the respondent Mrs. Weekes, will pay the costs of this appeal and in the West African Court of Appeal.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Lawrence Jones & Co. (for the appellant); Cree, Godfrey & Wood (for the respondents).

[Reported by H. Mc.L. MORRISON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re CHAPLIN (deceased). ROYAL BANK OF SCOTLAND
v. CHAPLIN AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Vaisey, J.), May 11, 1950.]

Will—"Personal chattels as defined by Administration of Estates Act, 1925"—
"Article of personal use"—Motor yacht, bought and used entirely for pleasure cruises—Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (c. 23), s. 55 (1) (x).

By his will, made on Nov. 25, 1947, the testator, who died on Sept. 12, 1949, gave "all the residue of my personal chattels as defined by Administration of Estates Act, 1925," to his wife absolutely. In August, 1948, the testator bought a sixty-foot motor yacht, which he used entirely for pleasure cruises.

HELD: the yacht was an "article of personal use," within the definition of "personal chattels" in s. 55 (1) (x) of the Act of 1925, and, therefore, passed to the testator's wife under the specific bequest.

[FOR THE ADMINISTRATION OF ESTATES ACT, 1925, s. 55 (1) (x), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 9, p. 762.]

Cases referred to:

(1) Palmer's Shipbuilding and Iron Co. v. Chaytor, (1869), L.R. 4 Q.B. 209; 10 B. & S. 177; 38 L.J.M.C. 63; 19 L.T. 638; 33 J.P. 327; 24 Digest 900, 21.

(2) Re White, [1916] 1 Ch. 172; 85 L.J.Ch. 368; 114 L.T. 353; 44 Digest 714, 5625.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine whether, on the true construction of the testator's will, a gift to his widow of the residue of his "personal chattels as defined by Administration of Estates Act, 1925," included a sixty-foot motor yacht, which was bought and used by the testator entirely for pleasure cruises.

E. G. Wright for the executors.

Droop for the widow.

Teague for the other beneficiaries.

VAISEY, J.: The testator, the second Viscount Chaplin, made his will on Nov. 25, 1947, and died on Sept. 12, 1949. The question which I have to decide arises under cl. 4 of the will, which is in the following terms:

"I make the following specific bequests free of duty: (a) all my family pictures and portraits and all my furniture to my trustees to hold the same on trust for my wife for life and after her death on trust for my son Anthony Freskin Charles Hamby Chaplin absolutely (b) all the residue of my personal chattels as defined by Administration of Estates Act, 1925, to my wife absolutely."

The will contains a residuary bequest under which the testator's widow is tenant for life and the other defendants are interested in remainder after her death. After the date of the will, i.e., in or about August, 1948, the testator bought a motor yacht, the Mount Robson, a sixty-foot Viking craft, for which he paid £12,500. He bought it, and used it, entirely for pleasure cruises. He had a paid crew and entertained on the yacht members of his family and, no doubt, his friends. The question is whether the vessel is within the definition of "personal chattels," as defined by the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, s. 55 (1) (x), whereby:

"'Personal chattels' mean carriages, horses ... (not used for business purposes), motor cars and accessories (not used for business purposes), garden effects, domestic animals, plate ... linen, china ... articles of household or personal use or ornament ..."

Is this small vessel "an article of personal use" within the meaning of s. 55 (1) (x)? That is a curious way of describing it, but in such an "omnium gatherum" it would not be surprising if it were included. The enumeration of specific articles in the definition is neither happy nor clear, but the testator has incorporated the definition in his will, and it seems to me a sufficient description to include the vessel as an article of personal use.

The authorities are not of much assistance. In Palmer's Shipbuilding and Iron Co. v. Chaytor (1), which was a prosecution under the Factory Acts, COCKBURN, C.J., said (L.R. 4 Q.B. 212) that in a section defining "manufacturing process" by reference to "the making any article or part of an article" [the Factory Acts Extension Act, 1867, s. 3], "article" could not be meant to apply to a ship, and, therefore, he would hesitate very much to hold that "a boy was employed in a 'factory' merely because he was employed in some department of shipbuilding," but he went on to hold that an iron plate forming part of a ship was an "article of metal," within the meaning of the section, and the boy was, therefore, employed in a factory, within the definition of "factory" in the section. That, however, was a case under the criminal law, to which different considerations apply. In Re White (2), YOUNGER, J., held that a motor car did not pass under a gift of "carriages," but passed under a gift of "furniture and all other articles of personal, domestic, or household use." If a motor car could pass under those words in 1916, I do not see why, in 1950, a small motor yacht should not pass under the words "articles of household or personal use." Therefore, although the matter is not as clear as it might be, I shall declare that on the true construction of the will the motor yacht, the Mount Robson, passed under the specific bequest, contained in cl. 4 (b) of the will, of the residue of the testator's "personal chattles as defined by Administration of Estates Act, 1925."

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Taylor and Humbert (for all parties).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

BURROWS v. HALL.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Morris, JJ.), May 11, 19, 1950.]

Street Traffic—Insurance against third-party risks—Driving uninsured motor vehicle—Disqualification—Power to limit disqualification to driving of vehicle in relation to which offence committed—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 6 (1), s. 35 (2).

A lorry driver was convicted of having used his private motor car on a road, there not being in force in relation to such user a policy of insurance or security against third-party risks, contrary to the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 35 (1), and was disqualified for holding or obtaining a driving licence for twelve months. On appeal to quarter sessions the recorder, under s. 6 (1) of the Act, limited the disqualification to the driving of a vehicle of the same class or description as that in relation to which the offence was committed, viz., a private motor vehicle, in order not to prevent the lorry driver from following his occupation.

HELD: the recorder was entitled so to limit the disqualification under s. 6 (1) which applied to disqualifications under the Act generally (except under Part IV).

[FOR THE ROAD TRAFFIC ACT, 1930, s. 6 (1) and s. 35 (2), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 23, pp. 614, 615, 636.]

CASE STATED by the recorder of Rotherham.

The respondent, who had been a motor lorry driver for eighteen years, had been convicted by Rotherham justices of having used an uninsured motor car on a road contrary to the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 35 (1). He was fined £5 and disqualified for holding or obtaining a driving licence for twelve months. On an appeal by him to quarter sessions, the recorder held that there were no special reasons to justify revoking the disqualification, but, having regard to the fact that the uninsured car had no relationship to the goods vehicle which the respondent drove for a living, he ordered that the disqualification be limited to "the driving of a motor vehicle of the same class or description as the vehicle in relation to which the offence was committed" under the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 6 (1). The appellant, the chief constable, appealed.

A. B. Boyle for the appellant.

The respondent did not appear.

Cur. adv. vult.

May. 19. LORD GODDARD, C.J., read the following judgment: This is a Case stated by the recorder of Rotherham arising out of an appeal by the respondent, Richard James Burrows, who was convicted by a court of summary jurisdiction of using an uninsured motor car on a road, contrary to the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 35 (1). The respondent was fined £5, and was disqualified for holding or obtaining a driving licence for a period of twelve months. It was in substance against the disqualification that the appeal was brought, and on the hearing of the appeal it was not contended that special reasons existed which would entitle the justices or quarter sessions to refrain from imposing disqualification. The whole point of the case turned on whether the recorder had power to limit the disqualification to the driving of a motor vehicle of the same class or description as the vehicle in relation to which the offence was committed.

The respondent is a lorry driver by occupation, but he was also the owner of a small private car, and it was in respect of that car that the prosecution was brought. The recorder held that, although the court was bound to impose disqualification under s. 35, he had power under s. 6 of the Act to limit the disqualification to the driving of a private motor vehicle, and that would not prevent the respondent from following his occupation as a lorry driver. The appellant, the chief constable, contended that there was no room for applying s. 6 where the disqualification had to be imposed under s. 35, and it was at his instance that this Case was stated.

Section 35 (2) obliges a court, in the absence of special reasons, to impose the penalty of disqualification for a period of twelve months, and goes on to say:

"A person disqualified by virtue of a conviction under this section or of an order made thereunder for holding or obtaining a licence shall, for the purposes of Part I of this Act, be deemed to be disqualified by virtue of a conviction under the provisions of that Part."

Turning to Part I of the Act, one finds that it deals, first, with the classification of motor vehicles; secondly, with the licensing of drivers, including provisions as to disqualification and endorsement of licences; and, thirdly, it contains provisions as to driving and offences in connection therewith. Section 35 is contained in Part II of the Act. The provisions of Part I appear to the court to deal with disqualification and endorsement generally, and also with certain offences, such as reckless and careless driving, for which disqualification in some cases must, or in others may, be imposed, and there are other offences for which the endorsement of a licence must be imposed, and in which disqualification need not, but may, follow. The important section is s. 6 which provides:

"(1) Any court before which a person is convicted of any criminal offence in connection with the driving of a motor vehicle (not being an offence under Part IV of this Act)—(a) may in any case, except where otherwise expressly provided by this Part of this Act, and shall where so required by this Part of this Act, order him to be disqualified for holding or obtaining a licence for such period as the court thinks fit; and (b) may in any case, and shall where a person is by virtue of a conviction disqualified for holding or obtaining a licence, or where an order so disqualifying any person is made or where so required by this Part of this Act, order that particulars of the conviction and of any disqualification to which the convicted person has become subject shall be endorsed on any licence held by the offender: Provided that, if the court thinks fit, any disqualification imposed under this section may be limited to the driving of a motor vehicle of the same class or description as the vehicle in relation to which the offence was committed."

A

Sub-section (2) gives a right of appeal against disqualification. Section 7 contains other provisions as to disqualification and suspension, and enables a disqualified person to apply to the court at any time after the expiration of six months from the date of the conviction to remove any remaining period of disqualification. It also makes it a specific offence for a disqualified person to drive during the period of disqualification. There is no doubt, therefore, that if a person is convicted, say for the dangerous driving of a private motor vehicle, the disqualification can be limited to that class of motor car, and the court need not disqualify him from driving a lorry, that is to say, a commercial vehicle.

B

C

By s. 35 (2), which is in Part II, it is provided:

"... a person disqualified by virtue of a conviction under this section or of an order made thereunder for holding or obtaining a licence shall, for the purposes of Part I of this Act, be deemed to be disqualified by virtue of a conviction under the provisions of that Part."

D

This seems to us to make the provisions of Part I dealing with disqualification generally applicable to disqualification imposed under s. 35. It is a criminal offence in connection with the driving of a motor vehicle, and although this particular offence is included in Part II of the Act, which is that Part which deals with the compulsory insurance of motor vehicles, we think it is quite clear that the legislature intended that a disqualification for an offence against that Part of the Act should be treated in all respects in the same way as disqualification imposed for offences against Part I. For these reasons, we are of opinion that the recorder was right in the view that he took and that he could limit the disqualification to the driving of a private motor vehicle only. Having that power, it cannot be doubted that this was a very proper case in which to exercise it. The appeal is dismissed.

E

F

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Hosking & Berkeley, agents for J. P. Crehan, Rotherham (for the appellant prosecutor).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re S. (An Infant).

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Roxburgh, J.), May 9, 23, 1950.]

Infant—Application to make ward of court—Need for infant to be made respondent to originating summons—Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949 (c. 100), s. 9.

A

An infant should not be made a respondent to an originating summons for an order making the infant a ward of court under the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949, s. 9, unless the master or a judge so directs.

B

Case referred to:

(1) Brown v. Collins, (1883), 25 Ch.D. 56; 53 L.J.Ch. 368; 49 L.T. 329; 28 Digest 335, 2017.

PROCEDURE SUMMONS to determine whether the infant was a necessary party to proceedings by the father to have the infant constituted a ward of court under the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949, s. 9.

C

R. L. Edwards for the applicant, the father.

F. B. Alcock for the respondent, the mother.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 23. ROXBURGH, J., read the following judgment. This is an application for an order that an infant be made a ward of court under the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949, s. 9. The infant might, of course, have herself applied by her next friend for such an order, but this is an application by her father, to which her mother has been made respondent. The question is whether the infant is also a necessary party.

D

The Act itself does not supply the answer. At first sight it might seem strange to make an order about a person who is not a party to the proceedings. On the other hand, the infant is generally very young and the appointment of a guardian ad litem and service on him or her involves expense which usually results in no corresponding benefit. The court would, of course, not make the order if in doubt whether it was for the infant's benefit, and it has indisputable jurisdiction to order the infant to be made a respondent if it desires to do so. For example, the infant might be approaching full age, or the parties might be so wrapped up in matrimonial disputes that they cared nothing for the infant. The court has an unfettered discretion, but I propose to express the view, after consultation with my brethren of the Chancery Division, that an infant should not be made a respondent to an originating summons under the Act unless the master or a judge so directs, and I give no such direction in the present case.

E

F

Order accordingly. Costs to be costs in the cause.

G

Solicitors: Warren, Murton & Co. (for the applicant); Tuck & Mann, agents for Wallace Robinson & Morgan, Birmingham (for the respondent).

[Reported by H. Mc.L. MORRISON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re STERN. STERN v. STERN.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Romer, J.), May 5, 12, 1950.]

Infant—Maintenance—Justices' order enforcing previous maintenance order—'Right of appeal to High Court—Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925 (c. 45), s. 7 (3).

On Nov. 30, 1945, a court of summary jurisdiction made an order under the Guardianship of Infants Acts, 1886 and 1925, by consent of the parties, under which the custody of an infant was ordered to be given to the mother and the father was ordered to pay £1 a week for its maintenance. The father fell into arrears with the payments; on Feb. 25, 1950, the mother issued a summons against him in respect of them; and on Mar. 18, 1950, the court of summary jurisdiction ordered the father to pay the arrears, which then amounted to £128, within six months. The father appealed against the order of Mar. 18, 1950.

HELD: the orders against which, under the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925, s. 7 (3), an appeal lay to the High Court were orders made by a court of summary jurisdiction under the express provisions of the Guardianship of Infants Acts, 1886 and 1925; the order under appeal was not such an order, but was made under the power conferred by the Children Act, 1948, s. 53, on a court of summary jurisdiction to enforce compliance with an order previously made by that court in such a case as the present; and, therefore, the court had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal.

Re Queskey ([1946] 1 All E.R. 717), Ruther v. Ruther ([1903] 2 K.B. 270), and Griffiths v. Griffiths (1909) 25 T.L.R. 544, applied.

[AS TO APPEALS TO HIGH COURT FROM COURTS OF SUMMARY JURISDICTION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 21, pp. 722-726, paras. 1251-1256; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 33, pp. 407-409, Nos. 1169-1172, 1183-1185.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Queskey, [1946] 1 All E.R. 717; [1946] Ch. 250; [1947] L.J.R. 182; 175 L.T. 107; 110 J.P. 272; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Ruther v. Ruther, [1903] 2 K.B. 270; 72 L.J.K.B. 826; 67 J.P. 359; 27 Digest 566, 6250.
- (3) Griffiths v. Griffiths, (1909), 25 T.L.R. 544; 73 J.P. 391; 27 Digest 569, 6274.

APPEAL by the father from an order of the Carmarthen justices, dated Mar. 18, 1950, ordering him to pay to the mother £128, being arrears of a weekly payment which he had been ordered by the justices on Nov. 30, 1945, to make to the mother in respect of the maintenance of their infant child.

H. T. Evans for the father.

Edmund Davies, K.C., and J. Verdi Jenkins for the mother.

ROMER, J.: This is an appeal by the father of a certain infant against an order made by justices at Carmarthen on Mar. 18, 1950, under which he was ordered to pay to the respondent, the mother of the infant, a sum of £128 odd, being arrears of maintenance which the father was liable to pay for the benefit of the infant under an order made on Nov. 30, 1945. I am told that the order of Nov. 30, 1945, which was made under the Guardianship of Infants Acts, 1886 and 1925, was a consent order, by which the custody of the child was given to the mother and the father was ordered to pay the sum of £1 a week for the maintenance of the infant in the manner therein directed. The father fell into arrears in respect of those weekly payments, and, accordingly, on Feb. 25, 1950, the mother issued a summons against the father complaining of those arrears. When the matter came before the justices, they went into certain evidence which was called before them, and eventually they made the order from which this appeal has been brought. That order recites the mother's complaint, adjudges that the complaint is true, and orders that the father do pay to the mother the amount of the arrears within six months of the date of the order. Then it is provided that the order shall not be enforced until after the expiration of fourteen days from the date thereof.

When this appeal was opened it suggested itself to me that this court had no jurisdiction to entertain an appeal from an order made by justices simply enforcing an order previously made by them under the Guardianship of Infants Acts for the maintenance of an infant, and I asked that the matter should be further looked into. That has been done, and it has been argued before me today. Counsel for the father has contended that this court has jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. It is, of course, clear that litigants have no inherent rights of appeal, and unless a right of appeal is expressly conferred prima facie no appeal will lie. While accepting that as a true proposition, counsel says that the father's right to appeal is a statutory right conferred by the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925, s. 7 (3), which provides:

"Where on an application to a court of summary jurisdiction under the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886, as amended by this Act, the court makes or refuses to make an order, an appeal shall, in accordance with rules of court, lie to the High Court."

It appears to me to be relevant to inquire what orders are authorised by the Guardianship of Infants Acts, 1886 and 1925. Under s. 5 of the Act of 1886 it is provided that the court may make orders as to the custody of infants and the right of access thereto of either parent on the application of the infant's mother ". . . and may alter, vary, or discharge such order . . ."

Under s. 6, the court has power to remove guardians, and under s. 7 it may in certain events declare that the parent is a person unfit to have the custody of the children of the marriage. Those are the orders which what is left of the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886, expressly authorises the court to make, and s. 9, which defines what is meant by "the court," does not include courts of summary jurisdiction. Section 10 provides:

"In England and Ireland an appeal shall lie to the High Court from any order made by a county court under this Act; and, subject to any rules of court made after the passing of this Act, any such appeal shall be heard by a judge of the Chancery Division . . ."

It would appear to me that the words "an appeal shall lie . . . from any order made by a county court under this Act" refer to any of the orders to which I have referred, including an order under s. 5 altering, varying or discharging a previous order.

By the Act of 1925 certain further powers are conferred on the courts, and s. 7 of the Act extends the definition of "court" by providing:

"(1) For the purposes of the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886, as amended by this Act, the expression 'the court' shall include a court of summary jurisdiction."

That sub-section then qualifies the powers of that court in manner therein indicated. Section 3 of the Act of 1925 provides:

"(1) The power of the court under s. 5 of the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886, to make an order as to the custody of an infant and the right of access thereto may be exercised notwithstanding that the mother of the infant is then residing with the father of the infant. (2) Where the court under the said section as so amended makes an order giving the custody of the infant to the mother, then, whether or not the mother is then residing with the father, the court may further order that the father shall pay to the mother towards the maintenance of the infant such weekly or other periodical sum as the court, having regard to the means of the father, may think reasonable . . . (4) Any order so made may, on the application either of the father or the mother of the infant, be varied or discharged by a subsequent order."

The order of Nov. 30, 1945, was made under s. 3 (2). Section 4 empowers the court in certain cases to appoint a guardian on the death of the father or the mother of the infant, and s. 5 confers a power on the court to make orders with regard to testamentary guardians, including the power to order that the mother or father shall pay to the guardian certain sums towards the maintenance of the infant concerned. Section 6 empowers the court to make orders if disputes arise between joint guardians. Sub-section (3) of s. 7 I have already read. Sub-section (4) provides:

"An order of a court of summary jurisdiction for the payment of money under the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886, as amended by this Act, shall be enforceable in like manner as an order for the payment of a civil debt recoverable summarily."

That sub-section was repealed by the Children Act, 1948, s. 59 and sched. IV, and it was replaced by s. 53 of the latter Act, which provides:

"An order of a court of summary jurisdiction for the payment of money under the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886, whether made before or after the commencement of this Act, may be enforced, varied or revoked in like manner as an affiliation order, and the enactments relating to affiliation orders shall apply accordingly, with the necessary modifications."

Returning to the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925, s. 8 provides for the enforcement of orders for the payment of money, and by sub-s. (1) it enacts that persons who are ordered to make payments of money shall give notice of change of address and so on. Sub-section (2) provides:

"Where the court has made any such order [for the payment of money under the Guardianship of Infants Acts] the court shall, in addition to any other powers for enforcing compliance with the order, have power . . ."

and then it sets out that the power is, in effect, to attach, in proper cases, a pension or income of the person liable. Section 9 deals with the consents required to the marriage of infants.

It would appear to me that among the orders made by a court of summary jurisdiction from which an appeal would lie to this court by virtue of s. 7 (3) of the Act of 1925 would be a refusal by the court to vary or discharge a previous order when a proper application had been made to the court asking it so to do, because that is one of the matters in which the court of summary jurisdiction is expressly authorised to make an order under the provisions of this Act. The only question, however, which I have to decide at the moment is whether an order by the justices simply enforcing a previous order for maintenance is an order from which an appeal will lie under s. 7 (3). In my judgment, the answer is in the negative. It appears to me that the orders to which s. 7 (3) relates are orders made by a court of summary jurisdiction under the express provisions of the Act of 1886, as amended by the Act of 1925, that is to say, that it has to be established that the court was asked to make one of the orders which the court is expressly authorised to make under these Acts, and that the court made such an order, on the one hand, or refused to make such an order, on the other, and, provided that is established, then an appeal will lie to this court under the express right of appeal conferred by s. 7. In my view, s. 7 (3) does not extend to any orders other than those which I have attempted to define. It appears to me that that is the logical result of the whole framework of the Acts and also of the opening words of s. 7 (3), which are:

“Where on an application to a court of summary jurisdiction under the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886 . . .”

A The order under appeal was not made under or by virtue of the Guardianship of Infants Acts. It was made under the power which the court of summary jurisdiction had for enforcing compliance with its previous order. A court has an inherent jurisdiction to enforce the orders that it makes, but, apart from that, prior to 1948 the order of a court of summary jurisdiction for the payment of money was, by virtue of s. 7 (4), which was repealed, “enforceable in like manner as an order for the payment of a civil debt recoverable summarily.” In other words, the appropriate machinery up to 1948 was that to which the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, s. 35, relates. That was the position until the passing of the Children Act, 1948, when in its place was introduced the machinery applicable to affiliation orders.

B That is the position now, and that was the position when the order under appeal was made, and it seems to me that, whether the justices were acting under some inherent jurisdiction, or whether they were acting under s. 53 of the Act of 1948, or how otherwise they were acting in making this order, they certainly were not exercising any powers which were conferred on them by the C Guardianship of Infants Acts, but, on the contrary, they were exercising the powers the existence of which is recognised by the legislature in s. 8 (2), where it provides:

“Where the court has made any such order [to make payments] the court shall, in addition to any other powers for enforcing compliance with the order, have power . . .”

D to attach a pension or income. So, if I am right in thinking that s. 7 (3) only refers to orders made under the authority of the Guardianship of Infants Acts, then this order was not made under the authority of those Acts, but was made either under the inherent authority or under the Children Act, 1948, and, consequently, no appeal lies under s. 7 (3). It is not suggested that any other right of appeal exists.

E Those would have been the views at which I should have arrived had the matter been free from authority, but it is not wholly free from authority. The right of appeal under the Guardianship of Infants Acts was considered (although for another purpose) by VAISEY, J., in Re Queskey (1). That was an appeal to this court from a refusal by justices to give their authority to the marriage of the applicant. VAISEY, J., held that the application was made to the justices, F not under the Act of 1886, as amended by the Act of 1925, but under the Act of 1925 alone, and, accordingly, it was outside the scope of the appellate section, namely, s. 7. In the course of his judgment he said ([1946] All E.R. 718):

G “In the present case the application was made to the justices owing to the refusal of consent by the appellant’s parents. The only provision in the Act of 1925 which deals with appeals is s. 7 (3), which provides, ‘where on an application to a court of summary jurisdiction under [the Act of 1886], as amended by this Act, the court makes or refuses to make an order, an appeal shall . . . lie to the High Court.’ The difficulty in the appellant’s way is that that from which she seeks to appeal is the making or refusal of an order, not on an application under the Act of 1886 as amended by the H Act of 1925, but on an application under the Act of 1925 only. It seems to me plain that s. 7 (3) relates solely to those matters of guardianship and custody to which both the Acts extend.”

It is, I think, clear that the learned judge, when saying that “s. 7 (3) relates solely to those matters of guardianship and custody to which both the Acts extend,” did not mean strictly to confine himself to those matters without more, but was intending to include in them such ancillary matters as, for example, access or maintenance. Subject to that qualification, which, as I say, is implicit in what the learned judge said, I think that his view of the Act was that the right of appeal was so confined, and to that extent that supports the view which I have formed that it does not extend to an order made by the justices in the exercise of a jurisdiction which is not conferred by the Guardianship of Infants Acts themselves.

Counsel for the father very properly referred me to two cases, which were not under the Guardianship of Infants Acts, but which are, I think, of some assistance. The first was Ruther v. Ruther (2). The headnote there is:

A

B

C

D

E

F

G

H

"Where an order for a weekly payment by a husband to his wife is made under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, and the wife subsequently commits adultery, the husband is entitled under s. 7 of the Act, on proof thereof before a court of summary jurisdiction, to have the order discharged in spite of a finding by the court that he has been guilty of conduct conducing to the adultery; and he is not liable to make any further payments to his wife, although the order may not have been in terms discharged by the adjudication as to the wife's adultery. The decision of a court of summary jurisdiction upon an information or complaint by a married woman alleging that payments due to her from her husband under an order made under the Act of 1895 are in arrear, is not a matter in respect of which an appeal lies under s. 11 of that Act to the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division; but the court has power to state a Case for the opinion of the King's Bench Division upon a point of law arising on the information."

LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J., said that he was clearly of opinion that in the circumstances of that case an appeal by way of Case Stated lay to that Division of the High Court. Then he said ([1903] 2 K.B. 274):

"The Act of 1895 provided a new and amended procedure for making orders for the maintenance of wives, and by s. 9 it is enacted that the payment of any sum of money directed to be paid by an order under the Act may be enforced in the same manner as the payment of money is enforced under an order of affiliation."

He goes on to say what that procedure is, and then deals with the facts of the case, as he had indicated that the court would before hearing the preliminary objection to their jurisdiction. WILLS, J., said (ibid., 275):

"With regard to the preliminary objection the matter stands thus. Orders for payment made under the Act of 1895 are by s. 9 to be enforced in the same way as affiliation orders; and on looking at s. 4 of the Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1872, one sees what the procedure is. Therefore an order of committal for non-payment is not an order made under the Act of 1895, and is not one to which s. 11 of that Act applies. It stands on the same footing as an order of committal made in an ordinary affiliation case. That order is of course subject to the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1857, s. 2, and to the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, s. 33, which give justices power to state a Case after the determination of any information or complaint. These provisions are by s. 54 of the latter Act made specifically applicable to sums due on affiliation orders or on orders enforceable as affiliation orders. The magistrate therefore had jurisdiction to state this Case."

The topic was rather more fully discussed, perhaps, in the second case, Griffiths v. Griffiths (3). The headnote there is:

"An appeal does not lie to a Divisional Court of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division from an order merely enforcing the payment of arrears of maintenance due under a separation order made under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895."

The appeal was by a man against a ruling or decision of the metropolitan magistrate sitting at the Thames Police Court whereby he was ordered to pay his wife a certain sum representing eighty-three weeks' arrears of maintenance payable and due to her under an order dated Sept. 28, 1903, and made on the ground of his desertion. Counsel for the wife took the preliminary objection that no appeal lay to the Divisional Court against the magistrate's ruling. He developed that argument and referred to Ruther v. Ruther (2). In the course of the argument, BIGHAM, P., said (25 T.L.R. 544):

"But this is not an 'order' for payment at all—that was made in 1903.

What this woman is now asking for is that the order should be enforced by payment of the arrears."

BARGRAVE DEANE, J., asked the husband's counsel what he suggested the magistrate had said or done which was wrong, and the President said (ibid.):

"There has been no appeal against the original order, not even to vary it.

All you are now objecting to is that the magistrate has decided that if your client does not pay he must go to prison."

Then the President said he was not satisfied that they had jurisdiction to hear the case and asked what records had been drawn up. He was told (ibid., 545):

"No 'order,' but the entry in the court records is as follows:—'£59 5s. and £3 3s. costs d.d. three months'—namely, that failing payment of the amount of arrears and costs, and in default of distress, the husband should go to prison for three months."

The report continues (ibid.):

"The President, in the course of his judgment, said that in 1903 the wife obtained an order for maintenance on the ground of her husband's desertion. He paid for some considerable time—down to June, 1907—when he fell into arrears now amounting to £59 5s., representing eighty-three weeks. In these circumstances the wife applied to the magistrate to enforce payment, and the husband having appeared before the magistrate, and the wife stated her case, the magistrate made what (for want of a better expression) he (the learned President) would call an 'order,' directing payment of the arrears, or distress, or in default imprisonment in the terms of s. 4 of the Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1872, as provided for by s. 9 of the Act of 1895. That order the magistrate had jurisdiction to make, as the original order of 1903 had never been appealed against, nor had any attempt been made to vary or rescind it, and the order which it was now sought to appeal against was merely one enforcing payment of the sums due under the order of Sept. 28, 1903. This court was not, under s. 11 of the Act of 1895, in such circumstances the proper tribunal to appeal to, and the judgments of the Lord Chief Justice and of WILLS, J., in Ruther v. Ruther (2) ([1903] 2 K.B. 274, 275), were conclusive on that point, and that case was a distinct authority for the proposition that an appeal does not lie to the Divorce Divisional Court from an order merely enforcing payment of money."

and the court allowed the preliminary objection.

Counsel for the father says that those cases are distinguishable, because they deal with separate statutes and orders which the justices had made for committal under the Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1872, and also suggested that in Griffiths v. Griffiths (3), the President's views were to some extent coloured by the impression he had formed on the merits. It is true that neither of these cases arose out of the Guardianship of Infants Acts, but it appears to me that they afford considerable guidance as to the attitude which this court ought to adopt, especially having regard to the fact that the affiliation machinery has now been incorporated in the Guardianship of Infants Acts by the Children Act, 1948,

s. 53, for the purpose of enforcing orders which have been made for maintenance, and I think they bear out strongly the views which I have already formed and which I have attempted to express. Counsel for the father also says that there clearly ought to be a right of appeal from the order which the justices have made, and that, as matters relating to infants have always been assigned to this Division or to its predecessor, the Court of Chancery, this court is the proper court to hear such an appeal. As I say, there is no right of appeal unless it is expressly conferred by statutory authority, and I have already explained that, in my view, this appeal is not within the only statutory authority to which the father can point, namely, s. 7 (3) of the Act of 1925.

That is enough to conclude this case, and it is not necessary, I think, for me to express any further views as to what rights, if any, the present appellant may have, but I should point out that, on the assumption that he has no right of appeal to any other court from the order which the justices have made, it does not result in the hardship which is suggested, because he himself made an application to the justices to deal with the order of 1945 by varying or discharging it. In other words, he made an application to the justices asking them to exercise the statutory jurisdiction conferred by the Guardianship of Infants Acts on courts of summary jurisdiction by s. 3 (4) of the Act of 1925 and s. 5 of the Act of 1886, and as the court, although appealed to in that way to exercise that jurisdiction, refused to make an order, it appears to me, though I do not decide it because it is not before me, that this court would have power to maintain an appeal from such refusal under the provisions of s. 7 (3) of the Act of 1925. Accordingly, a man in the position of the father could make such an application at any time, and if it failed he could have the matter brought before this court for review. But what he cannot do, as I hold, is to ask this court to review, by way of appeal, an order made by the justices merely to enforce an order previously made for maintenance, an order enforcing it in the sense that it is an order compelling the man against whom the previous order has been made to comply with its terms. Accordingly, I hold that I have no jurisdiction to entertain this appeal and I dismiss it with costs.

Appeal dismissed with costs.
Solicitors: Lynch, Hall & Son (for the father); Helder, Roberts, Giles & Co., agents for W. H. Rogers & Rogers, Carmarthen (for the mother).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

YOUNG v. RANK AND OTHERS.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Devlin, J., with a City of London Special Jury), May 15, 16, 17, 18, 1950.]

Practice Trial by jury—Submission of no case to answer—Defendants not put to election whether to call evidence—Discretion of judge.

In an action for damages for breach of warranty, for wrongful dismissal, and for conspiracy, before a judge and a city of London special jury, counsel for the defendants submitted at the close of the plaintiff's case that on the issues of breach of warranty and conspiracy there was no evidence to go to the jury. This submission the judge acceded to without putting counsel to election whether he was, or was not, going to call evidence, and, consequently, no election was made.

HELD: in a jury action, as distinct from a trial before a judge alone, the judge had a discretion whether he would require counsel to elect either to stand on his submission or to call his evidence.

Dictum of the court in Alexander v. Rayson ([1936] 1 K.B. 178), followed.

Dicta of GODDARD, L.J., in Parry v. Aluminium Corpn., Ltd. (1940) (162 L.T. 237) and of LORD GREENE, M.R., in Laurie v. Raglan Building Co., Ltd. ([1941] 3 All E.R. 337), not followed.

Observations on the considerations which should be taken into account in the exercise of the discretion of the judge whether, on a submission of no case to answer, a ruling should be given at the close of the plaintiff's case or after taking the verdict of the jury.

[AS TO SUBMISSION OF NO CASE, see ANNUAL PRACTICE OF THE SUPREME COURT, 1949, Vol. 1, p. 658.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Parry v. Aluminium Corpn., Ltd., (1940), 162 L.T. 236; Digest Supp.
- (2) Marbe v. George Edwardes (Daly's Theatre), Ltd., [1928] 1 K.B. 269; 96 L.J.K.B. 980; 138 L.T. 51; 42 Digest 911, 71.
- (3) Alexander v. Rayson, [1936] 1 K.B. 169; 105 L.J.K.B. 148; 154 L.T. 205; Digest Supp.
- (4) Laurie v. Raglan Building Co., Ltd., [1941] 3 All E.R. 332; [1942] 1 K.B. 152; 111 L.J.K.B. 292; 166 L.T. 63; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) Turner (otherwise Robertson) v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures, Ltd., [1950] 1 All E.R. 449.

ACTION for damages for breach of warranty, wrongful dismissal, and conspiracy, brought by a former employee of a limited company against the chairman and managing director of the company and others.

At the close of the plaintiff's case counsel for the defendants submitted that on the issues of breach of warranty and conspiracy there was no evidence to go to the jury. The case is reported on the issue only whether in a jury action counsel, having made a submission of no case to answer, should be called on to elect to stand on the submission or to call his evidence before a ruling on the submission is given.

Fearnley-Whittingstall, K.C., Clive Burt and Ian Warren for the plaintiff.
Sir Walter Monckton, K.C., and T. G. Roche for the defendants.

DEVLIN, J.: In this case I have acceded to the submission made to me by counsel for the defendants that I should withdraw a large part of it from the consideration of the jury. Part of that submission, at any rate, was based on a contention that there was no evidence on certain aspects of the case fit to go to the jury. I did not, when counsel made that submission, put him to election whether he would or would not call any evidence, and, consequently, he made no election. He submitted to me, and I think he was right, that I had a discretion and was not obliged to put him to his election. But for a dictum of GODDARD, L.J., in Parry v. Aluminium Corpn., Ltd. (1) there would be no doubt as to the position on the authorities. Having regard to that dictum, however, I think it right to review the authorities shortly and state my reasons for the course I took.

In Marbe v. George Edwardes (Daly's Theatre), Ltd. (2) BANKES, L.J., said ([1928] 1 K.B. 277):

"But Mr. Neilson for the defendants contended that at the end of the plaintiff's case there was no evidence that the defendants in publishing the letter were actuated by malice; that it was for the judge to rule at that stage whether there was evidence to go to the jury, and that if he had done that the plaintiff must have failed. That argument has been addressed to the court on several occasions and it has been held, and I repeat now, that according to the present practice the judge has a discretion whether he will rule on the matter at the close of the plaintiff's case or whether he will defer ruling until the whole of the evidence has been called."

That practice appears to have been fully recognised in Alexander v. Rayson (3), which laid down the rule to be followed in cases which are tried by a judge alone—that the judge is bound to put counsel who makes the submission to his election. ROMER, L.J., delivering the judgment of the court, dealt with the point as follows ([1936] 1 K.B. 178):

“At the conclusion of the defendant’s evidence the plaintiff’s counsel submitted that there was no case to answer upon the two issues which at that stage had alone been presented to the court, that is to say, the issues of no consideration and of illegality. Where an action is being heard by a jury it is, of course, quite usual and often very convenient at the end of the case of the plaintiff, or of the party having the onus of proof, as the defendant had here, for the opposing party to ask for the ruling of the judge whether there is any case to go to the jury, who are the only judges of fact. It also seems to be not unusual in the King’s Bench Division to ask for a similar ruling in actions tried by a judge alone. We think, however, that this is highly inconvenient. For the judge in such cases is also the judge of fact, and we cannot think it right that the judge of fact should be asked to express any opinion on the evidence until the evidence is completed. Certainly no one would ever dream of asking a jury at the end of a plaintiff’s case to say what verdict they would be prepared to give if the defendant called no evidence, and we fail to see why a judge should be asked such a question in cases where he and not a jury is the judge that has to determine the facts.”

In Parry v. Aluminium Corpn., Ltd. (1) the Court of Appeal had to consider the same sort of point in relation to a case of negligence determined by a judge alone. Having set out the rule in the same terms in which it was set out by the Court of Appeal in Alexander v. Rayson (3), GODDARD, L.J., went on to say (162 L.T. 237):

“... in negligence cases the right course is for the judge to refuse to rule unless counsel says that he is going to call no evidence. HORRIDGE, J., used to say, if he was sitting with a jury: ‘Are you going to call any evidence; or are you going to let the case stay where it is?’ If counsel said: ‘I am not going to say whether I am going to call any evidence,’ then he would say: ‘You must call your evidence, and then I will rule whether or not, on the whole of the case, there is a case to go to the jury or not.’ If a judge was sitting without a jury, he does not have to say that, because he can say he will decide at the end of the case. I think that that is the proper course to take in these cases. I do not say that it is the right course in every kind of action, because in defamation cases, for instance, I believe there is authority for saying that, if it is submitted that there is no evidence of malice, the judge is bound to rule. Also in slander cases the judge must rule if the submission is made that the words are not actionable without proof of special damage and no special damage is alleged. But I think that the old practice, which I believe most judges adopted, is a sound practice, because it does prevent the chance of a defendant, unsuccessful in this court, asking that the case should go back for a new trial to have his evidence heard.”

The way in which GODDARD, L.J., stated the rule was apparently accepted by the Court of Appeal in Laurie v. Raglan Building Co., Ltd. (4). The leading judgment of the court was that of LORD GREENE, M.R., with which GODDARD and DU PARCQ, L.J.J., concurred. Again, it was a case where there was no jury, and in the course of his judgment the Master of the Rolls said ([1941] 3 All E.R. 337):

“That must be regarded as the proper practice to follow, and it is to be found very lucidly set out, if I may say so, in the judgment of GODDARD, L.J., in Parry v. Aluminium Corpn., Ltd. (1).”

I have given careful consideration to the dictum of GODDARD, L.J., which might seem to be in sufficiently wide terms to apply the rule to cases tried with a jury. He sets out certain exceptions—in defamation cases—and then he says that subject to such exceptions he thinks that the rule ought to apply. It was not a considered judgment, and I do not think that the learned lord justice can have been intending to overrule what had previously been held to be the practice, and one which had been fully recognised in Alexander v. Rayson (3). I come to the conclusion, therefore, that I have a discretion which I can properly exercise, and which I did exercise in the present case by not putting counsel for the defendants to his election.

In addition to the distinction drawn in Alexander v. Rayson (3) between cases tried by a judge alone and those tried by a jury, there is a further matter which I think is of some importance. In a case tried by a judge alone the Court of Appeal has a complete power of re-hearing, and if evidence for the defendant has not been taken and the court disagrees with the ruling of the trial judge, it is, in effect, prevented from exercising its power of re-hearing and has no alternative but to send the case back for re-trial, which will result in additional costs to the parties. In cases of trial by jury, the Court of Appeal has no power of re-hearing, and if the verdict of the jury is set aside for any reason, the court has no power except to send it back for re-trial. Accordingly, it appears to me that one of the advantages which flows from the practice on submission of no case in a trial before a judge alone does not arise in the case of a trial by jury.

It is, of course, always possible for the judge to postpone giving a ruling until he has taken the verdict of the jury, and that sometimes avoids the necessity of coming back for a new trial, but it seems to me that it would logically follow that, if a judge is not going to rule at the end of the plaintiff's case, there is no advantage in ruling at the end of all the evidence, for the reason that, if his ruling were held to be wrong, there would still have to be a new trial. The logical result which follows is that, if he wants to avoid expense, he must take the verdict of the jury, and there can be no question but that it lies in the discretion of the judge whether or not he will take the verdict of the jury and rule afterwards or whether he will rule first. That discretion was clearly recognised in Turner (otherwise Robertson) v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures, Ltd. (5), in which LORD PORTER pointed out ([1950] 1 All E.R. 453) some of the disadvantages which arise when the verdict of the jury is taken before the ruling is given.

Accordingly, I came to the conclusion that I had a discretion in this matter, and I exercised it in the way I have stated. The considerations which operated on my mind were these. One has to bear in mind—and it is always an anxious question for the trial judge to determine—that if his ruling is wrong it may result in additional expense to the parties. On the other hand, I think it is not irrelevant to bear in mind that to rule after taking the verdict of the jury is an illogical and sometimes unsatisfactory course, particularly when the questions involved are questions whether or not there is sufficient evidence to go to the jury. The whole reason why that question is retained in the hands of the judge as a matter of law is that a jury, not being trained by a lifetime of experience to weigh evidence, may easily be misled on matters of that sort. It seems to me it may be undesirable to leave a point of that sort to a jury, to sum up to them on the basis that there is some evidence to be considered on both sides (and the case cannot be summed up on any other basis), and then, when they have returned a verdict, to overrule it by holding that there was no such evidence. It is not a very satisfactory result for one party to feel that he has got the verdict of the jury, but that it is being overruled. I think also that a party who feels that no prima facie case has been made out against him ought, unless there is weighty consideration to the contrary, to be entitled to make that submission and have it dealt with, and not be obliged to submit himself or his witnesses to cross-examination in order that the plaintiff may, if he can, make out a case in that way. Overriding all those matters, there is always the question of costs to the parties, and, on balance, in the present case I came to the conclusion that in all probability—and it is a matter about which I must speculate—the costs would be less by taking the course I did rather than the alternative course.

I observed the number of persons against whom allegations are made in the statement of claim or who are suggested to have been concerned in overt acts of conspiracy. In the statement of claim there are three conspirators alleged and a number of other persons who obviously played some part, and it seemed to me that, if the defence were fully developed, it would have taken some considerable time. If I am right in my ruling, expense will have been saved, and if I am wrong, at any rate whoever conducts a re-trial will have the benefit of knowing exactly what the law on the matter is. It is always a question also whether the point is doubtful or whether it is reasonably clear, and I am clear in my mind that the submission of the defendants was right.

Solicitors: Warren & Warren (for the plaintiff); Richards, Butler & Co. (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. TAYLOR.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys, Stable, Cassels, Hallett, Morris and Parker, JJ.), May 22, 1950.]

Criminal Law—Bigamy—Defence—Absence for seven years—“Marrying a second time”—More than one bigamy—Availability of statutory defence in respect of third and subsequent bigamies—Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (c. 100), s. 57.

Criminal Law—Appeal—Power to overrule previous decisions of court—Court of Criminal Appeal—Stare decisis—Rule not applicable where liberty of subject concerned.

The appellant married his lawful wife in 1925, but he had not seen or heard from her since 1927 and did not know her to be living within that time. He contracted bigamous marriages in 1927 and 1942. In 1944 he was charged with bigamy in respect of the marriage in 1942, based on the belief that the 1927 marriage was lawful, and was acquitted when it was found that the 1927 marriage was bigamous. He was also acquitted in respect of the bigamy in 1927, as the prosecution could not prove that he knew his wife was alive when he contracted that marriage. In March, 1950, he was charged with committing further bigamies in 1946 and 1948, and being under the impression that the decision in R. v. Treanor (or McAvoy) ([1939] 1 All E.R. 330) prevented him from relying on the defence afforded by the proviso to s. 57 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, of seven years' absence and lack of knowledge that his wife was alive within that time, he pleaded Guilty and was sentenced on both charges. He appealed against sentence, and the court, on learning that he had not seen his wife for over twenty years and in 1946 and 1948 did not know that she was alive, gave him leave to appeal against conviction in order to consider whether the plea of seven years' absence was available to him despite the decision in Treanor's case.

HELD: (i) the words “marrying a second time” in the proviso to s. 57 related to the second or bigamous “marriage” in respect of which a defendant was charged, and it was immaterial that in the period between the lawful marriage and the bigamous ceremony he had gone through other bigamous ceremonies, and, therefore, the defence afforded by the proviso was open to the appellant.

R. v. Treanor (or McAvoy) ([1939] 1 All E.R. 330), overruled.

(ii) although in civil matters under the rule of stare decisis a court of appeal considered itself bound by its own decisions, the same rule did not apply in criminal appeals where the liberty of the subject was concerned, and, consequently, if, in the opinion of the full court, the law had been misapplied or misunderstood in an earlier case, the court would re-consider the matter.

[AS TO ABSENCE FOR SEVEN YEARS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 9, pp. 389, 390, para. 657; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 15, pp. 741-743, Nos. 8007-8019, and Digest Supp.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) R. v. Treanor (or McAvoy), [1939] 1 All E.R. 330; 160 L.T. 286; Digest Supp.
- (2) R. v. Lumley, (1869), 1 C.C.R. 196; 38 L.J.M.C. 86; 20 L.T. 454; 33 J.P. 597; 15 Digest 739, 7990.

APPEAL against conviction and sentence.

The appellant pleaded Guilty at the Central Criminal Court to two counts in an indictment charging him with bigamy. He had not heard from his wife for over twenty years and did not know if she were alive at the time of the bigamous marriages, but he pleaded Guilty in the belief that, by reason of the decision in R. v. Treanor (or McAvoy) (1), it was not possible for him to rely on the defence of seven years' absence. The facts appear in the judgment of the court delivered by LORD GODDARD, C.J.

R. M. Havers for the appellant.

Elam for the Crown.

LORD GODDARD, C.J., delivered the following judgment of the court.

The appellant pleaded Guilty before the recorder at the Central Criminal Court to an indictment containing two counts. In the first count he was charged that on Dec. 18, 1946, he married Lilian Smithers during the lifetime of his wife, Alice Julie Taylor, and in the second count it was alleged that on Dec. 24, 1948, he married Olive Briggs during the lifetime of his said wife.

The appellant was lawfully married to his wife, who is still alive, in 1925. In April, 1927, he went through a form of marriage with another woman. In November, 1942, having left that second woman, he went through another form of marriage. In respect of that marriage he was charged at Maidstone Assizes in November, 1944, with bigamy, but the indictment charged him with committing bigamy during the lifetime of the woman with whom he had gone through the first bigamous marriage, who was then believed to be his lawful wife. When it was shown that she was not, a verdict of Not Guilty was returned. In 1945 he was charged at the Central Criminal Court in respect of the bigamy he had committed in April, 1927, but that charge failed because there was no evidence given by the prosecution that when he went through the second ceremony of marriage in 1927 his first wife was alive. He was, however, convicted on a count in the indictment of making a false declaration for the purpose of the marriage register, and for that offence he was bound over. His habit of contracting marriages continued because he went through another ceremony of marriage in 1946 and a fourth ceremony in 1948, and it was in respect of those two marriages that he was charged at the Central Criminal Court last March and pleaded Guilty.

He appealed against his sentence, and he would not have got leave to appeal against it if he had been properly convicted, but when this court saw the papers with a view to considering whether leave to appeal against sentence should be given, it at once appeared that at the time when he went through the bigamous ceremonies in 1946 and 1948 he had not seen his wife for very many years. The wife had said that the last time she saw him was in 1925, and it was either in 1925 or 1927 that these spouses had last seen each other. We, therefore, inquired how it was that the appellant pleaded Guilty, and his counsel (who had appeared for him at the trial) told us that he felt unable to advise him to take any other course because of the decision of this court in R. v. Treanor (or McAvoy) (1). In that case, in somewhat similar circumstances, the court held that, where more than one bigamous ceremony was shown, in respect of any second or subsequent bigamous ceremony, the prisoner was deprived of the defence that he had not seen his wife for seven years and not known that she was alive. That case seemed to the court to need further consideration, and, accordingly, we gave leave to the appellant to appeal against his conviction so that a full court might assemble to consider the decision in that case.

I should like to say one word about the re-consideration of a case by this court. A court of appeal usually considers itself bound by its own decisions or by decisions of a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction. For instance, the Court of Appeal in civil matters considers itself bound by its own decisions or by the decisions of the Exchequer Chamber, and, as is well known, the House of Lords always considers itself bound by its own decisions. In civil matters it is essential in order to preserve the rule of stare decisis that that should be so, but this court has to deal with the liberty of the subject and if, on re-consideration, in the opinion of a full court the law has been either mis-applied or misunderstood and a man has been sentenced for an offence, it will be the duty of the court to consider whether he has been properly convicted. The practice observed in civil cases ought not to be applied in such a case, and in the present case the full court of seven judges is unanimously of opinion that R. v. Treanor (or McAvoy) (1) was wrongly decided.

The offence of bigamy, so far as it is a temporal offence, was created in the first place by the statute 1 James 1, c. 11, where it is provided by s. 1:

"... if any person or persons within his Majesty's Dominions of England and Wales, being married, or which hereafter shall marry, do at any time after the end of the session of this present Parliament, marry any person or persons, the former husband or wife being alive... then every such offence shall be felony..."

It is clear that what is aimed at there is not merely bigamy, a second illegal ceremony, but what I may call polygamy—any number of marriages, because the words are: "shall marry any person or persons." There is a proviso:

"Provided always, that this Act, nor any thing therein contained, shall extend to any person or persons whose husband or wife shall be continually remaining beyond the seas by the space of seven years together, or whose husband or wife shall absent him or herself the one from the other by the space of seven years together, in any parts within his Majesty's Dominions, the one of them not knowing the other to be living within that time."

It is clear that under that statute the defence of absence for seven years without knowledge of the spouse being alive was a defence however many times the ceremony of marriage had taken place. I need not take up time by reading the next statute, the Offences against the Person Act, 1828, because s. 57 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, with which we are immediately concerned, is in substance in the same form. The section provides:

"Whosoever, being married, shall marry any other person during the life of the former husband or wife, whether the second marriage shall have taken place in England or Ireland or elsewhere, shall be guilty of felony... Provided, that nothing in this section contained shall extend to any second marriage contracted elsewhere than in England and Ireland by any other than a subject of her Majesty, or to any person marrying a second time whose husband or wife shall have been continually absent from such person for the space of seven years then last past, and shall not have been known by such person to be living within that time, or shall extend to any person who, at the time of such second marriage, shall have been divorced from the bond of the first marriage . . . ”

A It is obvious that the words “second marriage” in the enacting part of the section must be given the same construction as must be given to those words when they appear in the proviso. It is clear that by limiting the words in the enacting part of the section which constitutes the felony to the second ceremony and not to a third and subsequent ceremonies, a man could be convicted only if he had married twice and not if he had gone through a third, fourth, or fifth subsequent ceremony. In R. v. Treanor (or McAvoy) (1), however, it was held that ([1939] 1 All E.R. 332):

“This proviso means precisely what it says, nothing more or less—any second marriage, and not any second or subsequent marriage.”

The court went on to say that the proviso was not to be artificially expanded into applying to a second or subsequent marriage.

C The short point on which this court can decide this case, and it seems to me to be the true way of deciding it, is this. A charge of bigamy is an allegation that on a particular day the person charged went through a ceremony of marriage when his lawful wife was alive. The court, therefore, is dealing with two ceremonies of marriage only and no more—the lawful marriage and the polygamous marriage. When the polygamous marriage is proved, it is open to the defendant to show that at the time of that polygamous marriage he had not heard of his wife for seven years, and it does not seem to this court that it is then open to the prosecution to say: “You cannot avail yourself of that defence because there have been other ceremonies of marriage between the lawful marriage and the ceremony in respect of which you are charged.” The offence committed which is charged is the offence of going through the ceremony alleged at a time when the lawful wife was alive. Therefore, a defendant has a defence if it is shown that at the time he went through the marriage which is charged against him as a felony he had not seen his wife for seven years and had not known her to be living within that time. Any other construction would lead to very astonishing results. If a man went through a form of marriage when he had not seen his wife for seven years and had not known her to be living—
D in which case he would have a good defence under the proviso—and the woman who he had married secondly died and he went through a third form of marriage, still not having known that his first wife was alive, could it be said that he could not plead absence of knowledge? It is enough to say that, while we do not differ from the opinion the court expressed in R. v. Treanor (or McAvoy) (1) that E “second marriage” must be strictly construed, the second marriage which has to be considered is the second marriage charged in the indictment and no other. Therefore, for those reasons, although we do not differ from the construction put on the section in R. v. Treanor (or McAvoy) (1), we do differ from the result that the court there held followed from that construction. Accordingly, we hold in the present case that, although the appellant might have been charged with other offences, he should not have been convicted of the offence of bigamy, and,
F therefore, these convictions must be quashed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Registrar of the Court of Criminal Appeal (for the appellant);
Director of Public Prosecutions (for the Crown).

[Reported by H. McL. MORRISON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

CAPITAL & PROVINCIAL PROPERTY TRUST, LTD. v. RICE.
RICE v. CAPITAL & PROVINCIAL PROPERTY TRUST, LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Bucknill and Denning, L.J.J., and Hodson, J.), March 28, 29, 30, May 15, 1950.]

Rent Restriction—Standard rent—Apportionment—Flat let with another flat—Whole dwelling outside Rent Acts—Flat first let as separate dwelling subsequently—Increase of Rent & Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (1) (3).

From 1934 until 1942 a flat, the rateable value of which brought it within the Rent Restrictions Acts, was let together with another flat as one dwelling, the whole, by reason of its rateable value, being outside the limits of the Acts. In 1946 the flat was first let as a separate dwelling. On an application to determine the standard rent of the flat the landlords contended that the standard rent was the rent at which the flat was let in 1946. The tenants contended that to determine the standard rent it was necessary to apportion the rent at which the two flats were let as a whole on Sept. 1, 1939.

HELD (DENNING, L.J., dissenting): although the flat was not let separately on Sept. 1, 1939, it was "let" within the meaning of s. 12 (1) (a) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, and to ascertain the standard rent it was necessary to apportion the rent as at that date as provided by s. 12 (3) of the Act.

Upsons, Ltd. v. Herne ([1946] 2 All E.R. 309) and Sutton v. Begley ([1923] 2 K.B. 694), applied.

[AS TO STANDARD RENT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 312-314, para. 369 and 1950 Supp. ; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 564-566, Nos. 7117-7132.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Upsons, Ltd. v. Herne, [1946] 2 All E.R. 309; [1946] K.B. 591; 115 L.J.K.B. 433; 175 L.T. 350; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Sutton v. Begley, [1923] 2 K.B. 694; 92 L.J.K.B. 1086; 129 L.T. 773; 31 Digest 571, 7195.
- (3) Marchbank v. Campbell, [1923] 1 K.B. 245; 92 L.J.K.B. 137; 128 L.T. 283; 31 Digest 571, 7192.
- (4) Woodhead v. Putnam, [1923] 1 K.B. 252; 92 L.J.K.B. 137; 128 L.T. 281; 31 Digest 572, 7196.
- (5) R. v. Marylebone County Court Judge, [1923] 1 K.B. 365; 92 L.J.K.B. 367; sub. nom., R. v. Scully, Ex p. Boon, 128 L.T. 364; 31 Digest 570, 7183.
- (6) Barrett v. Hardy Brothers (Alnwick), Ltd., [1925] 2 K.B. 220; 94 L.J.K.B. 665; 133 L.T. 249; 31 Digest 561, 7090.
- (7) Phillips v. Potter, (1925), 94 L.J.K.B. 819; 133 L.T. 256; 31 Digest 570, 7182.
- (8) Lindop v. Quaipe, [1949] 1 All E.R. 456.
- (9) Gover v. Field, [1944] 1 All E.R. 151, 417, n; 113 L.J.K.B. 129; 170 L.T. 73 ; sub. nom., Field v. Gover, [1944] K.B. 200; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (10) Mitchell v. Barnes, [1949] 2 All E.R. 719; [1950] 1 K.B. 448.
- (11) Signy v. Abbey National Building Society, [1944] 1 All E.R. 448; [1944] K.B. 449; 113 L.J.K.B. 486; 170 L.T. 238; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (12) Platman v. Frohman, [1929] 1 K.B. 376; 98 L.J.K.B. 351; 140 L.T. 405; 93 J.P. 134; Digest Supp.

APPEALS by the landlords from an order of His Honour JUDGE DALE at Bloomsbury County Court, made on Jan. 27, 1950, whereby he apportioned the rent of a flat at £171 5s. a year.

The landlords contended that the standard rent should be fixed at £250 a year, the rent at which the flat was first let as a separate dwelling, and not, as the county court judge decided, by apportionment of the rent of the whole dwelling consisting of the two flats together.

L. A. Blundell for the landlords.

Fortune for the tenant.

Cur. adv. vult.

A May 15. The following judgments were read.

BUCKNILL, L.J.: These two appeals were heard together and concern flat No. 28, on the first floor of a building called West Hill Court, Millfield Lane, Highgate. In one case the tenant of the flat, Mr. J. M. Rice, applied to the court to apportion the rent of the flat. In the other case the landlords, the Capital & Provincial Property Trust, Ltd., applied for the standard rent of the flat to be determined. The parties agreed that, if apportionment was necessary, the rent would be £171 5s. and that, on the other hand, if there was to be no apportionment, the standard rent would be £250.

B There was no dispute as to the material facts. West Hill Court was built in about 1933, and in 1934 the present landlords bought the property. On the first floor of the building there were two flats, No. 27 and No. 28. Each flat was completely self-contained with its own front door leading on to the same landing, a kitchen, w.c. and bathroom, two bedrooms, a dining-room and a sitting-room. The judge found as a fact that the two flats were constructed as separate dwellings, having a rateable value each of an amount (viz., £79) which would bring them both within the control of the Rent Restrictions Acts. The first tenant of the two flats was a Dr. Davis. He wished to use them both as one dwelling for his family, and he entered into one lease for the two flats at a rental of £430 per annum. At his request, and before he signed the lease, the partition wall in No. 28 between the dining and the sitting-room was taken down, so as to make one large room, and a communicating door was cut in the wall between this room and the adjacent room in No. 27. After the expiration of Dr. Davis' lease, in February, 1939, a Mr. Stephenson took a similar lease of the same premises at a rental of £342 10s. per annum. During the war the premises were damaged by enemy action. Mr. Stephenson vacated them and his tenancy ended. In 1942 the damage to flat No. 27 was repaired, the doorway which had been cut between the two flats was blocked up, and it was then let as a separate flat at an annual rent of £195. In 1946 No. 28 was also repaired. The partition wall between the two sitting-rooms, which had been taken down before Dr. Davis became tenant of the premises, was not replaced, and it was then let as a separate flat to Mr. Rice at an annual rent of £250.

E The question for the decision of the court was whether the standard rent of No. 28 was to be obtained by halving the rent of the two flats of £342 10s. or whether the standard rent was that at which the flat was first let as a separate flat, namely, £250. The judge held, to quote from the note of his judgment, F that:

G " . . . although occupied as one dwelling, these two flats were, in fact, let on Sept. 1, 1939, within the meaning of s. 12 (1) (a) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, as amended, and to ascertain the standard rent of each it was necessary to apportion the rent as at that date as provided for by s. 12 (3) of the said Act."

H Before considering the relevant sections and decisions, and whether they are inconsistent with the judgment of the learned judge, I would point out that in September, 1939, flat No. 28 (whether one considers it as a separate dwelling-house at that time or not) was, in fact, earning an income for the landlord which he was quite free to fix and which was presumably the market rental value. If the landlord had let flat No. 28 to Mr. Stephenson under a separate lease, the flat would clearly be a controlled flat by reason of its rateable value of £79, and its standard rent today would be the rent then fixed. It is true that no separate rent was fixed in 1939, but I see no reason to doubt that the rent then fixed by the landlord and charged for these two identical flats was approximately double the rent which would have been charged for each individual flat, that is, £171 5s., which is the rent fixed by the judge as the standard rent. It seems to me, therefore, that his judgment is in accordance with one of the main objects of the Rent Restrictions Acts as set out in the preamble to the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (War Restrictions) Act, 1915, namely: "... to restrict ... the increase of the rent of small dwelling-houses ..."

The first question to be decided, however, is whether flat No. 28, which at all material times was a dwelling-house or part of a dwelling-house, was, in fact, "let" on Sept. 1, 1939. I think that if anyone had asked the landlord in 1939 whether flat No. 28 was let, he would have answered "Yes." I know of no decided case which has laid down that a flat is not let because it has been let with another flat under one lease. On the contrary, the decision of the Court of Appeal in Upsons, Ltd. v. Herne (1) clearly decides the opposite. The relevant facts in that case, in so far as they resemble the facts in the present case, were that until after 1914 two flats, one of which was called flat 2A, together with a shop, were let to one Klein under a single lease at an annual single rent of £150. The three buildings were covered by one roof, but were in all other respects separate. In 1925 flat 2A, the rateable value of which had at all material times been below the limits fixed by the Rent Acts, was let separately to another person, and the question at issue was whether the standard rent of flat 2A was the rent under the separate letting, or whether it was to be fixed by apportionment of the rent of the complex of premises. The Court of Appeal held that the rent was to be fixed by apportionment. MORTON, L.J., in his judgment, said ([1946] 2 All E.R. 311):

"This separate dwelling flat 2A was let to Woolf Klein in 1911 and it was still let to him on Aug. 3, 1914. True, two other premises were included in the letting and the three were let in one lease at one rent instead of in three separate leases at three separate rents, but I cannot see how that prevents flat 2A from being 'let' within the meaning of the Act of 1920. Presumably, the three premises were let at a rent which was thought by lessor and lessee to be the fair aggregate annual rental for the three; but, whether this is so or not, I see no escape from the view that if three properties, A, B and C, are let by X to Y under one and the same lease, then each one of them is let by X to Y."

The only material difference that I can see between the facts in that case and the present is that in the present case a doorway was cut in the wall which divided the two flats, but, in my opinion, the principle enunciated by MORTON, L.J., applies with equal force to the present case. The judgment in the Court of Appeal in Upsons, Ltd. v. Herne (1) accorded with the decision of the Court of Appeal in Sutton v. Begley (2). The relevant facts in Sutton v. Begley (2) were that a house consisting of nineteen rooms was let to the defendants at an annual rent of £100 (the standard rent). In June, 1921, the defendants sub-let to the plaintiff four rooms at a rent of £80 per annum, and the plaintiff afterwards applied to have the rent apportioned for the purpose of determining his standard rent. The Court of Appeal, affirming the Divisional Court and the trial judge, held that the standard rent was to be fixed by apportioning the rent of £100 and was not £80. The basis of their decision was that the four rooms first let separately to the plaintiff in June, 1921, had been, in fact, let (as part of the whole house) in August, 1914. BANKES, L.J., in his judgment ([1923] 2 K.B. 699), referred with approval to the decision of the Divisional Court in Marchbank v. Campbell (3), given on the same day as the decision in Woodhead v. Putnam (4). BANKES, L.J., also referred ([1923] 2 K.B. 701) with approval to the decision of the Divisional Court in R. v Marylebone County Court Judge (5). In that case SALTER, J., delivering the judgment of the court, said ([1923] 1 K.B. 368):

"... the jurisdiction [to apportion under s. 12 (3) of the Act of 1920] is given subject to two conditions only. The applicant must prove that the dwelling-house, the subject of tenancy between the parties, is within the Act, and that it is necessary for the purpose of determining the standard rent of that dwelling-house to make an apportionment, at the appropriate date, of the rent of the property in which that dwelling-house is comprised. If these two things are proved, jurisdiction to make the apportionment is given in plain terms."

If the decision of the judge that flat No. 28 was let in September, 1939, is right, it seems to me that the question whether s. 12 (3) of the Act of 1920 applies in a case where the rateable value of the whole property exceeded £100 in September, 1939, is irrelevant, just as, in my opinion, the rental value of the whole property in the cases cited by me was irrelevant. The reasons given for the decisions to which I have referred seem to me the same as those which were stated by MORTON, L.J., in Upsons, Ltd. v. Herne (1). If the question is whether the rooms or the flat in question were "let" or not, it seems to me that the only relevance of the amount of the rateable value of the whole property is that it is a total sum which it is necessary to apportion in order to see whether the rateable value of the rooms or flat in question are within the limits of the Rent Restrictions Acts now in force. I am therefore in favour of dismissing the appeals.

DENNING, L.J.: Although these two flats were originally built as separate flats, they were knocked into one flat before they were let, and they were let as one separate dwelling from 1934 to 1942. That one flat, by reason of its rateable value, was outside the Rent Restrictions Acts. In 1942 it was made into two flats which were afterwards let separately. Each of the separate flats is, by reason of its rateable value, within the Acts.

The question is: What is the standard rent of each flat? Is it the rent at which each was first let, or is it an apportioned part of the 1939 rent of the one whole flat? The solution to this question cannot depend on the fact that they were originally built as separate flats. The problem would be just the same if there was one whole house, built for one family and let as one whole from 1934 to 1942, the whole house being outside the Rent Acts, and then, in 1942, it was turned into two flats let separately, each within the Acts. In such a case it is clear that the landlord could have let the whole house in 1942 at an unrestricted rent, not limited to the 1939 rent. Is he not entitled, then, to let the two flats on their first lettings in 1942 also at unrestricted rents so that the first rent of each is its standard rent? That is the question, and it is the question which I propose to consider.

On this question, I venture to think that the position under the new control is very different from what it was under the old control. Under the old control of houses which followed the 1914 war, it was eventually settled, after five years of controversy, that, although a whole house was outside the Acts by reason of its rent or rateable value, nevertheless, if it was subsequently let in parts, you could apportion the rent or rateable value of the whole so as to find what were the appropriate rents or rateable values for the various parts. It was always understood, however, that the only justification for this apportionment (where the whole house was outside the Acts) was because it was "necessary" to apportion in order to find out whether the various parts were within the Acts. The important thing to remember is that in those days the application of the Rent Restrictions Acts to any part depended, not only on the rateable value of the part, but also on its rent, and so one had to apportion both the rateable value and the rent of the whole house in order to find out whether the Act applied to the part or not. That was decided as to rateable value by Barrett v. Hardy Brothers (Alnwick), Ltd. (6) where SCRUTTON, L.J., said ([1925] 2 K.B. 228):

"... it is necessary to read s. 12 (3) of the Act of 1920 as applying to cases where it is necessary to apportion to find out whether the case is within the Acts."

It was decided as to rent by Phillips v. Potter (7), where GREER, J., said (94 A L.J.K.B. 822):

"... apportionment of the rent at which the entire house was let on Aug. 3, 1914, is the only way in which it can be determined whether the Act applies to the respondent's dwelling-house or not ..."

Once the rent was apportioned, the appropriate portion became, of course, the standard rent of the part, but, nevertheless, the only justification for the apportionment was not to find the standard rent simpliciter, but to find if the part was within the Acts or not. B

Under the new control of houses which has followed the 1939 war, the application of the Rent Restrictions Acts depends only on the rateable value and not on the rent. It is, therefore, no longer "necessary" to apportion the rent of the whole in order to see whether the various parts are within the Acts, because the rent has no longer anything to do with it. It is only necessary to apportion the rateable value. The Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939, clearly recognises this because it contains an express provision in s. 7 (2) which shows that one can apportion the rateable value of the whole in order to find the rateable value of the part, even when the whole is outside the Acts, but, significantly enough, there is no such provision enabling one to apportion the rent. The reason is because it is no longer necessary to apportion the rent to find out whether the part is within the Acts or not. C D

Once the reason for apportioning the rent disappears, the right to it also disappears: cessante ratione, cessat lex. The only ground on which the tenant can now claim an apportionment of rent—where the whole house is outside the Acts and the part within them—is by saying that it is "necessary" to apportion the rent of the whole in order to find the standard rent of the parts. This is an entirely new ground which will not bear examination because there is, in truth, no such necessity. The standard rent of any part can be ascertained perfectly well by taking the rent at which it was first let after 1939. If the owner had occupied the whole house himself until 1942 and then let it in parts, the standard rent of each part would have been the rent at which it was first let. The fact that he let the whole house to a tenant occupier until 1942 can make no difference, seeing that the house was outside the Acts altogether. That letting only makes it possible to apportion. It does not make it "necessary" to do so, and it is only if it is necessary that the court has any jurisdiction to do it. E F

This view is strikingly confirmed by s. 5 of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1938. That is an express provision for finding the standard rent of parts of a house. It says that whenever the whole house is within the Acts, one apportions the standard rent of the whole in order to find the standard rent of the parts. The plain inference is that when the whole house is outside the Acts, one does not apportion. This is a very sensible distinction. The owner of a controlled house ought not to be allowed to get more rent for his house by letting it in parts instead of one whole, and a tenant of a controlled house ought not to be allowed to make a profit by sub-letting at a higher rent than he is paying himself, so one apportions the whole to find the rent of the parts. This does not apply, however, where the whole house is outside the Acts. The owner of an un-controlled house can let it at whatever rent a tenant is prepared to pay. Why, then, should he not be able to let it in parts at whatever rents the various tenants are prepared to pay? I see no reason why not, nor, G H apparently, did the legislature when they passed the Acts of 1938 and 1939. In the Act of 1938 they provided for apportionment only in cases where the whole house was one "to which those Acts apply." The Act of 1938 was the first Act, be it noted, where the application of the Rent Restrictions Acts was made to depend on rateable value and not on the rent, and it was the first Act in which the legislature provided for an apportionment of rent although it was not "necessary." They said that there should be an apportionment whenever the whole house was within the Acts, but not when it was outside them. When the legislature introduced the new control in the Act of 1939, based solely on rateable value—so that there was no necessity to apportion the rent—they retained s. 5 of the Act of 1938 intact and made it applicable to the new control. Numerous minor amendments were made in the various Acts, but the important words "to which those Acts apply" were retained. If the legislature did not see fit to strike them out, I do not see why we should do so, but that, after all, is what the tenant asks us to do. In order to ascertain the standard rent of a part, he wants us to apportion the rent of the whole, whether the whole house is within the Acts or not, whereas s. 5 only authorises us to do it when it is within the Acts.

If the result of this case were to be that the landlord could charge an extortionate rent for these two flats on their first letting, I should, I expect, be tempted to depart from the interpretation which I have given to these Acts, just as the courts were tempted between 1920 and 1925. They succumbed to the temptation, and afterwards regretted it, as BANKES, L.J., frankly acknowledged: see Barrett v. Hardy (6) ([1925] 2 K.B. 223). We, however, are not subjected to any such temptation. The Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, now provides an effective check against extortionate rents on first lettings. If the tenant considers the rent to be unreasonable, he can apply to the rent tribunal for a reduction, and they will reduce it to whatever is reasonable. That is a remedy which gives him justice, and I feel no inclination to give him more.

There are no cases which give any difficulty. All the cases under the old control are beside the mark for the reasons which I have stated. Upsons, Ltd. v. Herne (1), although decided in 1946, was a case of old control. It was one of the very rare cases in which a court of today had to find the standard rent of a flat just as a court sitting in 1925 would have had to do, and it did it by apportioning the 1914 rent of the property in which it was comprised. The case has no bearing whatever on cases under the new control. Lindop v. Quaipe (8) is distinguishable because, although that was a case of new control, the application was to apportion the rateable value and not the rent. In that case, as in the present case, the standard rent of the flats should be ascertained at the figures at which they were first let, subject to reduction by the tribunal if they were unreasonable. Gover v. Field (9) and Mitchell v. Barnes (10) were cases of new control when the whole house was, by reason of its rateable value, within the Acts, and where the rent had, therefore, to be apportioned under s. 5 of the Act of 1938.

My conclusion is that in cases under the new control—which means nearly all cases nowadays—the question of apportionment depends not only on s. 12 (3) of the Act of 1920, but also on s. 5 of the Act of 1938 and s. 7 (2) of the Act of 1939. These new sections throw much light on the obscurities of s. 12 (3) which perplexed a previous generation of judges. They show that rent—as distinct from rateable value—is only to be apportioned when the whole house is within the Acts. This one whole flat was not. It is not "necessary" to apportion the rent. The standard rent of each flat is the rent at which each was first let. In my opinion, therefore, the appeal of the landlords should be allowed.

HODSON, L.J.: In these two appeals the landlords appeal against the decision of JUDGE DALE by which he declared the standard rent of the flat No. 28, West Hill Court, Highgate, to be £171 5s. per annum. The landlords contend that the judge wrongly decided that apportionment was applicable, and that, accordingly, the standard rent should have been fixed at £250 per annum, the rent at which the flat was first let as a separate dwelling.

The flat had previously been let together with another similar flat (No. 27) as a separate dwelling occupied by one family, and on Sept. 1, 1939, the whole, that is to say, flats 27 and 28, were let together at an annual rental of £342 10s. The whole was of a rateable value outside the Rent Restrictions Acts. On conversion there was no substantial reconstruction. On Sept. 26, 1946, flat No. 28 was first let as a separate dwelling. The landlords contend that when a house outside the Act in 1939 is sub-divided into separate dwellings the standard rent of those dwellings is not found by apportionment of the rent of the uncontrolled unit, but by taking the first rent at which the parts were let as giving their standard rent. The correct principle, it is said, is that a landlord cannot get more by letting the house piecemeal than by letting it as a whole, but, if the whole is uncontrolled, he should not be penalised because he splits it up. As a secondary principle, it is said one should not look at anything outside the Acts—business rent or furnished rent—but one should look at the rent of the character contemplated by the Acts: see Signy v. Abbey National Building Society (11). Therefore, it is argued, a controlled rent should not be calculated by reference to an uncontrolled rent. The standard rent should, accordingly, be fixed by reference to s. 12 (1) of the Act of 1920 (as amended) and no apportionment under s. 12 (3) is necessary. The tenant, on the other hand, argues that s. 12 (3) must be given its widest possible interpretation in favour of the tenant in accordance with the policy of the Acts, part of which is to protect tenants of small dwelling-houses from paying excessive rent.

The argument of the landlords is supported by reference to s. 5 of the Act of 1938 which is imperative in requiring apportionment in order to ascertain the standard rent of a controlled dwelling-house which forms part of another controlled dwelling-house. It reads:

“Where a dwelling-house to which the principal Acts apply is part of another dwelling-house to which those Acts apply, the standard rent of the first-mentioned dwelling-house as from Sept. 29, 1938, shall be a standard rent ascertained by apportioning the standard rent of the second-mentioned dwelling-house, and sub-s. (3) of s. 12 of the Act of 1920 shall apply accordingly notwithstanding that the first-mentioned dwelling-house was let as a separate dwelling on or before Aug. 1, 1914, or on or before the date on which the second-mentioned dwelling-house was first let.”

If the principle of apportionment is to apply in this case, the words “to which those Acts apply” are, it is said, otiose. It is contended that, reading s. 12 (3) of the Act of 1920 and s. 5 of the Act of 1938 together, the containing house, unless it is within the Acts, is not the basis of apportionment. Reliance is also placed on the dictum of SCOTT, L.J., in Gover v. Field (9) when he says ([1944] 1 All E.R. 153):

“... and I think (not without doubt) that s. 12 (3) of the 1920 Act is on that point to be construed on the same lines; that is to say, that there is not to be apportionment unless both houses—the containing and the contained—are within the Acts.”

It is at this point, however, that the difficulties in the way of the landlords' argument appear to begin.

In the first place, this dictum has been criticised by the Court of Appeal on more than one occasion: see Upsons, Ltd. v. Herne (1) ([1946] 2 All E.R. 312, 313), per SOMERVELL and MORTON, L.J.J., and Lindop v. Quaipe (8) ([1949] 1 All E.R. 458), per BUCKNILL, L.J. These criticisms were based on Barrett v. Hardy Brothers (Alnwick), Ltd. (6), a decision of the Divisional Court consisting of BANKES and SCRUTTON, L.J.J., which was concerned, not with fixing rent, but with apportionment of rateable value in order to ascertain whether a dwelling-house came within the Acts or not. The decision in Barrett's case (6) is well established, although the wording of s. 12 (3) of the Act of 1920, as SCRUTTON, L.J., pointed out, is not really apt to cover such a case. He said ([1925] 2 K.B. 226):

"The statutory authority for apportionment is to be found, if at all, in s. 12 (3) of the Act of 1920. This begins: 'Where, for the purpose of determining the standard rent or rateable value of any dwelling-house to which this Act applies.' As whether a house is within the Act depends on whether its standard rent or rateable value exceeds a certain limit, this section literally read runs round in a useless circle. You cannot know whether the Act applies to the house till you know its standard rent or rateable value. If you have not determined these items, there is no proof that the Act applies to it. It is said that you must read the words as if they said: 'Where in order to determine the standard rent or rateable value of any dwelling-house for the purpose of seeing whether this Act applies to it, it is necessary to apportion,' etc. The words obviously do not say that in their ordinary meaning."

It is argued by the landlords that the Barrett v. Hardy Brothers (Alnwick), Ltd. (6) principle is only applicable when it is necessary to ascertain whether or not a house comes within the Acts. In this way it is sought to explain the wide language of SALTER, J., in Woodhead v. Putnam (4) when he said ([1923] 1 K.B. 256):

"To entitle a tenant to apportionment under s. 12 (3), it is not necessary that the 'property' in which the applicant's dwelling-house is 'comprised' should itself be a dwelling-house or should be subject to the Act."

This language, approved by BANKES, L.J., in Barrett's case (6), refers to apportionment of rent and not rateable value, and the landlords can only avoid their full implication by the argument that at that date not only rateable value, but rent also, were the basis of control, so that apportionment might be necessary at the date of the decision in both cases in order to ascertain whether or not a particular dwelling-house came within the purview of the Acts. Since 1938, on the other hand, rateable value only is the basis of control so the principle in Barrett's case (6) need only now be applied to rateable value. This argument is deserving of attention, and has the added attraction that it would seem to produce a result not inflicting unfair hardship on landlords. It is necessary, however, to recognise that the dictum of SCOTT, L.J., in Gover v. Field (9) was too wide, apart from consideration of Barrett's case (6). The words "to which those Acts apply" in s. 5 of the Act of 1938, are not otiose, but the converse of the section must be correctly appreciated. The converse is not that apportionment is not to be applied when the containing house is outside the Acts (as SCOTT, L.J., thought), but, in such a case, apportionment is to be applied only when it is necessary: see the express terms of s. 12 (3) of the Act of 1920 to that effect. This sub-section has never been repealed.

In Upsons, Ltd. v. Herne (1) it was necessary to apportion. The facts were as follows. By an agreement in writing, dated Apr. 4, 1938, the plaintiffs, Upsons, Ltd., let to the defendant, Henry Herne, a flat known as 2A Golders Way, Golders Green, for one year commencing on Apr. 11, 1938, and thereafter from year to year at the annual rent of £78. The rateable value of the flat was £33 and the Rent Restrictions Acts applied. This agreement contained a proviso for re-entry without giving notice to quit if the rent should be in arrears for twenty-one days or upwards. The defendant having fallen into arrears with the rent, the plaintiffs took proceedings for recovery of possession and arrears of rent, but an order in their favour was set aside by the Court of Appeal and a new trial ordered with fresh particulars of claim and defence before a different judge. The new trial came on Jan. 15, 1946, but was adjourned till Feb. 26, 1946, owing to the plaintiffs' failure, through a mistake, to attend. The plaintiffs claimed to recover possession and £289 19s. 6d. arrears of rent down to Oct. 4, 1945. The defendant denied that he was indebted to the plaintiffs and relied on the Rent Restrictions Acts, contending that the standard rent of the flat did not exceed £45 per annum exclusive of rates. Alternatively, the defendant set up an alleged arrangement on Apr. 13, 1942, varying the terms of his tenancy, but this contention failed. There was evidence that the entire premises, consisting of flats 2A and 2B with a shop underneath them, were let to one Woolf Klein in September, 1911, for a term of twenty-one years at a rent of £150 per annum, that the two flats and the shop were completely separated from each other with separate entrances, and that in 1925 the plaintiffs, having become possessed of the premises, let flat 2A to one Curry at the rent of £100 per annum. On these facts the court had to determine what was the rent at which the flat in question was let on Aug. 3, 1914. It was not then let by a separate lease, but as part of a containing building let as one unit at a rental including a shop and another flat. Even though the containing building was outside the Acts, it was necessary, as the court pointed out, to find the standard rent by apportionment.

The ratio decidendi of that case is, in my opinion, that it was necessary to apportion because the containing unit had been previously let on the material date and had nothing to do with the question whether or not the larger unit was outside the Acts. This, I think, is apparent from the reference of MORTON, L.J., to Sutton v. Begley (2). In the latter case, as in the one now under consideration, there had been no substantial reconstruction or alteration and the rooms first separately let in June, 1921, had been let in the same condition in the previous March, but as part of a larger house. SCRUTTON, L.J., said ([1923] 2 K.B. 702):

"To hold that in these circumstances the rent at which the whole house was let is not to be regarded, but only the rent at which the room or rooms were first let, which is subject to no restriction except the agreement between the parties, would be entirely to defeat the operation of the Act. The Act was intended to protect small tenants without much regard to their landlords' interests. If a landlord who had let a house, say at £10 a year, was allowed immediately to let each separate room at £10 and to justify so doing on the plea that he was letting a room for the first time, whereas previously he had let the whole house, the Act would be reduced to a nullity. Therefore it appears to me impossible to give to the word 'dwelling-house' in s. 12 (1) (a) a meaning which, in the case I have just put, would include the one room subsequently let and exclude the rest of the house."

These two cases, which are binding on this court, lead me irresistibly to the conclusion that necessity to apportion depends on whether or not the dwelling-house which is the containing unit was let, irrespective of whether it is within or without the ambit of the Acts. I would only add that the argument put forward on behalf of the landlords based on s. 5 of the Act of 1938 loses much of its force when attention is drawn to the latter part, which reads:

"... s. 12 (3) of the Act of 1920 shall apply . . . notwithstanding that the first-mentioned dwelling-house [i.e., the part] was let as a separate dwelling on or before Aug. 1, 1914, or on or before the date on which the second-mentioned dwelling-house [i.e., the whole] was first let."

This section was clearly introduced to meet the anomalous case illustrated in Platman v. Frohman (12) which led to the conclusion that, if the part had been separately let before the whole on or before the material date, it would have had a standard rent of its own and there would have been no apportionment. In the present case the containing house was let at the material date, viz., Sept. 1, 1939, at a rental of £342 10s. and flat No. 28 was also then let. In my judgment, apportionment is, accordingly, necessary, and I would dismiss the appeals.

Appeals dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Stephenson, Harwood & Tatham (for the landlords); Layton & Co. (for the tenant).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

BOURNE AND ANOTHER v. McDONALD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., Somervell and Asquith, L.JJ.), May 22, 1950.]

County Court—Jurisdiction—Specific performance—Agreement to erect fence—County Courts Act, 1934 (c. 53), s. 52 (1) (d), s. 71.

A The parties, who were neighbours, were involved in a dispute about the boundaries between their respective plots, and the plaintiffs started proceedings against the defendant in the county court. On Jan. 3, 1950, an agreement was made on behalf of the parties by their respective solicitors in settlement of the action, the defendant agreeing (a) to erect a new boundary fence at his own cost, and (b) to pay a sum of £30 to the plaintiffs as the agreed costs of the action. The plaintiffs, in performance of their part of the agreement, discontinued the existing proceedings, but the defendant repudiated the agreement. The plaintiffs thereupon commenced a second action in the county court, claiming inter alia specific performance of the agreement. It was contended by the defendant that the county court judge had no jurisdiction to entertain the claim for specific performance as the jurisdiction of the county court to award specific performance was limited by the County Courts Act, 1934, s. 52 (1) (d), to proceedings in regard to agreements for the sale, purchase or lease of property.

C HELD: as the cause of action, being based on a breach of contract, was covered by s. 40 of the County Courts Act, 1934, the county court judge could, under s. 71 of the Act, give any remedy which a judge of the High Court could give in a similar action, and, therefore, he could grant a mandatory injunction which would have the same effect as the order for specific performance of the agreement which the plaintiffs claimed; s. 52 (1) of the Act was directed, not to particular remedies, but to particular types of proceedings which were well-known and definable in the Chancery Courts, and s. 52 (1) (d), by giving a jurisdiction to grant specific performance of agreements for the sale, purchase or lease of property, did not limit the right of a county court judge under s. 71 to grant any remedy that justice might require in an action for breach of contract where there was a claim for specific performance which was not in regard to an agreement for the sale, purchase or lease of property, provided that the case was within the jurisdiction under s. 40; and, therefore, the county court judge had jurisdiction to grant the plaintiffs' claim.

F [FOR THE COUNTY COURTS ACT, 1934, s. 40, s. 52 and s. 71, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 5, pp. 35, 48, 49, 61 and 62.]

G APPEAL by the plaintiffs from an order of His Honour JUDGE TUCKER, at Hanley and Stoke-upon-Trent County Court, dated Mar. 23, 1950, in an action claiming (i) specific performance of an agreement by the defendant to erect a fence, the agreement having been entered into by the parties in settlement of a previous action started by the plaintiffs; (ii) a sum of £30, which the defendant had agreed to pay under the agreement; and (iii) damages for breach of the agreement. The county court judge gave judgment for the plaintiffs for the sum of £30 and £5 costs, but held that the only jurisdiction in the county court to award specific performance was under the County Courts Act, 1934, s. 52 (1) (d), and, therefore, as the agreement was not for the sale or lease of property, he had no jurisdiction to entertain the claim for specific performance. The facts appear in the judgment of SIR RAYMOND EVERSLED, M.R.

Brian Gibbens for the plaintiffs.

Norman Carr for the defendant.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSLED, M.R.: The present action arises out of previous proceedings between the same parties. The plaintiffs, on the one hand, and the defendant, on the other, are neighbours in a street known as Emery Avenue, Stoke-on-Trent, and they had involved themselves in a dispute about the boundaries between their respective plots. It was alleged by the plaintiffs that the defendant had encroached on their land, which was the more serious, according to counsel for the plaintiffs, because it left the approach to the garage of the plaintiffs' premises too narrow for the passage of their motor car. The result was that proceedings began in the local county court between the plaintiffs and the defendant and another person of the name of Frost (who has since dropped out of the case and to whom it is unnecessary further to refer) to establish where the boundary lay. Shortly before the first action came on for trial the parties settled their differences. That settlement was achieved by the solicitors to the parties. On Jan 3, 1950, Mr. Rees T. C. Jones, solicitor for the defendant, wrote a letter to the plaintiffs' solicitor which begins: "Pursuant to our telephone conversation of even date, we would confirm the terms of the settlement arrived at herein," and then the body of the letter provides for two things, (i) the erection by the defendant in a new position (to satisfy, I gather, the requirements of the plaintiffs) of the boundary fence at his cost, and (ii) payment to the plaintiffs of a sum of £30, an agreed figure to cover the plaintiffs' costs of that action. Unhappily, the pacific sentiments of the solicitors were not entirely reflected by their clients, and very shortly afterwards the defendant stated that he regarded himself as not bound by this arrangement. The unhappy result was the commencement of a second action, namely, this action. The particulars of claim, after referring to the letter to which I have alluded, state, as is the fact, that the plaintiffs, in performance of the bargain made, discontinued their then existing proceedings, but it was alleged that the defendant declined to carry out his part of the bargain. The prayer is as follows:

"By reason of the premises the plaintiffs have suffered damage. And the plaintiffs claim (i) specific performance of the said agreement; (ii) the said sum of £30; (iii) damages limited to £10."

I would first observe that the second head of claim, "the said sum of £30," was really covered by the first, because the payment of £30 was part of the bargain and its recovery would amount in ordinary language to a specific carrying out by the defendant of that part of the bargain. No difficulty appears to have been entertained as regards that part of the claim, but at the hearing the judge came to the conclusion that he was unable to grant the specific relief claimed in the first part of the prayer, i.e., that he could not order the defendant to carry out the agreement by erecting a fence because, the claim being one ipsissimis verbis for specific performance, the county court judge's jurisdiction was limited by the County Courts Act, 1934, s. 52 (1) (d), which, admittedly, does not cover this case.

Before I pass to the sections of the Act, I ought, I think, to refer briefly to the judgment, because, I think, it makes plain the view of the county court judge that, apart from the jurisdiction point, he would have thought it right, in the exercise of his equitable jurisdiction, to grant the remedy which the plaintiffs sought. He states it in this form:

"I considered carefully the evidence before me and the submissions made to me on both sides, and I was satisfied and found that on Jan. 3, 1950, the plaintiffs' solicitor and the solicitor then acting for the defendant, on behalf of their respective clients, entered into the agreement alleged by the plaintiffs, and that it was confirmed by letter from the defendant's then solicitor to the plaintiffs' solicitor dated Jan. 3, 1950, and that in pursuance of the said agreement the plaintiffs' solicitor took steps at once to withdraw the previous action. I was also of opinion and found that in making the said agreement on behalf of the defendant, the solicitor then acting for the defendant had the defendant's authority to make such agreement, and was acting in accordance with his instructions, and that it was a binding agreement."

Although he does not in terms say so, I think it is reasonably clear from what we have been told that, as I have already said, the judge would have thought it a proper case in which to grant relief in the nature of specific performance if he had the jurisdiction to do so. The third item of claim, "damages limited to £10," was fixed on the footing that specific performance of the bargain to rebuild could be decreed, so that £10 represented only the damage suffered by the plaintiffs through delay. When it appeared to the plaintiffs that this point about jurisdiction was likely to be a serious stumbling block in their way, the plaintiffs, by their counsel, asked to amend the statement of claim by adding a separate prayer for damages at common law for breach of the agreement or by claiming damages under Lord Cairns' Act (Chancery Amendment Act, 1858) in lieu of specific performance. The judge in the exercise of his discretion thought it was too late to allow such an amendment. He thought that it would not be just to give an entirely new cause of action to the plaintiffs after the case had for practical purposes been heard and tried out. Counsel for the plaintiffs suggested that, alternatively, we might give him leave, even at this stage, to amend, but it seems to me that that was a matter in the discretion of the learned county court judge and we ought not to interfere.

It, therefore, remains a case in which the sole question is: Was the judge right in his conclusion that he had no jurisdiction to grant the relief which was sought? I have tried to be a little careful in my use of words. The prayer is for "specific performance of the said agreement." It was pointed out by counsel for the plaintiffs during the argument that precisely the same result might well have been achieved under another name if the order asked for had been a mandatory order, or, as it is now commonly called, a mandatory injunction, on the defendant to re-erect the wall in accordance with the terms of the contract. In truth, an injunction in that form would have been specific performance of the contract if by that phrase is meant a command of the court on the defendant to carry out specifically according to its terms the bargain that was made. I think that important, because, to my mind, there is, or may be, a distinction in the sense in which that common term "specific performance" is used.

With that preface, I turn to the three relevant sections of the County Courts Act, 1934. I take first, because it comes first, s. 40, which gives general jurisdiction in an ordinary action to a county court. Its cross heading is "Actions of contract and tort," and, strictly, the word "action" is appropriate only to an action at law. Section 40 (1), as amended by the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1938, s. 19 (1), and sched. II, provides that the county court has jurisdiction "...to hear and determine any action founded on contract or on tort where the debt, demand or damage claimed is not more than £200 ..."

Then there is a proviso that the county court is not to have jurisdiction in certain classes of cases, which include, save as provided elsewhere in the Act, actions in which the title to land is in issue, actions for the recovery of land, and also actions for libel, slander, seduction, or breach of promise of marriage, which are wholly excluded from the jurisdiction of the county court. Because of that method of defining the jurisdiction, a plaintiff who desires as the chief remedy to obtain an injunction must, nevertheless, frame his action as an action for damages and must make it clear that the sum claimed is such as to give jurisdiction to the county court.

It is next necessary to turn to s. 52. The cross-heading there, by way of contrast with "Actions of contract and tort," is "Equity proceedings," and the purpose of the section is to give to the county court again a limited jurisdiction in equity proceedings, but the limit is defined, and necessarily defined, in a different way. That it has to be differently defined is obvious, if you consider the first of the equity proceedings, viz., "(a) proceedings for the administration of the estate of a deceased person." Without pursuing what is obvious, the form of s. 52 (1) is:

"A county court shall have all the jurisdiction of the High Court to hear and determine any of the following proceedings . . ."

Then there follow paras. (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f) and (g), all beginning with the words "proceedings for," or corresponding words. The relevant paragraph here is (d), which is:

"Proceedings for the specific performance, or for the rectification, delivery up or cancellation, of any agreement for the sale, purchase or lease of any property, where, in the case of a sale or purchase, the purchase money, or, in the case of a lease, the value of the property, does not exceed the sum of £500."

It is to be observed that the general term "property" is there included. It is not confined to real property. The argument is that the provision in this paragraph (which extends, as I have just stated, to proceedings other than in relation to transactions in real estate) is confined precisely to contracts for sale or lease and is an exhaustive code defining the jurisdiction of the county court in any proceedings which can be properly described as proceedings for specific performance. Counsel for the defendant points out that the present proceedings are, in truth, proceedings for specific performance, but, not being proceedings for the specific performance of an agreement for the sale, purchase or lease of any property, he argues that they are, therefore, outside the jurisdiction of the county court. That would, I venture to think, have a somewhat strange result. It would appear capricious that, by giving a jurisdiction, and it may be a wide jurisdiction, in some cases to grant specific performance of some types of contract, the legislature is thereby preventing the county court judge from ordering the specific performance of any other type of contract. What I have said as regards specific performance will, of course, apply equally to rectification. Thus, if this argument is right, it would not be possible to obtain in the county court the rectification of a commercial agreement which did not comprehend, or would not be properly described as an agreement for, the "sale, purchase or lease of any property," even though the claim in damages in a suit on the contract, as rectified or not rectified, was within the ambit of s. 40.

Section 52 (2) provides:

"In all such proceedings as aforesaid the judge shall, in addition to any other powers and authorities possessed by him, have all the powers and authorities for the purposes of this Act of a judge of the Chancery Division of the High Court."

That, of course, gives to the county court judge, in specific performance proceedings, the same right under Lord Cairns' Act, for example, as a Chancery judge would have in a proceeding in the Chancery courts.

The third section to which I must refer is s. 71, which comes under the cross-heading "Exercise of jurisdiction and ancillary jurisdiction," i.e., it appears to be directed to the way in which the jurisdiction already conferred can be exercised and to giving ancillary jurisdiction. The section reads thus:

"Every county court, as regards any cause of action for the time being within its jurisdiction, shall in any proceedings before it (a) grant such relief, redress or remedy or combination of remedies, either absolute or conditional . . . as ought to be granted or given in the like case by the High Court and in as full and ample a manner."

Paragraph (b) deals with defences and counterclaims. It seems to me that the apparently capricious result that might arise, if s. 52 stood alone and was not followed by s. 71, and if it has as a consequence to be construed in the way which counsel for the defendant suggests, is avoided by reading s. 71 together with those which precede it. It is, for example, by virtue of this section that a court, if asked in an action for breach of contract in the ordinary way to grant an injunction against, it may be, repeated breaches, is empowered to do so. It, therefore, seems to me that in any case in which the cause of action is brought within s. 40, then prima facie the court can, under s. 71, give any remedy that a high court judge could give in a similar action. It seems to me, further, that, if it can grant an ordinary injunction, the court can also make a mandatory order. As I have already said, the making of a mandatory order on a party to do a particular act which he has contracted to do is, in ordinary language and in the common sense of it, "specific performance" as it was prayed in this action. The possible conflict with s. 52 (1) (d) which that statement creates is, to my mind, resolved by having regard to the fact that s. 52 (1) is directed, not to particular remedies, but to particular types of proceedings which are well-known and definable in the Chancery courts, viz., proceedings for the administration of an estate or for the execution of a trust, the dissolution of a partnership and so forth, and for the specific performance of contracts for sale or lease. For some reason mortgages are not referred to, but I pass that over. "Proceedings for . . . the sale . . . of any property" in this context, I think, is clearly intended to relate to the type of proceeding, familiar in the old equity court, which gave rise to the old, and, it is true, somewhat complex, specific performance decree. Since that type of case is one in which, ex hypothesi, there would be no sum of damages claimed, it becomes necessary to provide a different means of defining the jurisdiction. It is for that purpose that reference is made to specific performance proceedings in s. 52 (1) (d). Though there may be overlap, it leaves the general proposition that, if you have an action for breach of contract in the ordinary way, not being a specific performance proceeding of the kind I have mentioned, then there is nothing which limits the right of the court under s. 71, provided the case is within the jurisdiction by virtue of s. 40, to grant any other kind of remedy that justice may require, including injunctions, whether such relief is sought in that form or by use of the term "specific performance."

I have tried to explain the way in which it seems to me these sections fit in together and, for the reasons I have stated, I think that the learned county court judge had the jurisdiction which he thought he had not got. Reading his judgment, as I do, as indicating that in the exercise of his discretion, though the act to be performed was that of doing a certain type of work, he would have granted the necessary order, had he the jurisdiction to do so, I think that the appeal should succeed and the necessary order should be made.

SOMERVELL, L.J.: I agree.

ASQUITH, L.J.: I also agree.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Gibson & Weldon, agents for W. B. Whitehead, Newcastle-under-Lyme (for the plaintiffs); Doyle, Devonshire & Co., agents for Abberley & Walker, Burslem (for the defendant).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re FIELD'S WILL TRUSTS. PARRY-JONES AND ANOTHER
v. HILLMAN AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Harman, J.), May 23, 1950.]

Will—Condition—Certainty—To J. “if he shall occupy my freehold property.”

A testatrix, who died in 1935, by her will devised her freehold house, “Saint Johns,” to W. during his life and after his death to J. if he should survive her and attain the age of twenty-five years. She also bequeathed certain chattels on trust to permit W. to have the use thereof during his life and, on his death, in trust for J. “if he shall attain the age of twenty-five years and shall occupy my freehold property ‘Saint Johns’ . . .” The testatrix also bequeathed a fund for the upkeep of “Saint Johns” on trusts similar to those to which the chattels were made subject. In September, 1944, J. died, having attained the age of twenty-five years, but never having occupied “Saint Johns.” In December, 1948, W. died.

HELD: the requirement that J. “shall occupy my freehold property” was a condition which was void for uncertainty, because it was impossible to ascertain the nature of the occupation necessary to fulfil it.

Re Coxen ([1948] 2 All E.R. 492), distinguished.

[AS TO UNCERTAINTY IN A WILL, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 34, pp. 109, 219-222, paras. 143, 274-277; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 44, pp. 440-444, 609-613, Nos. 2667-2687, 4366-4385, 4393-4400.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Maclaren v. Stainton, (1858), 27 L.J.Ch. 442; 30 L.T.O.S. 331; 44 Digest 958, 8109.
- (2) Martin Estates Co., Ltd. v. Watt & Hunter, [1925] N.I. 79; 31 Digest 557, 7045i.
- (3) Re Coxen, [1948] 2 All E.R. 492; [1948] Ch. 747; [1948] L.J.R. 1590; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (4) Re Wilkinson, [1926] Ch. 842; 95 L.J.Ch. 528; 135 L.T. 736; 44 Digest 442, 2678.
- (5) Sifton v. Sifton, [1938] 3 All E.R. 435; [1938] A.C. 656; 107 L.J.P.C. 97; 159 L.T. 289; Digest Supp.
- (6) Fillingham v. Bromley, (1823), Turn. & R. 530; 37 E.R. 1204; 44 Digest 442, 2675.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine whether, on the true construction of the will of Henrietta Frances Field and in the events which had happened, certain chattels and a fund of £6,000 bequeathed for the maintenance of the testatrix's dwelling-house were effectively bequeathed to John Popplewell Royle notwithstanding that he had not complied with a condition that he should occupy the said dwelling-house. It was argued on behalf of persons claiming through the said John Popplewell Royle that the condition was void for uncertainty. The facts and the relevant parts of the will are set out in the judgment.

Wilfrid Hunt for the plaintiffs, the trustees of the will.

Humphrey H. King for the first and second defendants, the trustees of a settlement made by John Popplewell Royle of the property in question.

E. B. Stamp for the third defendant, interested in remainder.

A. F. M. Berkeley for the fourth defendant, representing the residuary legatees.

HARMAN, J.: This is a question which arises on the will of Henrietta Frances Field who died in 1935. The plaintiffs are the trustees of her will, her estate having been fully administered. The first and second defendants are the assignees of one John Popplewell Royle, who was a beneficiary under the will. The third defendant, John Reginald Collett Stock, claims to be entitled under the will to certain property, which I will mention in a moment, on failure of a condition which, he says, was binding on John Popplewell Royle. The last defendant represents the residuary legatees under the will of the testatrix who will take in the event of the condition being good and not having been fulfilled and in the event of the failure of the bequest to Mr. Stock.

It is convenient to refer first to a specific devise in cl. 15 of the will whereby the testatrix gives her freehold house and grounds known as "Saint Johns," Haslemere, to her nephew, William Collett Royle, during his life—William Collett Royle duly inherited under that devise, and he lived until December, 1948—

"and from and after the death of my said nephew I devise the said house and grounds to the said John Popplewell Royle if he shall (1) survive me and have attained or shall attain the age of twenty-five years or (2) die in my lifetime leaving lawful issue who shall survive me or (3) survive me and die under the age of twenty-five years leaving such issue."

John Popplewell Royle died in September, 1944, having attained the age of twenty-nine years. He, therefore, fulfilled the first condition, which was that he should survive the testatrix and attain the age of twenty-five years, and his assignees take "Saint Johns," Haslemere on the death of his uncle William Collett Royle, notwithstanding that he died leaving that uncle surviving.

The bequest in cl. 2 of the will is of a number of chattels of a personal or domestic or garden use, belonging to the testatrix—and it is to be noted that she was resident, when she made her will, at "Saint Johns," so, presumably, they are the contents of "Saint Johns" and its grounds—except, she says, articles which, by reason of their trifling or perishable nature, the trustees shall consider unsuitable. In other words, she is making a bequest of chattels to go with the house,

"upon trust to permit my nephew William Collett Royle to have the use and enjoyment of the articles during his life and upon the death of my nephew in trust for my great nephew John Popplewell Royle if he shall attain the age of twenty-five years and shall occupy my freehold property 'Saint Johns' referred to in cl. 15 of this my will and if he shall die under the age of twenty-five leaving a child or children who shall attain twenty-one years then in trust for such child or children and if more than one in equal shares and if there shall be no such child then in trust for my great nephew John Reginald Collett Stock absolutely."

Clause 6 of the will contains a gift of a fund in these terms:

"In order to provide a fund for the upkeep of my freehold house 'Saint Johns' I bequeath to my trustees a legacy of £6,000 upon trust to invest the same in their names in some of the investments authorised by law and to hold the legacy and the investments upon trust to pay the income to William Collett Royle during his life and after his death as to both capital and income thereof in trust for my great nephew John Popplewell Royle if he shall attain the age of twenty-five years and shall occupy 'Saint Johns' and if the said John Popplewell Royle shall die under that age leaving a child or children who shall attain twenty-one then in trust for such child or children and if more than one in equal shares" but if there shall be no such child, for Mr. Stock.

So the chattels to go with "Saint Johns" and the fund are both left on the like conditions. There is no doubt that John Popplewell Royle satisfied the first, because he attained the age of twenty-five years; equally there is no doubt that he never was, in any sense of the word, in occupation of the property. Therefore, if the condition be a good one, he has failed to satisfy it and the property will go over, but it is said that the condition is a condition subsequent, and is too uncertain and so is void. It is said, on the other hand, that there is no doubt on the facts that John Popplewell Royle did not occupy this property because his uncle was alive during the whole of his life and his uncle was in occupation, and that one need not look any further, even though there might, in some other circumstances, have been doubts or difficulties about the exact nature of the condition which he had to fulfil. It is said that "occupation" means either rateable occupation or some kind of personal occupation entailing keeping the house furnished and occupied by agents or servants, and not let.

I am referred for that purpose to Maclaren v. Stainton (1). I am also referred to Martin Estates Co., Ltd. v. Watt & Hunter (2), but as that is a case under the Rent Restrictions Acts, I do not think I need bother with it. I am also referred to a recent decision of JENKINS, J., in Re Coxen (3) where he discussed at some length conditions of residence. The decision in that case depended on a condition that there should be a defeasance of the lady's estate if, in the opinion of the trustees, she had ceased to reside, and the judge, I think, in the end had no difficulty in finding that that was certain enough, because the court could tell what the opinion of the trustees was. It was not the court's opinion, but theirs, which mattered. Therefore, that case does not trouble me, except for certain observations which the learned judge made. He cites a case before TOMLIN, J., Re Wilkinson (4), where these words appear ([1926] Ch. 849):

"The fact that the language of the will is not uncertain has, of course, no necessary bearing upon the question whether when particular events have happened there may not be some difficulty in saying whether or not they fall within that which is contemplated by the will; but that is not a matter with which I have anything to do."

Is this a case, then, in which I can say that the event is certain enough, and that the fact that, in other circumstances, there might have been difficult questions to decide whether the event had happened or not, is not my concern? In my judgment, that is not this case. I think it is the event which is uncertain. What is meant, I ask myself, by the words "and shall occupy my freehold property"? Must it be a rateable occupation, must it be an occupation as a freeholder, as a lessee, as a weekly tenant, as a tenant at will, or as a sojourner overnight? Counsel for the residuary legatee says it must be occupied for a substantial period. There, as it seems to me, he points to the defect in his own case. What is "substantial"? This seems to me like the decision in Sifton v. Sifton (5) in the Privy Council, where LORD ROMER observed that the testator undoubtedly intended that his daughter should reside for a substantial portion of each year in Canada, but omitted to say how much he meant by "substantial." Here I feel that, this not being a condition that the estate shall last so long as the occupation lasts, but being a condition which, once there is occupation, is satisfied and the chattels and the money belong absolutely to the person who fulfils the condition, there must be a certainty ab initio as to what he must do in order to fulfil it. I am quite unable to say what, on the true construction of this will, would have been a sufficient occupation to entitle him to call on the trustees to hand over the chattels and the fund to him. That being so, and the condition being a condition subsequent, it seems to me that the condition is void and, as he attained twenty-five years, he became entitled both to the chattels and to the maintenance fund.

Declaration accordingly. Costs of all parties as between solicitor and client to be paid out of the fund of £6,000 bequeathed for the maintenance of the house.

Solicitors: Preston, Lane-Claypon & O'Kelly, agents for Reynolds, Parry-Jones & Crawford, High Wycombe (for the plaintiffs); Barnes & Butler, agents for Hillman & Sons, Salford (for the first and second defendants); Warren, Murton & Co., agents for Newman & Bond, Barnsley (for the third defendant); Field, Roscoe & Co. agents for Hallett & Co., Ashford, Kent (for the fourth defendant).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re MANDER (deceased). WESTMINSTER BANK, LTD. v.
MANDER AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Vaisey, J.), May 24, 26, 1950.]

Perpetuities—Charitable gift dependent on future uncertain event—Trustees directed to retain fund until such time as a candidate for the priesthood comes forward from a certain church.

A By her will, dated Dec. 13, 1945, a testatrix provided: "I wish during my lifetime to pay for the training for the priesthood of a candidate when one comes forward from St. Saviour's Church, St. Albans, Herts . . . but should I die before I have been able to fulfil this wish I direct my trustees to invest such sum in trustee securities as would be sufficient to train a candidate for the priesthood until such time as a candidate comes forward from St. Saviour's Church, St. Albans, aforesaid." On June 7, 1946, the testatrix died without having paid for the training of an ordinate.

B HELD: even if the gift were charitable, it was limited to take effect on a future event so remote and indefinite as to transgress the rule against perpetuities, and, therefore, it failed ab initio.

C Dictum of LORD SELBORNE, L.C., in Chamberlayne v. Brockett (1872) (8 Ch. App. 211), and Re Stratheden and Campbell (Lord) ([1894] 3 Ch. 265), applied.

[AS TO APPLICATION OF THE RULE AGAINST PERPETUITIES TO CHARITIES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 25, pp. 119-121, para. 215; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 8, pp. 325-327, Nos. 1078-1099.]

D Cases referred to:

- (1) Chamberlayne v. Brockett, (1872), 8 Ch. App. 206; 42 L.J.Ch. 368; 28 L.T. 248; 37 J.P. 261; 8 Digest 326, 1095.
- (2) Re Stratheden and Campbell (Lord), [1894] 3 Ch. 265; 63 L.J.Ch. 872; 71 L.T. 225; 8 Digest 257, 196.

E ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine whether on the true construction of the will of Violet Elizabeth Mander a direction to the trustees to invest such a sum in trustee securities as should be "sufficient to train a candidate for the priesthood until such time as a candidate should come forward from St. Saviour's Church, St. Albans," was a good and valid charitable trust for the purposes of training a candidate for the priesthood when such candidate should come forward from St. Saviour's, or whether the said gift was void.

F J. B. Richardson for the trustees of the will.
R. H. Walton for the first defendant, tenant for life of the residuary estate.
J. V. Nesbitt for the second defendant, the society for the Propagation of the Gospel entitled to an expectant interest in the residuary estate.
Denys B. Buckley for the Attorney-General.

G Cur. adv. vult.

May 26. VAISEY, J., read the following judgment. The testatrix in this case, Miss Violet Elizabeth Mander, died on June 7, 1946. Her will, dated Dec. 13, 1945, proved on Dec. 16, 1946, contains the following clause:

H "In memory of my sister Mary Emily Mander I wish during my lifetime to pay for the training for the priesthood of a candidate when one comes forward from St. Saviour's Church, St. Albans, Herts, aforesaid, but should I die before I have been able to fulfil this wish I direct my trustees to invest such sum in trustee securities as would be sufficient to train a candidate for the priesthood until such time as a candidate comes forward from St. Saviour's Church, St. Albans, aforesaid."

The general intention of the testatrix as expressed in that clause is reasonably clear, and I regret that I cannot hold that effect can be given to it.

It is clear that the testatrix had not in her lifetime fulfilled the wish to which the prefatory words of the clause refer. That preliminary difficulty having been surmounted, what follows so far as words go? Nothing but a direction to her trustees to invest a sum of an amount sufficient for the purpose indicated. Before the word "until" I must, in order to make any sense of it at all, insert some such words as "and to keep the same invested." Having done that, I must next assume that, when the moment indicated by the word "until" arises, the trustees are to sell the investments and use the proceeds for the training of a candidate for the priesthood. I think I know what a candidate for the priesthood is, but the requirement that he must come forward from a particular church is decidedly strange, and not, in my judgment, free from uncertainty. I am inclined to think, though I do not decide, that the education of one ordinate is a charitable purpose for the promotion of the Christian religion.

The chief difficulty appears to me to be the perpetuity rule. The coming forward of a candidate from St. Saviour's Church is an event which might not happen for many years or at all. What is to happen to the income in the meantime? The gift could only be valid if, the charitable nature of it being assumed, the appropriation of the sum to the indicated purpose is immediate and final. I do not think the testatrix had any such thought, and I should rather suppose that she would have meant the interim income to fall into residue.

I was pressed to follow the well known case of Chamberlayne v. Brockett (1), but there a general charitable intention was inferred on grounds which do not exist here. It seems to me that a short paragraph in the judgment of LORD SELBORNE, L.C., applies to the present case (8 Ch. App. 211):

" . . . if the gift in trust for charity is itself conditional upon a future and uncertain event, it is subject . . . to the same rules and principles as any other estate depending for its coming into existence upon a condition precedent. If the condition is never fulfilled, the estate never arises; if it is so remote and indefinite as to transgress the limits of time prescribed by the rules of law against perpetuities, the gift fails ab initio."

I am also guided, and I think bound, by the decision in Re Stratheden and Campbell (Lord) (2), where there was a bequest of an annuity "to be provided to the Central London Rangers (a volunteer corps) on the appointment of the next lieutenant-colonel." It was held that, as the appointment of the next lieutenant-colonel was an event wholly uncertain, the gift was void because it infringed the rule against perpetuities. Here, too, the coming forward, whatever that may mean, of a candidate from the particular church is a completely uncertain event, which may happen at some future date, unascertained and unascertainable, and may never happen at all.

With a good deal of regret, similar to the regret expressed by the learned judge in the case to which I have last referred, I must assume, and will declare, that this extremely ill drawn clause is wholly inoperative. The costs of all parties as between solicitor and client must be paid out of the estate of the testatrix in due course of administration.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Brash Wheeler, Chambers, Davies & Co. (for the plaintiffs); Smith & Hudson, agents for T. R. McCready, Plymouth (for the first defendant); Nicholl, Manisty, Few & Co. (for the second defendant); Treasury Solicitor.

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

BUTTLE AND OTHERS v. SAUNDERS AND ANOTHER.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Wynn-Parry, J.), April 27, 28, 1950.]

Trust and Trustee—Duty of trustee—Sale of property—Overriding duty to obtain best price—Negotiations in advanced stage—Higher purchase price offered by third party.

A When negotiations for the sale of property, which was held by trustees on the statutory trusts for sale, were in an advanced stage, the trustees received a higher offer from one of the beneficiaries, but they considered themselves bound by commercial morality to complete with the original purchaser, and, therefore, they refused the higher offer.

B HELD: although in such circumstances trustees had such a discretion as would allow them to act with prudence and it would redound to the credit of an ordinary vendor to close the deal with the original purchaser notwithstanding the receipt of a higher offer, trustees were not vested with such freedom, but had an overriding duty to obtain the best price for their beneficiaries; in the present case it was their duty to have probed the later offer and to have agreed to it on condition that the person making it bound himself immediately to complete the purchase at the higher price.

C [AS TO DUTY OF TRUSTEES ON SALE OF TRUST PROPERTY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 33, pp. 260-263, para. 462; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 43, pp. 910, 911, Nos. 3507-3518.]

D ACTION claiming inter alia an injunction to restrain the trustees of certain property, which was held on the statutory trusts for sale, from selling or agreeing to sell the property for any sum less than £6,500, or any greater sum offered by the first plaintiff for the purchase of the property.

E The plaintiffs were among those who were beneficially interested under the statutory trusts. By their counterclaim the trustees asked for the directions of the court in the matter and joined some of the other beneficiaries as defendants to the counterclaim. The trustees were negotiating the sale of the property to a Mrs. Simpson, and, when the negotiations were at an advanced stage, the first plaintiff offered to purchase the property at a higher price. The trustees refused his offer, feeling that they were bound by commercial morality to complete the sale to Mrs. Simpson. The facts appear in the judgment.

Miss B. A. Bicknell for the plaintiffs.

F Baden Fuller for the trustees.

R. L. Stone for beneficiaries other than the plaintiffs.

G WYNN-PARRY, J.: The defendants in this action are the trustees of premises, known as 15, Montpelier Square, Brompton, in the county of London, which they hold on the statutory trusts for sale under the provisions of the Law of Property Act, 1925, and the action is brought by some of the beneficiaries interested under those trusts claiming, inter alia, an injunction preventing the trustees from selling that property for the sum of £6,142 (which was the amount offered by a Mrs. Simpson), or for any sum less than £6,500, which the first plaintiff, Canon Buttle, was at all material times, and still is, willing to pay for the premises.

H In the summer of 1949 Mrs. Simpson, who was acquiring the leasehold interest in the property, the term of which will expire in 1956, heard that there might be a possibility of acquiring the freehold reversion, and instructed her solicitors, Messrs. Child & Child, to negotiate for it. The negotiations proceeded smoothly up to the point when the purchase price was agreed at £6,000. A draft contract was prepared and passed to Mrs. Simpson's solicitors, and Mrs. Simpson and her solicitors were agreeable to all the terms, except cl. 13, which provided that she should pay the vendors' costs. On Oct. 7, 1949, the trustees' solicitors, Messrs. Pedley, May & Fletcher, wrote to the beneficiaries, informing them of the proposed sale to Mrs. Simpson. On Oct. 19 Canon Buttle, one of the beneficiaries, called on Mr. Raisen, a partner in the firm of Pedley, May & Fletcher, and told him that he was interested, on behalf of a charity, in acquiring the premises in question. He was informed of the exact stage of the negotiations with Mrs. Simpson, and that the only difficulty was in regard to cl. 13 of the draft agreement dealing with the vendors' costs. Canon Buttle pressed Mr. Raisen to sell the property to him instead of to Mrs. Simpson, and, in the upshot, Mr. Raisen gave Canon Buttle a letter, which reads as follows:

A

"With reference to your call on us this afternoon, we confirm that we have received an application for the purchase of this house at the price of £6,000. If we receive an offer from you of £6,142 within forty-eight hours, we will advise our clients to accept it."

On Oct. 20 Mrs. Simpson's solicitors telephoned to Messrs. Pedley, May & Fletcher, saying that their client had now agreed to pay the vendors' costs. Later the same morning Canon Buttle called on Mr. Raisen, who informed him of that fact and expressed the view that the trustees could not very well withdraw from the negotiations with Mrs. Simpson, particularly as the amounts offered were equal and she had been first in the field. Canon Buttle made no suggestion at that meeting that he should offer any more for the property, although he continued to press that the house should be sold to him, and Mr. Raisen agreed to refer the matter to the trustees. On Oct. 26 Messrs. Pedley, May & Fletcher wrote to Canon Buttle informing him of the trustees' final decision in the matter, viz., that they had decided to sell the property to Mrs. Simpson. Immediately on receiving that letter on Oct. 27, Canon Buttle telephoned to Mr. Raisen and offered £6,500 for the property. By that time the negotiations with Mrs. Simpson's solicitors had progressed up to the point where the contract and the counterpart were being engrossed. Mrs. Simpson had signed her part, and one trustee had signed the other part. The matter was almost ready for completion. In those circumstances Mr. Raisen and the trustees felt in a position of great embarrassment. They felt in honour bound to proceed with the proposed sale to Mrs. Simpson, and no other motive appears to have actuated them. They communicated the increased offer that had been made to them to Mrs. Simpson's solicitors in a letter, dated Oct. 27, in which they expressed their own feelings in these terms:

B

C

D

E

"We ourselves feel that the matter has gone too far with your client for us to turn down her offer."

F

They then suggested that, in view of Canon Buttle's desire to acquire the property, Mrs. Simpson might perhaps be willing to abandon the idea of purchasing and some compensation might be paid to her. Legal proceedings against the trustees were threatened by Canon Buttle's solicitors in a letter dated Oct. 27, and in a letter dated Oct. 28, Messrs. Pedley, May & Fletcher said:

G

"Although contracts have not been exchanged with Mrs. Simpson, as the draft contract has been agreed and engrossed for signature we do not feel that the sale to Mrs. Simpson can be properly cancelled."

That sentence is a reiteration of the view, which they had expressed previously, that they were in honour bound, and they felt that all considerations of commercial morality required that they should proceed with the contract. They then said:

H

"We have no objection, and we imagine that our clients will have no objection, to your making an application to the court, if you so desire, for the court's direction as to what should be done, but this would have to be at your client's expense."

I do not set any weight on that latter phrase as to the incidence of costs, because the writer of that letter was, in effect, assuming the burden which is placed on the court to decide how the costs should be borne, but what I do extract from that paragraph is an intimation that the trustees could have no objection to the court's direction being sought. It was, however, taken as a threat, and the writ was issued on Nov. 1, 1949.

A The first claim in the statement of claim is for a declaration that the trustees are not entitled to sell the premises except for the best price reasonably obtainable. It is admitted by counsel for the trustees that that declaration, taken by itself, does no more than express the law, and it is not disputed that that is the duty cast on the trustees. The second claim is for a declaration that the trustees are bound to keep the plaintiffs informed of all offers to purchase the premises, and the third claim is for the injunction to which I have already referred. The trustees, by their defence, set out in some detail the events to which I have referred, and by para. 7 of their defence they say that they "do not now intend to sell the Montpelier premises except in such manner as the court may authorise." By their counterclaim they ask, in effect, for the directions of this court.

C It has been argued on behalf of the trustees that they were justified in the circumstances in not pursuing the offer made by Canon Buttle and in deciding to go forward with the transaction with Mrs. Simpson. It is true that persons who are not in the position of trustees are entitled, if they so desire, to accept a lesser price than that which they might obtain on the sale of property, and not infrequently a vendor, who has gone some lengths in negotiating with a prospective purchaser, decides to close the deal with that purchaser, notwithstanding that he is presented with a higher offer. It redounds to the credit of a man who acts like that in such circumstances. Trustees, however, are not vested with such complete freedom. They have an overriding duty to obtain the best price which they can for their beneficiaries. It would, however, be an unfortunate simplification of the problem if one were to take the view that the mere production of an increased offer at any stage, however late in the negotiations, should throw on the trustees a duty to accept the higher offer and resile from the existing offer. For myself, I think that trustees have such a discretion in the matter as will allow them to act with proper prudence. I can see no reason why trustees should not pray in aid the common-sense rule underlying the old proverb: "A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush." I can imagine cases where trustees could properly refuse a higher offer and proceed with a lower offer. Each case must, of necessity, depend on its own facts. In regard to the case now before me, my view is that the trustees and their solicitors acted on an incorrect principle.

F The only consideration which was present to their minds was that they had gone so far in the negotiations with Mrs. Simpson that they could not properly, from the point of view of commercial morality, resile from those negotiations. That being so, they did not, to any extent, probe Canon Buttle's offer as, in my view, they should have done. It was urged on me that, by pausing to probe his offer, they ran the risk of losing the contract with Mrs. Simpson. On the view of the facts which I take, I do not consider that that was much of a risk. Mrs. Simpson had bought the leasehold term, which was nearing its end, and she was a very anxious purchaser. Equally, Canon Buttle had demonstrated beyond a peradventure that he was a very anxious buyer, and, as it seems to me, the least the trustees should have done would have been to have said to him: "You have come on the scene at a late stage. You have made this offer well past the eleventh hour. We have advanced negotiations with Mrs. Simpson which can be concluded within a matter of hours. If you are really serious in your offer, you must submit in the circumstances to somewhat stringent terms, and you must be prepared to bind yourself at once to purchase the property for the sum of £6,500 on the terms, so far as applicable, of the draft contract which otherwise would be entered into with Mrs. Simpson." I have not the slightest doubt but that in the circumstances Canon Buttle would have agreed to those stringent terms and that the matter would have been carried out. The trustees, however, perfectly bona fide, maintained their attitude, qualified to this very important extent, that, if the canon decided to take the matter to the court, they would have no objection to having the court's directions. As the counterclaim asks that directions should be given by the court to the trustees, and that appears to me to be the proper way of dealing with the difficulty which has arisen, I do not propose to make any order in the action under paras. 1, 2 or 3 of the claim, although I express the view that the plaintiffs were entitled to start proceedings to arrest the further progress of the transaction with Mrs. Simpson. It follows that, as they were entitled to do that, they are entitled to have their costs provided for. Therefore, it appears to me that the fair order to make in this somewhat tangled matter is that the trustees shall pay the plaintiffs' costs of the action and are entitled to be indemnified, both as regards their own costs and the costs ordered to be paid to the plaintiffs, out of the proceeds of the sale of the property.

[The hearing proceeded on the counterclaim, for the most part in chambers. His LORDSHIP then heard Mrs. Simpson in open court.]

WYNN-PARRY, J.: There being a serious purchaser, I shall give the trustees liberty to sell to Mrs. Simpson for £6,600, that being the highest price offered.

Order accordingly. Costs of all parties, as between party and party, to be paid out of the proceeds of the sale of the property.

Solicitors: Stanley Wise & Co., agents for John F. Buttle, Woldingham (for the plaintiffs); Pedley, May & Fletcher (for the trustees and the beneficiaries other than the plaintiffs).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. T. W. LAW, LTD.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Romer, J.), May 16, 26, 1950.]

Excess Profits Tax—Computation of standard profits—"Working proprietors"—Director of company "owning" shares—Shareholding as joint owner—Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), s. 13 (2) (b) (as substituted by Finance Act, 1940 (c. 29), s. 31 (1)).

The Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939, s. 13 (2), as substituted by the Finance Act, 1940, s. 31 (1), provides that, in computing standard profits for the purpose of excess profits tax in the case of a trade or business carried on by a company, a minimum standard can be adopted according to the number of "working proprietors," i.e., any full time working director who owns more than one-twentieth of the share capital of the company. The directors of the respondent company were the widow and the two sons of a testator, and they worked full time in the conduct or management of the company's business. The company's capital was £1,500 divided into fifteen hundred shares of £1 each, and each director held in his own right five shares, the remainder—1,485 shares—being held by them on trusts declared by the will of the testator and under a deed of family arrangement for the widow for her life and thereafter for the two sons in equal shares. The trust shares were registered in the joint names of the three directors, the widow's name appearing first on the register, and by the articles of the company the voting rights in respect of the trust shares were exercisable by the first-named of the joint shareholders to the exclusion of the votes of the others. The company claimed that each of the widow and the two sons was the "owner" of the whole of the issued capital of the company, and that, therefore, the company was entitled to compute the standard profit on the basis of having three "working proprietors." The Crown did not admit that any of the three directors was a "working proprietor," but conceded that the widow should be so regarded.

A HELD: each of the sons owned an interest, commensurate with the interests of each of his co-trustees, in the entirety of the trust shares; an interest of that nature did not amount to ownership of the shares; and, therefore, neither of the sons was a "proprietor" within the meaning of s. 13 (2) (b) of the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (as substituted by s. 31 (1) of the Finance Act, 1940).

B [FOR THE FINANCE (NO. 2) ACT, 1939, s. 13 (2), AS AMENDED BY THE FINANCE ACT, 1940, s. 31 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 12, pp. 442, 443.]

Cases referred to:

(1) Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Bibby & Sons, [1945] 1 All E.R. 667; 114 L.J.K.B. 353; 173 L.T. 17; 29 Tax Cas. 167; 2nd Digest Supp.

(2) Re Glory Paper Mills Co., [1894] 3 Ch. 473; 63 L.J.Ch. 885; 71 L.T. 528; 9 Digest 90, 370.

(3) Grundy v. Briggs, [1910] 1 Ch. 444; 79 L.J.Ch. 244; 101 L.T. 901; 9 Digest 370, 2357.

CASE STATED by the Special Commissioners of Income Tax.

D The Special Commissioners found that each of the three directors of the respondent company, who were the joint holders of 1,485 shares out of a total of fifteen hundred shares issued by the company, was entitled to claim to be a "proprietor," within the meaning of s. 13 (2) (b) of the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939, as substituted by the Finance Act, 1940, s. 31 (1), by virtue of his or her name on the register of members notwithstanding that their respective holdings included shares registered in joint names. The Crown appealed against the finding of the commissioners, contending that none of the three directors was the owner of more than one-twentieth of the share capital of the company and accordingly none was a "proprietor." The relevant facts are set out in the judgment.

E Sir Andrew Clark, K.C., J. H. Stamp and R. P. Hills for the Crown.
J. Charlesworth (R. Rawden Smith with him) for the company.

Cur. adv. vult.

F May 26. ROMER, J., read the following judgment. This is an appeal by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue by way of Case Stated from a decision of the Special Commissioners who decided that each of the three directors of the respondent company ought properly to be regarded as a "working proprietor" for the purposes of s. 13 (2) (a) of the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939, as substituted by s. 31 (1) of the Finance Act, 1940.

G The facts were not in dispute before the commissioners and may be shortly stated. A Mr. T. W. Law, who died on May 5, 1930, had for many years carried on the business of a baker and confectioner. By his will he appointed his widow and his two sons to be the executors and trustees thereof and gave to them his residuary estate (which included the said business) on trust for his wife for life and thereafter for the testator's children in equal shares, and he empowered his trustees to carry on the said business as if they were beneficially entitled thereto. H In 1936 the three trustees decided to form a company to carry on the said business, and, accordingly, on Oct. 26 of that year, formed the respondent company to acquire and carry on the business. The company's capital was and is £1,500, divided into fifteen hundred shares of £1 each. The sale of the business to the company was effected on Nov. 4, 1936, in consideration of the issue to the trustees of the whole of the said share capital, fully paid. Article 17 of the company's articles of association provided that the qualification of every director should be the holding in his own right, and as sole holder, of at least five shares of any class or classes in the capital of the company.

The testator's widow and two sons were each allotted five shares in order to qualify them as directors of the company and the remaining 1,485 shares were registered in their joint names, the widow's name appearing first on the register. This arrangement was authorised by the beneficiaries under the testator's will by a deed of family arrangement dated Nov. 28, 1936, which also provided that the said trustees should hold the shares on the same trusts as were declared by the will in respect of the business and that they should have the same powers to carry on the company's business as they had possessed under the will in respect of the testator's business. A

Article 55 of Table A of sched. I to the Companies Act, 1929 [now art. 63 of Table A of sched. I to the Companies Act, 1948], applies to the respondent company and provides: B

"In the case of joint holders the vote of the senior who tenders a vote whether in person or by proxy, shall be accepted to the exclusion of the votes of the other joint holders; and for this purpose seniority shall be determined by the order in which the names stand in the register of members." C

At all material times the widow and the two sons worked full time in the conduct or management of the business.

For the purposes of computing standard profits the respondent company elected in favour of the minimum amount stated in s. 13 of the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939. For each of the chargeable accounting periods ending May 5, 1944, 1945 and 1946 respectively and for the chargeable accounting period ending Dec. 31, 1946, it was proposed to assess the respondent company to excess profits tax on the basis that two of the three directors of the company—namely, the two sons—were not "proprietors" within the meaning of s. 31 (1) (b) of the Finance Act, 1940. It was not admitted by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue that the widow, the third director, was a "proprietor" but, as a concession, having regard to the special circumstances of the case, the commissioners did not oppose the allowance of a minimum standard computed on the basis of treating the widow as a "working proprietor." D

It was contended before the Special Commissioners on behalf of the company that the widow and the two sons, although trustees, were the owners of the whole of the issued capital of the company and that each of them was the "owner" of the shares (namely, all the shares) in respect of which he or she appeared on the register of members and that they were "working proprietors" within the meaning of s. 13 of the Act of 1939 as substituted. This contention was accepted by the Special Commissioners and hence this appeal by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue who, while still adhering to the concession before referred to in favour of the testator's widow, argue that neither of the sons is a "proprietor" for the purposes of the section. Indeed, the Revenue say that in strictness the widow is not a "proprietor" either, inasmuch as the reference in s. 13 (2) of the Act of 1939 to "owning" share capital of a company means owning beneficially and not merely as a trustee. Beyond noting that LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN in Inland Revenue Comrs. v. J. Bibby & Sons, Ltd. (1) ([1945] 1 All E.R. 669) was prima facie disinclined to accept this view I do not propose to consider it further, for the concession to which I have referred and the fact that I am unable to accept the arguments advanced on behalf of the two sons which I have outlined make it unnecessary for me to do so. I, accordingly, approach the matter on the assumption that a person may "own" capital for the purposes of the section in a representative, as distinct from a beneficial, capacity. E F G H that the interest of each joint tenant is an interest in an undivided whole; and that, accordingly, it may fairly be said that in law each of the trustees owns the entirety of the trust holding. I am quite unable to accept this argument. The fact that a joint tenant has a legal interest in the entirety of the subject-matter of the joint tenancy seems to me to be far removed from the conception that each such tenant "owns" the subject-matter, whatever the meaning that may be attributed to the word "own."

On this assumption it was argued before me on behalf of the company that the sons and their mother were joint tenants of the trust holding of 1,485 shares;

A It is difficult to think of any act of ownership in relation to the shares that either of the sons can perform on his own. He cannot sell them, transfer them, mortgage them, or give a discharge to the company for dividends declared on them, nor can he exercise any control in respect of them, for the voting rights attached to the shares are exercisable primarily by the mother (a fact which may justify logically the discriminatory concession in her favour to which I have referred). If, then, a man is unable to perform any acts of ownership over or in relation to shares, how can it be said that he "owns" them? In my opinion, what each of the sons owns is neither the trust holding nor any ascertainable portion of it. What he does own is an interest, commensurate with the interests of each of his co-trustees, in the entirety of the trust shares, and that interest, in my judgment, is not within the scope of ownership prescribed by s. 13 of the Act of 1939. The result, would, indeed, be strange if the company's argument were to be accepted, for had the whole trust holding only just exceeded one-twentieth of the share capital of the company, the company would nevertheless have been able to rely on that holding as a sufficient foundation, not only for one, but for three individual working proprietors, a result which I cannot think was within the contemplation of the framers of the section.

D Counsel for the company sought to support or fortify the company's argument by the reasoning and conclusions in certain cases which relate to directors' qualification shares. The first of these is Re Glory Paper Mills Co. (2). In that case a gentleman named Dunster was a signatory to the memorandum of association of a certain company, and he signed for one hundred £10 preference shares. He also signed the company's articles of association, which named him as one of the first directors and provided that the qualification of a director should be the holding of shares of the nominal amount of £1,000 at the least. Dunster was a member of a firm which had been acting as agents in the formation of the company and were desirous of being appointed agents of the company. The directors and the firm agreed that the latter should take one hundred fully paid up shares and should be appointed agents of the company at a commission. The firm signed an application for the shares and they were allotted to them and they paid for them and were put on the register. The company did not call on Dunster to take one hundred shares in his own name, but treated the shares allotted to his firm as satisfying his signature to the memorandum and as his qualification as a director. Some years later the company was wound-up and the liquidator put Dunster on the list of contributories for one hundred shares in addition to the shares held by the firm. It was held by the Court of Appeal that there was only one agreement for taking one hundred shares and that Dunster's signature to the memorandum of association and the firm's application for shares were in performance of the same agreement, and that, therefore, the allotment of shares to the firm was a satisfaction of Dunster's signature of the memorandum and also of his qualification as a director. On the latter point LINDLEY, L.J., said ([1894] 3 Ch. 480):

"The articles say that the qualification of a director shall be the holding of 100 shares, and a director may act before he gets them. Mr. Dunster did hold the 100 shares, and there is nothing which requires him to hold them in his own name alone. If the company chooses to take the extra responsibility of his partner that does not matter."

LOPES, L.J., agreed, as also did DAVEY, L.J., who said (ibid., p. 482):

"I entirely agree with LINDLEY, L.J., that a man is none the less a holder of 100 shares because the company has the additional advantage of having another person joined with him, both of those joint holders being jointly and severally liable to the company."

In Grundy v. Briggs (3) part of a testator's estate consisted of 122 shares of £100 each in the capital of a company. After his death his executors (who were the testator's widow and three children) produced the probate at the company's offices and were registered as the joint holders of the shares, being described in the register as "the widow and co-executors of James Grundy deceased." Ten of these shares were subsequently transferred by the executors leaving 112 shares standing in their joint names. Later on, one of the executors (who personally owned five shares) was appointed a director of the company, whose articles provided (inter alia) that: "each of the directors shall be the registered holder of not less than twenty shares." For present purposes it is sufficient to state that a question arose whether the executor's joint holding of the 112 shares with his co-executors satisfied the requirement of the relevant article. EVE, J., held that it did. After pointing out, first, that the company's articles did not require its directors to hold their qualification shares in their own right and that its constitution contemplated that a man might be a director in a representative capacity, holding somebody else's shares, and, secondly, that a continuity of shareholders would, for the reasons indicated by the learned judge, be in the interests of the company, EVE, J., proceeded as follows ([1910] 1 Ch. 451):

"Was [the executor in question] the registered holder of not less than twenty shares at the moment when he, his mother, his brother, and his sister were jointly registered as holders of 112 shares? I think he was. I think if anybody had asked what [his] holding in the company was, or of what shares he was the registered holder, the reply must have been that he was the registered holder of five shares in his own name and of 112 shares in the joint names of his mother, his brother, his sister, and himself, and I think I should be really disregarding the explicit expression of opinion both by LINDLEY, L.J. and DAVEY, L.J., in Re Glory Paper Mills Co. (2) if I were to hold that this article has been so framed as to exclude the operation of that decision."

It seems to me that I can derive very little assistance in the present case from either of these decisions. They decide merely that in cases where a qualification clause does not require a director to hold his qualification shares in his sole name or in his own right then ordinarily a director who is on the register jointly with others in respect of the requisite number of shares sufficiently discharges his obligation to the company. In such a case he can be properly regarded as the holder or even the registered holder of the shares, but the reasons for this conclusion, as stated by the lords justices in Re Glory Paper Mills Co. (2) and adopted by EVE, J., in Grundy v. Briggs (3), afford little support, in my judgment, for the view that one joint holder of the shares is the owner of the shares and, for the reasons which I have already stated, I am clearly of opinion that he is not.

In my judgment, accordingly, this appeal should be allowed, and the matter remitted to the Special Commissioners with a direction that, in computing the assessments in question the minimum standard profits, as provided for by s. 13 of the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939, as substituted by s 31 (1) of the Finance Act, 1940, should be computed on the basis that neither of the two sons was a "proprietor" within the meaning of s. 31 (1) (b) of the Finance Act, 1940.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Solicitor of Inland Revenue (for the Crown); Hewitt, Woollacott & Choun, agents for Gibson (Chas. H.), Thompson & Gascoigne, Newcastle-on-Tyne (for the company).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

CURTIS v. MALONEY. R. CHEKE & CO. AND ANOTHER (Third Parties).

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Finnemore, J.), May 24, 1950.]

Execution—Sale by sheriff of goods seized—Title of purchaser—Rights of true owner of goods—Bankruptcy and Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1913 (c. 34), s. 15.

A A sheriff, in execution of a writ of fieri facias, seized a motor cabin cruiser in the possession of the execution debtor, and sold it by public auction. The sale had been advertised and no claim was made to the vessel before the sale. It subsequently appeared that the cabin cruiser had, in fact, belonged to C., who now claimed from the purchaser the return of the cabin cruiser or its value, and damages for its detention.

B HELD: on the true construction of the operative part of the Bankruptcy and Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1913, s. 15, the purchaser obtained a title good against the whole world; the terms of the proviso to the section must be construed as being subject to the enacting part of the section and thus preserving to C. whatever rights he had by action other than against the sheriff and the purchaser; and, therefore, the action failed.

C [AS TO TITLE OF PURCHASER FROM SHERIFF, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 14, p. 69, para. 116; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 21, pp. 515-518, Nos. 915-939.]

Case referred to:

(1) Jones Bros. (Holloway), Ltd. v. Woodhouse, [1923] 2 K.B. 117; 92 L.J.K.B. 638; 129 L.T. 317; 21 Digest 372, 1470.

D ACTION.

In 1948 the plaintiff left a motor cabin cruiser in the care of Messrs. V. Radley & Sons, boatwrights, who subsequently got into financial difficulties with the result that a judgment was obtained against them. In execution of a writ of fieri facias against Messrs. Radley & Sons the sheriff of Essex seized the boat, and on Jan. 25, 1949, by the sheriff's order it was sold by auction, no claim having been made to the sheriff by any third party in respect thereof. On Feb. 25, 1949, the plaintiff claimed the return of the boat from the purchaser, and on Mar. 30, 1949, he served the writ in the present action, claiming from the purchaser the return of the boat, or £450 its value, and damages for its detention. The purchaser relied on the Bankruptcy and Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1913, s. 15, and also brought in as third parties the sheriff and the auctioneers, against whom he claimed an indemnity under the Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935, s. 6, and, alternatively, damages for breach of the warranty implied by the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 12 (1).

Glyn-Jones, K.C., and Chedlow for the plaintiff.

P. H. R. Bristow for the defendant (the purchaser).

G Beresford, K.C., and Pensotti for the third parties.

FINNEMORE, J.: The first point which arises in this case is the construction of the Bankruptcy and Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1913, s. 15. It is by no means an easy matter, because the section is difficult to construe if one is to give full effect to everything which is in it, including what is commonly called the operative part of the section and the proviso thereto. The section provides:

H "Where any goods in the possession of an execution debtor at the time of seizure by a sheriff, high bailiff, or other officer charged with the enforcement of a writ, warrant, or other process of execution, are sold by such sheriff, high bailiff, or other officer, without any claim having been made to the same, the purchaser of the goods so sold shall acquire a good title to the goods so sold..."

It then goes on to say that no person shall be entitled to recover against the sheriff, high bailiff, or other officer, subject to certain provisions about notice. Then there is the proviso:

“ Provided that nothing in this section contained shall affect the right of any claimant who may prove that at the time of sale he had a title to any goods so seized and sold to any remedy to which he may be entitled against any person other than such sheriff, high bailiff, or other officer as aforesaid.”

The important parts for the purpose of this case are, first, the words “ the purchaser of the goods so sold shall acquire a good title to the goods so sold ” and, secondly, the proviso. It is argued for the plaintiff that the purpose of this section was to give protection to the sheriff, a protection which he had not enjoyed before, the courts of this country always having been jealous to guard the rights of owners of property and to preserve their rights against people who wrongfully disposed of their property. It is then argued that, that being the object and purpose of the section, the proviso leaves open every possible right to the true owner against everybody except the sheriff. It is argued that that includes a right against the innocent purchaser of the goods so sold to whom previously the section had purported to give a good title. On the other side, it is said that the proviso must be limited, because, if you construe it in the way for which the plaintiff contends, you destroy any meaning that could be given to the words relating to the acquisition of a good title by the purchaser of goods sold by the sheriff after seizure. The Act provides that the purchaser of the goods so sold shall acquire a good title. It is said that he cannot acquire a good title if the true owner can assert against him his better title and claim the goods which the purchaser bought from the sheriff.

There appears to be no authority on the point. A number of text books have been referred to, but the only one, I think it is fair to say, which gives a plain opinion on this matter is HALSBURY'S LAWS OF ENGLAND, Hailsham ed., vol. 14, p. 69, para. 116, where the writers say:

“ A sale by the sheriff is not a sale in market overt, but where any goods in the possession of an execution debtor at the time of seizure by the sheriff are sold by the sheriff without any claim having been made to them, the purchaser acquires a good title subject to the right of any person, who may prove that at the time of sale he had a good title to any of the goods, to any remedy to which he may be entitled against the purchaser.”

That is a plain expression of opinion by the writers of that title in favour of the argument contended for by the plaintiff. I do not think that GOODEVE ON PERSONAL PROPERTY, 8th ed., does any more than set out in the writer's own words the section, with the possible exception that on p. 496 he says:

“ This, however, does not affect the right of any claimant who proves that at the time of the sale he had a title to any goods so seized and sold to seek any remedy he may be entitled to against persons other than the sheriff or other officer concerned, for example, the judgment creditor.”

Of course, “ for example, the judgment creditor ” does not exclude the innocent purchaser, though it may be argued that, for what it is worth, it is an expression of opinion of the probable meaning of this proviso as not including the purchaser.

In Jones Bros. (Holloway), Ltd. v. Woodhouse (1) the true owners of some furniture proceeded against the execution creditor for the proceeds of the sale of their property as money had and received by him for their use, and it was held that the action was well founded. Doubt was expressed whether there was any estoppel and also how much of the money received by the judgment creditor could be recovered. Section 15 was not under review. While at first sight one might be surprised that, if the plaintiff's view of the section which is argued before me is right, the plaintiffs in Jones Bros. (Holloway), Ltd. v. Woodhouse (1) should have proceeded against the judgment creditor for money had and received, there may be many explanations of that. One obvious one is that the proceedings were more than a year after the sale. The sale was of articles of furniture, and it may well be that they had gone past recall, or were not worth claiming by the time that the proceedings were taken, but the plaintiff's

A counsel in argument seems to have assumed that there was no right against the purchaser. McCARDIE, J., in that case plainly states his view of the effect of this section. He says ([1923] 2 K.B. 126):

“By the Bankruptcy and Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1913, s. 15, where goods in the possession of an execution debtor at the time of seizure by the
B sheriff are sold by the sheriff without any claim having been made to them, the purchaser of the goods so sold is protected, and the sheriff is protected also, unless in either case he had notice or might have found that the goods were not the property of the execution debtor. It is reasonably clear from the section that it is not intended to interfere with the right of the true owner of the goods to recover their value from the execution creditor at whose C instance they have been seized.”

Again it has to be pointed out that the question which arises here was not argued in that case. I think, therefore, there is no authority which gives any real guidance, and I must do the best I can to give to this section a meaning which I think is the proper one.

It has been argued that, while the purchaser of the goods obtains a good title,
D that title cannot prevail against the true owner, because by the proviso the true owner is entitled to any remedy which he has against any person other than the sheriff or such officer. It is said that, had it been intended to protect the purchaser as against the true owner, nothing would have been more easy than to have put it in plain terms in the proviso. The conclusion to which I have come is that the section says in the plainest possible terms:

“... the purchaser of the goods so sold shall acquire a good title to the E goods so sold.”

I think a “good title” must mean a good title against everybody, including the person who might at a later date show that he had got a better title as being the F true owner. It then goes on to exempt from any liability the sheriff who has by his sale given that good title to the innocent purchaser. Then comes the proviso, and I think that “any claimant who may prove that at the time of sale he had a title to any goods”

G includes the true owner. The proviso reserves to him any remedy to which he may be entitled against anybody other than the sheriff. I think, however, that it must be read subject to the original enactment that the purchaser of the goods so sold shall acquire a good title. Otherwise the proviso contradicts that part of the section, and renders it meaningless, and I do not think it is necessary to read it in that sense.

H I think the purpose and object of this section is, first, to protect the innocent purchaser who buys from the sheriff; secondly, to protect the sheriff against any action against him; and, thirdly, to preserve to the true owner whatever other rights he has by action against anybody except the sheriff. It is probably right to say that the true owner did not need any provision in this section to be able to pursue his right for money had and received against the judgment creditor, but one can understand that in a section of the nature of s. 15 there might well be an express proviso to preserve all other rights than against the purchaser or the sheriff. I have come to the conclusion, therefore, that the plaintiff is not entitled to sue the defendant in detinue as he has done, and his action against the defendant fails.

Judgment for the defendant against the plaintiff with costs. Judgment for the third parties against the defendant with costs.

Solicitors: R. I. Lewis & Co. (for the plaintiff); White & Leonard, agents for H. M. Pinney, Hornchurch (for the defendant); Patersons, Snow, Coe's & Kearsley's, agents for Gepp & Sons, Chelmsford (for the third parties).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

BORTHWICK-NORTON AND OTHERS v. COLLIER.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., Somervell and Asquith, L.J.J.), May 22, 23, 24, 1950.]

Requisition—Land—Compensation—Right of owner to compensation—Formal claim made by lessee—"Owner"—Computation of rackrent—Regard to restrictive covenants in lease—Date at which rackrent to be computed—Compensation (Defence) Act, 1939 (c. 75), s. 2 (3), s. 11, s. 17 (1)—Public Health Act, 1936 (c. 49), s. 343 (1).

The plaintiffs were the ground lessors of premises let to the defendant's (the tenant's) predecessor in title under a long lease dated July 30, 1934, at a rent of £150 per annum. The lease contained a full repairing covenant and was subject to restrictions as to user. At the time of the lease the rent obtainable on a yearly tenancy was £180 per annum. On Mar. 30, 1944, the premises were requisitioned and the requisition ended on Feb. 28, 1948. The tenant, in his own name, made a claim within the six months period prescribed by s. 11 of the Compensation (Defence) Act, 1939, for compensation for damage caused during the requisition. The amount of the compensation was agreed, and authorisation was given for its payment by the requisitioning authority, but, as both the lessors and the tenant claimed to be entitled to the compensation, the authority interpleaded, and the issue was tried before HILBERY, J., who found for the lessors. On appeal, the tenant contended that the lessors were not entitled to the compensation because they had not made a claim within the period prescribed by s. 11; that they were not the "owners" within s. 2 (3) and s. 17 (1) of the Act as they were not receiving the rackrent of the premises calculated as at the time of the de-requisition; and that the restrictive covenants contained in the lease should be disregarded in assessing the rackrent.

HELD: (i) if a claim to compensation were properly put forward within the prescribed time by a tenant or some other person properly interested, an owner was not barred by s. 11 from claiming the compensation although the claim to it had not been made by him or on his behalf; the Landlord and Tenant (Requisitioned Land) Act, 1944, s. 1 and s. 2, gave a tenant who had paid for repairs rendered necessary by a requisition a remedy over against the actual recipient of the compensation money and so the tenant in the present case had a locus standi to put forward the claim; and the lessors were not precluded from claiming the compensation.

(ii) when the court had to consider whether a rent was a rackrent it must have regard to restrictive covenants in the lease.

(iii) "rackrent" in the definition of "owner" given in s. 17 (1) of the Act meant a rent which was a rackrent at the date when the lease was granted and not one which was necessarily still a rackrent at the date of de-requisition; the rent receivable by the lessors was a rackrent at the date of the lease; and, therefore, the lessors were the "owners" within s. 2 (3) of the Act and entitled to receive the compensation.

[FOR THE COMPENSATION (DEFENCE) ACT, 1939, s. 2 (1) (b) (3), s. 7, s. 11 and s. 17, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 3, pp. 990, 1000, 1002, and 1005; and FOR THE LANDLORD AND TENANT (REQUISITIONED LAND) ACT, 1944, s. 1, s. 2, and s. 3, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 13, pp. 972, 973.]

A APPEAL from a decision of HILBERY, J., dated Mar. 14, 1950, whereby it was held that the plaintiffs as lessors were entitled to receive the compensation payable in respect of the requisitioning of premises situate at No. 6, Somers Crescent, Paddington, of which the defendant was lessee. After the premises B had been de-requisitioned the defendant made a claim under the Compensation (Defence) Act, 1939, s. 11. The claim was admitted and the damage quantified, but, as both the plaintiffs and the defendant claimed to be the owner of the premises within s. 17 of the Act, the requisitioning authority, the London County Council, declined to pay until the dispute was settled. In an action by the plaintiffs against the defendant the county council interpleaded, and it was C ordered that the issue between the parties should be tried and the compensation money paid into court to abide the result. HILBERY J., gave judgment for the plaintiffs, and the defendant appealed. The facts appear in the judgment of SOMERVELL, L.J.

Sir Shirley Worthington-Evans for the plaintiffs.

D H. J. Astell Burt for the defendant.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSLED, M.R.: I will ask SOMERVELL, L.J., to deliver the first judgment.

E SOMERVELL, L.J.: This is an appeal from a judgment of HILBERY, J., on an interpleader issue which arose in the following circumstances. The appeal is concerned with premises at No. 6, Somers Crescent, London. On F July 30, 1934, the plaintiffs, Paddington Estates Trustees, who were the owners of those premises, granted a lease of them to Brigadier-General Lloyd, the rent payable under that lease being £150 per annum. On Mar. 30, 1944, the house was requisitioned by the Ministry of Works. Later, the requisitioning powers were transferred to the London County Council and were exercised by them. On Feb. 28, 1948, No. 6, Somers Crescent, was de-requisitioned. G On Mar. 12, 1948, Brigadier-General Lloyd assigned his lease to Mr. Collier, the defendant, who is one of the parties to the present interpleader issue. As a result of the requisitioning certain rights to compensation arose. There was a rental payable during the period of requisition with which we are not particularly concerned, though it was referred to in connection with one of the issues raised. There is statutory provision, and it is on this that the case turns, with regard to compensation for making good damage done to the premises H during the requisitioning period. The defendant put in a claim in respect of the damage under the Compensation (Defence) Act, 1939, s. 11. That claim was agreed in amount, and the question was then raised whether under the Act it was payable to the defendant or to the plaintiffs? That is the issue in these proceedings. The London County Council interplead.

Before I go into the history I will refer to the Compensation (Defence) Act, 1939. The section we are concerned with is s. 2 (1) which provides:

"The compensation payable under this Act in respect of the taking possession of any land shall be the aggregate of the following sums, that is to say . . . (b) a sum equal to the cost of making good any damage to the land which may have occurred during the period for which possession thereof is so retained (except in so far as the damage has been made good during that period by a person acting on behalf of His Majesty), no account being taken of fair wear and tear or of damage caused by war operations."

Sub-section (3) is:

"Any compensation under para. (b) of sub-s. (1) of this section shall accrue due at the end of the period for which possession of the land is retained in the exercise of emergency powers, and shall be paid to the person who is then the owner of the land."

Section 7 reads:

"Any dispute as to whether any compensation is payable under this Act, or as to the amount of any compensation so payable, shall, in default of agreement, be referred to, and determined by, the appropriate tribunal constituted under the following provisions of this Act, and the decision of that tribunal shall be final: Provided that . . ."

and then there is a provision for a Special Case to be stated on any question of law. Section 11 says:

"No claim for any compensation under this Act shall be entertained unless notice of the claim has, in such form and manner as may be prescribed, been given to the prescribed authority within the period of six months, or such longer period as the Treasury may, either generally or in relation to any particular claim or class of claims, allow, beginning in either case with the date on which the compensation accrues due or the date of the passing of this Act, whichever is the later."

By s. 17 (1):

"'Owner' means (a) in relation to land, the person who is receiving the rackrent of the land, whether on his own account or as agent or trustee for any other person, or who would so receive the rackrent of the land if it were let at a rackrent . . . and in this definition the expression 'rackrent' has the same meaning as in the Public Health Act, 1936."

I will come back to the definition in the Public Health Act, 1936, later when I deal with that issue, because I propose to deal with the points raised by counsel for the defendant in the order in which he made them.

I will also refer to the Landlord and Tenant (Requisitioned Land) Act, 1944. It would appear to have been thought in 1944 that, if the Act of 1939 were left as it was, tenants might not get the rights in respect of compensation for damage done to which, having regard to the terms of their leases, it might be thought they were entitled. If, for instance, the damage was done in respect of repairs which the tenant, under his lease paying a rackrent, was liable to do, could the landlord get the compensation and insist on the tenant carrying out his covenant? That obviously would have been unjust. A tenant might, when the requisition was over, have found the premises in a very bad state and he might himself have carried out some repairs to make it habitable—repairs for which, it was shown on investigation, the requisitioning authorities were liable. It would seem wrong if in those cases the tenant had no right to be reimbursed and that the landlord should get and keep the money. The matter engaged the attention of Parliament, and the first two sections of the Landlord and Tenant (Requisitioned Land) Act, 1944 dealt with it. Section 1 (1) modifies the obligations under repairing covenants in respect of damage which occurs during a requisition of leaseholds where the landlord has got the compensation money, so that he does not in effect get relief twice over. Section 2 gives a tenant who has made good damage in respect of which compensation is paid to the landlord the right to recover from the landlord the money he has spent up to the proportion of the compensation referable to the damage which he has repaired.

The requisition in the present case having ceased on Feb. 28, 1948, on Mar. 18, 1948, the defendant put in a claim in the prescribed form within six months. Therefore, on the face of it, the provisions of s. 11 were satisfied. The actual figure was agreed, there being a sum in respect of surveyor's fees and a sum in respect of damage. The district surveyor made a report and the payment was authorised. Then the solicitor to the London County Council took the point that under the provisions of the Act of 1939 the amount must be payable to the owner, who is the person entitled to receive the rackrent. He asked the defendant for his title and the matter was examined. The authorities took the view that the plaintiffs were the owners under the Act, and, therefore, their consent to payment to the defendant should be obtained. The plaintiffs were communicated with and there was a suggestion that the money might be deposited in joint names and drawn on in favour of the defendant if he satisfied the plaintiffs that he had done repairs in respect of which compensation had been paid. However, nothing came of that. The defendant made his claim against the county council, the council interpleaded, and the plaintiffs were made plaintiffs in the interpleader proceedings. The surveyor's fees, £55 7s. 9d., which the defendant had paid, were paid to him. The plaintiffs made no claim in respect of them, and they pass out of the picture. The interpleader order reads as follows:

"Whereas the above-named the trustees of the Paddington Estate affirm and the above-named Francis Howard Collier denies that the fund of £1,128 18s. 7d. now in court to the credit of this action . . . and for the recovery whereof the said Francis Howard Collier lately commenced an action against the London County Council is payable to the said the trustees of the Paddington Estate and not to the said Francis Collier and that the costs of the London County Council directed to be deducted as in the master's said order are payable by the said Francis Howard Collier and not by the said the trustees of the Paddington Estate And it has been ordered by the order of Master Horridge dated Mar. 9, 1949 that the said issue shall be tried at Middlesex by a judge alone and be entered in the long non-jury list."

The first point taken by counsel for the defendant was that the plaintiffs can make no claim here because they made no claim on the prescribed form within the six months provided for by s. 11. He said that they cannot rely on the defendant's claim in any way, that it was not made on their behalf, that they had no knowledge of it, that the defendant did not purport to act as their agent, and, indeed, the subsequent proceedings show that that was the last position in which he intended to put himself. Therefore, it was submitted, the plaintiffs cannot succeed. HILBERY, J., dealt with that in this way:

"The defendant's counsel's next contention was that the plaintiffs' claim in this issue was a claim to compensation, and was not made within the time or in the form prescribed by the Act. He relied on the words of s. 11 of the Act. The answer to this seems to me to be that s. 11 is intended to apply to the claim to compensation made under s. 2. That claim was already disposed of and the amount of it settled by agreement before this issue was directed to be tried by this court. The party made plaintiffs in this issue are not claiming compensation under s. 2, but are claiming to be the party to whom the amount of compensation, as quantified when the claim for compensation was made, has to be paid according to the express direction given in the Act. That is a claim which is quite distinct from the claim for compensation to be made in the form and on the form prescribed by the Act. That contention, therefore, likewise fails."

I agree with that and it seems to me in accordance, not only with the wording of the Act, but with common-sense. The object of a short period of limitation is clearly that, if a claim for compensation for damage under s. 2 is going to be made, it is only right and proper that it should be made promptly in order that the requisitioning authorities shall have a chance of seeing what has been damaged. If there was a delay, it might be very difficult to prove what damage had been done during the requisitioning period and what damage had been done since. That was fulfilled in the present circumstances by the claim being put forward by the defendant, and it seems to me that s. 11 is satisfied if a claim is put forward by a tenant, or by someone properly interested if there is someone other than a tenant who might be in that position—I am thinking of someone at the moment apart from the owner—and the matter is properly investigated and the damage considered, and the amount, as in this case, quantified. The matter did not have to go to the tribunal. The fact that the Act provides that the compensation is to be paid to the owner does not seem to me to affect the matter. The claim has been made, the compensation has been assessed, and “X” comes forward and says: “I am the owner.” In my view, provided the claim is properly put forward, an owner is not barred by s. 11 because he did not himself, in his own name, put forward a claim within the six months. Therefore, I think, that point fails. It was pointed out towards the end of the argument by SIR RAYMOND EVERSLED, M.R., that, even if it might arise in certain cases, it would be very difficult to regard it as a good point here where the county council have paid the money into court. That being so, it must be for the court to decide, there being this sum of compensation due under s. 2 (1), which is the party to whom it should be paid. I also think that the sections of the Landlord and Tenant (Requisitioned Land) Act, 1944, to which I have referred, give a tenant a locus standi to put forward the claim. So far as that is concerned, therefore, I think that point fails.

The second point is this. I have read the definition in s. 17 (1) which provides that for the purposes (inter alia) of s. 2 (3) “owner” in relation to land, means the person receiving the rackrent. Section 18 (1) goes on to provide:

“ . . . and in this definition the expression ‘rackrent’ has the same meaning as in the Public Health Act, 1936.”

The Public Health Act, 1936, s. 343 (1) provides:

“ ‘rackrent’ in relation to any property means a rent which is not less than two-thirds of the rent at which the property might reasonably be expected to let from year to year, free from all usual tenant’s rates and taxes, and tithe rentcharge (if any), and deducting therefrom the probable average annual cost of the repairs, insurance and other expenses (if any) necessary to maintain the same in a state to command such rent.”

That definition seems to me to proceed on this basis. First, a figure is assumed on a lease from year to year under which the landlord would do the repairs necessary to maintain the property in a state to command the rent. Having arrived at that figure, there must be deducted from it the average annual cost of the repairs, insurance and other expenses necessary to maintain the property in a state to command the rent. A figure is then arrived at, and the rackrent is two-thirds or more of the figure so obtained. Counsel for the defendant submits that the plaintiffs did not establish that, as at the date of requisitioning, they were receiving the rackrent. On that there are two points, and HILBERY, J., dealt with both of them. The first point is: Is it sufficient that the sum payable under the lease granted in 1934 amounted to a sum within the definition of rackrent in s. 343 (1) of the Public Health Act, 1936, considering the circumstances existing at the time when the lease was granted, or is it necessary to consider whether the figure is within the definition in the circumstances as they existed when the requisition ended, which might lead to a different result one way or the other, as the value of the property might have gone up or down? HILBERY, J., decided that it was sufficient if the rent was within the definition at the time when the lease was granted. There is a second point under this lease. The premises were to be let as a single dwelling. Clause 2 (1) of the lease provides that the tenant

“will not use or permit to be used the demised premises or any part thereof for any illegal or immoral purpose nor for or as a hospital or charitable institution or for the teaching of singing or music of any sort nor for any trade business manufacture or profession whatsoever but will keep and use the demised messuage as and for a single private dwelling-house in one occupation only with any area yard or ground therewith demised as and for private ground in connection with the demised messuage only.”

When considering whether the rent which is being received is a rackrent, is it necessary to consider the restrictive covenants in the lease? There was a suggestion that it was necessary to consider what rent would be paid by somebody who was prepared to spend hundreds or thousands of pounds in converting the premises into flats. That, I think, clearly must be ruled out, because the definition is based on a lease from year to year, but it is possible to imagine a lease in all respects similar to this except that the lessee could use the house for a trade, business, or profession, or for the teaching of singing or music. It may be that, if these restrictions were removed, the property would fetch a larger rent, either in 1934 or in 1948, than the sum which was, in fact, paid, but it seems to me that in applying this definition and considering whether a rent is a rackrent, the court must have regard to the restrictive covenants in the lease. They must have regard to the premises as they are.

It would be, I think, an absurd position if, for instance, in an obviously residential neighbourhood with a rent obviously a rackrent for the premises as a private residence, the court was compelled to say that it was not a rackrent because a much larger figure might have been got if the house had been let with power to use it as a shop. I do not think that such of the evidence as was called in regard to what might be got for this house, apart from the restrictive covenants in the lease, has any relevance to the issue we have to decide. If the 1934 rent is taken, counsel for the defendant agreed, the evidence called for the plaintiffs (which on this issue the learned judge preferred to that called for the defendant) was conclusive. That evidence was that the tenant at that time had had a previous lease from the same estate. He surrendered some years at the end of his lease, and he had done some improvements to the house. That sort of negotiation is common and the evidence was that on the office records, which were not in dispute, the rent obtainable on a yearly tenancy was recorded as £180. By reason of the surrender of the remaining years of the earlier lease and because of the improvements which had been done to the house, the tenant was charged £150. As it was a full repairing lease, the deduction contemplated by the definition had already been done. Therefore, £150 being more than two-thirds of £180, it is a rackrent within the definition. HILBERY, J., indicated that, if he had to consider the later date, he also found that the rent was a rackrent. He put it in this way:

“In support of these last contentions, evidence was called to establish, if possible, (a) that, if freshly let on Feb. 28, 1948, for single occupation, the rent obtainable would have been very much higher than the £150 per annum reserved by the existing lease. The evidence called by the defendant failed to satisfy me of this as a matter of fact. I prefer the evidence called by the plaintiffs, and, relying upon it, decide this point against the defendant.”

Counsel for the defendant complains first of all that the judge was dealing with the evidence of a single occupation, and I have given my reasons for thinking he was right in so restricting himself. Then he criticised the expression “very much higher,” which is, undoubtedly, a vague phrase. It would be necessary that it should be a figure, two-thirds of which was more than £150, so that it would have to be a good deal higher. The general effect of the evidence was that the position was, if anything, worse in 1948 than it was in 1934. Having read the evidence, I think the respondents have established that at the date when the requisition ceased they were the persons receiving a rack-rent within the definition. In those circumstances, therefore, the plaintiffs make out their case, and there should be an order for payment out to them of the sum in court, and the appeal should be dismissed.

ASQUITH, L.J.: I agree. The appeal raises two questions—(i) Was notice of the claim given within the time limit and otherwise in accordance with the terms of s. 11 of the Compensation (Defence) Act, 1939? and (ii) if s. 11 was complied with, who was the “owner” to whom under s. 2 (3) the compensation fell to be paid? On the second of these issues I do not wish to add anything to what SOMERVELL, L.J., has said. On the first I venture to add two or three sentences. The defendant’s argument under this head, as I understand it, is that, even if the plaintiffs were the “owners” at the material time, the notice of claim which s. 11 requires to be given within six months is a notice which has to be given by them—the owners—or on their behalf and no such notice was given by them or on their behalf within those time limits or at all. It is, indeed, abundantly plain that notice was given within six months by the defendant, that this was the only notice given, and that he gave it on his own behalf only. The defendant’s submission under this head would have been difficult to resist if s. 11 had provided that the notice must be given by the owner or the person who ultimately turns out to be the owner, but the Act nowhere does this. It nowhere identifies the claimant under s. 11 with the owner, and I cannot see that any such identification must be implied. There is nothing absurd in a provision that if due notice of a claim is given by “X,” so that its merits and quantum can be ascertained, then, when its merits have been ascertained and compensation has been assessed, the compensation should be paid to such person as turns out to be entitled to it, even though that person is not “X” but “Y.” Indeed, this is what I think the Act says. The result in some cases may be that “Y” reaps the benefit of an act done neither by him nor on his behalf, but that does not seem to me a fatal objection to the construction suggested, nor necessarily the final result of adopting such a construction. It is not a fatal objection to the construction in question, because the object of the Act is to discover (a) whether compensation is due, and, if so, how much, and (b) to whom it should be paid, and for this purpose it is not necessary that the person lodging the claim and the person receiving the compensation should be identical. Nor is it necessarily the result of so construing the Act that money claimed by “A” should go finally and irrevocably to “B,” for “B,” though the immediate recipient, may well not be the final depository of the funds or of all of them. Section 2 (1) of the Landlord and Tenant (Requisitioned Land) Act, 1944, clearly envisages and provides for a case where compensation for damage has been paid to “Y,” who is not the tenant, yet the tenant incurs expenditure in making good the damage, and in such a case the tenant is given a remedy over against the actual recipient of the compensation money. Those and similar provisions in the Act of 1944 seem greatly to mitigate the injustice which at first sight might seem to result from “Y” being entitled to reap where “X” has sown. For these and the other reasons given by SOMERVELL, L.J., I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSLED, M.R.: I also am of the same opinion and do not wish to add anything to the observations which have fallen from my brethren, with which I entirely agree.

Appeal dismissed. Order for payment of compensation money to plaintiffs.

Solicitors: Trower, Still & Keeling (for the plaintiffs); Blount, Petre & Co. (for the defendant).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. FULHAM, HAMMERSMITH AND KENSINGTON RENT
TRIBUNAL. Ex parte PHILIPPE.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Parker, JJ.),
May 15, 16, 26, 1950.]

Rent Control—Rent tribunal—Certiorari—Rental equivalent—Determination—Premium—Payment to lessor for work done to premises—Payment to lessor of half profit on assignment of lease—Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949 (c. 40), s. 1 (5), s. 18 (2), sched. I, Part I, para. 1.

Under the terms of a five years' lease, dated May 14, 1947, a tenant covenanted to pay to the landlord a sum of £180 in respect of specified works of reconstruction and decoration of the premises which had been commenced by the landlord. This work was later done, and the tenant paid to the landlord the sum of £180. The tenant subsequently surrendered the original lease and was granted, at his request, a fourteen years' lease. In consideration of the landlord's agreement to grant that lease, the tenant undertook to pay to the landlord one half of any profit which he might make by assigning the lease. On Oct. 15, 1947, the tenant sold the lease for £650, and the landlord agreed to the assignment on payment by the tenant of £221, being half the profit made by the tenant on the sale. In 1949, on an application by the assignee, the rent tribunal determined the standard rent of the premises, certified that the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, sched. I, Part I, para. 1, which relates to the payment of premiums, applied to the two sums of £180 and £221, and determined the rental equivalent of those two sums at £7 3s. 2d. a quarter. On an application by the landlord to bring up and quash the certificate and determination of the rent tribunal, the preliminary point was taken on behalf of the tribunal that where a tribunal had jurisdiction under s. 1 of the Act of 1949 to determine the rent, the fact that they wrongly came to the conclusion that a premium had been paid, and, as a result, reduced the rent, did not enable the court to grant an order of certiorari.

HELD: (i) although the power of a tribunal to fix the rental equivalent of a premium only arose on an application under s. 1, certiorari would lie in respect of a decision of a tribunal wrongly determining the rental equivalent of a payment which was not a premium since (a) the jurisdiction of the tribunal to determine the standard rent and their jurisdiction to determine the rental equivalent of a premium were separate jurisdictions, to the erroneous exercise of either of which certiorari was applicable, and (b) notwithstanding the words "where . . . it appears to the tribunal that . . . a premium has been paid" in para. 1, Part I, of sched. I, it must not merely appear to the tribunal that a premium has been paid, but a premium must actually have been paid in order to found the jurisdiction of the tribunal to determine the rental equivalent of a premium.

Observations of LORD ESHER, M.R., in R. v. Income Tax Special Purposes Comrs. (1888) (21 Q.B.D. 319), applied.

(ii) the sum of £180 being a payment in respect of work done by the landlord was not a "pecuniary consideration in addition to rent" within the definition of "premium" in s. 18 (2) of the Act of 1949, but the sum of £221, having been paid in consideration of the grant of the second lease to the first tenant, was a premium for the purposes of para. 1, Part I of sched. I, although it was not paid at the time of the grant of the lease and would never have become payable if the tenant had assigned the lease at a profit. Since, by reason of that payment, the tribunal had jurisdiction to grant a certificate that Part I of sched. I applied, that certificate was valid, but the determination of the rental equivalent of the two sums of £180 and £221 must be quashed.

[FOR THE LANDLORD AND TENANT (RENT CONTROL) ACT, 1949, s. 1 (5), 2 (1), 6 (1), 18 (2), Sched. I, paras. 1, 2 (1), 8, 10 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 13, pp. 1095, 1097, 1110, 1111, 1114.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) R. v. Minister of Health, Ex p. Glamorgan County Mental Hospital (Committee of Visitors), [1938] 4 All E.R. 32; 102 J.P. 497; sub nom., R. v. Minister of Health, [1939] 1 K.B. 232; 108 L.J.K.B. 27; 159 L.T. 508; Digest Supp.
- (2) R. v. Income Tax Special Purposes Comrs., (1888), 21 Q.B.D. 313; 53 J.P. 84; sub nom., R. v. Income Tax Special Comrs., Ex p. Cape Copper Mining Co., Ltd., 57 L.J.Q.B. 513; 59 L.T. 455; 2 Tax Cas. 332; 28 Digest 97, 580.
- (3) R. v. Hampstead and St. Pancras Furnished Houses Rent Tribunal, Ex p. Ascot Lodge, Ltd., [1947] 2 All E.R. 12; [1947] K.B. 973; [1947] L.J.R. 1003; 176 L.T. 560; 111 J.P. 349; 2nd Digest Supp.

MOTION by the landlord, Felicie May Philippe, for an order of certiorari to bring up and quash a certificate and determination of the Fulham, Hammersmith and Kensington Rent Tribunal, dated Dec. 9, 1949.

The landlord was the freeholder of premises the standard rent of which had been determined by the tribunal under the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, on an application by the assignee of the lease of the premises. The tribunal had also certified that Part I of sched. I to the Act of 1949 applied and had determined that two payments made to the landlord by the original tenant, who had assigned the lease for a sum in excess of the payments, were premiums. The landlord contended that neither sum was a premium, and that, consequently, the tribunal had no jurisdiction to determine the matter. The facts appear in the judgment of the court, delivered by PARKER, J.

Dare for the landlord.

J. P. Ashworth for the tribunal.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 26. PARKER, J., read the following judgment of the court. By the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, s. 1, a tribunal, which, for the purpose of the section is defined by s. 6 as one constituted under the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946, for any district in which that Act is in force, or, in the case of any other district, a tribunal constituted in accordance with the schedule to the Act of 1946, is given power to fix the standard rent of any dwelling-house for which the rent would otherwise be the rent at which it was first let after Sept. 1, 1939. By s. 2 (1) of the Act of 1949, no person shall in future, as a condition of the grant, renewal or continuance of a tenancy, require the payment of any premium in addition to the rent, and any such payment, if made, is recoverable by action.

As regards a premium which has at the commencement of the Act already been paid in respect of the grant, renewal or continuance of a tenancy, the tribunal is given power by sched. I, para. 10, to fix what is called the "rental equivalent" of the premium, which, by para. 8, is defined as the amount of the premium divided by the number of rent periods between the commencement of the term, or of the continuance or renewal of a term, and the relevant date, which, in the case of a tenancy for a term of years certain exceeding seven years is the date of expiration of that term. Once the tribunal has fixed the rental equivalent, the rent payable by any tenant of the dwelling-house shall not exceed the standard rent determined by the tribunal less the rental equivalent of the premium.

In the present case certiorari was moved on behalf of the landlord, Felicie May Philippe, the freeholder of a flat known as 9A, Adam and Eve Mews, Kensington, to bring up and quash a certificate and decision dated Dec. 9, 1949, of the rent tribunal for Fulham, Hammersmith and Kensington, whereby the tribunal determined a rental equivalent of £7 3s. 2d. a quarter to June 24, 1961. The ground of the application is, in effect, that no premium had been paid, and that, accordingly, the tribunal had no jurisdiction to determine a rental equivalent.

A Before going into the facts, we will deal with the preliminary point, taken on behalf of the tribunal, that, even if in law no premium had been paid, the remedy of certiorari does not lie. Paragraph 1 of Part I of sched. I to the Act provides:

B “Where on an application under s. 1 of this Act made within twelve months from the date of the commencement of this Act it appears to the tribunal that before the commencement of this Act any premium has been paid (whether lawfully required or not) in respect of the grant, continuance or renewal of a tenancy of the dwelling-house to which the application relates, whether by the tenant or by a previous tenant of the dwelling-house, and has not been fully repaid or recovered, the tribunal shall, if the tenant so requires, certify that this Part of this schedule applies, and thereupon (a) except in a case falling within the next following subparagraph, the rent payable shall be limited in accordance with para. 2 of this schedule . . .”

C Paragraph 2 (1) provides:

D “Subject to the provisions of this paragraph, where sub-para. (a) of the last foregoing paragraph has effect, the rent payable by the tenant, or by any subsequent tenant, for any rent-period beginning after the tribunal have issued their certificate and before the relevant date shall not, save as hereinafter provided, exceed the reasonable rent less the rental equivalent of the premium.”

Paragraph 10 (1) provides:

E “It shall be the duty of the tribunal, on any application to them on which they issue a certificate under para. 1 of this schedule, to determine such of the following matters as are required to be determined for the purposes of the application, that is to say—(a) the rental equivalent of a premium; (b) the relevant date; . . . and the determination by the tribunal of any of the said matters shall be conclusive for all purposes.”

F It was contended that where, as in the present case, the tribunal had jurisdiction under s. 1 of the Act to determine the rent, the fact that they wrongly came to the conclusion that a premium had been paid, and, as a result, reduced the rent, did not enable this court to grant an order of certiorari. Reliance was placed on the well-known passage from the judgment of GREER, L.J., in R. v. Minister of Health, Ex parte Glamorgan County Mental Hospital (Committee of Visitors) where, quoting HALSBURY'S LAWS OF ENGLAND, vol. 9, p. 888, para. 1493, he said ([1938] 4 All E.R. 36):

G “Where the proceedings are regular upon their face and the magistrates had jurisdiction, the superior court will not grant the writ of certiorari on the ground that the court below had misconceived a point of law. When the court below has jurisdiction to decide a matter, it cannot be deemed to exceed or abuse its jurisdiction, merely because it incidentally misconstrues a statute, or admits illegal evidence, or rejects legal evidence, or misdirects itself as to the weight of the evidence, or convicts without evidence . . .”

H While, however, it is true that the tribunal's power to fix the rental equivalent of a premium only arises on an application under s. 1 (1) of the Act, it seems to us that this is really a matter of procedure and that their jurisdiction to determine the standard rent and their jurisdiction to determine a rental equivalent are two separate jurisdictions. Section 1 (1) of the Act enables a tribunal to fix a reasonable rent, which is to be the standard rent for the future, whereas Part I of sched. I enables the tribunal to determine a deduction which a tenant may make from the standard rent up to the relevant date. Section 1 (5) further provides:

"In determining under this section what rent is reasonable for a dwelling-house, no regard shall be had to the fact that any premium has been paid in respect of the grant, continuance or renewal of a tenancy; but the provisions of Part I of sched. I to this Act shall have effect in relation to such premiums paid before the commencement of this Act."

Thus, in exercising their jurisdiction to fix the standard rent, the tribunal are not permitted to take the payment of any premium into consideration. Further, their powers to fix a rental equivalent only arise if the tenant requires them to certify under para. 1 of Part I of sched. I.

It was further contended on behalf of the tribunal in support of the contention that certiorari would not lie that Parliament had invested these tribunals with the jurisdiction of determining whether a premium had been paid and not merely with the jurisdiction to fix a rental equivalent if, in fact, a premium had been paid. Reference was made to the passage of LORD ESHER, M.R., in R. v. Income Tax Special Purposes Comrs. (2) (21 Q.B.D. 319):

"When an inferior court or tribunal or body, which has to exercise the power of deciding facts, is first established by Act of Parliament, the legislature has to consider what powers it will give that tribunal or body. It may in effect say that, if a certain state of facts exists and is shewn to such tribunal or body before it proceeds to do certain things, it shall have jurisdiction to do such things, but not otherwise. There it is not for them conclusively to decide whether that state of facts exists, and, if they exercise the jurisdiction without its existence, what they do may be questioned, and it will be held that they have acted without jurisdiction. But there is another state of things which may exist. The legislature may intrust the tribunal or body with a jurisdiction, which includes the jurisdiction to determine whether the preliminary state of facts exists as well as the jurisdiction, on finding that it does exist, to proceed further or do something more. When the legislature are establishing such a tribunal or body with limited jurisdiction, they also have to consider, whatever jurisdiction they give them, whether there shall be any appeal from their decision, for otherwise there will be none. In the second of the two cases I have mentioned it is an erroneous application of the formula to say that the tribunal cannot give themselves jurisdiction by wrongly deciding certain facts to exist, because the legislature gave them jurisdiction to determine all the facts, including the existence of the preliminary facts on which the further exercise of their jurisdiction depends; and if they were given jurisdiction so to decide, without any appeal being given, there is no appeal from such exercise of their jurisdiction."

Looking at para. 1 of Part I of sched. I alone, some support can be obtained for the contention that these tribunals are tribunals of the second type referred to by LORD ESHER. In particular, the words:

"Where . . . it appears to the tribunal that before the commencement of this Act any premium has been paid . . . in respect of the grant, continuance or renewal of a tenancy . . . and has not been fully repaid or recovered, the tribunal shall . . ."

suggest that the tribunal has jurisdiction to determine whether any payment made is a premium. It is, however, necessary to look not merely at this paragraph of the first schedule, but at the Act as a whole, and, in particular, at the provision which gives the tribunal its jurisdiction under that paragraph. Thus, s. 18 (2) of the Act defines a premium as including "any fine or other like sum and any other pecuniary consideration in addition to rent."

It is a premium as so defined paid in respect of the grant, continuance or renewal of a tenancy which by s. 1 (5) is not to be taken into consideration by a tribunal in determining the standard rent and to which the provisions of Part I of sched. I are to apply. It seems to us, therefore, that the fact that such a premium has been paid is a condition precedent to the exercise by the tribunal of its jurisdiction under the first schedule. In other words, before the tribunal can be said to have jurisdiction, it must not merely appear to them that such a premium has been paid, but such a premium must have been paid.

It is to be observed, moreover, that this court has already held that these tribunals in regard to their functions under the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946, are tribunals of the type first referred to by LORD ESHER, M.R. : see R. v. Hampstead and St. Pancras Furnished Houses Rent Tribunal, Ex parte Ascot Lodge, Ltd. (3), a case of prohibition. Further, in regard to their functions under s. 1 (1) of the Act now under consideration, the tribunals clearly have no jurisdiction if, for instance, the dwelling-house had been let prior to Sept. 1, 1939. It would be, to say the least, an odd result if in regard to their functions under sched. I to this Act, Parliament had intended them to act as a different form of tribunal. In our view, therefore, certiorari will lie if it should turn out that no such premium has been paid.

Turning to the facts of the present case, the landlord is the owner of two premises 9 and 9A, Adam and Eve Mews, Kensington, which were used before the war as a café and shop premises and which suffered war damage on two occasions. In 1945 plans were passed for the reconstruction of the premises into two flats with garages underneath. By 1947 most of the work had been completed, and on May 14, 1947, the landlord let No. 9A to one Perkins for a term of five years at £185 per annum. The lease contained a full repairing covenant on the part of the tenant. The engrossment provided that the tenant would at his own expense complete certain works of reconstruction and decoration which still remained to be done and were set out in a schedule. Before execution, however, the engrossment was altered at the request of the tenant, and, in order to limit his liability, was made to provide that he would pay to the landlord the costs incurred by her in completing the work up to the sum of £180. This work was later in the main done, and the £180 was then paid.

Almost at once Mr. Perkins asked to have a five years' lease of No. 9 and a fourteen years' lease of No. 9A so that he could dispose of the latter. The landlord was agreeable provided that Mr. Perkins agreed, as he did, to pay over to the landlord half of any profit made by him in assigning the lease. This arrangement was implemented by a surrender of the lease of No. 9A, the grant of a lease of No. 9A for fourteen years dated June 14, 1947, and an agreement dated June 14, 1947, for payment by Mr. Perkins of half of any such profit. On Oct. 15, 1947, Mr. Perkins sold the lease to one Gibbs for £650 and the landlord agreed to the assignment against the payment by Mr. Perkins to her of £220 19s. 7d. being half the profit made by him on the sale. The letting of No. 9A in 1947 was the first letting of the premises, and in 1949 Mr. Gibbs applied to the tribunal for the determination of the standard rent, which they fixed at £125. We are not concerned with that decision in any way. At the same time, however, Mr. Gibbs asked the tribunal to certify under para. 1 of Part I of sched. I in respect of the said sum of £180 and in respect of the half share in the profit made on the assignment and paid by Mr. Perkins to the landlord. On Dec. 29, 1949, the tribunal certified that Part I of sched. I applied, and determined the rental equivalent as £7 3s. 2d. per quarter, and the relevant date as June 24, 1961. A simple calculation shows, and, indeed, it is admitted, that, in arriving at a rental equivalent of £7 3s. 2d. per quarter, the tribunal has treated the payments of the £180 and £220 19s. 7d. as premiums.

With regard to the sum of £220 19s. 7d. we think that the tribunal were clearly right in regarding this as a premium paid in respect of the grant of a tenancy.

The agreement of June 14, 1947, under which it was paid, specifically stated that the half profit on any assignment was to be paid

"in consideration of your agreeing to grant me a lease of the above flat for a term of fourteen years from June 24, 1947."

It is true that it was not paid at the time the lease was granted, and that no sum would ever become payable unless the tenant assigned at a profit, but we think that, nevertheless, when paid, as it was in this case, it amounted to a premium. The £180, however, was in no ordinary sense of the word a premium. It was a contribution by the tenant towards work done by the landlord, and provision for its payment was inserted at the express wish of the tenant, who had hitherto agreed to complete the work himself and desired to limit his liability in that respect. It is true that the definition of premium in s. 18 is in very wide terms, including as it does "any other pecuniary consideration in addition to rent," and that the tribunal can certify if such a premium has been paid "in respect of the grant of a tenancy," but, in our view, the £180 was paid, not "in respect of" such a grant, but in respect of work done by the landlord.

In the result, it appears to us that the tribunal had no jurisdiction to include the said sum of £180 as a premium in arriving at their determination of the rental equivalent. Inasmuch as this court has no power to apportion the rental equivalent determined by the tribunal, the order of this court must be that the determination of the rental equivalent as £7 3s. 2d. per quarter be quashed. Since, however, by reason of the payment of £220 19s. 7d., the tribunal had jurisdiction to give a certificate that Part I of sched. I applied, that certificate is valid and will not be quashed.

Order of certiorari granted. Determination of the rental equivalent quashed. Certificate that Part I of sched. I to the Act of 1949 applied not quashed. No order as to costs.

Solicitors: Tatton, Gaskell & Tatton (for the landlord); Solicitor, Ministry of Health (for the tribunal).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. BARNET, ETC., RENT TRIBUNAL. Ex parte MILLMAN. [KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Parker, JJ.), May 16, 26, 1950.]

Rent Control—Premium—Purchase price of goodwill of business—Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949 (c. 40), s. 2 (2), s. 18 (2), sched. I, Part I, para. 1.

On July 9, 1947, the landlord of a dwelling-house and shop, who had for many years carried on there the business of a retail confectioner and tobacconist, demised the premises for a term of fourteen years at a rent of £260 per annum, and, by a deed of assignment of the same date, assigned his goodwill in the business to the tenant for £1,500, covenanting not at any time thereafter to carry on, manage, or be concerned in, the business of a confectioner or tobacconist within a radius of two miles from the said premises. On Mar. 1, 1950, on an application by the tenant under s. 1 (1) of the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, to determine a reasonable rent for the premises, a rent tribunal certified that sched. I, Part I, to the Act, applied to the premises, and determined that the rental equivalent of the sum of £1,500 was £7 14s. 9d. per month.

HELD: (i) assuming that the £1,500 was a premium, a payment made for the genuine purchase of the goodwill and against the seller entering into a restrictive covenant not to carry on a similar business was not made "in respect of the grant" of the tenancy within the meaning of para. 1 of Part I, sched. I, to the Act of 1949, and, therefore, Part I of sched. I did not apply, and the certificate and determination of the rent tribunal must be quashed.

A (ii) the tribunal was not entitled, when determining the reasonable rent of the premises, to take into account the value of a trade connection associated with the premises and fix a higher rent than they would have fixed otherwise, on the ground that the particular tenant was benefiting to that extent from the letting.

[FOR THE LANDLORD AND TENANT (RENT CONTROL) ACT, 1949, s. 1 (5), s. 2 (2), s. 12 (2), s. 18 (2), and sched. I, Part I, para. 1, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 13, pp. 1095, 1097, 1108, 1110.]

B Case referred to:

(1) R. v. Fulham, Hammersmith and Kensington Rent Tribunal, Ex parte Philippe, ante, p. 211.

MOTION by the landlord, Reuben Millman, for an order of certiorari to bring up and quash a certificate and determination of a rent tribunal, dated Mar. 1, 1950, whereby they certified, on an application by the tenant of the premises, C which comprised a shop and living accommodation, that the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, sched. I, Part I, applied to the tenancy, and determined the rental equivalent of a sum paid by the tenant on an assignment to him by the landlord of the goodwill of the business conducted on the premises. The facts appear in the judgment of the court, delivered by PARKER, J.

D Bernard Lewis for the landlord.
J. P. Ashworth for the tribunal.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 26. PARKER, J., read the following judgment of the court. This is an application for an order of certiorari moved on behalf of Reuben Millman, the landlord of a dwelling-house known as 289, Lordship Lane, Tottenham, to bring E up and quash the certificate and determination of the rent tribunal for Barnet, dated Mar. 1, 1950, whereby the tribunal certified that Part I of sched. I to the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, applied to the tenancy of the said dwelling-house, and determined the rental equivalent of a premium as £7 14s. 9d. per month and the relevant date in respect thereof as July 9, 1961. F The ground on which this relief is sought is that the sum in respect of which the tribunal determined such a rental equivalent was not a premium paid in respect of the grant, continuance or renewal of a tenancy within the meaning of para. 1 of Part I of sched. I to the Act, and that, therefore, the tribunal exceeded its jurisdiction.

Prior to 1947 the landlord, assisted by his wife, had for many years carried on the business of a retail confectioner and tobacconist at the said premises, of G which he was the freeholder. He and his wife lived above the shop, and in the course of time he had built up a substantial goodwill. In 1947, being then about sixty-four years of age, he decided to retire and sell the business. By a lease dated July 9, 1947, he demised the premises to one Leonard Montrose for a term of fourteen years (determinable at the option of the lessee at the expiration of the first seven years) at a rent of £260 per annum. By a deed of assignment of H the same date, the landlord, in consideration of the sum of £1,500, of which £1,200 was then paid, assigned to Mr. Montrose all his goodwill, interest and connection of and in his said business, and covenanted that he would not at any time thereafter carry on, manage, or be concerned or engaged or interested in, the business of a confectioner or tobacconist within a radius of two miles from the said premises. The landlord further agreed to sell to Mr. Montrose all the stock of his said business to be paid for on delivery. Mr. Montrose and his wife were then living at 355, Lordship Lane, and the landlord, desiring to remain in the neighbourhood, obtained a fourteen years' lease of those premises from Mrs. Montrose.

On Nov. 7, 1949, Mr. Montrose applied to the tribunal to fix the standard rent of 289, Lordship Lane, the letting to him having been the first letting. When the tribunal viewed the premises Mr. Montrose referred to the payment of £1,500 for goodwill, and the tribunal then informed him that, if he so desired, he should make an application for the determination of the rental equivalent. On Feb. 1, 1950, Mr. Montrose sent in an application to the tribunal referring to the said £1,500 as a premium and asking the tribunal to certify that the provisions of Part I of sched. I applied. On Mar. 1, 1950, the tribunal heard the application, certified that Part I of the said schedule applied, and determined the rental equivalent as £7 14s. 9d. per month and the relevant date as July 9, 1961.

This court has already held in R. v. Fulham, Hammersmith and Kensington Rent Tribunal, Ex parte Philippe (1) that the remedy of certiorari will lie if no premium was, in fact, paid in respect of the grant, continuance or renewal of a tenancy. It was admitted before us, and it is, we think, clear from the affidavit of the chairman of the tribunal, that the tribunal accepted that the assignment of July 9, 1947, was a genuine assignment of the goodwill and that it was worth £1,500. That being so, the only question is whether this £1,500 was a premium paid in respect of the grant, continuance or renewal of a tenancy. It was argued on behalf of the tribunal that it was, on the ground that the definition of premium in s. 18 (2) of the Act was very wide and that the words in s. 1 (5) were wide enough to cover any payment made on such a grant, continuance or renewal which would not have been made but for the grant. Reference was further made to s. 2 (2) and (4) and to s. 12 (2) of the Act of 1949. Section 2 (2) provides that:

"...paid in respect of the grant, continuance or renewal of a tenancy ..."

"Subject to the provisions of Part II of sched. I to this Act, a person shall not, as a condition of the assignment of a tenancy to which this section applies, require the payment of any premium."

Section 2 (4) provides that:

"Notwithstanding anything in sub-s. (2) of this section, an assignor may, if apart from this section he would be entitled so to do, require the payment by the assignee . . . (d) where part of the dwelling-house is used as a shop or office, or for business, trade or professional purposes, of a reasonable amount in respect of any goodwill of the business, trade or profession, being goodwill transferred to the assignee in connection with the assignment or accruing to him in consequence thereof."

Section 12 (2) provides that:

"Save as hereinafter provided, a person shall not, as a condition of the grant, renewal, continuance or assignment of rights under a contract to which the Act of 1946 applies, require the payment of any premium: Provided that this sub-section shall not prevent . . . (b) a requirement that there shall be paid a reasonable amount in respect of goodwill of a business, trade or profession, being goodwill transferred to a grantee or assignee in connection with the grant or assignment or accruing to him in consequence thereof."

It is contended that these provisions show that, except where a payment for goodwill is expressly permitted, it constitutes a premium within the meaning of the Act. Why no similar exception is provided in the case of the grant, renewal or continuance of an unfurnished tenancy it is hard to understand and idle to speculate on. Be that as it may, we think that before the tribunal can certify and determine a rental equivalent there must have been a premium, as defined by the Act, paid in respect of the grant, continuance or renewal of a tenancy.

A

Even assuming, without deciding, that the £1,500 was a premium within the definition in s. 18 (2), we cannot think that it was paid "in respect of" such a grant. Read in their widest sense the words "in respect of" would cover the payment of money for whatever purpose so long as it could be said that no tenancy would have been granted but for the payment. Thus, the words would cover the purchase price of the stock taken over or the reimbursement to the landlord of the proportion of any outgoings such as rates, insurance and the like, paid in respect of the period covered by the tenancy. No doubt, it may not be easy in some cases to say whether a payment comes within these words, but where, as here, a payment is made for the genuine purchase of the goodwill of a business and against the seller entering into a restrictive covenant not to carry on a similar business, we do not think that it can be said to have been paid "in respect of" the grant. In these circumstances, the order of this court is that the said certificate and determination be quashed.

B

We should add that, though we are not concerned with the tribunal's determination of the standard rent, it is to be observed from the affidavit of the chairman of the tribunal that the tribunal took into account the value of the trade connection associated with the premises and fixed the rent at a figure higher by £100 per annum than they would otherwise have done as they considered that the tenant was benefiting to this extent from the letting of the premises. The tribunal were clearly not entitled to do this. They were fixing what was to be the standard rent of the premises, and not the value to a particular tenant. Moreover, having done this they then proceeded to fix a rental equivalent which would enable the tenant to deduct almost £100 from the rent so fixed.

C

Certiorari granted. No order as to costs.

D

Solicitors: Offenbach & Co. (for the landlord); The Solicitor, Minister of Health (for the tribunal).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

E

THE UNITAS.

[PRIVY COUNCIL (Lord Porter, Lord Simonds, Lord Normand and Lord MacDermott), March 1, 2, 7, 8, 9, May 8, 1950.]

F

Prize Law—Condemnation—Ship—Enemy flag—Duress—Ship built in Germany by German subsidiary of Dutch company under agreement with and subsidised by German government.

G

N.V., a Dutch corporation, was, through its Dutch and German subsidiaries, the sole shareholder in a German company, Verkaufs, which had its own board of directors, but was controlled by N.V. from Rotterdam. In 1931, as a result of decrees by the German government affecting remittances from Germany, debts (amounting to about £7,500,000) due from N.V.'s subsidiary companies in Germany to N.V. and its subsidiaries in Holland were "frozen" and became "blocked marks," and trading profits of the German subsidiaries ceased to be transferable to N.V. or its Dutch subsidiaries and were classified as "inland marks." In order to extract some of the blocked marks from Germany, N.V., with the consent of the German authorities, arranged to place contracts in German shipyards for the building of ships for sale to foreign purchasers. In 1935 N.V. was asked by the German government to build a whaling fleet in Germany for operation under the German flag. At first it refused to do so, but in 1936, under the threat of economic pressure and that its assets in Germany would be confiscated or rendered valueless, it agreed. The conditions were that the fleet, when built, should be chartered to a new company, in which N.V. would not have more than a fifty per cent. interest, and that the fleet should not be transferred from the German flag without the consent of the German government. A subsidy towards its construction was granted by the German government. In September, 1937, the Unitas, a whaling factory ship, and the chief unit of the fleet, was completed and delivered to Verkaufs and registered at Bremen as a German ship, and in 1938 she performed a whaling voyage. After the outbreak of the second world war, but while Holland was still neutral, N.V. did nothing to dissociate itself from the activities of its subsidiaries in Germany. The Unitas was captured by the Allied invading forces in the port of Wilhelmshaven in June, 1945, and was seized in prize. At the date of capture she was flying the German flag and no change had been made at any time in her registration. N.V. and its Dutch subsidiaries claimed the release of the vessel on the ground inter alia that she was placed under the German flag involuntarily and under duress because she was built only as a result of pressure by the German government.

H

HELD: although the threat by the German government to the economic interests of N.V. and its subsidiaries was of a serious character, the building of the whaling fleet and its German registration and chartering to a German company were not involuntary in the sense of being unintentional, but were the result of a deliberate choice on the part of N.V. between two distasteful alternatives, and a choice which was probably followed by considerable profit for them; the fact that the Unitas was built as a result of German pressure, because a worse fate might have befallen N.V. if they did not give way, was a totally inadequate reason for avoiding the natural consequence of flying the German flag; and, as N.V. had failed to show that they were not within the general rule that the flying of an enemy flag in war time was conclusive of the nationality of a ship, the Unitas was rightly seized and condemned.

Decision of LORD MERRIMAN, P. ([1948] 1 All E.R. 421), affirmed.

[AS TO ENEMY CHARACTER OF SHIP, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 26, p. 216, para. 489; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 37, pp. 577-580, Nos. 87-128.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Daimler Co., Ltd. v. Continental Tyre & Rubber Co. (Gt. Britain), Ltd., [1916] A.C. 307; 85 L.J.K.B. 1333; 114 L.T. 1049; Digest 145, 195.
- (2) The St. Tudno, [1916] P. 291; 86 L.J.P. 1; 115 L.T. 634; 37 Digest 579, 111.
- (3) The Vrow Elizabeth, (1803), 5 Ch. Rob. 2; 165 E.R. 676; 37 Digest 577, 88.
- (4) The Fortuna, (1811), 1 Dods. 81; 1 Eng. Pr. Cas. 193, n.; 165 E.R. 1240; 37 Digest 649, 1019.
- (5) The Vigilantia, (1798), 1 Ch. Rob. 1; 1 Eng. Pr. Cas. 31; 165 E.R. 74; 37 Digest 577, 87.
- (6) The Primus, (1854), 1 Ecc. & Ad. 353; 2 Eng. Pr. Cas. 290; Spinks, 48; 24 L.T.O.S. 15; 164 E.R. 203; 37 Digest 579, 107.
- (7) The Onderneeming, (1803), 5 Ch. Rob. 7, n.; 165 E.R. 678; 37 Digest 578, 96.
- (8) The Tommi, The Rothersand, [1914] P. 251; 84 L.J.P. 35; 112 L.T. 257; 37 Digest 580, 119.
- (9) The Palme, (1872), Dalloz, Jurisprudence Generale, Pt. III, 94.
- (10) The Taxiarchis, (1913), R.G.D.I.P. xx, 518.
- (11) The Pontoporos, (1915), 1 Br. & Col. Pr. Cas. 371; subsequent proceedings, [1916] 1 P. 100; 85 L.J.P. 143; 114 L.T. 418; 37 Digest 676, 1436.
- (12) The Carolina, (1802), 4 Ch. Rob. 256; 1 Eng. Pr. Cas. 385; 165 E.R. 604; 37 Digest 604, 440.

(13) The Ocean Bride, (1854), Spinks, 66; 2 Ecc. & Ad. 8; 24 L.T.O.S. 99; 164 E.R. 277; 37 Digest 656, 1128.

APPEAL by the claimants from a decree of LORD MERRIMAN, P., dated Feb. 20, 1948, and reported [1948] 1 All E.R. 421.

A The Unitas, a whaling factory ship which was registered as a German vessel, the property of a German company, was captured by the Allied invading forces in the port of Wilhelmshaven in June, 1945, and seized as prize. The claimants were Lever Brothers and Unilever, N.V. (a Dutch corporation) and two subsidiary Dutch companies. The ship had been built, as the result of an agreement between the claimants and the German government, by a subsidiary company of the claimants incorporated in Germany. On completion in September, 1937, she was chartered to a newly-formed German company more than half the capital of which was subscribed by German interests and the remainder by the German subsidiary of the claimants. On a motion for the condemnation of the ship and her cargo, the claimants contended inter alia that the ship was placed under the German flag involuntarily and under duress. LORD MERRIMAN, P., dismissed the claim on the ground that duress was not proved and the flag of the ship was decisive of her enemy character, and he decreed the ship to be good and lawful prize. The claimants appealed. The facts appear in the judgment of the Board delivered by LORD PORTER.

C Sir Walter Monckton, K.C., Sir William McNair, K.C., and E. W. Roskill for the appellants.

Le Quesne, K.C., and Quintin Hogg for the respondent, the Procurator-General.

D The Board took time for consideration.

May 8. The following judgment of the Board was delivered by LORD PORTER. This is an appeal against a decree by LORD MERRIMAN, P., sitting in prize, who, on Feb. 20, 1948, pronounced that the steamship Unitas belonged at the time of capture and seizure to enemies of the Crown and was liable to confiscation as good and lawful prize. The learned President gave leave to appeal, subject to the provision of security for costs of the appeal, and directed that the decree should be suspended pending the appeal.

E The Unitas is a whale factory ship of about twenty-one thousand gross registered tonnage. The evidence on behalf of the Crown was confined to the formal affidavits of seizure and ship's papers, from which it appeared that throughout her life, from the date when she was built in 1937 until she was seized, she was registered in the port of Bremen, Germany, and was of German nationality. At all material times her immediate ownership was vested in a German limited liability company, known prior to June, 1939, as Jurgens-Van den Bergh Margarine Verkaufs Union G.m.b.H. and thereafter as Margarine Verkaufs Union G.m.b.H., referred to hereafter as "Verkaufs." She was registered in the name of Verkaufs, and at the date of capture and seizure was flying the German flag. At the time of the unconditional surrender of Germany she was lying in the port of Wilhelmshaven in Germany and was there captured by H.M.S. Alexandra. After capture she was transferred to Methil in the county of Fife and there formally seized in prize on July 1, 1945. The writ herein was issued on July 17, 1945, and on Aug. 10, 1945, an appearance was duly entered on behalf of the first appellants, Lever Brothers and Unilever N.V. of Rotterdam, referred to hereafter as "N.V.," as parties interested in the ship. On June 18, 1946, further appearances were entered for the second appellants, Marga Maatschappij tot beheer van Aandeelen in Industrieele Ondernemingen N.V., referred to hereafter as "Marga," and the third appellants, Saponia Maatschappij tot beheer van Aandeelen in Industrieele Ondernemingen N.V., referred to hereafter as "Saponia," as parties interested in and as beneficial owners of the ship. On Jan. 7, 1947, a claim was filed on behalf of all these appellants, as parties interested in or as beneficial owners of the ship, tackle, apparel and furniture.

An additional claim was filed at the same time for all losses, costs, demurrage and expenses by reason of her seizure and detention as prize, but was abandoned before their Lordships, it being admitted that the seizure, but not the condemnation, was justified.

N.V. is a Dutch corporation. Its shares are publicly held, mainly by British and Dutch nationals, and it owns the entire share capital of the second and third appellants, both of whom are also Dutch corporations. They, in their turn, jointly own the entire shares of a company incorporated under the laws of Germany, named Margarine Union Vereinigte Oel-und Fettwerke A.G., hereafter called "Margarine Union," and Margarine Union owned the entire share capital of Verkaufs. It was not disputed by the respondent that the general control of the German companies in the organisation through which N.V., Marga and Saponia carried on business in Germany was at all times exercised by N.V. in and from Rotterdam. Though the companies in Germany had their own boards of directors, these boards had no authority to deal independently with policy or management. N.V. appointed a body in Berlin known as the "praesidium," the principal members of which were of Dutch nationality, and this body controlled N.V.'s German businesses and ensured that the decisions taken in Rotterdam were effectively carried out.

The respondent maintained that condemnation of the Unitas was justified on two main grounds, (i) that she flew the German flag, and (ii) that the legal title to her was vested in Verkaufs. In answer to the first of these contentions the appellants submitted that the flying of an enemy flag is only a prima facie ground for condemnation, and is subject to exceptions which cover the present case. As to the second, they maintain that it is the duty of the Prize Court to look behind the legal facade and determine where the true ownership of the Unitas lay, and that, on the principles laid down in the House of Lords in Daimler Co., Ltd. v. Continental Tyre & Rubber Co. (Gt. Britain), Ltd. (1), as applied to prize in The St. Tudno (2), the whole and sole ownership in the ship was—in this case, as it was in that—in every real and business sense in the beneficial owners. The respondent, on his part, maintained that the principles laid down in the Daimler case (1) might be effective in a case where the legal ownership was in a friend or neutral, to disclose an enemy beneficial ownership and so lead to condemnation, but would not dispose of enemy taint where the legal ownership was that of an enemy. In any case, however, it was maintained on his behalf that, if it were permissible to treat Verkaufs as a mere branch of N.V., then Verkaufs was a "house of trade" of N.V. in Germany, and that, in that event, since the Unitas was the concern of that house of trade, it was the duty of N.V. on the outbreak of war between the United Kingdom and Germany on Sept. 3, 1939, to dissociate itself from Verkaufs. This duty they did nothing to fulfil between the outbreak of war and the invasion of Holland in May, 1940, and for this further reason the Unitas, as a concern of the German house of trade, was condemnable in prize.

The learned President decided in favour of the respondent on the ground that the vessel's flag was decisive of her enemy character. He held that, even if there were exceptions to the rule as to the enemy flag, the present case did not fall within them. He agreed with the respondent's second submission that the principle of the Daimler case (1) did not apply, even if it were established that the beneficial ownership was that of a friend or neutral, and further held that N.V. had failed between September, 1939, and May, 1940, to dissociate itself from Verkaufs. Having regard to the importance of the interests involved and in view of the likelihood of an appeal to their lordships' Board, the learned President dealt fully with each of the contentions put forward in order that full assistance might be afforded on appeal to their lordships in considering each aspect of this case. As, however, the Board think that the flying of the enemy flag alone is in this and in most cases sufficient to dispose of the matter at issue, they refrain from expressing any opinion in regard to the other two difficult and controversial matters.

Prima facie, of course, the flying of an enemy flag in war time is conclusive of the nationality of a ship and subjects her to seizure and condemnation in a court of prize. If it is done voluntarily, it is conclusive, but (say the appellants), if it is done under duress or, indeed, under pressure and against the will of the owner of the ship, it is but an element to be taken into consideration and may well be inconclusive. For this argument, reliance is placed on the expressions, over and over again appearing in the cases, which begin with SIR WILLIAM SCOTT's words (5 Ch. Rob. 6) in The Vrow Elizabeth (3):

"In that case [viz., an earlier unreported case], however, it was held that the fact of sailing under the Dutch flag and pass was decisive against the admission of any claim; and it was observed that as the vessel had been enjoying the privileges of a Dutch character, the parties could not expect to reap the advantages of such an employment, without being subject at the same time to the inconveniences attaching on it. When I lay down this rule, I do not say that there may not be cases of such particular circumstances, as to raise a reasonable distinction. The treaty of Amiens had stipulated for the liberty of withdrawing British property from the ceded and restored islands. But the governments of France and Holland afterwards refused to suffer such property to be exported from these colonies, otherwise than in ships of France and Holland, and on a destination to those countries. The difficulty which has arisen in the removal of British property, for want of shipping, may have induced our own government to permit British ships to put themselves under Dutch flags for this particular purpose; and in such cases the particular situation of affairs arising out of this refusal to execute the treaty, may have entitled such parties to a relaxation of the general rule."

This consideration was repeated in The Fortuna (4) in the words of the same judge (1 Dods. 87):

"... all that the court has thrown out respecting the effect of the flag and pass is this, that the party who takes the benefit of them is himself bound by them ..."

He adds what is germane to another aspect of this case, "but they do not bind other parties as against him."

It will, at a later stage, be desirable to analyse the width of the exception to which SIR WILLIAM SCOTT refers, but at the moment the quotations set out are examples of those relied on by the appellants in support of the proposition that to be bound by the rule of the flag the shipowner must voluntarily adopt it and not be coerced into its use. For the allegation that their act was involuntary, the appellants lay stress on the statements endorsed in Mr. Rykens' affidavit. They may be summarised as follows. On Aug. 1, 1931, the German subsidiaries of N.V. were indebted to N.V. or its subsidiaries in Holland to the extent of about £7,500,000 sterling, and at this time the German government introduced financial legislation under which these credit balances were converted into what were known as blocked marks, with the result that N.V. and its Dutch subsidiaries were no longer able freely to obtain repayment from Germany of loans which they had advanced to their German subsidiaries for the provision of working capital or of moneys due from them for the supply of raw material. About the same time the amount of reichsmarks representing the trading profits of the subsidiary companies of N.V. in Germany ceased to be transferable to N.V. or its subsidiary companies in Holland. These reichsmarks, which did not represent foreign claims on Germany, were classified as "inland marks" and could be used within limits for making investments in Germany. As a result of these and further financial restrictions later imposed, the accumulated cash and cash investments held by N.V.'s subsidiary companies in Germany had risen by 1936 to a figure of about RM.61,000,000. The possession of these large amounts of blocked and inland marks led the appellants to endeavour to find means of extracting the blocked marks from Germany, even at a considerable financial sacrifice. Accordingly, they obtained the consent of the German authorities to order the construction inside Germany, on behalf of N.V. or one of its associated companies, of ships for exportation and sale to foreign purchasers. As a term of their consent, the German authorities required (inter alia) that part of the building price should be paid out of the proceeds of the sale of certain commodities which N.V. was to import into Germany. This obligation involved the expenditure of considerable sums in currency other than German, which amounted at first to twenty per cent. and later to forty-five per cent. of the building price. Nevertheless, by these means N.V. and its associated companies were able to extract from Germany a proportion of the blocked mark balances and to convert them into foreign currency.

By the end of 1935 twenty contracts for the construction of forty-seven ships of approximately a quarter million tons had been placed, and between January and October of the succeeding year thirteen further contracts had been placed for twenty-one ships totalling over £200,000. Meanwhile, in April or May, 1935, Dr. Schacht approached Mr. Hendriks [the principal Dutch member of the praesidium] and Mr. Rykens with a view to persuading the appellants to build a whaling fleet in Germany for operation under the German flag, but the appellants were able to avoid complying with the proposal at that time because Norwegian seamen experienced in whaling operations were needed for the successful prosecution of the whaling enterprise and the Norwegian government were unwilling to allow them to sail under the German flag. At the beginning of 1936, however, this obstacle had been overcome and Mr. Rykens and Mr. Hendriks knew that similar proposals for the building of whaling fleets had been made by Dr. Schacht to two of the trade rivals of N.V. in Germany and that those trade rivals had agreed to undertake the task. At this juncture Dr. Schacht again approached Mr. Hendriks. The terms then proposed contained the stipulation that the fleet could not be transferred from the German flag without the consent of the German government and that the vessels should be chartered to and operated by a German concern in which the appellants would enjoy no more than a half share. If accepted, the plan would attract a subsidy of thirty per cent. with a maximum of RM.3,500,000 from the Reich towards the construction of the fleet. The appellants ultimately decided to accept the proposals and instructions were given so that the necessary arrangements for a contract with the German government might be made. Ultimately, an agreement was reached by May 20, 1936, under which certain further provisions were confirmed. The appellants were to build a whaling fleet consisting of the Unitas and eight catchers at a total price of approximately RM.13,000,000, and in return were to receive from the Reich government a subsidy of thirty per cent. of the building cost with a maximum of RM.3,500,000. The appellants were to advance the foreign currency required for the purchase of items supplied from abroad, estimated at £7,000 sterling, and to be allowed to recoup themselves these advances plus a fair rate of interest by deliveries of whale oil from the first whaling season at fair market prices. They also agreed to finance such of the costs of the whaling expeditions as would have to be paid in foreign currencies on similar terms, and to operate the fleet, when built, through a working company at a charter price of a quantity of whale oil (estimated at 7,000 tons per annum), which they would afterwards sell to the German government at the ruling world price converted into reichmarks. The balance of the whale oil was also to be sold to the German government by the working company on similar terms. The agreement was subject to the condition that the appellants should have treatment not less favourable than that accorded to their German competitors, and the Reich Air Ministry or Naval Observatory was to be permitted to set up meteorological stations on board the vessels and to arrange for experienced radio operators and short wave equipment to be carried on board.

This history of the negotiations which led up to the building of the Unitas does not of itself show duress or, indeed, any undue pressure by the German government, but Mr. Rykens says categorically that the hidden threat was there.

A In the first place, he says that on a previous occasion in 1935, when N.V. was asked to supply guilders to the German government on credit terms and refused to do so, open threats were uttered by high officials in the Ministry of Finance that N.V.'s previous quotas would be cut, and that, although Dr. Schacht and Herr von Ribbentrop alleged that they were unaware of the proposed cuts, he had no doubt that they knew of the threats. The attitude of the German government and the covert threats lying behind the pressure that was brought to bear are, perhaps, best set out in Mr. Rykens' own words at the end of his affidavit :

C "Though my conversations with Dr. Schacht and also Herr von Ribbentrop were conducted in a courteous manner, I was never left in any doubt as to the reality of the threats lying behind their proposals, and I have no doubt at all that, if N.V. had not agreed to the building of the whaling fleet in Germany for operation under the German flag, effective steps would have been taken to confiscate or render virtually valueless the N.V. assets in Germany and to restrict to the minimum any further carrying on of business by N.V. in Germany. As an illustration of the high-handed and lawless action of the German authorities, I would mention that before the outbreak of war one of N.V.'s German subsidiaries carrying on business in East Prussia had the quota of one of its factories arbitrarily taken by the German authorities so that it was forced to cease carrying on business."

D In the succeeding paragraph he shows the method adopted by the German government in compelling compliance with their wishes:

E "But for the pressure brought to bear by Dr. Schacht and the sanctions which the German government was in a position to impose had N.V. not ultimately complied with their demands, the said whaling fleet would never have been built and thereafter owned and operated under the German flag. The construction of the said whaling fleet was not voluntarily undertaken by N.V., nor was it a freely chosen investment which N.V. decided to make of their own volition. N.V. was, in my respectful submission, forced by the German government into a position in which they had no alternative but to comply with the German government's demands."

F For the purpose of their decision their Lordships are prepared to accept Mr. Rykens' statements, but they are, nevertheless, of opinion that they are insufficient to constitute a ground for rejecting the conclusiveness of the fact of flying the German flag. In the course of his judgment, the learned President said ([1948] 1 All E.R. 427):

G "... I do not doubt at all that the German government were in a position to bring economic pressure to bear on foreign concerns trading in the country through German subsidiaries, nor that they would hesitate to bring to bear any such pressure as they thought would serve their purpose."

H Indeed, he envisages the possible confiscation of N.V.'s German business as one of the steps which might be taken, and, in their Lordships' view, the threat is none the less serious though one of the adverse actions which the German government contemplated was the cancellation of the orders for ships to be built in Germany and sold abroad. In any case, it was a threat of the most serious character and their Lordships are in no sense minded to minimise its importance.

The question, however, remains whether a threat to the economic interests or even existence of N.V.'s German subsidiaries is enough to render a ship flying the German flag immune from the sanction of seizure and condemnation. It does not, in their Lordships' view, assist the appellants' case to speak of the building of the whaling fleet and its German registration and chartering to a German company as involuntary. In truth, it was not involuntary in the sense of being unintentional. It was a deliberate choice taken between two distasteful alternatives. It is only involuntary in the sense that the appellants would have preferred not to make a choice at all. Faced with the obligation of doing so, they made their election. And it is not irrelevant to remember that that election was made three years before war broke out, and, though no accounts have been furnished, and possibly none could be furnished, yet the ship was built in time to perform a whaling voyage in 1938 and may well have earned considerable emoluments for her owners. The fact that she was built as a result of German pressure and German threats, because a worse fate might have befallen the appellants if they did not give way, seems to their Lordships a totally inadequate reason for avoiding the natural consequence of flying the German flag.

The strictness with which the rule is followed is accentuated again and again in the prize law of many countries and in the text books dealing with the topic. WHEATON'S INTERNATIONAL LAW, HALL'S INTERNATIONAL LAW and OPPENHEIM'S INTERNATIONAL LAW all state the principle in unqualified terms. It is enough to quote HALL'S INTERNATIONAL LAW, 8th ed., p. 588, n.:

"According to these rules [viz., the rules observed in the British prize courts] the flag of the enemy is conclusive against the ship flying it, but the courts can go behind a neutral flag and ascertain who is the real owner, and enemy shares in a ship flying a neutral flag can be condemned."

The cases to the like effect are well known and numerous. The two earliest reported, The Vigilantia (5) and The Vrow Elizabeth (3), contain unequivocal statements to the like effect, and, indeed, it is not disputed that this is the general rule. It is said, however, that the principle does not apply except in cases where the owners voluntarily chose to accept the benefit of the enemy flag for their own advantage. To support this argument reliance is placed on the type of expression to be found in The Fortuna (4), or, perhaps more clearly, in The Primus (6). In The Fortuna (4) the words of SIR WILLIAM SCOTT are (1 Dods. 87):

"... all that the court has thrown out respecting the effect of the flag and pass is this, that the party who takes the benefit of them is himself bound by them ... but they do not bind other parties as against him ..."

In The Primus (6) DR. LUSHINGTON used the words (1 Ecc. & Ad. 354): "If he reap the benefit accruing during peace, he must also take the consequence of war." Similar expressions are to be found in many of the cases, but, in their Lordships' opinion, a conclusion that a shipowner, who built his ship—unwillingly it may be, but still with the object of avoiding a position less favourable to himself—and sailed her under an enemy flag, would avoid seizure and condemnation in prize in the event of war is altogether unjustified. The statement that the shipowner has taken the benefit and must endure the consequences is not in essence a limitation of the doctrine, but an explanation of its origin.

It is true that, as pointed out above, SIR WILLIAM SCOTT said (5 Ch. Rob. 7) in The Vrow Elizabeth (3):

"... I do not say that there may not be cases of such particular circumstances, as to raise a reasonable distinction."

He instanced a case [The Onderneeming (7)] where, after the peace of Amiens, the French failed to fulfil an undertaking to provide shipping to repatriate British subjects, and ships flying an enemy flag were thereupon used for that purpose, and after outbreak of war held free of condemnation. So, too, in The Tommi (8) SIR SAMUEL EVANS, P., said ([1914] P. 256):

"The law with regard to the effect of carrying the flag is perfectly clear, namely, that if a ship does sail under a particular flag, unless there are very special exceptions, she has elected to enjoy the protection of the State whose flag she flies, and she is regarded as a ship belonging to that State."

Their Lordships accept the view that there may be circumstances which make the flying of the enemy flag inconclusive as a reason for condemning a ship in prize, but such circumstances must be very exceptional. The few in which a ship flying the enemy flag has escaped condemnation are all of that character.

- A In addition to the cases mentioned in The Vrow Elizabeth (3), their Lordships' attention has only been called to three, and they are not aware of any others. Those three are The Palme (9) and The Taxiarchis (10), mentioned in WHEATON'S INTERNATIONAL LAW, 7th ed., pp. 152, 153, and The Pontoporos (11). The Palme was a German vessel purchased by the Swiss Red Cross from German owners. The Swiss government would not allow their flag to be flown, and, in
- B default of any other, the German flag was retained and a German agent appointed. The circumstances were peculiar and exceptional, and a French prize court decreed her release. The Taxiarchis (10) was a case exhibiting some features of the same kind. The vessel was British, owned and registered in Cyprus, which at that time was nominally under Turkish rule, but actually administered by Britain. There was no national flag of Cyprus and, therefore, she flew the
- C Turkish flag. In each of these cases, the absence of a national flag, coupled with the neutral or friendly nationality of the owners, was the deciding factor. The Pontoporos was a Greek ship, captured by the Emden and used as a coaling auxiliary, but her master never consented to her use as such and was kept a prisoner. The case is a true example of involuntary submission to enemy duress. Indeed, the prize court which tried her case contrasted it with The Carolina (12),
- D where the master had, though unwillingly, accepted service under an enemy belligerent. In The Pontoporos (11) the basis of the decision in The Carolina (12) is explained by WOODWARD, Acting-C.J., Supreme Court of the Straits Settlements, thus (1 Br. & Col. Pr. Cas. 379):

E "The act of force referred to by the learned judge would seem to be the laying of an embargo on the ship, and fitting her up as a transport against the will of the master, and during his absence; but the facts show that when he returned he acquiesced . . ."

In The Carolina (12) itself, SIR WILLIAM SCOTT said (4 Ch. Rob. 260):

F "... a man cannot be permitted to aver, that he was an involuntary agent in such a transaction. If an act of force, exercised by one belligerent on a neutral ship or person, is to be deemed a sufficient justification for an act done by him, contrary to the known duties of the neutral character, there would be an end of any prohibition under the law of nations to carry contraband, or to engage in any other hostile act."

- G The circumstances in The Carolina (12) in substance resemble those now under consideration, whereas those in the three cases relied on by the appellants are in a different category. It is, as a general rule, where captors are concerned, the use of the enemy flag which entitles them to seize. Neutral ownership, of itself, does not protect the ship. In The Ocean Bride (13) the vessel was British owned and flew the British flag, but was nominally transferred to Russian ownership to protect her from seizure in case of war between this country and Russia.
- H On these facts being established, she was released. As showing the importance of the flag, DR. LUSHINGTON said (2 Ecc. & Ad. 16):

"If this vessel had been sailing under the colours of an enemy, I should say this was a claim which could not be sustainable, but here she remains navigated under British colours; and that prevents a difficulty which would have been insuperable—for if the vessel had been under Russian colours that would have been conclusive against all the world, for reasons I need not refer to, as it is a well-known principle."

Their Lordships have thought it desirable to deal at some length with the grounds on which the appellants support their case, as the claim is a large one and the principle at stake important. From the authorities which have been referred to, it is clear that the flag under which a ship sails constitutes one of the most important elements, if not the most important element, which a court of prize has to consider in determining whether she is rightly seized and condemned as prize. It is, however, not necessary for their Lordships to set exact bounds to the limitations to be placed on the dicta that the flying of an enemy flag is conclusive, or to pronounce on the correctness or otherwise of every decision relied on or the accuracy of every individual expression of opinion contained therein. Whatever view may be taken on the matter, the present case is, in their Lordships' opinion, far removed from those exceptional cases in which that rule may be discarded. In the view of the Board, the Unitas was rightly seized and condemned, and their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Simpson, North, Harley & Co. (for the appellants); The Treasury Solicitor (for the Procurator-General).

[Reported by H. McL. MORRISON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

SHORE v. MINISTRY OF WORKS AND OTHERS.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker, Singleton and Jenkins, L.JJ.), May 24, 1950.]

Club—Members' club—Member injured through faulty construction of club premises—Liability of management committee for breach of warranty.

During an entertainment on club premises the plaintiff, a member of the club, was struck by a brick which had become dislodged from the roof and sustained personal injuries. The club was a members' club, and the plaintiff brought an action against the second and other defendants, the management committee of the club, for breach of warranty. She alleged that the contract of membership between the defendants and herself contained an implied warranty that the club premises were and would be as safe for the purpose for which she was admitted as reasonable care and skill could make them, that the building, in fact, was not in the state of safety and repair required by the contract, and, accordingly, that she was entitled to damages.

HELD: the contract entered by the parties when the plaintiff paid her subscription to the secretary of the club and he accepted it on behalf of the members was merely a contract that she should be admitted to membership of the club on the terms of its rules, and the warranty alleged could not be read into it.

MacLennan v. Segar ([1917] 2 K.B. 325) and Hall v. Brooklands Auto-Racing Club ([1933] 1 K.B. 205), distinguished.

Per JENKINS, L.J.: If this had been a proprietary club and the proprietors had admitted the plaintiff to membership for reward it may well be that the principle stated in MacLennan v. Segar (supra) would have applied and the plaintiff would have been entitled to succeed.

[AS TO RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF CLUBS AND MEMBERS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 4, pp. 498-505, paras. 921-934; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 8, pp. 515-520, Nos. 63-103.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) MacLennan v. Segar, [1917] 2 K.B. 325; 86 L.J.K.B. 1113; 117 L.T. 376; 29 Digest 9, 120.
- (2) Francis v. Cockrell, (1870), L.R. 5 Q.B. 501; 39 L.J.Q.B. 291; 23 L.T. 466; 42 Digest 908, 49.

(3) Hall v. Brooklands Auto-Racing Club, [1933] 1 K.B. 205; 101 L.J.K.B. 679; 147 L.T. 404; Digest Supp.

(4) Prole v. Allen, [1950] 1 All E.R. 476.

APPEAL by the plaintiff from a decision of LYNSEY, J., at Bristol Assizes on Feb. 14, 1950, in which he held that the defendants, the management committee of a members' club to which the plaintiff belonged, were not liable in damages for the personal injuries she sustained when a brick was dislodged from the roof of a building which formed part of the club premises and fell on her while she was attending a free entertainment organised by the defendants for the benefit of members of the club.

For the plaintiff it was argued that, by reason of her membership of the club, there existed between herself and the defendants a contract which contained an implied warranty that the premises were safe for the purposes for which she was admitted as a member. By their defence the defendants denied that they had entered into a contract containing such a warranty. The facts are fully set out in the judgment of TUCKER, L.J.

J. C. Perks for the plaintiff.

Casswell, K.C., and Eric Mills (Humphrey Edmunds with them) for the defendants.

TUCKER, L.J.: This is an appeal from a decision of LYNSEY, J., given at Bristol Assizes in an action brought by the plaintiff, Mrs. Shore, originally against the Ministry of Works and the members of the committee of management of the Corsham Community Centre. At the trial the case against the Ministry of Works was abandoned and the case proceeded only against the members of the committee, and LYNSEY, J., decided in favour of the defendants.

The Ministry of Aircraft Production had, during the war, occupied a large area in or about Corsham in Wiltshire, and there grew up there a number of prefabricated buildings and a village for the workers known as the Married Quarters Estates, Corsham. In 1943 some of the residents were minded to form what is called a community centre, and for that purpose to form a club. In due course a club was formed and its constitution and rules appear in a document called the "Constitution" and dated October, 1944, as follows:

"(1) The name of the centre shall be the 'Corsham Community Centre.'

(2) Its aims and objects shall be: (a) to promote the well-being of the community resident in the Married Quarters Estates, Corsham ... (3)

Membership: Membership of the centre shall be open to adult members of Corsham Married Quarters Estates and to Corsham and District residents and to such other persons as the management committee shall approve.

(4) Fees of membership shall be as follows: 5s. 0d. per person per annum ... (5) Application for membership shall be made on official application forms obtainable from the secretary and the members of the management committee."

Rule (6) deals with the election of the management committee, and there are provisions for the retirement of members of the committee annually. Rule (7) provides for the appointment of officers, namely, a chairman, vice-chairman, honorary treasurer, and three trustees in whom the property of the centre shall be vested. Rule (8) provides the procedure for nominations to the management committee. Rule (9) provides for meetings and for the summoning of general meetings. Rule (10) makes provision for banking and for auditing of accounts and for the signing of cheques, and so forth. By r. (11): "The use of the centre shall be at the discretion of the management committee," and r. (12) provides the procedure for altering the constitution, which can only be done by a two-thirds majority at the annual general meeting. Throughout this document and throughout the case the word "centre" is used in two senses. The club itself is called the Corsham Community Centre and it carried on its activities in a hall, referred to as a community centre. At the material time the hall was the property of the Ministry of Aircraft Production, although at the time of this action it was owned by the Ministry of Works, and the Ministry of Aircraft Production had, in a letter of Dec. 30, 1943, granted a licence to the club to use the premises in accordance with that letter. I think it is clear that the club were licensees and nothing more, and, furthermore, that it was the club as a whole who were the licensees as distinct from the committee. The committee merely had authority, under the rules, from the members to manage the affairs of the club and to provide, at their discretion, to what use the centre should be put.

In March, 1947, the plaintiff was a member of this club, having paid her subscription in October, 1946. In March, 1947, she attended some entertainment in this hall as one of her privileges of membership. The entertainment was given for club members only and they attended without payment beyond that which they had already made for membership of the club. On the night in question there was an exceptional gale which caused damage owing to the insecure construction of the roof, some bricks became dislodged, and the plaintiff was struck by a brick and suffered injuries as a result. The judge has not found it necessary to assess the damages which he would have awarded her if he had found the defendants to be responsible, but he has found that the premises were not as safe as reasonable care and skill on the part of anyone could make them.

The present case, however, was not framed in negligence. The plaintiff put her whole case on contract and pleaded that the contract between herself and the committee of management contained an implied warranty that the premises were as safe for the purposes for which she was admitted as a member as reasonable care and skill could make them. Counsel for the plaintiff founds his argument on the decision of McCARDIE, J., in MacLenan v. Segar (1). That case dealt with the relationship of an innkeeper and his guest, and in his judgment McCARDIE, J., said ([1917] 2 K.B. 332):

"So too as to premises generally the rule, I think, is the same, and upon the decisions as they stand may be stated as follows, namely: Where the occupier of premises agrees for reward that a person shall have the right to enter and use them for a mutually contemplated purpose, the contract between the parties (unless it provides to the contrary) contains an implied warranty that the premises are as safe for that purpose as reasonable care and skill on the part of any one can make them. The rule is subject to the limitation that the defendant is not to be held responsible for defects which could not have been discovered by reasonable care or skill on the part of any person concerned with the construction, alteration, repair, or maintenance of the premises; and the headnote to Francis v. Cockrell (2) must to this extent be corrected. But subject to this limitation it matters not whether the lack of care or skill be that of the defendant or his servants, or that of an independent contractor or his servants, or whether the negligence takes place before or after the occupation by the defendant of the premises."

That statement of law was approved by this court in 1933 in Hall v. Brooklands Auto-Racing Club (3), a case dealing with a visitor who was admitted for reward to witness motor racing at Brooklands.

Counsel for the plaintiff submits that, on its facts, the present case comes within the principles laid down in MacLenan v. Segar (1). He says that when the plaintiff joined this club she made a contract with the committee and that there is to be implied into that contract a warranty in the terms stated by McCARDIE, J. In my opinion, however, the present case is altogether different from MacLenan v. Segar (1) and Hall v. Brooklands Auto-Racing Club (3). The only contract that the plaintiff made was when she paid her subscription to the secretary of the club as representing its members, and that, in my view, was only a contract with the other members of the club that she should be admitted to membership. She was admitted to membership on the terms of the rules governing the club, contained in the document called the "Constitution" which I have read. In that document are to be found all the matters which govern her relationship

A with the other members of the club, and the duties of the management committee and any authority which they derive from the body of members. There is nothing in the constitution which could impose on the committee the liability which the plaintiff seeks to put on them. After she had become a member of the club, whenever she attended this hall in the circumstances in which she was there on this occasion, she was merely one member of the club making use of premises of which the club as a whole were licensees, and I do not think that she has any remedy against the committee based on this contract. What the position might be had negligence been alleged does not arise.

B We have been referred to Prole v. Allen (4), a case recently decided by PRITCHARD, J., at the Somerset Winter Assizes in which he had to deal with an action brought by a member of an unincorporated members' club against some members of the committee and a steward of the club. In that case the action was founded solely in tort, the learned judge held that the members of the committee owed no duty to the plaintiff, and, accordingly, as against them, the action failed. That case does not assist in the present appeal, the case on behalf of the plaintiff here not having been founded on tort.

C In dealing with the present matter, LYNSEY, J., having referred to MacLennan v. Segar (1) and Hall v. Brooklands Auto-Club (3), said:

D "But it seems to me here that the real contract made by Mrs. Shore in joining this club and in paying her subscription was not made with the committee. It was a contract made with all the other members of the club, and entitled her, together with all the other members of the club, to enjoy the amenities of the club and become a part-owner of the property of the club, and also to have a rightful share in this licence which the club had from the minister. In my view, the management committee of the club were doing no more than acting as agents for all the members. They were elected by the members and they were exercising the powers of all the members as agents for those members. They were not a body which was contracting as a separate body with individual members, nor had they any separate entity for the purpose of contracting with outsiders who came with members of the club ... It was shown in the course of the club's defence that the members of the club might be vicariously liable for particular negligence of the members of the committee, but I cannot read into this contract, entered into when the plaintiff joined the club, a warranty by the committee that, in fact, the club premises, which they only had a licence to use, would be as safe as reasonable care and skill could make them. If they had made any such contract on behalf of the club and for the club, they would have been undertaking to do something which they had no legal right to do, and they could not implement their contract. I cannot for one moment read into this contract such a warranty."

G That last paragraph has been criticised by counsel for the plaintiff who has said that, for instance, vis-a-vis a member of the public who might be attending an entertainment at this club, it would be a curious result if the club or its committee could escape liability, based on the doctrine of MacLennan v. Segar (1), by reason of the fact that, unknown to the visiting guests, they were only the licensees of the premises with the limited rights and powers attached to licensees. It is not necessary to express a concluded view with regard to this because it was not the basis of the judgment of LYNSEY, J., but, as at present advised, I am inclined to feel that there is some substance in counsel's submission on that part of the case. For the reasons I have stated, I do not think the plaintiff has any remedy based on contract which entitles her to recover judgment against the committee of the club, whom she is now suing. The appeal must fail.

H SINGLETON, L.J.: I am of the same opinion. The plaintiff's action against the committee of management was based entirely on contract. It was alleged in the statement of claim that the contract relied on, which was a contract of membership, included an implied warranty that the club premises would be as safe as reasonable care and skill could make them. I am not prepared to hold that any such term was to be implied into this contract. I agree with the submission made by counsel for the defendants that one must look at the circumstances and see who the parties are in considering whether or not a term such as this can be implied into a contract between the plaintiff and the person with whom she contracted, or those on whose behalf he contracted with her.

In the judgment of McCARDIE, J., in MacLenan v. Segar (1), to which my Lord referred, and which was approved in this court in Hall v. Brooklands Auto-Racing Club (3), the learned judge said ([1917] 2 K.B. 332):

"Where the occupier of premises agrees for reward that a person shall have the right to enter and use them for a mutually contemplated purpose, the contract between the parties (unless it provides to the contrary) contains an implied warranty that the premises are as safe for that purpose as reasonable care and skill on the part of any one can make them."

I draw attention to the words "agrees for reward." I do not think this is such a case. When the plaintiff became a member of the community centre soon after its formation, she became a member on the same terms as the other members and entitled to the same rights as they had. At some time thereafter, it may be, she took part in electing a committee of management, but she was not one with whom the occupier (even if the club could be regarded as the occupier) agreed for reward that she should have the right "to enter and use" the premises—to use the words of McCARDIE, J. I find it unnecessary to read a term of this kind into the contract, and I think it would be wrong to do so. For that reason I agree that the appeal must be dismissed.

JENKINS, L.J.: I agree. I confess to feeling considerable sympathy with the plaintiff who met with this accident, the liability for which, it seems, she can bring home to nobody. On the other hand, it would, to my mind, be very serious if the elected members of the committee of management of a club of this kind found themselves saddled, by virtue of their office, with a warranty as to the safety of the club premises. That result would be surprising indeed.

If this had been a proprietary club and the proprietors had admitted the plaintiff to membership for reward, it may well be that the principle stated in MacLenan v. Segar (1) would have applied and that the plaintiff would have been entitled to succeed. Once it appears, however, that this was a members' club and not a proprietary club, then it seems to me there is an end of the case, for the contract which the plaintiff made in October, 1946, was an ordinary contract of membership of a members' club, and the rights she acquired under it were simply those which she was entitled to enjoy in common with the other members, including the right from time to time to use the club premises in accordance with the rules, with all their defects or imperfections. There was nothing in the nature of a special contract between the plaintiff and the committee of management. Her relationship to the committee of management was that of any other member. The persons from time to time elected to the committee of management were members elected by their fellows to manage the affairs of the club on behalf of the general body of members, and clearly they could not, by virtue of that relationship, be held to have given a warranty to the other members of the club as to the state or condition of the building. The considerations thus briefly summarised and more fully dealt with in what my Lords have already said lead me also to the conclusion to which they have come, that notwithstanding any temptation one may feel to decide the contrary, the plaintiff has failed to bring home any legal liability against any of the defendants, and the appeal should, therefore, be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Arthur Taylor & Co., agents for Titley, Long & Co., Bath (for the plaintiff); Berrymans (for the defendants).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

LISSACK v. LISSACK.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Pearce, J.), May 24, 25, 26, 1950.]

Divorce—Cruelty—Defence—Insanity.

While suffering from disease of the mind the husband killed the child of the marriage and attempted suicide. At his trial he was found Guilty of murder, but insane, and was ordered to be detained during His Majesty's pleasure. The wife petitioned for divorce on the ground of his cruelty in committing those acts, and by his guardian ad litem he set up the defence that at the material time he knew neither the nature nor the quality of his acts, that he did not know they were wrong, and that he was not responsible for them.

HELD: in petitions based on cruelty the duty of the court to interfere was intended, not to punish the husband for the past, but to protect the wife for the future, and to withdraw from consideration intolerable conduct which was due to insanity would render the court powerless in cases where help was most needed; the defence of insanity was not open to the husband; and the wife was entitled to a decree.

Reasoning of DENNING, L.J., in White v. White ([1949] 2 All E.R. 350), applied.

[AS TO INSANITY AS A BAR TO DIVORCE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, pp. 669, 670, para. 989; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 323, 324, Nos. 3020-3025, and Digest Supp.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Kirkman v. Kirkman, (1807), 1 Hag. Con. 409; 161 E.R. 598; 27 Digest 286, 2579.
- (2) Holden v. Holden, (1810), 1 Hag. Con. 453; 161 E.R. 614; 27 Digest 285, 2563.
- (3) Yarrow v. Yarrow, [1892] P. 92; 61 L.J.P. 69; 66 L.T. 383; 27 Digest 324, 3025.
- (4) Hyman v. Hyman and Goldman, [1904] P. 403; 73 L.J.P. 106; 91 L.T. 361; 27 Digest 342, 3227.
- (5) Hanbury v. Hanbury, [1892] P. 222; 61 L.J.P. 115; subsequent proceedings, 8 T.L.R. 559; 27 Digest 324, 3024.
- (6) M'Lachlan v. M'Lachlan, [1945] S.C. 382; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (7) White v. White, [1949] 2 All E.R. 339; [1950] P. 39; 113 J.P. 474.
- (8) Hall v. Hall, (1864), 3 Sw. & Tr. 347; 33 L.J.P.M. & A. 65; 9 L.T. 810; 164 E.R. 1309; 27 Digest 323, 3022.
- (9) Astle v. Astle, [1939] 3 All E.R. 967; [1939] P. 415; 109 L.J.P. 6; Digest Supp.
- (10) M'Naghten's Case, (1843), 10 Cl. & Fin. 200; 8 E.R. 718; 14 Digest 56, 229.
- (11) Squire v. Squire, [1948] 2 All E.R. 51; [1949] P. 51; [1948] L.J.R. 1345; 112 J.P. 319; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (12) Kellock v. Kellock, [1939] 3 All E.R. 972; Digest Supp.

PETITION for dissolution of marriage by the wife on the ground of her husband's cruelty.

The cruelty alleged was that the husband had killed the only child of the marriage and had then attempted to commit suicide. When he was tried for murder, the husband was found to be Guilty but insane and he was ordered to be detained during His Majesty's pleasure. By his guardian ad litem he put in an answer pleading that he was not responsible for his actions at the material times owing to disease of the mind.

Tyndale, K.C., and Thomas Dewar for the wife.

Stuart Horner for the husband.

PEARCE, J.: This is a wife's petition for divorce on the ground of her husband's cruelty in killing their only child and attempting to kill himself. The husband, by his guardian ad litem, pleads that at the time of the alleged cruelty he knew neither the nature nor the quality of his acts, that he did not know that they were wrong, and that he was not responsible for them.

The parties were married in 1941. They had a daughter in 1942. On Oct. 25, 1948, the wife went out for the evening, leaving the husband in charge of the child. When she returned, the room was barricaded, the child had been strangled by the husband, and he had been unsuccessfully trying to commit suicide by putting his head in the gas oven. The statement he made later to the police starts with the words: "I want to tell you how I came to do this terrible thing." In it he says that he made up his mind to do the deed weeks before Oct. 25, that he had creeping paralysis brought about by a bad habit continued from childhood, that this disease was hereditary, and that he had passed it on to his child. These were insane delusions. Neither he nor his daughter had suffered from that disease. He decided, he said in his statement, not to leave her with such a complaint and made up his mind to kill her and himself. He wrote a note in anticipation, but he could not get the courage to do it until Oct. 25. His statement describes in distressing detail how he killed the child. In a rational letter written on Nov. 5 from prison to his wife's brother, he uses these words: "After what I have done to Rosie I can hardly face her . . . I know what torment, misery, agony, she is going through." He refers to the suffering of his parents, and says: "There does not seem much more I can say except that I've messed up a lot of decent people's lives." On Nov. 17 he was tried for murder and was found Guilty but insane, and he is now detained at Broadmoor. From there he wrote two letters to the wife, regretting the pain he had caused her and the "terrible things" he had done. He is not incurably insane. His condition has improved, and it is possible that in the future he may be released. The medical evidence shows clearly that the shock has had, as one would suppose, a very serious effect on the wife's health and nerves, that some part of that damage will be permanent, and that some mental relief would be afforded to her by a release from her marriage tie to this husband.

Apart from the question of insanity, the wife has a clear right to the relief she claims. There can be no greater cruelty to a woman than the killing of her child. Does his insanity prevent her getting relief?

Counsel for the wife argues that insanity of the husband is no defence to a wife's petition based on cruelty. He relies on the following cases and on the fact that such a defence has in no reported case been successful. In Kirkman v. Kirkman (1), SIR WILLIAM SCOTT, referring to the necessity to provide for the safety and comfort of the individual, said (1 Hag. Con. 410):

"If that safety is endangered by violent and disorderly affections of the mind, it is the same, in its effects, as if it proceeded from mere malignity alone; it cannot be necessary that, in order to obtain the protection of the court, it should be made to appear to proceed from malignity."

In Holden v. Holden (2) the same judge made observations tending in the same direction (1 Hag. Con. 458). In Yarrow v. Yarrow (3) ([1892] P. 94) and in Hyman v. Hyman and Goldman (4) ([1904] P. 407), SIR FRANCIS JEUNE, P., expressed doubt whether insanity could be a complete answer to a charge of adultery.

In Hanbury v. Hanbury (5) SIR CHARLES BUTT, P., in charging the jury said ([1892] P. 224):

"I am not entirely satisfied that a mere plea of insanity is a sufficient answer to a suit. It may be that a person is so insane as to necessitate his or her confinement in an asylum or some other place of permanent

A
B
C
D
E
detention, and the disease may be such that there is no hope of recovery or amelioration such as will allow of his or her discharge. When a disease of that sort seizes upon a person, and he or she has to be incarcerated or permanently to be placed in confinement, I should hesitate to say that in regard to an act committed in such a state of insanity a plea of insanity might not be an answer. But I think it is very different with regard to intermittent and recurrent insanity. If a man is afflicted with madness or insanity of such a nature as to necessitate keeping him in duress for the rest of his life, there is no danger of violence to his wife. I conceive that the object of the Divorce Act is not so much, or nearly so much, the punishment or retribution for a marital offence as the protection of the party who is in peril. I believe that protection, and not punishment or retribution, is the main object; and if it can be shewn that the insanity is of such a nature that it will produce violence on the part of the husband, and endanger the safety of the wife, though it need not entail the permanent incarceration of the man, but only his restraint from time to time—if the mania is recurrent and comes on suddenly from time to time she may be placed in great jeopardy. In such a case I can well conceive that, although in some instances insanity may be one of those misfortunes which must be taken by a wife with her husband for better or for worse, and though it may assume the form of a disease, yet if it is such as to imperil the wife's safety she is entitled to the protection of this court. Assuming for a moment that these attacks were not brought on the respondent by his own self-indulgence, assuming that they were the result of hereditary disease, I should still be disposed to hold that the acts of cruelty committed in one of these fits of mania would entitle the wife to the remedy which she asks—separation from her husband. If the mania is intermittent and recurrent, the husband is entitled to go home when he recovers from time to time—the wife cannot refuse him admission to the conjugal home; and if the mania is likely to recur accompanied with violence which would place the wife in peril, the ordinary protection which she is supposed to obtain by proceedings in lunacy is a delusion, because it does not protect her against the return home of her husband, who is liable at any moment to become a lunatic.”

When that case came before the Court of Appeal, LORD ESHER, M.R., with whom LINDLEY and KAY, L.JJ., concurred, said (8 T.L.R. 560) that:

F
G
H
“He was prepared to lay down as the law of England that whenever a person did an act which was either a criminal or culpable act, which act, if done by a person with a perfect mind, would make him civilly or criminally responsible to the law, if the disease in the mind of the person doing the act was not so great as to make him unable to understand the nature and consequences of the act which he was doing, that was an act for which he would be civilly or criminally responsible to the law. Consequently, even though the respondent's mind was diseased, he was as responsible to the law as if his mind was not diseased. The judgment of the learned PRESIDENT was therefore right. There was a larger question which the PRESIDENT touched upon, but did not decide—namely, whether, even if the respondent's mind had been such that he did not know the nature of what he was doing or that he was doing wrong, the petitioner would or would not be entitled to a divorce. It was unnecessary to decide that question, and he desired to leave it open.”

In a Scottish case, M'Lachlan v. M'Lachlan (6), LORD MONCRIEFF, LORD CARMONT and LORD RUSSELL held that an act committed by an epileptic during a seizure when he was temporarily irresponsible constituted cruelty. They came to that conclusion after a careful consideration of the law of Scotland and England. Finally, counsel for the wife relies on a judgment delivered in White v. White (7), where DENNING, L.J., has cogently and in detail considered the matter and expressed the opinion that insanity is no defence to a charge of cruelty, with a possible qualification when the insanity is known to the injured party.

Counsel for the husband argues that in the passages cited in Kirkman v. Kirkman (1) and Holden v. Holden (2), SIR WILLIAM SCOTT was directing his mind, not to insanity, but to intention, and was dealing with lack of balance rather than madness. Counsel for the husband also argues that in Hanbury v. Hanbury (5), SIR CHARLES BUTT, P., was really saying that insanity can be an answer, but it must be of a certain degree, though it is to be noted that he appears to consider that cruelty committed in recurrent fits of mania would entitle a wife to a judicial separation. It is argued, rightly, that Yarrow v. Yarrow (3) and Hyman v. Hyman and Goldman (4) are neutral and leave the matter completely in doubt. Reliance is placed on Hall v. Hall (8) where SIR CRESSWELL CRESSWELL said (3 Sw. & Tr. 349):

"With danger to the wife in view, the court does not hold its hand to inquire into motives and causes. The sources of the husband's conduct are, for the most part, immaterial. Thus, I have no doubt that cruelty does not cease to be a cause of suit if it proceeded from 'violent and disorderly affections,' as said in one case, or from 'violence of disposition, want of moral control, or eccentricity,' as said in another, or 'from a liability to become excited in controversy,' in the language of a third; but madness, dementia, positive disease of the mind, this is quite another matter. An insane man is likely enough to be dangerous to his wife's personal safety, but the remedy lies in the restraint of the husband, not the release of the wife. Though the object of this court's interference is safety for the future, its sentence carries with it some retribution for the past. In either aspect it would be equally unjust to act on the excesses of a disordered brain: in the latter, for the insane are not responsible; in the former, for insanity may be cured and the danger at an end."

Counsel for the husband points out that in M'Lachlan v. M'Lachlan (6) one of the learned judges appears to regard certifiable insanity as an answer to cruelty. In Astle v. Astle (9) HENN COLLINS, J., held that insanity satisfying the test in M'Naghten's case (10) was an answer. That opinion was not necessary to the decision, as he found cruelty proved and gave the wife a decree, and part of the reasoning in that case has been disapproved by the Court of Appeal in Squire v. Squire (11). It is, therefore, not a safe guide. So, too, with Kellock v. Kellock (12) decided at the same time by HENN COLLINS, J.

Counsel for the husband also relies on the judgment of ASQUITH, L.J., in White v. White (7). In that case BUCKNILL, L.J., held that the judge of first instance was wrong in refusing a decree on the ground of insanity and that the wife was responsible for her acts, and he decided that a decree to the husband should be granted. Although, in arriving at that decision, he applied the test laid down in M'Naghten's case (10) he expressly left open, without giving an opinion either way, the question whether insanity can be a defence to a charge of cruelty. ASQUITH, L.J., in agreeing with BUCKNILL, L.J., held that, to afford a defence ([1949] 2 All E.R. 348):

"... the insanity must, at all events, not fall short of such insanity as would afford a defence to a criminal charge within the M'Naghten rules."

He added (ibid., 348):

"It is unnecessary in the present case, having regard to the view I take of the facts, to decide whether the converse holds, namely, that, if the respondent does not know what he is doing, or does not know it is wrong, this is in any or every case a defence, though for myself I incline to that view."

He then gave reasons for that view. DENNING, L.J., agreed with the other learned lords justices in allowing the appeal and in granting a decree, but he did so for different reasons. He held that insanity was no defence—with the possible exception of cases where the injured party knew that the other was of unsound mind—and he held that the M'Naghten rules were not applicable. That view was necessary to his decision since, in his opinion, the respondent was insane within the M'Naghten rules, and, had such insanity been a possible defence, there could have been no decree.

In this difficult state of the law the matter comes before me. It is for the husband to establish that a legal defence of insanity does exist in matrimonial cases. Although such a defence has never been successfully and affirmatively held to exist in any reported case it has been assumed to exist in some of the cases cited, but that assumption was not necessary to the decisions. In criminal matters, where the object is punishment, such a defence is obviously necessary in a just society. So, too, in a more limited form at common law and in chancery, but I do not think it is a safe analogy to assume that, therefore, justice requires it in matrimonial matters.

Since in petitions based on cruelty the duty of the court to interfere is intended, not to punish the husband for the past, but to protect the wife for the future, the question for the court is whether the wife can with safety to life and health live with the husband now. To withdraw from the ambit of legal cruelty conduct that is intolerable, but is due to insanity, is to make the court powerless to help in cases where help may be most needed. It is said that the other course may also cause hardship. Theoretically it may. If a husband is cruel to his wife owing to insanity and then recovers, it is hard for him that he should be divorced by her, but since, ex hypothesi, her affection and fortitude were not great enough to enable her in the circumstances to tolerate a continuance of married life and she wished for divorce, it is unlikely that he would attain happiness by maintaining the marriage tie. Moreover, since such a defence has in no reported instance ever been made out on the facts, its existence would seem to give little practical benefit to respondents.

These considerations and the reasons set out in the judgment of DENNING, L.J., seem to me convincing. Among many conflicting opinions on the subject, I cannot find that it has been clearly established that insanity is a defence to a petition based on cruelty. For that reason, and because, in my view, such a defence is not in accord with the true view of the law relating to cruelty, I hold that the defence of insanity is not open to the husband and that the wife is entitled to a decree.

In case I am held to be wrong in this view, it is desirable that I should express my opinion whether the necessary degree of insanity has been proved in this case. If insanity can be a defence, the onus of proving it must be on the husband. The test suggested is that laid down in M'Naghten's case (10) as the proper test in criminal cases, namely (10 Cl. & Fin. 210):

" . . . to establish a defence on the ground of insanity, it must be clearly proved that, at the time of the committing of the act, the party accused was labouring under such a defect of reason, from disease of the mind, as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing; or, if he did know it, that he did not know he was doing what was wrong."

The test whether the husband knew that he was doing wrong is a very unsatisfactory one in measuring misdeeds so dependent on the circumstances and personalities of the parties as acts of cruelty. Things may be cruel in particular circumstances and between particular persons that are not at the time of their commission known to be wrong. To alter the test by substituting for the word "wrong" the word "cruel" would not be possible in view of the decision of the Court of Appeal in Squire v. Squire (11). This in itself shows how unsatisfactory is such a test. To limit the test so that it accords with that applied in common law and chancery courts would make it more practical. HALSBURY'S LAWS OF ENGLAND, 2nd ed., vol. 21, p. 293, para. 504 (quoted by BUCKNILL, L.J., in White v. White (7)), reads as follows:

"In an action at common law or in chancery, where the responsibility of a person alleged to be of unsound mind is in question, the issue generally directed is: 'Was the person alleged to be of unsound mind at the date in question capable of understanding the nature of the act he was performing?'"

Such a limitation of the test would be reasonable, since the test of the knowledge of wrong, though suitable to criminal matters where the primary object is punishment, is not suitable in matrimonial matters, where it would be out of accord with the authorities which I have already cited. In this case it is agreed that the husband knew the nature and quality of his acts. If, therefore, that limited test were applied in this case, the wife would succeed.

Even if the test in M'Naghten's case (10) is the true test, the husband can only defeat the wife's prayer if he did not know his acts to be wrong. On this issue there is a divergence of medical opinion. I have to decide it on the evidence before me. The opinion formed by a jury—who, incidentally, did not have before them all the evidence that I have had—does not compel me to the same conclusion. The doctor who saw the husband thirty-six hours after the crime and thereafter from time to time for some three weeks says that, though he cannot speak with certainty, there is a high degree of probability, that owing to schizophrenia the husband had no knowledge that his acts were legally or morally wrong. He suggested also that the disease might have created an irresistible impulse to the deed, but, in view of the man's own statement, this seems most unlikely. This doctor relies on the complete flatness and absence of emotion displayed by the husband when he examined him, a condition typical of schizophrenia. It must be remembered that the husband had been through a horrible ordeal, to which, if his statement is to be believed, he had difficulty in screwing up his courage, an ordeal which must have taken heavy toll of his nervous resources. The doctor at Broadmoor says that the husband was certifiable when he entered that institution. The opinion of the doctor called by the wife is that the husband knew that what he was doing was contrary to law and was wrong. That opinion is derived from the husband's signed statement and the other documents, on which this doctor relies as showing knowledge of wrong, and which, at all events, as the other doctor admits, give some indication of that knowledge. All the documents show the husband's appreciation of the pain which his acts would inflict, or had inflicted, on the wife. The reference in the original note to "this terrible thing" and "what a terrible thing to do to a wonderful girl like Rosie" are more consistent with an appreciation of wrong than with a failure to appreciate it. There is here no glorification of his act, no indifference to its consequences. So, too, with the signed statement made the day after the occurrence, where he explains how he "came to do this terrible thing." So, too, with his difficulty in getting up his courage to do it and in his waiting to do it till his wife went out. So, too, with the contrition expressed in the letters after the event.

I am asked to believe that at the moment of the killing the knowledge of wrong passed from his mind. If, as I believe, when he first planned the deed and wrote the note, he knew it was wrong, yet determined to do it if he could muster the courage, and if, as I believe, when he made his signed statement shortly after the event (and later when he wrote the letters) he knew it to be wrong, I find it impossible to assume an intervening interval when he did not know it to be wrong. The evidence of the doctor called by the wife seems to me the more likely to be correct, but, at the highest, the matter is one of opinion and probability. I have to consider whether the husband has proved clearly that he did not know that it was wrong. I am satisfied that on the evidence he has not proved that clearly or at all. This case seems to me very similar to that considered in the fourth question in M'Naghten's case (10), and since the husband's conduct, even if the delusions had been true, would have been unlawful, he cannot escape liability for that conduct. There will be a decree nisi in favour of the wife.

A

Decree nisi.

Solicitors: T. C. Boyes, Law Society Services Divorce Department (for the wife); Official Solicitor (for the husband).

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

B

Re JONES (deceased). MIDLAND BANK EXECUTOR AND TRUSTEE CO., LTD. v. LEAGUE OF WELLDOERS AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Danckwerts, J.), June 8, 1950.]

C

Annuity—Perpetual—Gift to unincorporated body—Validity.

By his will, made on Mar. 1, 1926, the testator, who died on Oct. 4, 1936, gave certain annual sums to a number of societies, some of which were charitable while others were not, and some of which were incorporated while others were not. He gave the residue of his estate to trustees on certain trusts, with power to postpone sale or conversion for two years, or, if necessity arose owing to difficulty in disposing of his foreign estate, for three years, and he then directed that on the realisation of his foreign estate certain capital sums should be paid to the societies in substitution for the annuities which he had previously given. The will contained a provision for the abatement of all legacies and bequests, should the estate be insufficient to pay them in full, which was found to be the case. It was not possible to realise the foreign estate within three years from the time of the testator's death, and it was not known how long the realisation might take.

D

E

HELD: (i) the gift of the capital sums was made on an uncertain event which was not necessarily bound to happen within the period allowed by the rule against perpetuities, and, therefore, the substituted gift failed completely.

F

(ii) the annual sums given to the societies were perpetual annuities, not only in the case of the gifts to the corporations, but also in the case of those to unincorporated bodies; there was no rule of law which prevented a perpetual annuity being given to an ascertained unincorporated body; and, therefore, as the beneficiaries were entitled to demand payment of a capital sum instead of a sum paid over a period of years, the gifts were valid, whether or not the beneficiaries were charitable societies.

G

[AS TO PERPETUAL ANNUITY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 28, pp. 195-197, para. 360; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 39, pp. 135-139, Nos. 292-336.]

H Cases referred to:

- (1) Hicks v. Ross, [1891] 3 Ch. 499; 60 L.J.Ch. 853; 65 L.T. 200; 39 Digest 193, 828.
- (2) Re Hollins, [1918] 1 Ch. 503; 87 L.J.Ch. 326; 118 L.T. 672; 39 Digest 126, 188.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS, from the Liverpool District Registry, to determine inter alia the validity of gifts, under the testator's will, of annual sums to various charitable and non-charitable societies, some of which were unincorporated bodies. The testator's estate was found to be insufficient to meet the bequests which had priority over residue, and, therefore, there would have to be a large abatement. The facts appear in the judgment.

E. W. Griffith for the trustees.

G. Maddocks, W. Geddes, A. O. Hughes, Hesketh, Wilfrid Hunt, Benas, G. D. Johnston, J. Turner, Harold Brown, for beneficiaries.

Denys Buckley for the Attorney-General.

DANCKWERTS, J. [after dealing with other questions arising under the testator's will, which was made on Mar. 1, 1926, continued]: I have now to deal with the gifts which are the principal subject-matter of the will. I do not propose to read them all in detail, but, after the gifts which I have previously considered in the course of this case, the testator proceeds to give to a number of societies, some of which are plainly charitable, some of which are plainly not charitable, some of which are incorporated, and some of which are not incorporated, annual sums of £25 per annum and other amounts, such as £12 10s. per annum, which are, apparently, in the nature of perpetual annuities. He then gives, devises, and bequeaths the whole of the residue of his property, real or personal, whether in the United Kingdom or abroad, to his trustees on trust to divide the same among five societies, which, I think, are charitable societies, in such proportions as the trustees in their discretion think fit, and he directs any surplus income to be paid to those societies. Although he has not in terms given any express trust for sale, he directs that his trustees:

"... shall have power to postpone the sale or conversion of the whole or any part of my estate before payment of any bequests after consultation with the local valuers in Uruguay as to my Uruguayan property or others with a knowledge of local values there, including the Uruguayan consul in Liverpool, for two years or, if the necessity arises owing to difficulty in disposing of my foreign estate, for three years, and I further direct that in case my estate shall be insufficient to pay in full the specific legacies and bequests hereinbefore mentioned each such legacy shall abate proportionately."

He did not give any legacies which are accurately described as specific legacies according to the legal meaning of that term, and, presumably, he means the particular legacies which he had given previously in his will. He then goes on:

"And I further direct that on the realisation of my foreign estate the following capital amounts shall be paid to the beneficiaries hereinafter mentioned and such shall be in substitution for and not in addition to any annuities hereinbefore provided for the said hereinafter mentioned beneficiaries and in this latter event the provision as to proportionate abatement in case of deficiency shall apply generally."

He proceeds to name all the previous beneficiaries to whom he had given annuities, with the exception of Rationalist Press Association, Ltd., to whom he had given an annuity of £25. In all cases where capital sums are given, with one exception, he has calculated them on the basis of a twenty years' purchase of the annual sum. The one exception is ten years instead of twenty years.

The question is, first, whether that substituted gift is effective, or whether it fails under the rule against perpetuities or for any other reason. It is to be observed that the testator, who died on Oct. 4, 1936, clearly anticipated that his estate in Uruguay would be realised at the latest within a period of three years from his death, but it was not possible to realise it within that period. The gift is not, as the testator might have expressed it, in the terms that these capital sums should be paid on the realisation of the foreign estate or at the expiration of three years from his death, whichever shall first happen, but is simply on the realisation of his foreign estate. The realisation of his foreign estate might, or might not, take a very long time. It seems to me, therefore, that the gift of the capital sums is made on an uncertain event of which it cannot be said that it is necessarily bound to happen within the period allowed by the rule against perpetuities, and, consequently, it is invalid, with the result that the substituted gift fails completely.

A We are left, therefore, with the original gift of the annual sums. These, clearly, seem to be perpetual annual sums. They obviously must be so in the case of corporations, which may go on for ever, and the same might apply to unincorporated bodies. There seems no rule of law which prevents a perpetual annuity, any more than other species of property, being given to an ascertained unincorporated body, the members of which can dispose of it as they dispose of other property. Therefore, I think that any argument as to the invalidity of the gift of the annuities fails. As Mr. Wilfrid Hunt has pointed out, the method by which the value of such perpetual annuities is to be ascertained has been clearly laid down in Hicks v. Ross (1), and Re Hollins (2). Re Hollins (2) was a case of abatement and EVE, J., pointed out ([1918] 1 Ch. 516) that the principle had been decided by KEKEWICH, J., in Hicks v. Ross (1) that:

B
C “ . . . the price to be paid for such an annuity is such a sum as at the price of the day will purchase $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. government stock sufficient to produce the annuity, excluding any charge for brokerage.”

It appears that any of the beneficiaries to whom such an annuity was given could, if they wished, demand payment of a capital sum in cash instead of a sum paid over a period of years. Therefore, it seems to me, these gifts of perpetual annuities are valid, whether the bodies concerned be corporate or incorporate, and whether or not they be of a charitable nature.

D Declaration that all the gifts of capital sums, which were to be paid on the realisation of the testator's foreign estate, were void for perpetuity, and that the bequests of a defined sum per annum to any charitable or non-charitable person, company or body were valid bequests.

E Solicitors: Rutherfords, Liverpool, Sharman & Son, Liverpool, H. W. Stacey & Co., Liverpool, Edwin Berry & Co., Liverpool, S. Thornhill Tracey, Chalfont St. Giles, Laces & Co., Liverpool, agents for Rider, Heaton, Meredith & Mills, London, Miller, Taylor & Holmes, Liverpool, agents for Jaques & Co., London, Hill, Dickinson & Co., Liverpool, agents for Lee & Pembertons, London, Lynch & Furlong, Liverpool, Herbert J. Davis, Berthen & Munro, Liverpool, Forwood, Williams & Co., Liverpool, Moore & Price, Birkenhead, F Whitley & Co., Liverpool, agents for Clare & Clare, London, Dodds, Ashcroft & Cook, Liverpool, agents for John H. Mote & Son, London, Nigel Ryland, Manchester, P. S. Harvey, Liverpool, Ayrton & Alderson Smith, Liverpool, Yates, Sheridan & Co., Liverpool (for beneficiaries); Batesons & Co., Liverpool, agents for Treasury Solicitor (for the Attorney-General).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re MOUNT EDGCUMBE SETTLED ESTATES.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Harman, J.), May 19, 1950.]

Settlement—Settled land—Capital moneys—Application to purpose not authorised by trust instrument—Compensation for chattels destroyed by enemy action—Purchase thereof of chattels to devolve as heirlooms—Settled Land Act, 1925 (c. 18), s. 64.

By cl. 4 of his will dated June 28, 1940, a testator, who died on Apr. 18, 1944, bequeathed to the person who should under the limitations therein-after contained become beneficially entitled to the rents and profits of his settled estates such of his chattels and effects given by the next following clause thereof as his trustees should in their absolute discretion consider unsuitable to be retained in settlement. By cl. 5 he bequeathed to his trustees all his chattels and effects not otherwise specifically disposed of on trust to allow the same (except such of them as the trustees should consider unsuitable to be retained in settlement) to devolve as heirlooms along with his said settled estates. By cl. 16 the testator devised and bequeathed his freehold and leasehold property (his "settled estates") in strict settlement, and by cl. 23 and cl. 24 he bequeathed all his personal property not otherwise disposed of to his trustees on the usual trusts for sale and conversion and the payment of funeral and testamentary expenses, debts, legacies, annuities and duties, and on trust to invest the residue of the proceeds and stand possessed of the investments so made or any part of his residuary personal estate for the time being unconverted on "the trusts and subject to the powers and provisions upon and subject to which capital money arising under the Settled Land Act, 1925, from my settled estates or investments representing the same would be held." At the date of the testator's will the property which would have been subject to cl. 16 included a mansion, but in 1941 the mansion and its contents were destroyed by enemy action. As regards part of the mansion the War Damage Commission determined that compensation should be on the basis of the cost of works, and as regards the contents, which were insured under the private chattels scheme pursuant to the War Damage Act, 1941, the commission agreed (after the date of the testator's death) that the maximum payment of £10,000 should be made as compensation. In due course the £10,000 was received by the trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Act, 1925, and they held it as capital money as being part of the testator's residuary personal estate. It was proposed to re-build the mansion, but, although the tenant for life desired to live in it when it was habitable, he was unable without financial assistance to furnish it, and the question arose whether the £10,000 might be devoted to the provision of furniture and other chattels. All existing remaindermen of full age consented to the transaction, and the guardian ad litem of the existing infant remaindermen was of the opinion that it was for the infants' benefit.

HELD: the court had jurisdiction under the Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 64, to authorise the application of the money to the purpose proposed because it would benefit the persons interested, and it was proper in the exercise of that jurisdiction in the present case to sanction the application of not more than £10,000, as and when the mansion or any part thereof should be fit for habitation, in the purchase of such furniture and chattels for the mansion as the Settled Land Act trustees for the time being should consider suitable to be retained in settlement as heirlooms.

Re White-Popham Settled Estates ([1936] 2 All E.R. 1486), applied.

[AS TO GENERAL POWER OF TENANT FOR LIFE TO EFFECT TRANSACTIONS UNDER ORDER OF COURT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 29, pp. 745, 746, para. 1037; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 40, p. 745, Nos. 2762, 2763.]

Case referred to:

- (1) Re White-Popham Settled Estates, [1936] 2 All E.R. 1486; [1936] Ch. 725; 105 L.J.Ch. 368; 155 L.T. 553; Digest Supp.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS for relief under the Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 64, namely, that the tenant for life in possession for the time being under a settlement made by the will of the Right Honourable Piers Alexander Hamilton, Earl of Mount Edgecumbe, deceased, might be authorised to direct that £10,000 received from the War Damage Commission pursuant to the War Damage Act, 1941, in respect of chattels formerly belonging to the testator but destroyed in his lifetime by enemy action, be applied in the purchase of furniture or other chattels suitable for the equipment of the mansion of Mount Edgecumbe on the footing that any chattels so purchased should be held on the trusts expressed in cl. 5 of the will of the testator as to chattels thereby directed to devolve as heirlooms.

Under the terms of the will and in the events which had happened the settled estate stood limited at the date of the summons :—(a) on trust for the applicant for life with remainder; (b) on trust for the first and other sons of the applicant successively according to seniority in tail male with remainder; (c) on trust for the respondent, Edward Piers Edgecumbe (who was forty-six years of age and had no issue male), for life with remainder; (d) on trust for his first and other sons successively according to seniority in tail male with remainder; (e) on trust for the respondent, George Aubrey Valletort Edgecumbe (who was forty-two years of age), for life with remainder; (f) on trust for the respondent, Robert Charles Edgecumbe (the eldest son of the said George Aubrey Valletort Edgecumbe who was ten years of age), for life with remainder; (g) on trust for the first and other sons of the said Robert Charles Edgecumbe successively according to seniority in tail male with remainder; (h) on trust for the respondent, Piers Valletort Edgecumbe (the second son of the said George Aubrey Valletort Edgecumbe who was three years of age and born after the death of the testator), in tail male with remainders over. The applicant was seventy-six years of age and had no male issue living.

Rawlence for the applicant, the tenant for life in possession, and one of the trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Act, 1925.

P. H. B. W. Foster for the adult remaindermen.

Burnett-Hall for the infant remaindermen.

Lord Mancroft for the remaining trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Act, 1925.

HARMAN, J. : This is an application of an unusual kind by the present tenant for life of the Mount Edgecumbe settlement. That was a settlement made by the will of the absolute owner of the mansion house, an historic house on the banks of the River Tamar opposite Plymouth which belonged to the family for many years, upon strict trusts under which the present applicant, the sixth earl, and the remaindermen take successive interests. In 1941 the mansion house and its contents, which were extremely valuable, were destroyed by enemy action. The contents were insured, so far as might be, under the private chattels scheme pursuant to the War Damage Act, 1941. The maximum payment by the commission under that Act was £10,000. No sum was paid in the testator's lifetime, and he, having been the absolute owner of the chattels, was merely entitled at his death to a chose in action—his unsettled right to a payment by the War Damage Commission. A claim to the maximum amount was admitted by the commission, and in due course payment was received by the trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Act, 1925, who hold the money as part of the testator's residuary personal estate.

By his will the testator directed that his residuary personal estate should be sold and that the net proceeds should be held on trusts to correspond with those concerning his realty. Clause 24 of his will provided that the net balance of the proceeds of sale (after payment of certain outgoings) should be held :

“upon the trusts and subject to the powers and provisions upon and subject to which capital money arising under the Settled Land Act, 1925, from my settled estates or investments representing the same would be held.”

Therefore, this £10,000 is now capital money under the Settled Land Act, to be devoted to such purposes as capital money may be under that statute. The purchase of chattels in circumstances like these is not one of those purposes. A

There is now a plan, but no more than a plan, for re-building the Elizabethan part of this mansion. A design has been prepared. The War Damage Commission have, apparently, agreed that it is to a certain extent a case for a cost of works payment and that the commission will meet the cost of re-building the mansion house to that extent. It is, therefore, proposed to re-build the older part of the former mansion, so that the original very large house will be replaced by a mansion of a reasonable size, preserving the features of the historic mansion of which the walls are still standing. The applicant, however, says that, though it would be his desire to live there, it would be impossible for him to do so unless he is given some help towards furnishing the mansion. He suggests that the £10,000, which in a sense does represent the chattels which were settled by the testator's will, might be devoted to that purpose. B

I am satisfied that I have power under the Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 64, to authorise this transaction because it is for the benefit of the persons interested. That view of the section was taken by the Court of Appeal in Re White-Popham Settled Estates (1). At first instance, EVE, J., held that he could not sanction a certain transaction because it did not affect the settled land. The Court of Appeal, taking a wider view of the section, said that the transaction was proper if it was for the benefit of the persons interested under the settlement. That is enough for my purpose in this case. I have before me all the existing remaindermen under this settlement, and all those of full age are willing. The infants, of course, cannot consent, but they appear by their guardian who thinks it would be for the benefit of the infants that this expenditure should be made. Accordingly, I am willing to authorise the application of the £10,000 in the purchase of chattels, but only on terms. In the first place, £10,000 is a small sum in these days when you consider devoting it to the furnishing of a mansion. On the other hand, the chattels which the testator settled by his will were confined to such chattels as his trustees considered suitable to be retained in settlement, i.e., they were not to be things which would be consumed in use or things of purely temporary utility, but substantial articles suitable to be kept as heirlooms. Secondly, I do not feel that it is right to allow the money to be spent now when there is no mansion house to put the chattels in. I propose to sanction the spending by or at the direction of the tenant for life, as and when the mansion house, or any part thereof, is re-built so as to be ready for occupation, of not more than £10,000 in the purchase of such furniture and chattels for the mansion house as the Settled Land Act trustees for the time being, other than the tenant for life should he be a trustee, consider to be suitable to be retained as heirlooms under the settlement created by the testator's will. C

Order accordingly. Costs of all parties as between solicitor and client to be paid out of the capital moneys subject to the trusts of the settlement. D

Solicitors: Farrer & Co. (for all parties). E

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.] F

G

H

THORNELOE & CLARKSON, LTD. AND OTHERS v.
BOARD OF TRADE.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Sellers, J.), May 16, 17, 18, 1950.]

Control of Industry—Development council—Power to set up—“Desired by a substantial number of persons engaged in the industry”—Need to ascertain wishes of employers and employed—Industrial Organisation and Development Act, 1947 (c. 40), s. 1 (4).

By the Industrial Organisation and Development Act, 1947, s. 1, the Board of Trade were empowered by Order to establish for any industry a development council where expedient for certain purposes in connection with the industry. By s. 1 (4): “A development council order shall not be made unless the board or minister concerned is satisfied that the establishment of a development council for the industry is desired by a substantial number of the persons engaged in the industry.”

After consulting various organisations as required by s. 1 (3) of the Act, the Board of Trade made the Clothing Industry Development Council Order, 1949, setting up a development council for the clothing industry. At the relevant time, the total number of firms engaged in the industry was about twenty-four thousand of which six thousand belonged to trade organisations. Sixteen such trade organisations, comprising four thousand five hundred firms, expressed opposition to the proposed establishment of a development council. Of the employees engaged in the industry, who numbered four hundred and seventy-four thousand, one hundred and fifty thousand in two unions expressed a desire for a development council to be established. Certain firms engaged in the industry sought a declaration that the Order was ultra vires or void.

HELD: (i) for the purposes of s. 1 (4) the unit to be considered was the total of the persons engaged in the industry, and the board must be satisfied that the establishment of a development council was desired by a substantial number of those persons as a whole and not by (a) a substantial number of the employers, and (b) a substantial number of employees.

(ii) even if it were open to the court to consider the grounds for the board's being satisfied within s. 1 (4), there was evidence on which it was reasonable to conclude that a substantial number of persons engaged in the industry desired the council to be established, and, therefore, the Order could not be said to be ultra vires or void.

[FOR THE INDUSTRIAL ORGANISATION AND DEVELOPMENT ACT, 1947, s. 1 (4), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 40, p. 1275.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Liversidge v. Anderson, [1941] 3 All E.R. 338; [1942] A.C. 206; 110 L.J.K.B. 724; 116 L.T. 1; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Point of Ayr Collieries, Ltd. v. Lloyd-George, [1943] 2 All E.R. 546; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (3) Robinson v. Minister of Town and Country Planning, [1947] 1 All E.R. 851; [1947] K.B. 702; [1947] L.J.R. 1285; 177 L.T. 375; 111 J.P. 378; 2nd Digest Supp.

ACTION for a declaration that the Clothing Industry Development Council Order, 1949 (S.I. 1949, No. 2124), made by the Board of Trade on Nov. 16, 1949, was ultra vires the powers of the Board under the Industrial Organisation and Development Act, 1947, and void.

The plaintiffs were six limited companies engaged in the clothing industry. They alleged that the Order had been made by the Board of Trade (the defendants) in contravention of and without complying with the requirements of s. 1 (3) and (4) of the Act. The relevant facts are set out in the headnote.

Beufus, K.C., Lloyd-Jones, K.C., and Vester for the plaintiffs.
The Attorney-General (Sir Hartley Shawcross, K.C.) and J. P. Ashworth for the defendants.

SELLERS, J.: I have come to the conclusion that the Attorney-General's contention sufficiently prevails for the action to fail. The plaintiffs are six limited companies who are employed in the clothing industry, and by this action they claim a declaration that the Clothing Industry Development Council Order, 1949 (S.I. 1949, No. 2124), made by the Board of Trade on Nov. 16, 1949, is ultra vires the Industrial Organisation and Development Act, 1947. By their statement of claim they allege that the said Order was made by the Board of Trade in contravention and without complying with the requirements of s. 1 (3) and (4) of that Act. The Industrial Organisation and Development Act, 1947, s. 1, so far as material to this action, provides:

"(1) There may be established for any industry, by an Order in that behalf made by an authority specified in sub-s. (2) of this section, a body, in this Act referred to as a development council, to whom there may be assigned by the Order any functions of a kind specified in sched. I to this Act for whose exercise by the council it appears to that authority to be expedient to provide in order to increase efficiency or productivity in the industry, to improve or develop the service that it renders or could render to the community, or to enable it to render such service more economically . . . (3) Before making a development council Order the board or Minister concerned shall consult any organisation appearing to them or him to be representative of substantial numbers of persons carrying on business in the industry and such organisations representative of persons employed in the industry as appear to the board or Minister concerned to be appropriate."

The allegation with regard to that was that the industry was "so organised that no organisation representative of persons carrying on business in the said industry is or could reasonably appear to be representative of a substantial number of persons so carrying on business."

When, however, the case was opened before this court, that allegation was abandoned or not persisted in, it being indicated, I think, that s. 14 of the Act made that contention untenable. The sole ground on which the order was sought to be impeached before the court was under s. 1 (4) which provides:

"A development council Order shall not be made unless the board or Minister concerned is satisfied that the establishment of a development council for the industry is desired by a substantial number of the persons engaged in the industry."

Before the Act of 1947, what is known as a working party had been set up in relation to the heavy clothing branch of the clothing industry, and the working party produced a report. After the passing of the Act, two other working parties—the Light Clothing Working Party and the Rubber-Proofed Clothing Working Party—were set up, and made investigations and issued their reports. As a result of the reports so made, the Board of Trade contemplated establishing a development council for the industry, and, in accordance with s. 1 (3) of the Act, called the representatives of the industry into consultation. On Jan. 13, 1948, on Nov. 9, 1948, and on Apr. 26, 1949, there were consultations between the Minister and the representatives of the industry. On the first two occasions the President of the Board of Trade himself attended, and, on the last occasion, Mr. John Edwards, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade. Following the first of those consultations, a circular was sent to representative bodies inviting their comments or suggestions with regard to this proposal to set up a development council. In due course a draft Order was prepared, which was submitted for consideration by the industry, and on Nov. 16, 1949, the Order, now the subject of this challenge, was passed by a resolution of each House of Parliament and came into operation on Jan. 1, 1950.

To support the submission that the Minister had acted beyond his powers, counsel for the plaintiffs submitted that, having regard to the terms of s. 1 (3) of the Act of 1947 where reference was made to what might be described as the two sides of the industry—persons carrying on business in the industry, on the one hand, and persons employed in the industry, on the other—that distinction should be maintained in construing sub-s. (4). Counsel invited the court to say that sub-s. (4) should be read as requiring the Minister to be satisfied that the establishment of a development council for the industry was desired by a substantial number of persons engaged in carrying on the business of the industry and also a substantial number of persons employed in the industry. But the sub-s. (4) refers to “persons engaged in the industry,” and that admittedly includes both employers and employed. It would appear to me that the phrase was advisedly used to include every interest in the industry, a wide and embracing term, and that the unit to be considered is the total of the persons engaged in the industry.

Counsel further submitted that “substantial” should be defined by the court in a way which would indicate more precisely what the basis of support for the project should be. Parliament could have stated, instead of a “substantial number of persons”, a fixed proportion or percentage, and it has not done so. Likewise Parliament could have required a substantial number of persons in each category to be in favour of the scheme, but the Act says “a substantial number of persons engaged in the industry.” I do not feel at liberty to substitute any more precise standard than “substantial” which is the requirement specified in the Act or to interpret “persons engaged in the industry” as if they were the same words as those used in s. 1 (3) describing those who have to be consulted. To do so would, I think, be to act as a legislator and not as a judge. The only interpretation I can give to this sub-section is that, as it states, the board or the Minister must be satisfied that the establishment of a development council of the industry is desired by a substantial number of persons engaged in the industry. I think the sub-section leaves it to the board or the Minister to assess, on grounds which they think fit, whether that requirement has been fulfilled. In one industry the weight might be placed on the desire of the employers; in another the weight might be placed on the desire of the employed, and Parliament, as I see it, has left it in the discretion of the stipulated persons to decide how that shall be applied.

The Attorney-General contended that it is not open to this court to consider the facts, and that it is for the Minister to investigate the matter and it is his satisfaction which that sub-section requires, but on the facts of this case I do not feel that this issue arises for the court’s consideration. If there had been a misdirection by the Minister as to the law, or if it had been established that there was no support whatsoever from the industry for this development council Order, other considerations might have arisen, and I should have required time to consider my judgment, but it seems to me, on what has been revealed in this case, that no such position does arise. I have dealt with the legal interpretation of the section. Even assuming I had acceded to the plaintiffs’ submission as to how that sub-section ought to be interpreted, there is no reason to think that the Minister did not apply his mind to the views of what may conveniently be termed both sides of the industry. I have nothing in front of me which satisfies me that he did not do that.

The expression of the satisfaction of the Minister that the requirement of s. 1 (4) had been complied with did not appear in the order and was nowhere stated. There may be good reason for this but, on the face of it, a brief statement by the competent authority of the necessary satisfaction and the basis of it would be helpful to all sections of an industry and might well have avoided litigation in the present case. It was, however, established that it need not be expressly stated: Liversidge v. Anderson (1) per VISCOUNT MAUGHAM ([1941] 3 All E.R. 348).

[HIS LORDSHIP considered the facts with regard to the numbers of employers and employees who expressed approval or disapproval of the proposed Order, and continued:] On the facts, the very foundation of this action has gone, for it is impossible to say that such an order is ultra vires merely because a number of people strongly oppose it. It must be established that the Minister has done something which is outside his powers to the extent that the Order cannot stand. I am satisfied on the facts of this case that there was evidence on which it was reasonable to conclude that a substantial number of persons engaged in the industry desired the council to be established. That, in itself, is a sufficient answer to the plaintiffs' claim in this action. As soon as it was established that there was sufficient evidence on which the Board of Trade or the Minister could reach a conclusion that there was a substantial number who desired the council, the decision was, I think, unchallengeable.

The Attorney-General contended that there was a line of authorities which established that where duties—such as in the present case—were entrusted to the Minister or authority it was not for this court to interfere with their exercise. I will refer only to the one most relied on. In Point of Ayr Collieries, Ltd. v. Lloyd-George (2) the control of the appellants' undertaking was taken over by the Ministry of Fuel and Power under the Defence Regulations, 1939. In the course of the judgment in that case, LORD GREENE, M.R., said ([1943] 2 All E.R. 547):

“If one thing is settled beyond the possibility of dispute, it is that, in construing regulations of this character expressed in this particular form of language, it is for the competent authority, whatever Ministry that may be, to decide as to whether or not a case for the exercise of the powers has arisen. It is for the competent authority to judge of the adequacy of the evidence before it. It is for the competent authority to judge of the credibility of that evidence. It is for the competent authority to judge whether or not it is desirable or necessary to make further investigations before taking action. It is for the competent authority to decide whether the situation requires an immediate step, or whether some delay may be allowed for further investigation and perhaps negotiation. All those matters are placed by Parliament in the hands of the Minister in the belief that the Minister will exercise his powers properly, and in the knowledge that, if he does not do so, he is liable to the criticism of Parliament. One thing is certain, and that is that those matters are not within the competence of this court. It is the competent authority that is selected by Parliament to come to the decision, and, if that decision is come to in good faith, this court has no power to interfere, provided, of course, that the action is one which is within the four corners of the authority delegated to the Minister.”

The answer which was sought to be made by counsel on behalf of the plaintiffs to distinguish that line of authority was based on some observations in Robinson v. Minister of Town and Country Planning (3), per LORD GREENE, M.R., ([1947] 1 All E.R. 857):

“First, it must be shown to his satisfaction that a particular state of facts exists, viz., that a part (or parts) of the area of the local planning authority consists of land which has sustained war damage or of such land together with other land contiguous or adjacent thereto. As I have said, no question is raised as to the propriety of the Minister's conclusion on this point, and I need say nothing more about it. The other class of matter is, in my view, one of opinion and policy as to which the Minister, assuming always that he acts bona fide, is the sole judge, viz., he must be satisfied that it is requisite for the purpose of dealing satisfactorily with extensive war damage that all or some part of the land in question should be laid out afresh and re-developed as a whole. The words ‘requisite’ and

'satisfactorily' clearly indicate that the question is one of opinion and policy, matters which are peculiarly for the Minister himself to decide. No objective test is possible."

It was submitted that the Master of the Rolls was there distinguishing between questions depending on the view of the Minister where an objective test was impossible and questions, such as that in the present case, to which an objective test could be applied. It was said that, s. 1 (4) of the Act of 1947 permitted of an objective test and the court was free to investigate the matter to see whether the Minister had come to a conclusion which the court was prepared to uphold. Further support for that argument was sought from the judgment of SOMERVELL, L.J., where he said (ibid., 863):

"It would be undesirable and impossible to formulate precisely what evidence and in what circumstances the courts might examine the Minister's decision under this Act or Acts with similar provisions. It has often been said in this class of case that the court will interfere if there is evidence of bad faith in the steps which lead up to the making of an order. LORD DUNEDIN, in dealing with an Act under which the Minister had power to confirm a scheme submitted by a local authority, said that, if one can find that the scheme is inconsistent with the provisions of the Act which authorises the scheme, the scheme will be bad. To take, no doubt, an impossible example under the present Act [the Town and Country Planning Act, 1944], if an authority submitted an application under s. 1 which showed on the face of it that the area covered had suffered no or very little war damage and the Minister purported to make an order, it might be said that the application was not in accordance with the provisions of the Act, and, therefore, could not found the Minister's jurisdiction. I have added these observations in case anything I have said might be construed as laying down that in no case can a party succeed in proceedings under s. 16 except where some definite provision of the Act, such as the giving of notices, has not been complied with, or where he takes upon himself the burden of establishing bad faith."

I do not find it necessary to consider that matter further because, in this case, I do not find any misdirection in law by the board or Minister and it has not been shown that there was no evidence for their consideration. As I have said, had it been otherwise I might have reserved my judgment to consider whether the line of authority relied on by the Attorney-General could be distinguished in the way which is indicated.

It was suggested during the argument that there was bad faith on the part of the Minister, but there was no such allegation in the pleadings, no evidence of it before the court and nothing in the case which gave any indication of it.

Judgment for the defendants with costs.

Solicitors: Cooper, Bake, Fettes, Roche & Wade (for the plaintiffs); The Solicitor, Board of Trade (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. A. ANNES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re BANBURY (deceased). WESTMINSTER BANK, LTD.
v. BANBURY.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Danckwerts, J.), June 9, 1950.]

Annuity—Annuity free of income tax —“Payment” of stated amount—Direction by will to set aside annually £1,500 free of tax and accumulate—Finance Act, 1941 (c. 30), s. 25 (1).

By his will, dated June 12, 1934, B., who died on Aug. 13, 1936, devised all his freehold land to his trustee in strict settlement. By cl. 14, B. directed the sale and conversion of his personal estate, describing the resultant fund as his “residuary trust fund,” and by cl. 15 he provided: “Subject as aforesaid my trustee shall for a period of twenty-one years from my death set aside annually the sum of £1,500 (free of tax) from the income of the residuary trust fund and accumulate the same in the way of compound interest by investing the same and the resulting income thereof from time to time in any investments in which the residuary trust fund is authorised to be invested and shall add the accumulations to the capital of that fund so as to form one fund therewith.” By cl. 16, B. directed that his residuary trust fund should (in substance) devolve in the same way as his freehold land. On the construction of cl. 15, HELD: although the “payment” directed to be made was no more than a transfer by the trustee from one account to another and the accumulation was not to be dealt with until the end of the twenty-one years, on a liberal interpretation of the Finance Act, 1941, s. 25 (1), the payment so to be made was a “payment” within the meaning of that term in that sub-section, and, therefore, the amount payable was to be reduced in accordance with s. 25 as amended by the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1945, s. 20.

[FOR THE FINANCE ACT, 1941, s. 25, see HALSBURY’S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 12, pp. 525-527.]

ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine, inter alia, whether, having regard to the Finance Act, 1941, s. 25 (1), as amended by the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1945, s. 20, on the true construction of the will and in the events which had happened, there ought to be set aside in accordance with the said will the annual sum of £1,500 free of income tax (a) at the current rate applicable in each year, or (b) the appropriate fraction within s. 25 (as amended).

Dunbar for the plaintiff, the trustee under the will.

Wilfrid Hunt for the first defendant, the tenant for life.

T. Burgess for the second defendant, the tenant in tail in remainder.

DANCKWERTS, J.: This is a short point, but at the same time one which is rather puzzling. By his will, which was dated June 12, 1934, Lord Banbury, who died on Aug. 13, 1936, devised all his freehold land and hereditaments to his trustee on trusts under which the first defendant, his grandson, Charles William Banbury, who is now Lord Banbury, if he attained the age of twenty-five years, became entitled to the income during his life on protective trusts without impeachment of waste. From and after the death of the first defendant there were trusts of certain other funds for the first or other sons of the first defendant successively according to seniority in tail male with remainder, followed, owing to the revocation of two clauses in the will, by a trust for the first and other sons of his brother, Edmund Banbury, successively according to seniority in tail male with remainder on trust for the first and other sons of his cousin, Edward Banbury, and, finally, on trust for his own right heirs in fee simple. The second defendant is a son of the brother, Edmund Banbury. The first defendant has attained twenty-five years, and he has married and has two daughters but no son. Consequently, the second defendant is the present tenant in tail male in remainder, subject to the possibility of a son being born to the first defendant.

By cl. 14 of his will the testator bequeathed his personal estate on the usual trusts for conversion and described the resulting fund as "the residuary trust fund."

A By cl. 16 the residuary trust fund was directed to be held on trusts which in substance caused it to devolve in the same way as the land. The material clause of the will for the purposes of the question which I have to decide is cl. 15, which is in these terms:

B "Subject as aforesaid my trustee shall for a period of twenty-one years from my death set aside annually the sum of £1,500 (free of tax) from the income of the residuary trust fund and accumulate the same in the way of compound interest by investing the same and the resulting income thereof from time to time in any investments in which the residuary trust fund is authorised to be invested and shall add the accumulations to the capital of that fund so as to form one fund therewith."

C It is with regard to that provision setting aside £1,500 a year free of tax that the question arises having regard to the Finance Act, 1941, s. 25, which was designed to place on persons entitled to annual sums the burden of the increase in tax which occurred as the result of the war.

The Finance Act, 1941, s. 25, provides:

D " (1) Subject to the provisions of this section, any provision, however worded, for the payment, whether periodically or otherwise, of a stated amount free of income tax, or free of income tax other than surtax, being a provision which—(a) is contained in any deed or other instrument, in any will or codicil, in any order of any court, in any local or personal Act, or in any contract, whether oral or in writing; and (b) was made before Sept. 3, 1939; and (c) has not been varied on or after that date shall, as respects
E payments falling to be made during any year of assessment, the standard rate of income tax for which is 10s. in the pound, have effect as if for the stated amount there were substituted an amount equal to twenty twenty-ninths thereof."

F In the present case, both the date of the will and the date of the testator's death were before Sept. 3, 1939, and, therefore, there is no doubt that the provisions of this section are relevant if they are applicable to the terms of this clause. The section has been amended by the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1945, s. 20, which was passed to deal with an alteration of the standard rate of income tax below 10s. in the pound and has reference to the present time when the tax is 9s. in the pound. Nothing turns on that. Section 25 of the Act of 1941 further provides:

G " (3) A person who is entitled under any such provision as is mentioned in sub-s. (1) of this section to a payment free of income tax, or free of income tax other than surtax, shall be entitled to [an] adjustment of his surtax for the year 1940-41 . . . (4) If, in the case of a payment to which sub-s. (1) of this section applies, the relations of the payee and payor are such that the payee is accountable to the payor for so much of any relief from income
H tax which he receives as is ascribable to the payment (a) the liability of the payee to account to the payor shall be limited to twenty twenty-ninths of the sum for which he would have been accountable if the 1938-39 rates of income tax, other than surtax, had applied to the year of assessment in which the payment falls to be made, and the foregoing provisions of this section had not passed . . . "

That is only material so far as it throws some light on the meaning of sub-s. (1) for the purposes of the present case.

The question is whether s. 25 (1) applies to the circumstances of this case. There is no doubt that £1,500 annually is a "stated amount" and is a periodical payment, and that the words "free of tax," which are equivalent to "free of income tax," appear in the will. Is there, however, a "payment" within s. 25 (1), because, during the period of accumulation, the trustee, who is responsible for the payment of income tax on the income of the trust fund, will set aside primarily the sum of £1,500 and will then make the investments to carry out the trust, and it is not until the period of twenty-one years has come to an end that the trustee will deal with the income of the fund so accumulated along with the rest of the residuary trust fund by making payment of the income to the persons who are then entitled to receive the income of the residuary trust fund. Not until the residuary trust fund becomes divisible or payable finally will any payment out of that fund, which would include the accumulations made out of income in this way, be made to any particular person. In the meantime, the trustee is merely transferring from one hand to another a certain proportion of the income in its hands.

Counsel for the second defendant claims that this transaction is not within the provisions of this Act because it is not a payment. He submits that a payment involves a payor and a payee, and, no doubt, that is normally the case, as is, indeed, recognised by the provisions of s. 25 (4) of the Act of 1941. On the other hand, counsel for the first defendant, the present Lord Banbury, who receives the benefit only of such proportion of the income of the trustee as is left after this provision is attended to, and, therefore, suffers by the deduction from the income of which he would otherwise be the beneficiary, claims that there is a payment because sooner or later the fund is paid over to somebody who succeeds to the residuary trust fund.

The matter seems to be one of considerable difficulty. I think that counsel for the first defendant is plainly right when he suggests that the mischief of the Act includes a case of this kind, because, if the provision does not apply, it would, I think, have been thought by the legislature that an undue burden was being placed on a person in the position of the first defendant and that the sum which is to be accumulated ought to be reduced in fairness so that that person's income was not unduly restricted. I have come to the conclusion that a liberal interpretation ought to be given to the words of s. 25 (1). That, I think, is indicated by the words "any provision, however worded." To me that indicates that I am to have regard to the substance of the transaction rather than the narrow words of the section. I think, therefore, that there is a payment in the present case within the meaning of s. 25 (1), even though the trustee is merely paying to itself in another account which is also in the trustee's name, and, therefore, the provisions with regard to the reduction of such payment or amount are applicable in this case.

Order accordingly. Costs as between solicitor and client out of the capital of the fund.
Solicitors: Gregory, Rowcliffe & Co. (for all parties).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

BIRCH v. NATIONAL UNION OF RAILWAYMEN AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Danckwerts, J.), May 22, 23, 25, 1950.]

Trade Union—Political fund—Member “contracting out”—Rules approved by Registrar of Friendly Societies—Effect of approval—Rule resulting in exclusion of exempted member from office—Validity—Trade Union Act, 1913 (c. 30), s. 3 (1) (b).

The Rules of the National Union of Railwaymen, a registered trade union, provide by r. XXI, cl. 8: “A member who is exempt from the obligation to contribute to the political fund of the union shall not be excluded from any benefits of the union, or placed in any respect, either directly or indirectly, under any disability or disadvantage as compared with other members of the union by reason of his being so exempt, except that such member shall take no part in the control or management of the political fund of the union, and shall be ineligible to occupy any office or representative position involving any such control or management.”

B., who had obtained exemption from the obligation to contribute to the union's political fund, was the elected chairman of a branch of the union, an office involving control or management of the political fund of the union. On Feb. 16, 1948, he was declared by the general secretary of the union ineligible by virtue of r. XXI, cl. 8, to hold that office, and he thereafter ceased to act as chairman. He sought a declaration that the rules of the union did not comply with the Trade Union Act, 1913, s. 3 (1) (b), in that they did not prevent him, as an exempted member, being placed at a disadvantage as compared with other members with regard to eligibility to hold the office of chairman, and that it was unlawful for the funds of the union to be applied in furtherance of any political object to which s. 3 applied so long as rules necessary for complying with s. 3 (1) (b) were not in force. The rules had been approved by the registrar as required by s. 3 (1).

HELD: (i) the approval of the registrar did not preclude consideration by the court whether the conditions required by s. 3 (1) (b) were satisfied.

(ii) as the effect of r. XXI, cl. 8, read with the other rules of the union, was to exclude B. from an office in the union, he was placed at a “disadvantage as compared with other members of the union . . . by reasons of his being . . . exempt” from the obligation to contribute to the political fund within s. 3 (1) (b), and, therefore, he was entitled to the declaration sought.

[AS TO STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS AS TO RULES OF TRADE UNION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 32, pp. 492, 493, para. 786; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 43, pp. 103-105, Nos. 1088-1094.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants v. Osborne, [1910] A.C. 87; 79 L.J.Ch. 87; 101 L.T. 787; 43 Digest 93, 963.
- (2) Forster v. National Amalgamated Union of Shop Assistants, Warehousemen and Clerks, [1927] 1 Ch. 539; 96 L.J.Ch. 141; 137 L.T. 86; 43 Digest 105, 1093.
- (3) Dewhurst v. Clarkson, (1854), 3 E. & B. 194; 2 C.L.R. 1143; 23 L.J.Q.B. 247; 23 L.T.O.S. 109; 18 J.P. 535; 118 E.R. 1114; 25 Digest 300, 87.
- (4) Rosenberg v. Northumberland Building Society, (1889), 22 Q.B.D. 373; 60 L.T. 558; 7 Digest 457, 17.
- (5) Laing v. Reed, (1869), 5 Ch. App. 4; 39 L.J.Ch. 1; 21 L.T. 773; 34 J.P. 134; 7 Digest 458, 25.
- (6) Re Guardian Permanent Benefit Building Society, (1882), 23 Ch.D. 440; 52 L.J.Ch. 857; 48 L.T. 134; 7 Digest 455, 4.

- (7) Murray v. Scott, Agnew v. Murray, Brimelow v. Murray, (1884), 9 App. Cas. 519; 53 L.J.Ch. 745; 51 L.T. 462; 7 Digest 455, 5.
- (8) Cullerne v. London and Suburban General Permanent Building Society, (1890), 25 Q.B.D. 485; 59 L.J.Q.B. 525; 63 L.T. 511; 55 J.P. 148; 7 Digest 458, 24.
- (9) Davie v. Colinton Friendly Society, (1870), 9 Macph. (Ct. of Sess.) 96; 25 Digest 323, 244 n.

ACTION.

The plaintiff, who was a member of the National Union of Railwaymen, claimed a declaration that the rules of the union in force did not comply with the Trade Union Act, 1913, s. 3 (1) (b), and that it was unlawful for the funds of the union to be applied in furtherance of any political object to which s. 3 of the Act applied so long as any rules necessary for complying with s. 3 (1) (b) were not in force. The plaintiff also asked for an injunction restraining the union from so applying its funds so long as any rules necessary for complying with the section were not in force, and a declaration that any words in r. XXI, cl. 8, of the rules of the union making the plaintiff ineligible, as a non-subscriber to the political fund, to occupy any office or position in the union involving any control or management were void.

Lloyd-Jones, K.C., J. H. Barrington and Vester for the plaintiff.

Sir Walter Monckton, K.C., and J. V. Nesbitt for the defendants, the National Union of Railwaymen, the general trustees of the union, and the trustees of the Woodford Halse branch of the union.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 25. DANCKWERTS, J., read the following judgment. The plaintiff, Arthur Birch, who is employed as a railway goods guard, has been a member of the first defendant, the National Union of Railwaymen, a registered trade union, since 1936. In December, 1946, the plaintiff was elected chairman of the Woodford Halse branch of the union, and was re-elected as such chairman in December, 1947. In January, 1948, one of the defendants, William Bannard, a member of the branch and one of the trustees of the branch, was nominated by resolution of the branch to be one of the candidates for adoption by the union as a Parliamentary candidate, pursuant to r. XXI, cl. 10 (a), of the Rules of the Union, and the plaintiff as chairman of the branch signed the appropriate nomination form in accordance with that rule. The plaintiff, however, refused to sign a circular in the form of a personal recommendation of Mr. Bannard's nomination, because, as the plaintiff said, the plaintiff did not consider Mr. Bannard a sufficiently responsible person in view of the part which he had played a short time previously in bringing about a stoppage of work against the advice and instructions of the union. The result of this was that in February, 1948, Mr. Bannard questioned the eligibility of the plaintiff, who had always obtained exemption from the obligation to contribute to the union's political fund (though he describes himself as "a practical socialist"), to hold the office of chairman of the branch. The matter was referred to the general secretary of the union for his ruling, and on Feb. 16, 1948, he replied that a member who had "contracted out" of the political fund was not eligible to serve as a branch officer. A protest was sent to the general secretary by the plaintiff, but the general secretary confirmed this ruling on Mar. 12, 1948. The plaintiff ceased to act as chairman of the branch in view of this ruling.

The relevant rule is r. XXI, cl. 8, of the Rules of the National Union of Railwaymen which is in the following terms:

"A member who is exempt from the obligation to contribute to the political fund of the union shall not be excluded from any benefits of the union, or placed in any respect, either directly or indirectly, under any disability or disadvantage as compared with other members of the union by reason of his being so exempt, except that such member shall take no part in the control or management of the political fund of the union, and shall be ineligible to occupy any office or representative position involving any such control or management."

A The plaintiff complained to the Registrar of Friendly Societies under the jurisdiction conferred on the registrar by the Trade Union Act, 1913, s. 3 (2), that there had been a breach of the rules, and on Nov. 8, 1948 a decision was given by the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies who was of opinion that the office of chairman of the branch involved control or management of the political fund so that the plaintiff under the above-mentioned rule was not eligible for that office, and the registrar, therefore, ruled that no breach of the rule had been committed. The plaintiff, however, now brings this action against the National B Union of Railwaymen, the three general trustees of the union and the three trustees of the Woodford Halse branch, for certain relief, based on the contention that the provisions of r. XXI, cl. 8, do not comply with the requirements of the Trade Union Act, 1913.

C The Trade Union Act, 1913, was passed in consequence of the decision in Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants v. Osborne (1) that nothing in the Trade Union Acts justified a trade union in having a fund for political purposes. There is no doubt that the intention of the Act of 1913 was to enable a trade union to apply funds collected from its members to political objects, subject to certain limitations and safeguards for members who did not wish to contribute to funds for such objects. Section 1 and s. 2 (1) of the Act enabled a combination D to be registered as a trade union notwithstanding that its objects or powers included the furtherance of political objects, provided that the principal objects of the combination were those objects (described in this Act as "statutory objects") which are to be found in the Trade Union Amendment Act, 1876, and are the regulation of the relations of workmen and masters and the like. Section 2 of the Act provides:

E "(2) The Registrar of Friendly Societies shall not register any combination as a trade union unless in his opinion, having regard to the constitution of the combination, the principal objects of the combination are statutory objects . . ."

and provides for the withdrawal of the certificate in certain circumstances. Section 2 (3) enables an unregistered trade union to obtain a certificate that it is a trade union. Sub-section (4) provides for an appeal to the court from F a refusal of the registrar to register. Sub-section (5) provides that:

"A certificate of the registrar that a trade union is a trade union within the meaning of this Act shall, so long as it is in force, be conclusive for all purposes."

G Section 3 is the section under which the questions in this action primarily arise. Sub-section (1) is in the following terms:

H "The funds of a trade union shall not be applied, either directly or in conjunction with any other trade union, association, or body, or otherwise indirectly, in the furtherance of the political objects to which this section applies (without prejudice to the furtherance of any other political objects), unless the furtherance of those objects has been approved as an object of the union by a resolution for the time being in force passed on a ballot of the members of the union taken in accordance with this Act for the purpose by a majority of the members voting; and where such a resolution is in force, unless rules, to be approved, whether the union is registered or not, by the Registrar of Friendly Societies, are in force providing— (a) That any payments in the furtherance of those objects are to be made out of a separate fund (in this Act referred to as the political fund of the union), and for the exemption in accordance with this Act of any member of the union from any obligation to contribute to such a fund if he gives notice in accordance with this Act that he objects to contribute; and (b) That a member who is exempt from the obligation to contribute to the political fund of the union shall not be excluded from any benefits of the union, or placed in any respect either directly or indirectly under any disability or at any disadvantage as compared with other members of the union (except in relation to the control or management of the political fund) by reason of his being so exempt, and that contribution to the political fund of the union shall not be made a condition for admission to the union."

Sub-section (2) contains the provisions under which the registrar dealt with the complaint made to him by the plaintiff in the present case. The terms of the sub-section are as follows:

"If any member of a trade union alleges that he is aggrieved by a breach of any rule made in pursuance of this section, he may complain to the Registrar of Friendly Societies, and the Registrar of Friendly Societies, after giving the complainant and any representative of the union an opportunity of being heard, may, if he considers that such a breach has been committed, make such order for remedying the breach as he thinks just under the circumstances; and any such order of the registrar shall be binding and conclusive on all parties without appeal and shall not be removable into any court of law or restrainable by injunction, and on being recorded in the county court, may be enforced as if it had been an order of the county court. In the application of this provision to Scotland the sheriff court shall be substituted for the county court, and 'interdict' shall be substituted for 'injunction'."

Sub-section (3) defines the political objects to which the section applies, and sub-s. (4) provides that a resolution under this section approving political objects as an object of the union shall take effect as if it were a rule of the union. Section 4 of the Act requires a ballot for the purposes of the Act to be taken in accordance with rules of the union to be approved for the purpose, whether the union is registered or not, by the Registrar of Friendly Societies, and the registrar is directed not to approve any such rules

"... unless he is satisfied that every member has an equal right, and, if reasonably possible, a fair opportunity of voting, and the secrecy of the ballot is properly secured."

Section 4 (2) provides:

"If the Registrar of Friendly Societies is satisfied, and certifies, that rules for the purpose of a ballot under this Act or rules made for other purposes of this Act which require approval by the registrar, have been approved by a majority of members of a trade union, whether registered or not, voting for the purpose, or by a majority of delegates of such a trade union voting at a meeting called for the purpose, those rules shall have effect as rules of the union, notwithstanding that the provisions of the rules of the union as to the alteration of rules or the making of new rules have not been complied with."

"Rules made for other purposes of this Act which require approval by the registrar" in that sub-section appear to include the rules providing for paras. (a) and (b) in s. 3 (1). Section 5 and the form in the schedule to the Act provide for the manner in which a member who objects to contribute to the political fund of the union is to give notice and claim exemption. Section 6 provides for two alternative methods in which the exemption can be provided for. One method is by a separate, that is, additional, levy from members who are not exempt from contribution to the political fund, and the other method is by relief of the exempted members from part of the contributions required from members of the union. In the present case, the defendant union, by r. XXI, cl. 7, has adopted the latter method. Counsel for the defendants placed some reliance on this feature, but, so far as management of the general fund of the union and of the political fund are concerned for practical bookkeeping purposes, I cannot see that it makes any difference whether the political fund is made up by taking additional contributions from members who are not exempted or by taking over a portion of the total contributions made by such members of the union.

In pursuance, or, at any rate, in purported pursuance of the Act, a political fund was established by the defendant union and rules were made for this political fund and were approved by the Registrar of Friendly Societies. Though later approvals have been given to the rules by the registrar on amendment, r. XXI, cl. 8, which is the subject of the plaintiff's attack in the present case, has existed in its present form since 1934, and was approved by the registrar on Nov. 21, 1934, when he gave a certificate for the purpose. The plaintiff contends that the rule does not satisfy the requirements of or offends against the provisions of para. (b) of s. 3 (1) of the Act, so that no part of the funds of the defendant union may lawfully be applied for political purposes, and, if this is a sound contention, it would appear that funds of the union may have been applied unlawfully to political purposes ever since 1934. This indicates the seriousness and importance of the questions which arise in this action. It is evident that, during this long period, the rule has been taken to have been unobjectionable. On the other hand, the plaintiff was believed to be qualified for office until Mr. Bannard was inspired to question his eligibility.

The amounts involved in each year, so far as this branch of the union is concerned, are comparatively small sums. In 1947 the branch had 476 members of whom 113 were exempt from contribution to the political fund. In 1948 the numbers were respectively 471 and 134. In 1947, the income of the general fund was £689 5s., and that of the political fund was £39 6s. 11d. In 1948 the figures were respectively £648 1s. and £38 1s. 8d. But the rule is one of the rules of the National Union of Railwaymen and the whole political fund of the union appears to be affected. Under s. 3 of the Act application of the funds of a trade union in furtherance of political objects is prohibited unless the conditions laid down in that section are satisfied. These conditions are that (i) furtherance of those objects has been approved as an object of the union by a resolution passed on a ballot of the members, and (ii) rules to be approved by the Registrar of Friendly Societies are in force, which must provide (a) that any payments are to be made out of a separate political fund in respect of which any member can obtain exemption from contribution by an appropriate notice, and (b) a non-contributing member shall not be excluded from benefits of the union or placed under any disability or disadvantage as compared with other members of the union (except in relation to the control or management of the political fund) and contribution must not be made a condition of admission to the union. If these conditions are satisfied, then, as observed by EVE, J., in Forster v. National Amalgamated Union of Shop Assistants, Warehousemen and Clerks (2) ([1927] 1 Ch. 546), the statutory restrictions cease to operate.

In the present case, the conditions as to approval of the furtherance of the objects by a resolution of the members of the union and the rules providing for a separate political fund and for exemption from contribution by notice and as regards admission to the union are satisfied. The difficulties arise in respect of para. (b) in s. 3 (1), but the rules have received the approval of the Registrar of Friendly Societies. In Forster's case (2), EVE, J., held that where a question as to a breach of a rule had been referred to the registrar under s. 3 (2) of the Act, it was not open to the parties to raise the same question in an action in the High Court of Justice. In the present case, therefore, I do think I am bound to proceed on the footing that the effect of r. XXI, cl. 8, is to disqualify the plaintiff from holding the office of chairman of the branch because that office involves the control or management of the political fund of the branch. It is unnecessary, therefore, for me to consider in detail the rules which involve control or management of the political fund of the branch by the chairman. The point is that the same officers and committee manage both the general fund and the political fund. The issue in this action is not whether the plaintiff was unlawfully deprived of the office of branch chairman, but whether the political fund of the union is lawful. The registrar was solely concerned with the question whether there had been a breach of the rules, and he expressly disclaimed any intention to deal with the question whether the rule complied with the provisions of s. 3 of the Act, but the registrar did express the opinion that the rule, by making the plaintiff, as a non-contributing member, ineligible for the office of chairman, placed him under a disability as compared with other members of the union, and it appears obvious to me that this is so. The argument for the plaintiff is that the rule, so far from providing that the plaintiff, though exempted from contribution to the political fund, is not placed under any disability or at any disadvantage as compared with other members, in fact, by its concluding two lines, places the plaintiff under such a disability or at such a disadvantage. Accordingly (it is said) the second condition of the provisions of s. 3 (1) is not satisfied, and the prohibition against the application of the funds of the trade union in furtherance of political objects is fully operative. On behalf of the defendants it is submitted that (i) it is not now admissible to consider such criticisms of r. XXI, cl. 8, since the rules have received the approval of the Registrar of Friendly Societies, as required by the section, and (ii) the rule is not properly open to criticism because the ineligibility for office produced by the rule falls within the permitted exemption contained in para. (b) in sub-s. (1) of s. 3. If the effect of the registrar's approval is as contended, then, of course, it is an end of the matter, as the validity of the rule cannot be impugned. In sub-s. (1) of s. 3 of the Act, though the approval of the registrar is required, the result of such approval is not expressly stated.

In the course of the discussion, I was referred to a number of cases in which the effect of approval of rules, or a certificate in respect of them, was considered by the court. In Dewhurst v. Clarkson (3), the court was concerned with a certificate which a barrister was required to give under the Friendly Societies Act, 1834, s. 4, that the rules of a society were "in conformity to law and to the provisions of the said recited Act [10 Geo. IV, c. 56] and this Act," the section also providing that:

" . . . all rules, alterations and amendments thereof, from the time when the same should be certified by the said barrister or advocate, shall be binding on the several members and officers of the said society, and all other persons having interest therein."

The majority of the court thought that the barrister's certificate barred objection as to the regularity in which the rules had been made, but observed that the barrister was not required to inquire into the regularity of the making of the rules, so that his certificate was not to be considered a judicial determination of the matter. ERLE, J., thought that the certificate only fixed the time when the rules became operative and so did not bar objection as to regularity. That case was followed or applied in Rosenberg v. Northumberland Building Society (4), a case on the Building Societies Act, 1874, which, by s. 17, provides that the registrar

" . . . if he finds that the rules contain all the provisions set forth in s. 16 of this Act, and that they are in conformity with this Act," is to register the rules. The decision of the court was that the registrar's certificate was conclusive as to the validity of the proceedings taken by the society for the passing of the new rules. In Laing v. Reed (5), a case on the Building Societies Act, 1836, it was held that a certificate of a barrister given under that Act was not conclusive as to the validity of a rule authorising borrowing of money by the society, and that the certificate could not prevent the court deciding that such a rule was ultra vires. Criticisms of this case in respect of the decision that such borrowing was ultra vires have not touched the question as to the effect of the certificate. In Re Guardian Permanent Benefit Building Society (6), Murray v. Scott (7) and Cullerne v. London and Suburban General Permanent Building Society (8), the discussion does not appear really to have been directed to the conclusiveness or otherwise of the certificate which had been given. Davie v. Colinton Friendly Society (9) is a Scottish case in regard to the Friendly Societies Act, 1855, in which it was held that the certificate of the registrar, though essential to the validity of the rules, was no bar to a challenge of them in a court of competent jurisdiction. The court seems to have thought that it was the duty of the registrar to refuse a certificate if the rules were illegal on their face, and it is to be noted that the statute provided that “ . . . as against such member or person such certificate shall be conclusive of the validity thereof.”

There is some basis for the contention of counsel for the plaintiff that the view of the court was that the object of the certificate was merely to show the date from which the rules came into effect.

So far as any principle can be ascertained from these cases, they indicate that such approval or certificate normally prevents inquiry into the regularity of the steps taken to pass the rules, but does not prevent judicial inquiry into the validity of the rules if it is contended that they are ultra vires. But these cases were decided in reference to different statutory provisions, and I cannot regard them as of great assistance on the question which I have to decide. The only reported case on the effect of the Trade Union Act, 1913, s. 3, appears to be Forster's case (2), and, as it was admitted in that case that rules had been passed by the members and approved by the registrar providing for paras. (a) and (b) of s. 3 (1), EVE, J., was not faced by the questions which I have to decide.

In the Trade Union Act, 1913, under s. 2 (2) and (3), the registrar has to be satisfied of certain matters requiring careful consideration before he grants his certificate, and by sub-s. (5) his certificate is then made conclusive for all purposes. Under s. 3 (2), the registrar's order for remedying a breach of any rule is made binding and conclusive on all parties without appeal, and it is a reasonable inference that his decision that there has not been a breach of a rule cannot afterwards be re-opened in court (as EVE, J., held in Forster's case (2)). The registrar has to be satisfied as to certain matters in connection with the ballot under s. 4 (1). Section 4 (2) requires the registrar to be satisfied that rules which require his approval have been approved by a majority of the members or delegates, and then his certificate bars objection on the ground that the provisions of the rules of the union as to the making or alteration of rules have not been complied with. All these sub-sections contain provisions showing what the registrar is to consider, or what the effect of his certificate is to be. In s. 3 (1) there is merely a provision that the relevant rules are “ to be approved ” by the registrar. It was contended on behalf of the defendants that such approval must be meant to have some effect, and that the intention is that trade union officials might safely act on the rules and treat them as valid once they have been approved by the registrar. There is much force in this contention, and it is not unreasonable that trade union officials should suppose that, when rules have passed the scrutiny of the registrar, such rules can be treated as effective. On the other hand, the cases to which I have referred show that certificates of approval under a number of statutes have been treated as effective only to prevent subsequent allegations of failure to comply with forms of procedure and not to prevent attack on the material validity of the rules. In the present case, the legislature has made it plain in other sections that certificates under this Act are to be conclusive, but has omitted any such provision in the present context. It seems to me that the approval mentioned in s. 3 (1) cannot be treated as conclusive, so as to preclude consideration by the court whether the conditions required by the sub-section have been satisfied.

I have, therefore, to consider whether r. XXI, cl. 8, is in accordance with the requirements of para. (b) of s. 3 (1). It is to be observed that, when first read, the rule appears to follow the requirements of para. (b) of s. 3 (1) and to confine discrimination and ineligibility to positions involving control or management of the political fund, which is the exception mentioned in the paragraph. It is not until it is discovered that an exempted member is disqualified from holding the office of chairman because that office involves control or management of the political fund as well as the general fund, that doubts begin to arise.

Counsel for the defendants contended (as I understood his argument) that (i) as a matter of practical administration of the affairs of the branch, it is necessary to combine the control and management of the general fund and the political fund in the hands of the same officials of the branch, and (ii) accordingly, the exempted member must suffer the disability or disadvantage of exclusion from office by reason of the exception permitting disability or disadvantage where the control or management of the political fund is involved. There is, he said, no provision confining the exception to functions solely concerned with control or management of the political fund. This is an ingenious argument, but be it observed that the effect is to exclude an exempted member from any part in the affairs of his branch as an officer or a representative by reason of the fact that the same persons administer (as the rules are constituted) both the general and the political funds. This appears to me to be equivalent to the exception swallowing the provisions of para. (b) which were primarily designed to prevent disability being imposed on the exempted member. In other words, as long as the constitution of the union fails to separate the control and management of the political fund from other functions of the union, there is no limit to the area of the exception and an exempted member might find himself excluded from practically all the activities of his branch. I cannot believe that this is the result of an exception introduced into a provision designed to protect the exempted member. It is entirely reasonable that a non-contributor should be excluded from control or management of the political fund; it is quite another matter that he should be excluded from any office in his union or branch.

I reach the conclusion, therefore, that cl. 8 of r. XXI, in conjunction with the other rules of the union, offends against the provisions of para. (b) of s. 3 (1) of the Act. Consequently, the conditions laid down by that section are not satisfied, and application of the funds of the defendant union in furtherance of political objects is prohibited by the section. It is regrettable that a fund which has been administered in good faith for so many years should be found to be unlawful. But that is the result of the way in which the rules of this union have been drafted, and its scheme of administration or government. It is the constitution of the union and its branches which cause r. XXI, cl. 8, to have an effect which was, I think, not anticipated, and which was not perceived when Mr. William Bannard took steps to have the plaintiff disqualified from the office of chairman of the Woodford Halse Branch of the union.

Judgment for the plaintiff with costs.

Solicitors: Greenwood, Milne & Lyall (for the plaintiff); Pattinson & Brewer (for the defendants); Treasury Solicitor (for the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

ELECTRIC AND MUSICAL INDUSTRIES, LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Simonds, Lord Normand, Lord Morton of Henryton, Lord MacDermott and Lord Reid), May 8, 9, 10, June 23, 1950.]

Excess Profits Tax—"Income received from investment"—Fees from licences to perform gramophone records in public collected and distributed to members by company limited by guarantee—Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939 (c. 109), sched. VII, Part I, para. 6 (1).

To protect themselves against infringement of their copyright entitling them to the exclusive right of the performance in public of their records, groups of gramophone record manufacturers incorporated a company limited by guarantee and not having a share capital, with power under its memorandum of association to exercise and enforce on behalf of its members all their rights and remedies under the Copyright Act, 1911; to grant, on behalf of its members individually, licences for public performance of records, and to recover royalties, fees and other moneys, and damages for infringement; to obtain from the proprietors of the copyright such authorities as might be necessary or expedient for enabling the company to acquire the legal estate in the copyright, and to enforce the rights and remedies in its own name; to regulate the manner in which, the period for which, and the conditions under which the proprietors should authorise the company to exercise their rights and remedies; and to distribute the net moneys so received by the company among the members in accordance with the rules for the time being in force. By its articles of association members were bound to assign their interest in the copyrights to the company in certain circumstances, and until such assignment each member granted to the company sole power to grant licences on its behalf for public performances; all moneys received by the company were to become its property; and the company was authorised, before recommending any distribution among its members, to set aside a reserve fund.

HELD: on the true construction of the company's memorandum and articles of association, the amounts received by the members of the company as such did not constitute "income from an investment" within the meaning of the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939, sched. VII, Part I, para. 6 (1), but fell to be included in the computation of the members' profits for the purposes of excess profits tax, because (per LORD SIMONDS and LORD MACDERMOTT) the company merely acted as the agent of its members, or (per LORD NORMAND, LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON and LORD REID) because, whether or not the company was merely an agent, the members thereof had made no investment in the ordinary business sense.

Decision of COURT OF APPEAL ([1949] 1 All E.R. 120), affirmed.

Gas Lighting Improvement Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. ([1923] A.C. 723) and Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Tootal Broadhurst Lee Co., Ltd. ([1947] 2 All E.R. 409), explained.

[FOR THE FINANCE (No. 2) ACT, 1939, sched. VII, Part I, para. 6 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 12, p. 455.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Gas Lighting Improvement Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1923] A.C. 723; 92 L.J.K.B. 665; 129 L.T. 481; 12 Tax Cas. 503; Digest Supp.
- (2) Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Tootal Broadhurst Lee Co., Ltd., [1947] 2 All E.R. 409; 29 Tax Cas. 352; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the taxpayers from an order of the Court of Appeal dated Dec. 13, 1948, reported [1949] 1 All E.R. 120, affirming an order of SINGLETON, J., dated July 6, 1948, reported [1948] 2 All E.R. 514, on a Case stated by the Special Commissioners of Income Tax.

The Special Commissioners held that money received by the taxpayers from a company limited by guarantee, incorporated to protect their copyright interests in respect of the performance in public of their gramophone records, was income from an investment within the meaning of the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939, sched. VII, Part I, para. 6 (1), and, therefore, was to be excluded from their profits for the purposes of excess profits tax. SINGLETON, J., reversed the decision of the Special Commissioners.

Grant, K.C., P. Sykes and Tribe for the taxpayers.

The Solicitor-General (Sir Frank Soskice, K.C.), Cyril King, K.C., J. H. Stamp and R. P. Hills for the Crown.

The House took time for consideration.

June 23. The following opinions were read.

LORD SIMONDS: My Lords, the question for determination in this appeal is whether the appellant company is assessable to excess profits tax in the chargeable accounting period ending June 30, 1944, in respect of £17,265 received by its subsidiary company, Gramophone Co., Ltd. (which I will call "the Gramophone Company"), from Phonographic Performance, Ltd. (which I will call "the Phonographic Company"). If this sum was income from an "investment" within the meaning of para. 6 (1) of Part I of sched. VII to the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939, the answer to this question is in the negative. Otherwise, it is in the affirmative.

The question arises in this way. The business of the Gramophone Company includes the manufacture of gramophone records, and when it had been judicially decided in 1934 that manufacturers of such records have copyright therein entitling them to exclusive right of public performance the company with other manufacturers formed a committee to co-ordinate the arrangements for granting licences for such public performance. It soon appeared, however, that this committee could not adequately perform the duty assigned to it, and on May 12, 1934, the Phonographic Company was incorporated under the Companies Act, 1929, as a company limited by guarantee without a share capital with the objects which I must state. At all material times the Gramophone Company was a member of the Phonographic Company as were a number of other companies which manufactured records. The objects of the Phonographic Company according to cl. 3 of its memorandum of association were as follows:

"(a) To exercise and enforce on behalf of members of the company, being manufacturers of gramophone records, perforated rolls and other contrivances by means of which sounds may be mechanically reproduced (all of which contrivances are hereinafter included in the term 'record') and/or the owners of or being otherwise entitled to the benefit of or interest in the copyrights in such records (hereinafter called 'the proprietors') all rights and remedies of the proprietors by virtue of the Copyright Act, 1911, or otherwise in respect of the public performance of records. (b) In the exercise or enforcement of such rights and remedies to grant licences and to make and from time to time to rescind, alter or vary any arrangements and agreements with respect to the public performance of such records in any and every respect whatsoever, and to collect and receive and give effectual discharges for all royalties, fees and other moneys payable under any such licences, agreements or arrangements or otherwise in respect of such public performances by all necessary actions or other proceedings, and to recover such royalties, fees and other moneys, and to restrain and recover damages for the infringement by means of such public performances as aforesaid of the copyrights of such records or any other rights of the proprietors or of the company on their behalf in respect of such records, and to release, compromise or refer to arbitration any such proceedings or actions or any other disputes or differences in relation to the premises. (c) To obtain from the proprietors such assignments, assurances, powers of attorney, or other authorities or instruments as may be deemed necessary or expedient for enabling the company to acquire the legal estate in the copyrights of such records, and to exercise and enforce in its own name or otherwise all such rights and remedies as aforesaid, and to execute and do all such assurances, agreements and other instruments and acts as may be deemed necessary or expedient for the purpose of the exercise or enforcement by the company of such rights and remedies as aforesaid. (d) To make and from time to time alter or vary any rules for regulating (i) the manner in which the period or periods for which, and the conditions under which the proprietors shall authorise the company to exercise and enforce the rights and remedies aforesaid of the proprietors in respect of such records as aforesaid; (ii) the method and proportions by and in which and the times at which the net moneys received by the company in respect of the public performance of any such records as aforesaid shall be divided and apportioned among the members of the company; (iii) the administration of the property or business of the company and any matters incidental thereto. (e) To distribute the net moneys received by the company in the exercise of the foregoing powers after making provision thereout for the expenses and liabilities of the company incurred in such exercise or in otherwise carrying out the purposes and operations of the company, and for any contributions or payments for any of the purposes specified in the next following sub-clause hereof, amongst the members of the company entitled thereto in accordance with the rules for the time being in force with respect to the distribution thereof."

By cl. 4 of the memorandum the liability of the members was limited, and by cl. 5 each member undertook to contribute to the assets of the company in the event and for the purposes therein specified such sum as might be required not exceeding £1.

Before referring to the articles of association I pause to observe that nothing could be clearer than that the company was formed for the purpose of acting as agent for its several members in the exercise of its rights, and I do not use "agent" in any loose sense as it might sometimes be used to describe the relation which a so-called "one man company" bears to its founder. Nor is this strict relation of agency affected by the fact that under cl. 3 (d) of the memorandum it was for the company to make the rules therein referred to.

I do not think it necessary to refer in detail to many of the articles of association. They appear to me to confirm and emphasise the relation in which the company stood to its members. Learned counsel for the appellant company particularly relied on art. 9, which provides that all moneys received by the company in respect of the exercise of the rights, licence or authority granted by the member shall be the property of the company and shall be by them dealt with in accordance with the rules for the time being in force. I do not think that in its context this article can affect the conclusion to which the memorandum and the articles as a whole clearly point. To this question I return later.

The Gramophone Company did not, in fact, assign to the Phonographic Company the copyright in records manufactured by it. It was held by the Special Commissioners (to whose determination I shall presently refer) that what the company did amounted to an equitable assignment of copyright, but this view was not seriously maintained before your Lordships and cannot be upheld. The Phonographic Company did just what it was formed to do, exercising the authority to grant licences on behalf of its members and collecting the fees. The distribution of the net moneys received by the Phonographic Company among its members proceeded in accordance with resolutions of the company which were passed from time to time. I take as typical of its proceedings a minute of the tenth annual general meeting held on Oct. 4, 1944:

"3. The Directors' Report and the Accounts. The report of the directors and accounts were read by the acting secretary. It was then proposed by the chairman, seconded by Mr. E. R. Lewis and unanimously resolved that notwithstanding the provisions of the extraordinary resolution passed on Mar. 15, 1937, the sum of £66,577 10s. 10d. (sixty-six thousand five hundred and seventy-seven pounds ten shillings and ten pence) being the net moneys available for distribution in respect of the period of twelve months ended May 31, 1944, should be distributed among the members entitled thereto in the proportions next stated:

As to 11 per cent. of the whole		} To be subdivided and paid as such members direct."
Electric and Musical Industries, Ltd.	50 per cent.
The Decca Record Co., Ltd.	50 per cent.
As to the remaining 89 per cent.
The Gramophone Co., Ltd.	} 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent.
Columbia Graphophone, Ltd.
The Parlophone Co., Ltd.	} 33 $\frac{1}{3}$ per cent.
The Decca Record Co., Ltd.
Brunswick, Ltd.

It appears that a minute similar to the above was passed in each year. Agreements were also made for further sub-division of the shares distributed to the members according to these minutes.

It was in these circumstances that in the assessment of the appellant company to excess profits tax in respect of the profits of the Gramophone Company for the chargeable accounting period July 1, 1943, to June 30, 1944, the sum of £17,265 received by the latter company from the Phonographic Company was brought into account as part of the profits liable to be charged to the tax and that the appellant company challenged the assessment on the ground that that sum constituted the income of an investment within the meaning of the relevant section to which I referred at the beginning of this opinion. The Special Commissioners before whom the matter came for determination were in favour of the appellant company. They held that "for the Crown to succeed in this appeal it is necessary to establish that the Phonographic Company was throughout acting as an agent for its members including the Gramophone Co., Ltd., in granting licences and collecting payments."

And they held that the circumstances of the case and, in particular, cl. 3 (d) (i) and (ii) of the memorandum and arts. 9 and 46 of the articles of association negated the existence of an agency. They were of opinion that there was an equitable assignment by the Gramophone Company of the whole of its beneficial interest in the copyright as regards public performance of records, and that its interest was confined to membership of the Phonographic Company and the obtaining of its share of the profits available for distribution. On this view they regarded the receipt of the sum of £17,265 as in the nature of a dividend from an investment. At the request of the respondents the Special Commissioners stated a Case for the opinion of the High Court. Before the Case was heard the respondents, who appear to have so far relied only on what I may call the agency point, gave notice that they would rely on an alternative contention in these terms:

A "That the Gramophone Company handed over its property in its copyrights to be managed by the Phonographic Company along with the property of other members of the Phonographic Company upon the terms of receiving a share of the profits to be derived from the management of the property; that the sum of £17,265 17s. 1d. was the consideration received by the Gramophone Company in respect of the accountable period for the right of the Phonographic Company to collect the royalties for the period under the Gramophone Company's copyrights; and that the relation between the two companies was a contractual relation of trader and customer."

B When the case was heard before SINGLETON, J., that learned judge allowed the appeal of the present respondents. Inevitably, perhaps, the original contentions and the new alternative contention of the respondents overlapped, and the learned judge expressed his view of the relation between the Gramophone Company and the Phonographic Company as ([1948] 2 All E.R. 522)

" . . . beginning with something in the nature of an agency but ending rather as contractual relation of trader and customer."

C He was clear, at least, that the sum in question could not, according to the ordinary use of language, be described as income from an investment.

D The appellant company appealed to the Court of Appeal which unanimously dismissed the appeal, the judgment of the court being given by COHEN, L.J. I find it convenient first to say that I agree with the learned lord justice in rejecting the contention put forward on behalf of the appellant company that the finding of the commissioners was a finding of fact with which the court cannot interfere. Their decision was based on, and vitiated by, a view which is erroneous in law that there was an equitable assignment of copyright to the Phonographic Company. It was, therefore, incumbent on the court to determine what was the legal relation between the parties established by the memorandum and articles of association and their subsequent transactions. E This course was pursued by the learned lord justice, who, after a penetrating and exhaustive analysis of the relevant provisions, sums up the position in these words on which I cannot improve ([1949] 1 All E.R. 126):

F " . . . the articles coupled with the contract of membership arising from the application for membership and the acceptance thereof constitute an arrangement between each member and the Phonographic Company and also between the members inter se, under which the members agreed to pool the proceeds of exploitation of the copyright on the terms recorded in the articles and art. 9 is mere machinery to enable the Phonographic Company to give effect to the pooling agreement."

G This summing up is directed mainly to the contention on which learned counsel so strongly relied that art. 9 coupled with cl. 3 (d) of the memorandum displaced the view that the relation between the Phonographic Company and its members quoad the exploitation of copyright and collection and distribution of the net proceeds was that of agency, and follows on the expression of an opinion, in which I entirely concur, that apart from those specific provisions the true construction of the documents points to an agency relation.

H I am, therefore, content to adopt the reasons and conclusion of COHEN, L.J., finding, as I do, that the Phonographic Company, though, no doubt, a separate legal entity from its members, was formed to act and did act as agent for them on terms which they agreed with it and with each other. It was, I suppose, from some vague notion that a contractual relation was created, as it, undoubtedly, was, that the respondents thought it necessary to formulate their alternative plea, but I do not myself attach any importance to it.

I think it right to add some observations on an argument which, if I understood it, was of this character. The Phonographic Company, it was said, happens to be a company limited by guarantee. It might, however, equally well have been a company limited by shares with precisely the same objects, functions and machinery. If it had been a company limited by shares, then it would follow from what was said in Gas Lighting Improvement Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (1) and in Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Tootal Broadhurst Lee Co., Ltd. (2) that shares in such a company must be regarded as an investment within the relevant section. I am by no means satisfied that the same considerations would in all respects apply to a company limited by shares as to one limited by guarantee, but, however this may be, the observations of the noble and learned Lords who took part in the case first cited, and of those, particularly myself, who took part in the later case, were not directed to a company limited by guarantee and must not be divorced from their context. I adhere to the view which I conceive to be the basis of the decisions in both cases that ultimately the test must be, which (if any) of its assets, having regard to the nature of the trade carried on by the assessed subject, a business man would regard as an "investment," and I cannot suppose that such an interest as the Gramophone Company had in the Phonographic Company would be so described by him. I do not read the decisions in either of the cases cited as involving that the shares in any and every company limited by shares, much less the interest of a member in a company limited by guarantee, must necessarily be regarded as an "investment." In my opinion, the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

LORD NORMAND: My Lords, I agree with the judgment of my noble and learned friend, LORD REID, which I have had the advantage of reading in print. I agree also with the observations of my noble and learned friend on the Woolsack on the decisions of this House in Gas Lighting Improvement Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (1) and Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Tootal Broadhurst Lee Co., Ltd. (2).

LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON: My Lords, I agree with the decision of the Court of Appeal, affirming SINGLETON, J., and I shall not detain your Lordships for long. The question in issue is whether the sum of £17,265 paid over by the Phonographic Company to the Gramophone Company in the accounting period July 1, 1943, to June 30, 1944, is or is not "income received from investment . . ." under para. 6 of Part I of sched. VII to the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939. I venture to quote the words which I used in Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Tootal Broadhurst Lee Co., Ltd. (2) ([1949] 1 All E.R. 267):

" . . . the word 'investment' in this context is not a word of art, and . . . the question whether or not a particular piece of income is 'income received from an investment' must be decided on the facts of each case. I think that the question must be approached from the standpoint of an intelligent man of business . . ."

In the present case I think that such a man, on being fully informed of the relevant facts, would say: "This is not what I call income from an investment." He would, I think, be impressed at the outset by the fact that the Gramophone Company put no money into the Phonographic Company, held no shares in the Phonographic Company, and, consequently, could receive no dividends, in the ordinary sense of the word, from that company, and further study of the memorandum and articles of the Phonographic Company and of the events leading up to the formation of that company would, I think, lead him still further away from the view that the sum in question was income received from an investment. I need not elaborate the matter further, as I have had the privilege of reading in print the opinion which is about to be delivered by my noble and learned friend LORD REID. I agree with his reasoning, and with his conclusion that this appeal should be dismissed. I am also in agreement with the observations of my noble and learned friend on the Woolsack as to the decisions of this House in Gas Lighting Improvement Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (1) and Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Tootal Broadhurst Lee Co., Ltd. (2).

LORD MACDERMOTT (read by LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON): My Lords, the issue in this appeal is whether a sum of £17,265 received by the Gramophone Company from the Phonographic Company in respect of the year ended May 31, 1944, was "income received from investments" within the meaning of para. 6 (1) of Part I of sched. VII to the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939. The Gramophone Company was admittedly a subsidiary of the appellant company, within the meaning of s. 17 (6) of the said Act, throughout the relevant accounting period, and it was common ground that if the sum mentioned was not such income the present appeal could not succeed. The material facts have been fully set out in the Case Stated and I need not recapitulate them. The decision of the Special Commissioners was in favour of the appellant company, but I am satisfied that their finding was based on the construction of the memorandum and articles of association of the Phonographic Company and that the whole question remains open to consideration.

My Lords, the "investment" of the Gramophone Company was said to be its interest as a member of the Phonographic Company, and, as it was a company limited by guarantee without a share capital, the interest therein of the Gramophone Company could not readily be measured or defined. This circumstance and the character of the relationship existing between the two companies make it convenient to follow the course pursued in the courts below and to consider first of all the nature of the income received rather than that of what was alleged to be the investment within the meaning of the statute. The rival contentions on this aspect may be briefly summarised. For the appellant company it was said that the income in question was a dividend paid by the Phonographic Company out of its divisible profits to a member as such. For the respondents, on the other hand, it was submitted that this payment was of quite a different order in that it was made by the Phonographic Company, not out of its profits, but as the Gramophone Company's share of the net amount of the proceeds received by the Phonographic Company, as agent for its members, from the issue of licences on their behalf. This point turns on the true construction of the memorandum and articles of association of the Phonographic Company, and the Court of Appeal, so regarding it, accepted the contention of the respondents. I think this decision was right and I find myself so fully in agreement with the reasoning of COHEN, L.J. (who delivered the judgment of the court), as regards the interpretation of these documents that I do not propose to enter on a detailed examination of their various clauses, or to add more than a few observations by way of supplement to what the learned lord justice has already said on this particular matter.

In my opinion, the memorandum conferred no power on the Phonographic Company to turn to its own account the net amount of the moneys it obtained by dealing in the rights and remedies granted to its members, in respect of the public performance of their records, by the law of copyright. Clause 3 (d) (ii), it is true, empowered the Phonographic Company to determine how and when such net moneys were to be "divided and appropriated among the members of the company." "The members," however, are in effect defined by cl. 3 (a) as those with rights and remedies in respect of the public performance of records—they are referred to as "the proprietors"—and I do not think this power can be taken as pointing clearly either one way or the other. To my mind, the whole tenor of the document is crystallised in the words of cl. 3 (a):

"To exercise and enforce on behalf of members of the company, being manufacturers of gramophone records . . . and/or the owners of . . . the copyrights in such records (hereinafter called 'the proprietors') all rights and remedies of the proprietors by virtue of the Copyright Act, 1911, or otherwise in respect of the public performance of records."

These are apt words to confer a power to act as agent. That, I think, is clearly their prima facie meaning, and I do not see anything in the rest of the memorandum to modify it. Clause 3 (c), which provides for acquisition by the company of the legal estate in the copyrights, and cl. 3 (d) (i), which provides for the manner in which the proprietors "shall authorise the company to exercise and enforce the rights and remedies aforesaid of the proprietors . . ." are but alternative means of accomplishing this end, and it is not without significance that the choice between them seems in no way to affect the applicability of cl. 3 (e) which deals with the distribution of "the net moneys received by the company . . ."

The articles, in my judgment, are consistent with this view of the memorandum. I will only refer to two of them. Article 9 provides that all moneys received by the company in respect of the exercise of the rights, etc., "shall be the property of the company." This, of course, if contrary to the true meaning of the memorandum, could avail the appellant nothing. In my opinion, however, it is quite compatible with what I may call the agency construction. An agent's ownership of moneys received for his principal may facilitate the agency and be agreed for that purpose, and such ownership is entirely consistent with a duty to account. Article 8 (d) provides that the membership of any member is to cease "upon the expiration of the period for which copyright subsists in all the records in respect of which such member is entitled to participate in the distribution of moneys received by the company."

I mention this provision as reflecting in a sentence the view of the memorandum which, in my opinion, ought to be accepted. It recognises the essential linking of membership and proprietorship, and its concluding words cannot well be regarded as intended to refer to the distribution of profits earned by the company. Had that been the intention there is no reason why it should not have been expressed in the terms usual and appropriate for the purpose. It was conceded that, if the agency construction prevailed, the sum in question could not be treated as income from an investment within the meaning of the Act of 1939, and the conclusion I have reached is, therefore, sufficient to dispose of the appeal. For this reason I do not express any opinion on an alternative argument advanced by the Crown which, as I understand it, was to the effect that, even if there was no agency, the income in question arose from the exploitation of trading assets of the Gramophone Company in the course of a commercial relationship with the Phonographic Company, and could not be regarded as income from an investment for the purposes of the statute. That argument appears to involve inquiry not only as to the true source of the income but also as to the scope of the decision of this House in Gas Lighting Improvement Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (1), and that is a matter which can best be dealt with when it becomes necessary to do so. I agree that the appeal be dismissed.

LORD REID: My Lords, the sole question at issue in this case is whether £17,265, which was received by the Gramophone Co., Ltd. from Phonographic Performance, Ltd., in respect of the year ending May 31, 1944, was received by the Gramophone Company as income from an investment within the meaning of the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939, sched. VII, Part I, para. 6 (1). If it was income from an investment it is excluded from profits which are subject to excess profits tax. "Investment" is not defined in the Act, and the word is not used in any special or technical sense. It is used as an ordinary word of the English language and, being used in connection with business transactions, it must be interpreted as an ordinary English word used in connection with business affairs. To see whether in a particular case something is an investment it is, therefore, necessary to consider and weigh all the facts which can assist towards a decision of this practical question. Stated briefly, the facts which appear to me to be material in this case are as follows. A number of companies, including the Gramophone Company, manufactured gramophone records. It has been decided that manufacturers of such records have a copyright which entitles them to the exclusive right of performance of their records in public and thus enables them either to restrain such performance or to draw revenue by licensing public performance. It was soon found convenient by the manufacturers to establish one organisation which would act for all of them in maintaining their rights and drawing revenue for them from this source. A committee was first set up, but it was found to be inadequate, and in its place the manufacturers, seven in number and including the Gramophone Company, set up Phonographic Performance, Ltd., which was incorporated on May 12, 1934, as a company limited by guarantee. It is the interest of the Gramophone Company in this company which is said to be the investment which yielded the income in question in this case. So it is necessary to see just what that interest was. The nature of the interest must be sought in the memorandum and articles of association of the Phonographic Company. It is not suggested that the formation and operation of this company was a cloak or device. It was a perfectly proper use of the Companies Act, 1929, for business purposes and it is not suggested that the memorandum and articles do not truly exhibit and define the rights of the Gramophone Company.

The main objects of the Phonographic Company as set out in its memorandum of association are to exercise and enforce on behalf of its members their rights and remedies in respect of the public performance of records; in the exercise of such rights and remedies to grant licences, to collect royalties and to restrain infringements; to make rules for regulating

“(i) the manner in which, the period or periods for which, and the conditions under which the proprietors shall authorise the company to exercise and enforce the rights and remedies aforesaid of the proprietors in respect of such records as aforesaid; (ii) the method and proportions by and in which and the times at which the net moneys received by the company in respect of the public performance of any such records as aforesaid shall be divided and apportioned among the members of the company:”

and to distribute the net moneys received by the company

“among the members of the company entitled thereto in accordance with the rules for the time being in force with respect to the distribution thereof.”

The articles of association permit the directors at their discretion to admit an owner of performing right as a new member and provide that members grant to the company the sole right and authority to authorise, permit or forbid public performance of their records and authorise the company to collect fees, institute proceedings, and protect generally a member's interest in records of which performing rights are controlled by the company. Article 9 provides:

“All moneys received by the company in respect of the exercise of the rights, licence or authority granted by the member shall be the property of the company, and shall be by them dealt with in accordance with the rules for the time being in force.”

There are provisions authorising the directors to set aside a reserve fund and requiring income and expenditure accounts and balance sheets to be kept. Article 28 provides that every member shall have one vote.

I have no doubt that the substance of the matter was that the seven manufacturing companies which became members of the Phonographic Company, trusting each other, empowered a body controlled by the majority of their number not only to collect the revenue which each could have collected for itself, but also (and this is the peculiar feature of this case) empowered that body to determine whether or not the whole of the revenue was to be distributed, and in what proportions the revenue to be distributed was to be divided among them. No doubt there were good practical reasons against providing that each member should receive each year precisely what had been collected in respect of that member's records, less expenses of collection, and the expectation was that the sum paid to each member would roughly represent what that member's records had earned. In fact, this expectation appears to have been realised, but it need not have been. If a majority of the members had chosen to use their voting power to cause the Phonographic Company to distribute on some other basis, there does not appear to be anything in the memorandum or articles which would have prevented that. The decision how much any member should get was the decision of the Phonographic Company, an independent person in law. It is this feature which makes me doubt whether this case can properly be brought within the category of agency, but I do not think it necessary to determine that question. The question under the statute is whether there was an investment. It may well be that where there is agency there is no investment, but it does not at all follow that if the case is not one of agency it must, therefore, be one of investment. The commissioners appear to me to have misdirected themselves on this matter in deciding in favour of the appellant. A

If the Gramophone Company invested anything, it can only have been the right to collect and deal with a part of its trading income, and the investment which resulted can only have been the rights and interests which the Gramophone Company had in the Phonographic Company. The only money in the hands of the Phonographic Company was the proceeds of the exercise by that company of the rights which it had acquired to collect part of the trading income of the Gramophone Company and the other companies which were members of the Phonographic Company, and, even on the construction most favourable to the appellant, the only substantial right or interest which the Gramophone Company had in the Phonographic Company was the right to receive such part of that money as the Phonographic Company might decide to pay to it. I cannot believe that any business man would call this an investment, and that, in my opinion, would be an end of the case but for one argument which I must now notice. B

It was said that, instead of setting up a company limited by guarantee, the manufacturing companies could have achieved the same result in substantially the same way by setting up an ordinary limited company of which they would have become shareholders, and that, if they had done that, their holdings in such a company must, on the authority of decisions of this House, have been held to be investments, and the sums paid to them by the company must have been held to be income from such investments. I am by no means satisfied that it would have been possible by setting up a company limited by shares to achieve the result that payments similar in character to those in this case could be made as dividends and income from investments, but if it were possible, it could I think be only by such unusual provisions as to raise the question whether the use of such machinery was a mere device. I agree with what has been said on this matter by my noble and learned friend, LORD SIMONDS, about the decision of this House in Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Tootal Broadhurst Lee Co., Ltd. (2), a decision to which I was a party. I am unable to accept this argument for the appellant as sufficient to affect the decision of what otherwise appears to me to be a clear case. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed. C

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Broad & Son (for the taxpayers); Solicitor of Inland Revenue (for the Crown). D

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.] E

INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. SILVERTS, LTD.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Romér, J.), May 22, June 13, 1950.]

Profits Tax—Computation of profits—Deduction of directors' remuneration—reversed. C.A. [1951] 1 All E.R. 703. st " of directors—Shares registered in name of custodian under Finance Act, 1937 (c. 54), sched. IV, para. 11.

A In June, 1940, the shares of a company consisted of A, B and C shares of which the C shares carried no voting rights and the A and B shares each carried one vote. The whole of the six thousand B shares were held by S. the managing director. Of the six thousand A shares, some were registered in the name of P. and the remainder in the name of Q., both of whom held the shares on trust for R. The directors of the company
 B at all material times, besides S., were P., Q. and R. On June 27, 1940, R., by a deed which recited the intention that P. and Q. should transfer the A shares into the name of a banking company as custodian trustee under the Public Trustee Act, 1906, s. 4 (3), settled the A shares for the benefit of his son. On Dec. 16, 1940, the A shares were transferred into the name of the bank as custodian trustee, P. and Q. thereafter acting C as managing trustees. In assessing the company to profits tax in respect of the chargeable accounting period Jan. 1, 1947, to Dec. 31, 1947, the revenue authorities claimed to restrict the deduction of directors' remuneration under the Finance Act, 1937, sched. IV, para. 11, on the ground that the directors had a controlling interest in the company.

D HELD: the bank as a custodian trustee was a "bare trustee" of the shares vested in it in the sense that it had no independent will of its own in relation to the control of the company afforded by the trust holding of shares, but was bound to operate it in accordance with the directions of P. and Q., and, therefore, the company was one the directors whereof had a controlling interest therein within the meaning of para. 11.

E Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Clark (F. A.) & Son, Ltd. ([1941] 2 All E.R.
 651) and British-American Tobacco Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs.
 ([1941] 2 All E.R. 651), applied.

Bibby (J.) & Sons, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. ([1944] 1 All E.R. 550), distinguished.

[FOR THE FINANCE ACT, 1937, sched. IV, para. 11, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 12, p. 385.]

F Cases referred to:

- (1) Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Clark (F. A.) & Son, Ltd., [1941] 2 All E.R.
 86, 651; [1941] 2 K.B. 270; 111 L.J.K.B. 1; 165 L.T. 275; 29 Tax Cas. 49.
- (2) British-American Tobacco Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1941]
 2 All E.R. 86, 651; [1941] 2 K.B. 270; 111 L.J.K.B. 1; 165 L.T.
 G 275; 29 Tax Cas. 49.
- (3) Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Bibby (J.) & Sons, Ltd., [1945] 1 All E.R. 667;
 114 L.J.K.B. 353; 173 L.T. 17; 29 Tax Cas. 167; affg. Bibby (J.)
 & Sons, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1944] 1 All E.R. 548; 170
 L.T. 370; 29 Tax Cas. 167; revsg., [1943] 2 All E.R. 419; 170 L.T. 8; 29 Tax Cas. 167; 2nd Digest Supp.
- H (4) Pulbrook v. Richmond Consolidated Mining Co., (1878), 9 Ch.D. 610;
 48 L.J.Ch. 65; 28 Digest 476, 316.
- (5) Puddephatt v. Leith, [1916] 1 Ch. 200; 85 L.J.Ch. 185; 114 L.T. 454; 28 Digest 398, 266.

CASE STATED by the Special Commissioners of Income Tax.

Silverts, Ltd., appealed to the Special Commissioners against an assessment to profits tax for the chargeable accounting period Jan. 1, 1947, to Dec. 31, 1947, on the ground that the company was not one the directors whereof had a controlling interest therein within the meaning of the Finance Act, 1937, sched. IV, para. 11, and that, therefore, the restrictions set out in that paragraph on the deduction of directors' remuneration in computing the profits of the company did not apply to the company*. The Special Commissioners found that the company was not one in which the directors had a controlling interest, and reduced the assessment. The Crown appealed.

Donovan, K.C., J. H. Stamp and R. P. Hills for the Crown.
Pennycuik, K.C., and Honeyman for the company.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 13. ROMER, J., read the following judgment. This is an appeal by the Crown against a decision by the Special Commissioners to the effect that the respondent company is not a company the directors whereof have a controlling interest therein within the meaning of the Finance Act, 1937, sched. IV, para. 11.

The matter arises in relation to an assessment of the company to profits tax. That tax, under the name of national defence contribution, was imposed by the Finance Act, 1937, s. 19, and s. 20 of the Act provided that for the purpose of the tax the profits arising from a trade or business in each chargeable accounting period should be separately computed and should be so computed on income tax principles as adapted in accordance with the provisions of sched. IV to the Act. Paragraph 11 of this schedule, in effect, restricts the extent to which, in the cases of companies whereof the directors have a controlling interest therein, the remuneration of directors (other than whole-time service directors) may be treated as a deduction for the purpose of arriving at the taxable profits of such companies.

Immediately prior to the execution of a deed of June 27, 1940, the A shares and B shares of the company (each of which carried one vote) were held as follows. The whole of the B shares (six thousand) were held by Mr. S. J. Silvert, the managing director; the whole of the A shares (six thousand) belonged in equity to a Mr. Ross; three thousand five hundred of the A shares were registered in the name of Mr. Lancashire; and the remaining two thousand five hundred were registered in the name of Mr. Lewis. Each of these gentlemen had executed declarations of trust in favour of Mr. Ross of the shares respectively registered in their names as aforesaid. The only other shares which had been issued by the company were two thousand C shares, and these carried no voting rights. By the deed of June 27, 1940, which was made between Mr. Ross, as settlor, of the first part, the National Provincial Bank, Ltd. (therein and hereinafter called "the bank"), of the second part, and Mr. Lancashire and Mr. Lewis (thereinafter called "the trustees"), of the third part, after reciting that six thousand A shares of the company ("the trust shares") were registered in the names of the trustees as nominees for the settlor, that the settlor was desirous of settling the trust shares for the benefit of his son, and that it was intended that the trustees should transfer the trust shares into the name of the bank, it was witnessed (so far as material), first, that the bank should be the custodian trustee of the trusts thereby declared, with such functions, duties and powers as appertain to a custodian trustee under the Public Trustee Act, 1906, s. 4, and the authorised rules under such Act or the statutory regulations and authorised rules for the time being in force respecting custodian trustees, and, secondly, that the trustees should stand possessed of the trust shares on the trusts therein declared, being trusts for the benefit of the settlor's son. On Dec. 16, 1940, the trust shares, i.e., the six thousand A shares, were transferred into the name of the bank and

* The provisions of the Finance Act, 1937, sched. IV, relate to national defence contribution. By the Finance Act, 1946, s. 44, it was provided that the national defence contribution should be re-named "profits tax."

the bank thenceforward held the same in the capacity of custodian trustee. The incidents of this office are prescribed by the Public Trustee Act, 1906, s. 4. So far as material, this section provides that the management of the trust property shall remain vested in the "managing trustees" (viz., the trustees other than the custodian trustee), but the custodian trustee is to have the custody of the trust documents and securities, and the custodian trustee is to

A " . . . concur in and perform all acts necessary to enable the managing trustees to exercise their powers of management or any other power or discretion vested in them . . . unless the matter in which he is requested to concur is a breach of trust, or involves a personal liability upon him in respect of calls or otherwise . . . "

B The custodian trustee is to receive and make payments in respect of the trust property, but may allow the trust income to be paid to the managing trustees, and, finally, a custodian trusteeship may be determined, if expedient, by the court.

C In addition to the managing director, Mr. S. J. Silvert, the other directors of the company were Mr. Lancashire, Mr. Lewis and Mr. A. H. Silvert, and the short question is whether, in the circumstances outlined above, the measure of control attached to the trust holding is to be regarded as vested in Mr. Lancashire and Mr. Lewis as the managing trustees under the settlement, or whether it is to be regarded as vested in the registered holder, viz., the bank. If it is vested in the managing trustees then, having regard to Mr. S. J. Silvert's holding, the directors of the respondent company have a controlling interest in it. Otherwise, they have not. The Crown's case is that the bank is a bare trustee of the shares for Mr. Lancashire and Mr. Lewis, and that it is a mere medium through which these gentlemen operate the measure of control of the company's affairs which the trust holding affords, and which I will hereafter, for convenience, refer to as "the trust control." Inasmuch, therefore, as the bank is bound to comply with any directions properly given to it by the managing trustees, it follows, according to the Crown's contention, that it is the director trustees, and not the bank, who effectively operate the trust control. The company's argument, on the contrary, is that a custodian trustee cannot properly be regarded, in view of the statutory provisions to which I have referred, as a bare trustee, and that, even if they are wrong as to this, it is not legitimate to go behind the company's register or to inquire what beneficial or other interests may exist in relation to the shares of which the bank is the registered holder.

F The question what constitutes a controlling interest in a company for the purposes of paras. 4, 7 and 11 of sched. IV to the Finance Act, 1937, was considered in two cases which were heard and determined together, first, by LAWRENCE, J., and, subsequently, by the Court of Appeal, and one of which went to the House of Lords. These cases are Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Clark (F. A.) & Son, Ltd. (1) and British-American Tobacco Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (2). The headnote in Clark's case (1) (29 Tax Cas. 49) is as follows:

H " . . . the issued share capital of the respondent company was £22,600 divided into 22,500 preference shares and one hundred ordinary shares both of £1 each, each share carrying the right to one vote at general meetings. Under the terms of a deed of trust made in 1927, 14,999 of the preference shares were held by the two directors of the company and another individual upon trust to pay the income therefrom to one of the directors (the settlor) during his life, and after his death to transfer the shares or the proceeds thereof to the second director. It was a term of the trust deed that during the life of the settlor the trustees, who were the registered proprietors of the shares, would at his request attend meetings of shareholders and vote as previously directed by him or, if required to do so, execute proxies so as to enable the settlor to vote at such meetings in place of the trustees. The two directors of the respondent company were also the sole directors of and shareholders in the F.C.B.C. (Phoenix) No. 1 company (hereinafter called the 'Phoenix company'), and on Dec. 7, 1936, they sold their respective life and reversionary interests in the 14,999 preference shares of the respondent company to the Phoenix company, undertaking as a term of the agreement of sale to execute and procure to be executed such transfers as the Phoenix company might reasonably require in order that the legal property in the 14,999 shares might vest in that company. The shares thereafter remained registered in the names of the trustees until Dec. 23, 1937, when they were transferred to the Phoenix company. An assessment to profits tax (then known as national defence contribution) was made for the chargeable accounting period commencing Apr. 1, 1937, and ending Dec. 31, 1937, on the footing that the respondent company was a company the directors whereof had a controlling interest therein, and that certain remuneration, interest and annuities paid to the directors of the company were not allowable as a deduction in computing the company's profits for the purposes of national defence contribution in view of the provisions of paras. 4 and 11 of sched. IV to the Finance Act, 1937. On appeal against this assessment it was contended on behalf of the respondent company that as from Dec. 7, 1936, the Phoenix company, a legal entity separate from its shareholders, alone was beneficially entitled to the voting rights annexed to the 14,999 shares, and that accordingly the directors of the respondent company did not at any material time have a controlling interest therein."

The Special Commissioners held that during no part of the accounting period in question did the directors of the respondent company have a controlling interest therein for the purposes of paras. 4 and 11 of sched. IV to the Act of 1937. On appeal, LAWRENCE, J., took a different view. He said ([1941] 2 All E.R. 90):

"The word 'controlling' is not a term of art, nor is the word 'interest' necessarily so, and, when the word 'controlling' is used to qualify 'interest,' I think that the phrase in its ordinary meaning covers both direct and indirect control."

An appeal from this decision to the Court of Appeal was dismissed. In the leading judgment, SCOTT, L.J., after dealing with the British-American Tobacco appeal (2), said ([1941] 2 All E.R. 655) with regard to the appeal in Clark's case (1):

"It is the same question as that in the British-American Tobacco Company's case (2), except that the phrase 'controlling interest' is applied to directors who control the company, instead of to one company controlling another. The judge could find no sufficient legal ground for giving the phrase one meaning in para. 7 and another in paras. 4 and 11, and we agree with him. In each case, the decision must depend on the meaning of the phrase. In my opinion, when standing alone in the context of any one of the three paragraphs, it contemplates such a relationship as brings about a control in fact, by whatever machinery or means that result is effected."

CLAUSON and GODDARD, L.JJ., agreed.

In British-American Tobacco Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (2) (29 Tax Cas. 50), the headnote is as follows:

"... the appellant company received dividends from eleven companies carrying on business outside the United Kingdom and not liable to be assessed to national defence contribution. The vote-carrying shares in these companies were owned as follows:

(a) by the appellant company alone ... amounts varying from 0.4 per cent. to 70.24 per cent.

(b) by the appellant company and a company in which more than fifty per cent. of the voting power belonged to the appellant company and/or a company in which more than fifty per cent. of the voting power belonged to a company in which the appellant company held more than fifty per cent. of the voting power

... amounts varying from sixty per cent. to one hundred per cent.

The articles of association of the eleven companies required that for certain purposes—e.g., a winding-up—a seventy-five per cent. majority of votes was necessary, but for all ordinary purposes a bare majority was sufficient. An additional assessment to national defence contribution was made for the chargeable accounting period commencing Apr. 1, 1937, and ending Sept. 30, 1937, on the footing that the dividends received from the eleven companies not liable to be assessed to national defence contribution were required to be included in computing the profits of the appellant company for the purposes of national defence contribution by para. 7 (b) of sched. IV to the Finance Act, 1937. On appeal against this assessment it was contended on behalf of the appellant company (i) that the words ‘controlling interest’ implied a proprietary right and that before it could be claimed that the appellant company had a controlling interest in any one of the eleven companies it must be shown that the appellant company did, in fact, itself own beneficially a controlling number of shares or votes in the respective companies; (ii) that in no one of the eleven companies did the appellant company beneficially own such a preponderance of shares or votes as was necessary in order to give the appellant company control, and (iii) that the appellant company did not have a controlling interest in any of the eleven companies. The Special Commissioners dismissed the appeal.”

These were not the same Special Commissioners as had dealt with Clark’s case (1). An appeal by the British-American Tobacco Co. to LAWRENCE, J., failed, and on the same grounds as he allowed the Crown’s appeal in Clark’s case (1). The Court of Appeal dismissed an appeal by the British-American Tobacco Co., from the decision of LAWRENCE, J. SCOTT, L.J., in the course of his judgment, said that the whole appeal turned on the question: What did the phrase “controlling interest” mean in its context in the Finance Act, 1937, sched. IV, para. 7. The learned lord justice proceeded to the view that the phrase included indirect control and gave his reasons for thinking so, and the other lords justices agreed. A final appeal by the British-American Tobacco Co. to the House of Lords also failed. The relevant argument before the House on behalf of the appellant company was, as stated in his speech by VISCOUNT SIMON, L.C., that in order that one company should have a controlling interest (for the purposes of para. 7 (b) of sched. IV to the Act of 1937) it must be the beneficial owner of a requisite number of shares in the other company, either registered in its own name or in the name of its nominees, and that, if company No. 1 owns all the shares in company No. 2, which in turn owns all the shares in company No. 3, company No. 1 has no interest, controlling or otherwise, in company No. 3. The Lord Chancellor then dealt with this argument in the following words ([1943] 1 All E.R. 15):

"It is true that in such circumstances company No. 1 owns none of the assets of company No. 2, and a fortiori owns none of the assets of company No. 3, and in that sense neither owns, nor has an interest in, company No. 3. But that is to treat the phrase 'controlling interest' as capable of connoting only a proprietary right, that is, an interest in the nature of ownership. The word 'interest,' however, as pointed out by LAWRENCE, J., is a word of wide connotation, and I think the conception of 'controlling interest' may well cover the relationship of one company towards another, the requisite majority of whose shares are, as regards their voting power, subject, whether directly or indirectly, to the will and ordering of the first-mentioned company. If, for example, the appellant company owns one-third of the shares in company X, and the remaining two-thirds are owned by company Y, the appellant company will none the less have a controlling interest in company X if it owns enough shares in company Y to control the latter. In my opinion this is the meaning of the word 'interest' in the enactment under consideration, and, where one company stands in such a relationship to another, the former can properly be said to have a controlling interest in the latter. This view appears to me to agree with the object of the enactment as it appears on the face of the Act. I find it impossible to adopt the view that a person who, by having the requisite voting power in a company subject to his will and ordering, can make the ultimate decision as to where and how the business of the company shall be carried on, and who thus has, in fact, control of the company's affairs, is a person of whom it can be said that he has not in this connection got a controlling interest in the company."

The other noble and learned Lords concurred.

It would appear at first sight that the decisions in these two cases, and the grounds on which those decisions were based, are conclusive against the company in the case now before me, for, first, they interpret the phrase "controlling interest" as used in the same enactment as is in question in the present appeal, and, secondly, they so interpret it as including indirect as well as direct control. The bank is bound to exercise the trust control (subject to certain limitations on which the company relies and which I consider later) as the managing trustees direct. It is, accordingly, these trustees (in conjunction with Mr. S. J. Silvert) and not the bank who (in the words of VISCOUNT SIMON, L.C.)

"... can make the ultimate decision as to where and how the business of the company shall be carried on, and who thus has, in fact, control of the company's affairs . . ."

and it is accordingly they, and not the bank, who, with the managing director, has a controlling interest in the company within the meaning of para. 11 of sched. IV to the Act of 1937.

The Special Commissioners, however, came to a contrary conclusion by reason of the speeches in the House of Lords in Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Bibby (J.) & Sons, Ltd. (3). This case came before their Lordships' House some two-and-a-half years after the appeal in the British-American Tobacco case (2) and was much discussed before me in argument. The question in issue in Bibby's case (3) was whether shares in a company which were held by three directors of the company as trustees of a marriage settlement should be taken into account in considering whether the company was "a company the directors whereof have a controlling interest therein" within the meaning of the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939, s. 13 (9). In addition to being trustees of the settlement the three directors had a contingent interest in the trust shares, in that the trust

A fund would be divisible among them in the event of their sister, on whose marriage the settlement had been made, dying without issue. MACNAGHTEN, J., affirming the Special Commissioners, held that, in order to ascertain whether the directors of the company had a controlling interest therein, the shares held by them as trustees must be excluded. The company appealed to the Court of Appeal and the appeal was allowed. In delivering the judgment of the court, LORD GREENE, M.R., said ([1944] 1 All E.R. 549):

B “If the reference to ‘controlling interest’ in s. 13 (9) had stood alone, we should have found little difficulty in deciding that the contention of the company was the correct one. Subject to the one case of a bare trustee who is bound to vote in accordance with the directions of his beneficiary, we can find nothing in the language of the sub-section which points to an intended distinction between a beneficial interest and an interest held by a trustee. A trustee in whom shares are vested in such circumstances that he has the usual discretion to vote as he thinks fit in the interests of the beneficiaries as a whole appears to us to be a person who, if he holds more than half the voting power, is properly and naturally described as a person who has a controlling interest in the company. He is commonly so described in the language of those familiar with the law and practice relating to companies. Thus, if a shareholder owning more than fifty per cent. of the voting power were to die and bequeath his shares to trustees on trust for his widow and children, and the question were asked: ‘Who now has the controlling interest in the company?’ no person familiar with company affairs would, I think, answer it otherwise than by saying: ‘The trustees.’ It was suggested that this answer would be incorrect in that the trustees are subject to the control of the court. We do not agree with this suggestion. The controlling interest must obviously be somewhere: it cannot be in nubibus; and to say that it is in gremio judicum appears to us to violate one’s common sense. The distinction between a legal and a beneficial interest is sufficiently well-known to justify the belief that, if the legislature had intended to draw it, it would have said so in express terms. The case of a bare trustee is not, of course, before us. But it seems to us that, in such a case, the control would naturally be said to be in the beneficial owner and not in the trustee; so that if the shares carried more than half the voting power and the beneficial owner was a director, he would properly be described as having a controlling interest in the company . . . It appears to us that, apart from the special case of a bare trustee, there is no half-way house between an interpretation which limits the expression to the case of beneficial ownership and one which includes ownership by trustees, irrespective of the fact whether or not they also have some beneficial interest in the shares which give control.”

G In conclusion, the Master of the Rolls referred to the British-American Tobacco case (2) and Clark’s case (1) and said that those cases were concerned with “controlling interest” in connection with the national defence contribution under the Act of 1937, but the questions arising for decision were of a quite different character from that which was then before the court. The House of Lords unanimously upheld the decision of the Court of Appeal. LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, in the course of his speech, said ([1945] 1 All E.R. 669):

H “When the section [the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1939, s. 13] speaks of directors having a controlling interest in a company, what it is immediately concerned with in using the words ‘controlling interest’ is not the extent to which the individuals are beneficially interested in the profits of the company as a going concern or in the surplus assets in a winding-up, but the extent to which they have vested in them the power of controlling by votes the decisions which will bind the company in the shape of resolutions passed by the shareholders in general meeting. In other words, the test which is to exclude a company's business from sub-s. (9) (a) and include it in sub-s. (9) (b), is the voting power of its directors, not their beneficial interest in the company. For the purpose of such a test the fact that a vote-carrying share is vested in a director as trustee seems immaterial. The power is there, and though it be exercised in breach of trust or even in breach of an injunction, the vote would be validly cast vis-a-vis the company, and the resolution until rescinded would be binding on it. The contention that upon the wording of s. 13 the interest must be confined to beneficial interests appears to me to be but a repetition of the argument which was rejected by this House in British-American Tobacco Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (2) in relation to national defence contribution and the Finance Act, 1937."

Towards the end of his opinion, LORD RUSSELL said ([1945] 1 All E.R. 670):

"The words 'controlling interest' mean 'controlling voting power': that is the interest in view, not beneficial interest. As at present advised I agree with the Court of Appeal in the view that there is no half-way house between a construction which restricts the controlling interest to shares which are in the absolute beneficial ownership of the trustees and a construction which includes all shares of which the directors are registered holders. It is true that the Court of Appeal except the case of what they describe as a bare trustee, but express a view that the control would reside in the beneficial owner of the shares. The case envisaged is no doubt the case of the director who puts shares into the name of a nominee, taking probably a blank transfer executed by the nominee. I prefer to express no definite opinion in relation to this question, but to keep it as an open question to be debated when the necessity for a decision thereon in fact arises."

LORD WRIGHT concurred in the judgment of LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN. LORD MACMILLAN said ([1945] 1 All E.R. 670):

"The control of a company resides in the voting power of its shareholders. In the respondent company the ordinary shares alone confer a right to vote at a general meeting. The directors are the registered proprietors of a majority of the ordinary shares. It would, therefore, appear to follow that the directors have a controlling interest in the company . . . The question whether the directors of the respondent company have the control of it by their voting power as shareholders must in my view, be determined by the memorandum and articles of the company and by the register of shareholders. By the constitution of the company, as I have already mentioned, the voting power is vested in the ordinary shareholders and the register shows that the directors hold a majority of these shares. As was said by SIR GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., in Pulbrook v. Richmond Consolidated Mining Co. (4): 'The company cannot look behind the register as to the beneficial interest but must take the register as conclusive and cannot inquire . . . into the trusts affecting the shares.' So far as the company is concerned the relation between such of its shareholders as happen to be trustees and their beneficiaries is res inter alios. It may be that a trustee shareholder may, as between himself and his cestui que trust, be under a duty to exercise his vote in a particular manner, or a shareholder may be bound under contract to vote in a particular way (compare Puddephatt v. Leith (5)). But with such restrictions the company has nothing to do. It must accept and act upon the shareholder's vote, notwithstanding that it may be given contrary to some duty which he owes to outsiders. The remedy for such breach lies elsewhere."

LORD MACMILLAN made no mention of LORD GREENE's reference in the Court of Appeal to the case of a bare trustee. LORD PORTER, after expressing his agreement with the opinions of LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN and LORD SIMONDS, said ([1945] 1 All E.R. 672):

A "I cannot doubt that by the expression 'a company the directors whereof have a controlling interest therein' is meant a company in which the directors by means of their shareholding are able to direct the affairs of the company according to their will. This is, in my view, the natural meaning of these words."

After stating his reasons for rejecting the contention of the Crown that the words should receive a narrower meaning, LORD PORTER said (ibid., p. 672):

B "The Court of Appeal qualify the meaning of the phrase by excepting 'bare trustee' from those having a controlling interest. As to this qualification I desire to reserve my decision. In a case such as the present however where the shares giving control are held by the directors not merely as trustees but also with some personal interest as well I cannot doubt that the holders have a controlling interest."

C LORD SIMONDS, in the course of his speech, said (ibid., p. 672):

D "What, my Lords, constitutes a controlling interest in a company? It is the power by the exercise of voting rights to carry a resolution at a general meeting of the company. Can the directors of the respondent company by the exercise of their voting rights carry such a resolution? Yes: for they are the registered holders of more than half the ordinary shares of the company. Therefore they have a controlling interest in the company."

Then, after referring to the argument of the Crown, LORD SIMONDS proceeded (ibid., p. 673):

E "My Lords, in my opinion the Crown's contention cannot be sustained. Those who by their votes can control the company do not the less control it because they may themselves be amenable to some external control. Theirs is the control, though in the exercise of it they may be guilty of some breach of obligation whether of conscience or of law. It is impossible (an impossibility long recognised in company law) to enter into an investigation whether the registered holder of a share is to any and what extent the beneficial owner. A clean cut there must be. It is for this reason that, while respectfully concurring in every other line of the judgment of LORD GREENE, M.R., I would reserve further consideration of that part of it which deals with the case of the so-called bare trustee. His case is not yet before your Lordships and perhaps never will be. If and when it is, the validity of the distinction made by LORD GREENE, M.R., will have to be considered and I should myself require a more satisfactory explanation than has yet been given of a term which, though it has statutory sanction, has never, I believe, received statutory definition."

G LORD SIMONDS then referred to the argument of the Crown that the purpose of the Act would be defeated unless the beneficial interest alone was regarded and the fiduciary interest disregarded, and proceeded (ibid., p. 673):

H "This is a cogent argument, if two conditions are satisfied, first, that the words in dispute fairly admit an alternative construction, and, second, that the purpose of the Act can be so clearly seen that one construction will serve it and the other defeat it. Neither of these conditions is in my opinion satisfied. I cannot ascribe to the words 'controlling interest' a meaning which would impose alike on the tax-payer and the tax-collector the duty of searching out the beneficial interest behind the veil of legal forms. For it is to be observed that, if this argument is to be effective, it is not sufficient to say that the controlling interest lies not with the legal owner, but with the beneficial owner; the next step is to determine who, amidst all the complexities of successive interests, discretionary interests, mortgage and other interests, is for this purpose to be regarded as the beneficial owner. I must decline to admit an alternative construction which, departing from the plain and simple meaning of familiar words, requires such an unravelling."

The noble Lord added that, in fact, it was not clear to him that, at least, in respect of the provision under review, the construction which he adopted was not consonant with what appeared to be the purpose of the Act.

The actual question for decision in that case arose under a different statute and was quite distinct in character from the point that is in issue in the present appeal. Nevertheless, the company strongly relies on it as affording a guide to a decision in its favour. The company contends, first, that the essential basis of all the speeches in the House of Lords is that, for the purpose of inquiring whether the directors of a company have a controlling interest therein, one must look to the company's share register and to that alone; secondly, that the speeches (especially, perhaps, that of LORD MACMILLAN) do not fairly permit of the exception to the general rule, namely, that of a bare trustee, which was recognised in the judgment of the Court of Appeal; and, thirdly, that, although LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, LORD WRIGHT, LORD PORTER and LORD SIMONDS refrained from expressing any concluded view as to this possible exception, they at least entertained some doubt as to its legitimacy. Counsel for the company submitted, in the first place, that the bank, as custodian trustee, is not "a bare trustee" at all, and, therefore, I am only concerned with the general rule and not with the question whether such a trustee does or does not constitute an exception to it. He pointed out that a custodian trustee, whose functions are prescribed and delimited by the Public Trustee Act, is in a different position in many respects from that of a mere nominee such as LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN referred to in his speech. A nominee such as this, it is said, is bound to obey any directions with regard to the shares that are registered in his name as his principal may from time to time think proper to give him, provided only that the directions are not in conflict with the criminal law. A custodian trustee, on the other hand, says counsel, is in a fiduciary position towards the beneficiaries and is under an obligation, concurrent with that of the managing trustees, towards them. If the custodian trustee is told by the managing trustees to act in breach of trust, it is its duty to disobey, or, at the least, to obtain the directions of the court. I respectfully share the doubt expressed by LORD SIMONDS as to what precisely is meant by the phrase "bare trustee," and, indeed, it may well convey different meanings to different minds. I think there is force in the distinction contended for by counsel for the company between a custodian trustee, on the one hand, and a mere nominee, on the other. Nevertheless, I feel that the bank, as custodian trustee, is within the phrase as used by LORD GREENE, M.R., in the Bibby case (3) in that it has no independent will of its own in relation to the trust control, but is bound to operate it in accordance with its principals' directions. The fact that it can, and, indeed, must, refuse to commit a breach of trust adds substantially nothing to its independent control over the company's affairs. It merely diminishes, in a manner more theoretical than practical, the directive rights of the managing trustees over the custodian. It appears to me, then, that the bank is a "bare trustee" for the managing trustees within the contemplation of that phrase by the Court of Appeal in Bibby's case (3). If so, it is a fortiori the mere vehicle of the trustees' wishes for the purposes envisaged in the Clark (1) and British-American Tobacco (2) cases; and it is, after all, as it seems to me, the ratio decidendi of those cases rather than that of Bibby's case (3), which, in this court, governs the present appeal.

I have dealt with Bibby's case (3) at length, not only because it was relied on by the Special Commissioners, but because it was relied on so strongly in argument before me. And, apart altogether from the dicta regarding bare trustees, there is, indeed, much in the speeches in the House of Lords which, if detached from the subject-matter of the case and regarded as being of general application, undoubtedly supports the company's case. But, as I have already indicated, Bibby's case (3) arose under the statute of 1939 and involved a totally different question from that which arises in the present appeal. The two previous cases, on the other hand, necessitated a consideration of and decisions on the same schedule of the same Act as is in question on this appeal. Counsel for the company argued that these cases were concerned, not with who controlled a particular company, but with the indirect control of one company by another, and that, accordingly, different considerations arise. This comment is true with regard to the British-American Tobacco case (2), but is not justified as to Clark's case (1); and each of the cases was regarded both by LAWRENCE, J., and by the Court of Appeal as involving the same principles. It seems to me that I cannot, without violating those principles, support the conclusion at which the Special Commissioners arrived. Whether or not the bank is strictly a "bare trustee", its relation to the managing trustees is, in my judgment, such that it is the latter, and not the former, who can make "the ultimate decision" to which LORD SIMON referred in his speech in the British-American Tobacco appeal (2). If so, it follows that the trust control is vested in the managing trustees for the purposes of para. 11 of sched. IV to the Act of 1937, and that the company is, for those purposes, a company the directors whereof have a controlling interest therein, and I propose, accordingly, so to hold.

I would add in conclusion that a decision in this case adverse to the Crown would have rather startling results. The object of para. 11 of the schedule is to prevent avoidance of profits tax by the expedient of directors, in director-controlled companies, voting themselves excessive remuneration. If it were possible for directors to evade this restrictive provision by merely transferring their shares into the hands of nominees the provision would be rendered utterly ineffective. It is for this reason that, in my judgment, the court is both entitled and bound to look behind the register of the company concerned and see in whom the real control is vested. Wholly different considerations were before the House of Lords in Bibby's case (3), and it is in relation to those considerations alone, as I respectfully think, that the reasoning and the dicta of the law Lords who determined that case fall to be regarded and applied. I will, accordingly, remit the case to the Special Commissioners with a direction that the profits tax of the company for the chargeable accounting period in question, viz., Jan. 1, 1947, to Dec. 31, 1947, should be assessed on the basis that the company is a company the directors whereof have a controlling interest therein within the meaning of the Finance Act, 1937, sched. IV, para. 11.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Solicitor of Inland Revenue; Clifford-Turner & Co. (for the company).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. MINISTER OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING.

Ex parte MONTAGUE BURTON, LTD. AND OTHERS.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker, Asquith and Jenkins, L.J.J.), June 20, 1950.]

Town and Country Planning—War damage—Compulsory purchase order—Direction by Minister that application for order under Act of 1944 be continued after Act of 1947 came into force—Direction given before Act of 1947 came into force—Validity—Interpretation Act, 1889 (c. 63), s. 37—Town and Country Planning Act, 1944 (c. 47), s. 1 (1)—Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (c. 51), s. 113 (2) (5), sched. X, para. 16.

The applicants owned land in areas in respect of which the local planning authorities applied to the Minister of Town and Country Planning for orders under s. 1 (1) of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1944, declaring the land subject to compulsory purchase for dealing with war damage. On Aug. 6, 1947, before proceedings on the applications were completed, the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, was passed. Under that Act s. 1 of the Act of 1944 was repealed, though power was given to the Minister under s. 113 (5) and sched. X, para. 16, to direct that proceedings on applications which had not been determined at the appointed day when the Act of 1947 came into force should be continued. The Act of 1947 came into operation on July 1, 1948, but before that date, in a letter dated June 16, 1948, the Minister had directed that the proceedings on the applications should be continued. The applications were proceeded with and orders were made after the Act of 1947 came into force. The applicants moved for orders of certiorari to quash these orders, contending that the direction of June 16, 1948, was bad in law because at the time it was given sched. X, para. 16, of the Act of 1947 had not come into force and by virtue of s. 120 could not be brought into force. The Divisional Court held that under s. 37 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, the Minister had power to make directions under sched. X, para. 16, before the Act of 1947 came into force and that the orders made were valid. On appeal, HELD: the preservation of applications which had been made under the Act of 1944 was "necessary or expedient for the purpose of bringing the Act" of 1947 "into operation," within the meaning of s. 37 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, and, therefore, the Minister had power to give the directions contained in the letter of June 16, 1948.

Decision of the Divisional Court, sub nom. R. v. Minister of Town and Country Planning, Ex parte C. B. North, Ltd. and Others ([1950] 1 All E.R. 163), affirmed.

[FOR THE INTERPRETATION ACT, 1889, s. 37, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 18, p. 1005; FOR THE TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING ACT, 1944, s. 1 (1), see ibid., Vol. 37, p. 423; FOR THE TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING ACT, 1947, s. 113, s. 120, and sched. X, para. 16, see ibid., Vol. 40, p. 849, p. 859, and p. 882, respectively.]

APPEAL from the decision of a King's Bench Divisional Court refusing an application for orders of certiorari to quash two orders, No. 75 and No. 269 of 1949, made by the Minister of Town and Country Planning on the applications of Liverpool corporation and Kingston-on-Hull corporation. The orders were made under the Town and Country Planning Act, 1944, s. 1 (1), for the compulsory purchase of land belonging to the applicants in the areas of the two local planning authorities which had been subject to war damage. The facts are set out in the judgment of TUCKER, L.J.

Glidewell for the applicants.

The Attorney-General (Sir Hartley Shawcross, K.C.) and J. P. Ashworth for the Minister of Town and Country Planning.

Maurice Lyell for Kingston-on-Hull corporation.

P. M. O'Connor for Liverpool corporation.

TUCKER, L.J.: These are appeals from orders of the Divisional Court dismissing applications for orders of certiorari to quash two orders made by the Minister of Town and Country Planning. The orders in question relate to applications which had been made under the Town and Country Planning Act, 1944, by the corporations of Liverpool and Hull. The Liverpool order is No. 75 of 1949, made on Jan. 20, 1949, and the Hull order is No. 269 of 1949, made on Feb. 22, 1949. Both were declaratory orders for compulsory purchase, and the point raised on the applications to the Divisional Court was whether directions made by the Minister of Town and Country Planning, dated June 16, 1948, were valid under the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947.

Section 1 (1) of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1944, provides:

“(1) Where the Minister of Town and Country Planning (in this Act referred to as ‘the Minister’) is satisfied that it is requisite, for the purpose of dealing satisfactorily with extensive war damage in the area of a local planning authority, that a part or parts of their area, consisting of land shown to his satisfaction to have sustained war damage or of such land together with other land contiguous or adjacent thereto, should be laid out afresh and re-developed as a whole, an order declaring all or any of the land in such a part of their area to be land subject to compulsory purchase for dealing with war damage may be made by the Minister if an application in that behalf is made to him by the authority before the expiration of five years from such date as the Minister may by order appoint as being the date when the making of such applications has become practicable.”

It was under that section that the corporations of Liverpool and Kingston-on-Hull made application with regard to areas which included properties owned or occupied by the applicants for certiorari in the present cases. After the applications had been made, a public inquiry was held, in the case of Kingston-on-Hull between June 1 and 24, 1948, and in the case of Liverpool on June 29, 1948. Those inquiries were conducted as a result of letters dated June 16, 1948, the validity of which is in question in these proceedings. It is headed: “Town and Country Planning Acts, 1944 and 1947. Application for an order under s. 1 of the 1944 Act. Reconstruction Area No. 1 (Central Areas).” The letter says:

“I am directed by the Minister of Town and Country Planning to refer to the application by your council dated Dec. 23, 1947, for an order under s. 1 of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1944, declaring land to be subject to compulsory purchase under Part I of that Act. In exercise of the power conferred upon him by para. 16 of sched. X to the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, the Minister hereby directs that proceedings on the application shall be continued under the Act of 1944 after the appointed day for the coming into force of the Act of 1947, viz., July 1, 1948.”

The inquiries were held and the orders were made on the dates I have stated.

It is said, in the first instance, that under the provisions of the Act of 1947, standing alone, the Minister could never bring that Act into operation at all. The argument is as follows. Section 120 (2) of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, provides:

“This Act shall come into force on the appointed day: Provided that” [certain sections there referred to] “shall come into force on the date of the passing of this Act.”

The sections referred to as coming into force on the date of the passing of the Act do not include s. 120, and, accordingly, it is said that the Minister cannot appoint a day until the Act has come into operation and the Act cannot come into operation until he has appointed a day, with the result that the Act can never come into operation. That ingenious argument does not appeal to me because I think that an ordinary and natural interpretation must be given to a section which itself brings the Act into operation, namely, that it must necessarily come into operation with the passing of the Act, which was on Aug. 6, 1947. Any other interpretation would really make nonsense of the provisions of the Act.

However that may be, it is conceded by counsel for the applicants that the appointed day was effectively made, but he says that that was only done by virtue of s. 37 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, which provides:

"Where an Act passed after the commencement of this Act is not to come into operation immediately on the passing thereof, and confers power to make any appointment, to make, grant, or issue any instrument, that is to say, any Orders in Council, order, warrant, scheme, letters patent, rules, regulations, or byelaws, to give notices, to prescribe forms, or to do any other thing for the purposes of the Act, that power may, unless the contrary intention appears, be exercised at any time after the passing of the Act, so far as may be necessary or expedient for the purpose of bringing the Act into operation at the date of the commencement thereof, subject to this restriction, that any instrument made under the power shall not, unless the contrary intention appears in the Act, or the contrary is necessary for bringing the Act into operation, come into operation until the Act comes into operation."

Counsel for the applicants concedes that that gives to the Minister power to appoint a day under the Act of 1947. On Feb. 9, 1948, he did make an order under which the appointed day was July 1, 1948. It is, however, said that the letter of June 16, 1948, was invalid because the direction made by it was not a direction made for the purpose of bringing the Act into operation, and that that is the only direction which can properly be made by virtue of s. 37 of the Act of 1889.

In order to consider that point it is necessary to refer to s. 113 (2) of the Act of 1947 which provides:

"Subject to the provisions of this section, the enactments specified in sched. IX to this Act are hereby repealed in the case of enactments specified in Part I of that schedule, as from the passing of this Act, and in the case of the enactments specified in Part II of that schedule, as from the appointed day, to the extent specified in relation thereto in the third column of that schedule."

When Part II of sched. IX is examined, it is found that the Town and Country Planning Act, 1944, ss. 1 to 14, are repealed. Section 1 is the section under which the applications were originally made. Section 113 (5) provides:

"Without prejudice to the provisions of s. 38 of the Interpretation Act, 1889 (which relates to the effect of repeals), the provisions of sched. X to this Act (being transitory and consequential provisions) shall have effect in relation to the repeals effected by this section."

Schedule X, para. 16, reads as follows:

"Where, at any time before the appointed day, application has been made to the Minister for an order under s. 1 of the Act of 1944 declaring any land to be subject to compulsory purchase under Part I of that Act, the Minister may, if he thinks fit, direct that proceedings on the application shall be continued under that Act after that day; and where any such direction is given, s. 1 of the Act of 1944, and s. 13 of that Act and sched. I to that Act so far as they relate to an order under the said s. 1, shall continue to apply in relation to the application, and an order may be made thereon accordingly."

The argument is that the letter of June 16, 1948, being before the appointed day, is not authorised by para. 16 of that schedule and that it does not come within the language of the Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 37.

In my view, s. 37 applies to the present case. It clearly gives power to take the necessary steps to set up the machinery for bringing the Act of 1947 into operation as well as for doing such an act as appointing a day for the Act to come into operation. The words in s. 37 dealing with regulations, byelaws, notices, prescribed forms, and so forth, make it, I think, clear that matters of that kind may be dealt with under the provisions of s. 37 so that the necessary machinery will function as soon as the Act comes into operation and things shall not come to a standstill by reason of the repeal of an existing Act. In the present case these applications were pending under s. 1 of the Act of 1944. I think that that is just the kind of thing which is contemplated by s. 37 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, and that, having regard to the provisions of para. 16 of sched. X, the order contained in the letter of June 16, 1948, was a valid order although it was made before the appointed day.

For the reasons which I have stated, I agree with the judgment of the Divisional Court and think that these appeals must fail.

ASQUITH, L.J.: I agree. I think that the only point of substance raised by counsel for the applicants was when he argued that s. 37 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, did not apply because the giving of the directions contained in the letter of June 16, 1948, was not necessary or expedient for the purpose of bringing the Act of 1947 into operation. He appeared to submit that nothing could be necessary or expedient for this purpose except such a thing as fixing the appointed day. I cannot agree that the words should receive so restricted an interpretation. It seems to me that the preservation of applications made under the Act of 1944 was necessary and expedient for the purpose of giving the Act of 1947 material on which to operate, and that this is enough to satisfy the words "for the purpose of bringing the Act into operation." For those reasons and the other reasons given by TUCKER, L.J., I agree that the appeals should be dismissed.

JENKINS, L.J.: I also agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Warren, Murton & Co., agents for H. A. Dodman, Leeds (for the applicants, Montague Burton, Ltd.); Warren, Murton & Co. (for the other applicants); Treasury Solicitor (for the Minister of Town and Country Planning); Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for E. H. Bullock, town clerk (for the Kingston-on-Hull corporation); Cree, Godfrey & Wood, agents for Thomas Alker, town clerk (for the Liverpool corporation).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re HICKMAN'S WILL TRUSTS. Re PLAYFAIR (deceased).

PALMER v. PLAYFAIR AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Danckwerts, J.), June 7, 1950.]

H Will—Lapse—Gift of £20,000 to be held on trusts of daughter's marriage settlement—Covenant by testator in settlement to bring £10,000 into the settlement—£20,000 declared to be "in addition" to the £10,000—Settlement trust fund vested in daughter's son—Death of son before death of testator—Destination of £20,000 on daughter's death.

By the terms of a marriage settlement, dated Jan. 11, 1888, and made on the marriage of the testator's daughter, the "wife's trust fund" was to be held on trust for the wife for life and after her death on trust for the husband during his life, and, subject to the interests of the husband and wife and in default of any appointment by them in favour of the issue of the marriage, on trust for the children of the marriage who attained the age of twenty-one. If there were no child of the marriage who attained a vested interest under the trusts of the settlement, the wife's trust fund was to be held, subject to the husband's and wife's interests therein, on trust for the wife's brothers, A. and H. (the testator's two sons). By the settlement the testator covenanted that, within six months of his death, his executors would pay £10,000 to the trustees of the settlement to be held on the same trusts as the wife's trust fund under the settlement, or as near thereto as circumstances would permit. There was only one child of the marriage, L., who attained a vested interest in the wife's trust fund and the £10,000, but died on Apr. 20, 1915, at the age of twenty-six. By his will, made on May 17, 1915, the testator gave £20,000 to the trustees of his daughter's marriage settlement "to be held by them on the trusts of the settlement," and he declared that the sum of £20,000 was "in addition to the sum of £10,000 covenanted by me to be settled upon her by the . . . settlement." He gave his residuary personal estate on trust for his son, H. The testator died in 1917 and the daughter died in 1948, her husband having predeceased her. The question was whether, on the true construction of the will and in the events which had happened, the £20,000 was to be held, on the daughter's death, on the same trusts as the "wife's trust fund" under the marriage settlement, or whether it passed (a) to the estates of A. and H. under the ultimate trust of the wife's fund under the settlement, or (b) to H. under the residuary bequest in the testator's will. It was contended by the personal representatives of H. that there was a referential trust in regard to the sum of £20,000, so that the trusts of the marriage settlement had to be written out in the will, and, therefore, as L. was dead at the date of the testator's death, the principle of lapse applied and L. could take no interest under the will, and, accordingly, the £20,000 was not disposed of effectively after the daughter's death, but devolved as part of the testator's residue.

HELD: as the testator was the settlor of the £10,000 as well as of the £20,000, and had clearly indicated in his will that he was treating the two sums as one fund by declaring that the sum of £20,000 was "in addition" to the sum of £10,000 covenanted by him to be settled on the trusts of the marriage settlement, there was an accretion of the £20,000 to the £10,000 and the sum of £20,000 went on the same trusts as the "wife's trust fund" under the settlement, these trusts having been effectively declared by the settlement in favour of L., whose interest passed to his estate.

[AS TO REFERENTIAL TRUSTS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 29, pp. 803, 804, para. 1110; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 43, pp. 602-606, Nos. 492-518.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Beaumont, [1913] 1 Ch. 325; 82 L.J.Ch. 183; 108 L.T. 181; 43 Digest 602, 494.
- (2) Trew v. Perpetual Trustee Co., [1895] A.C. 264; 64 L.J.P.C. 49; 72 L.T. 241; 43 Digest 607, 525.
- (3) Re Slade, (1919), 89 L.J.Ch. 412; 122 L.T. 321; 44 Digest 417, 2478.
- (4) Re Fraser, [1913] 2 Ch. 224; 82 L.J.Ch. 406; 108 L.T. 960; 40 Digest 568, 1053.
- (5) Re Campbell's Trusts, [1922] 1 Ch. 551; 91 L.J.Ch. 433; 127 L.T. 236; 40 Digest 568, 1054.
- (6) Re Shelton's Settled Estates, [1945] 1 All E.R. 283; [1945] Ch. 158; 114 L.J.Ch. 198; 172 L.T. 237; 2nd Digest Supp.

- (7) Re Gooch, [1929] 1 Ch. 740; 98 L.J.Ch. 285; 141 L.T. 150; Digest Supp.
 (8) Re Paul's Settlement Trusts, [1920] 1 Ch. 99; 88 L.J.Ch. 530; 121 L.T. 544; 44 Digest 784, 6414.
 (9) Re Currie's Settlement, Re Rooper, [1910] 1 Ch. 329; 79 L.J.Ch. 285; 101 L.T. 899; 44 Digest 492, 3111.
 (10) Culsha v. Cheese, (1849), 7 Hare 236; 18 L.J.Ch. 269; 68 E.R. 97; 44 Digest 494, 3133.

A ADJOURNED SUMMONS to determine the destination of a sum of £20,000, given by the will of Henry Thomas Hickman to the trustees of his daughter's marriage settlement to be held by them on the trusts of the settlement. By the settlement Henry Hickman had covenanted to bring the sum of £10,000 into the settlement, and by his will he declared that the sum of £20,000 was "in addition" to the sum of £10,000. Henry Hickman died in 1917, and his daughter, Lady Playfair, died in 1948, having survived her husband. Her only child attained a vested interest in her trust fund under the settlement, but died, intestate and a bachelor, on Apr. 20, 1915, leaving his father, Lord Playfair, as his sole next-of-kin. By his will Lord Playfair purported to give to his wife all moneys that should have passed to the marriage settlement trustees through her and which vested in him as his son's next-of-kin. The report deals with the question whether, on the true construction of the will of Henry Hickman and in the events which had happened, the £20,000 was to be held, on Lady Playfair's death, on the trusts of the marriage settlement, or whether the principle of lapse applied, and (a) an ultimate trust in the settlement, in favour of Lady Playfair's brothers, came into operation, or (b) the money devolved as part of Henry Hickman's residuary estate. The facts and the relevant provisions of the settlement and of the wills appear in the judgment.

H. E. Francis for the plaintiff, the trustee of the marriage settlement.

Wilfrid Hunt for the first defendant, a personal representative of Lady Playfair.

E H. A. Rose for the second defendant, Lloyds Bank, Ltd., personal representative of Harry Hickman.

Dunbar for the third defendant, beneficially interested in the estate of Arthur Hickman.

Myles for the fourth and fifth defendants, interested in the residuary estate of Lord Playfair.

F DANCKWERTS, J.: By a marriage settlement, dated Jan. 11, 1888, and made between George James Playfair, who afterwards became Lord Playfair, of the first part, Augusta Mary Hickman, who became Lady Playfair, of the second part, Henry Thomas Hickman, her father (hereafter referred to as "the testator"), of the third part, and certain trustees, of the fourth part, funds were settled, on the occasion of the marriage of George Playfair and G Augusta Hickman, on certain trusts.

H The material trusts are those relating to a sum of £5,000, brought into settlement by the wife and described for the present purpose as "the wife's trust fund." The trusts of the wife's trust fund were for the wife for life and after her death for her husband during his life or until he should re-marry, and, subject to those interests, on trust for the issue of the marriage as the husband and wife should appoint. They never executed any appointment. Then the trusts of the wife's fund proceed:

"And it is hereby agreed that the capital and income . . . of the wife's trust fund in default of and until and subject to any such appointment as aforesaid . . . shall be held in trust for all or any of the children or child of the said intended marriage who being sons or a son attain the age of twenty-one years or being daughters or a daughter attain that age or marry under it and if more than one in equal shares . . ."

In the event of there not being any child of the said intended marriage who should attain a vested interest in the trust therein contained

" . . . the wife's trust fund and the income and statutory accumulations (if any) of the income thereof or so much thereof as shall not have become vested or been applied under any of the trusts or powers affecting the same shall after the death of the said George James Playfair and such failure of children as aforesaid be held in trust for . . . Arthur Percy Hickman and Harry Otho Devereux Hickman, brothers of the said Augusta Mary Hickman, in equal shares."

By the same settlement the testator covenanted with the trustees, and also, as a separate covenant, with Augusta Mary Hickman:

" . . . that if the said intended marriage shall be solemnized . . . the executors or administrators of him the said Henry Thomas Hickman shall within six calendar months from his death pay to the trustees or trustee the sum of £10,000 with interest for the same in the meantime at the rate of three per cent. per annum . . ."

It was declared:

" . . . that the trustees or trustee . . . shall stand possessed of the said sum of £10,000 upon the trusts and subject to the powers provisos agreements and declarations hereinbefore declared and contained concerning money forming part of the wife's trust fund or as near thereto as circumstances will permit."

Therefore, the fund of £10,000, when paid over after the testator's death, went on the same trusts as the wife's trust fund.

The marriage was solemnized on Jan. 12, 1888, i.e., the day after the settlement. There was only one child of the marriage, a son, Lyon Playfair, who was killed in action on Apr. 20, 1915. He was then aged twenty-six years and, therefore, there is no doubt that, under the trusts of the wife's trust fund contained in the marriage settlement, he obtained a complete and vested interest in the wife's trust fund, including the £10,000 which the testator had covenanted to be paid over. On May 17, 1915, the testator made his will under which he bequeathed his residuary personal estate on trust for his son, Harry Otho Devereux Hickman, absolutely, and he bequeathed to his trustees a sum of £20,000 on trust which he declared, near the end of his will, in these words:

" And I declare that my trustees shall stand possessed of the said sum of £20,000 on trust to pay the same to the trustees for the time being of the settlement dated Jan. 11, 1888, made on the marriage of my said daughter, Lady Playfair, and to be held by them on the trusts of the said settlement and I declare that the said sum of £20,000 is in addition to the sum of £10,000 covenanted by me to be settled upon her by the said settlement."

The testator died on Jan. 14, 1917, having had two sons, Harry Otho Devereux Hickman, who died on Apr. 5, 1946, and whose personal representative is Lloyds Bank, Ltd., and Arthur Percy Hickman, who died on June 6, 1888, and, therefore, predeceased his father.

Lord Playfair predeceased his wife and died on Dec. 25, 1939, having made a will, dated Dec. 28, 1933, in which he refers, in cl. 8, to the death of his son and makes a provision, consequential on the son's death, in these terms:

" Whereas through the death of my son the only child of my marriage with my said present wife the moneys inherited by her from any of her family and her father and subsequently from her mother but subject to the precedent life interests therein created by our marriage settlement have become vested in me as administrator and sole next-of-kin of my said son now I hereby give and bequeath to Lady Playfair or if she shall predecease me then to her personal representatives to be administered as part of her estate all moneys that shall have passed to our marriage settlement trustees through her my said wife whether by the assignment therein or through the covenant for settlement of her after-acquired property therein contained . . .”

A He gave his residuary estate on certain trusts under which the Honourable Lucy Jessie Lyon Soltau Symons, the fourth defendant, is now tenant for life in possession, and eventually the capital is to go to the sons of his uncle, Sir Lambert Playfair. Lady Playfair died on Dec. 9, 1948, and, as her life interest under the marriage settlement of 1888 thus came to an end, the question arises what is to be done with the moneys which were directed to be held on the same trusts as the wife's trust fund under the settlement. There is no doubt that the £10,000, which the testator covenanted to bring into the settlement, was absolutely vested in Lord Playfair's only son, Lyon, and, on Lyon's death, his interest therein passed to his father, Lord Playfair, and passes under Lord Playfair's will.

B The question which I have to decide is whether the same result occurs in respect of the sum of £20,000 which was bequeathed by the testator's will.

C It is contended by counsel for Lloyds Bank, Ltd., the personal representative of the testator's son, Harry Hickman, that that £20,000 forms part of the estate of Harry Hickman, passing either by virtue of the residuary bequest contained in the testator's will, or by addition, which has the same result. Counsel for Lloyds Bank, Ltd., contends that this is a case of referential trusts, and, therefore, under the principle which has been established by a number of authorities, one has to write out, in the will, the relevant trusts of the marriage settlement. One then writes out a trust in favour of Lyon Playfair, but, as he was dead at the date of the testator's death, the principle of lapse applies and Lyon can take no interest under the will. Therefore, the £20,000 is not disposed of effectively after the death of Lady Playfair and devolves as part of the residuary bequest. In Re Beaumont (1), FARWELL, L.J., sitting as an additional judge of the Chancery Division, stated that principle quite clearly and applied ([1913] 1 Ch. 328) certain observations of an Australian judge, MANNING, J., cited by the Privy Council in Trew v. Perpetual Trustee Co. (2), to the effect that the only safe course is to write out the trusts of the settlement to which reference is given and which are brought in referentially in the manner which I have described. Counsel for Lloyds Bank, Ltd., argues that the same principle is recognised plainly by LORD BUCKMASTER (89 L.J.Ch. 416) in Re Slade (3), and he also referred me to the observations of SARGANT, J. ([1913] 2 Ch. 236) in Re Fraser (4); Re Campbell's Trusts (5) per RUSSELL, J. ([1922] 1 Ch. 562); Re Shelton's Settled Estates (6), a decision of VAISEY, J.; and Re Gooch (7), a decision of CLAUSON, J. On the other hand, Re Paul's Settlement Trusts (8), a decision of P. O. LAWRENCE, J., is cited as an authority for the argument that there is an accretion of the £20,000 to the £10,000 which the testator covenanted to bring into the settlement, but counsel for Lloyds Bank, Ltd., said that that case was disapproved of by RUSSELL, J., in Re Campbell (5) and by VAISEY, J., in Re Shelton's Settled Estates (6). Whether RUSSELL, J., and VAISEY, J., exactly disapproved of the decision seems to be open to doubt. They certainly distinguished it, and, as was pointed out by H counsel for Lloyds Bank, Ltd., they recognised the general principle that, if there were referential trusts, one had to write them out, and, therefore, the funds settled by reference did not necessarily follow the destination of the funds originally settled i.e., they were not so amalgamated with those funds that they would devolve with them in all respects. There is certainly support for the principle contended for by counsel for Lloyds Bank, Ltd., that, where the writing out of trusts involves a gift to a person who predeceased the testator, then that part of the trust must, at any rate, fail. There seems quite clear authority for the proposition in Re Currie's Settlement (9), and in Culsha v. Cheese (10), which is referred to in JARMAN ON WILLS, 7th ed., vol. 1, p. 403.

I think that, if I came to the conclusion that the trusts in this case are simply referential trusts—the case of a settlor referring to trusts contained in another document and settled by another person in a separate instrument—it may be that the result contended for by counsel for Lloyds Bank, Ltd., might occur, though I cannot help observing that the cases which he cited in support of his argument were all cases in which the circumstances were very substantially different. In Re Currie's Settlement (9), a decision of JOYCE, J., the effect of the trust would have been to return the property to the testator, and, therefore, it would obviously have produced an ineffective trust, and there was a direction in the referential provisions whereby only the trusts which were effective were to be incorporated. It seems to me, therefore, that the circumstances are so different in those cases that it does not follow that I ought to apply to the present case the rule applied in them.

In the present case, I find indications which enable me to come to the conclusion that there is an accretion of the £20,000 bequeathed by the will to the £10,000 which the testator covenanted to bring into settlement by the terms of the settlement of 1888. As was pointed out by counsel for Lady Playfair's personal representative, the settlor is the same person in each case. The testator was the person who covenanted to settle the sum of £10,000, and who made the will bequeathing to his trustees the sum of £20,000, and that £20,000 is to be handed over by his trustees to the trustees of the settlement to be held by them on the trusts of the settlement. He then went on to declare in his will that the sum of £20,000 was in addition to the sum of £10,000 covenanted to be settled by him. It seems to me that, although a provision referring to the fund as being in addition to other funds is not regarded as conclusive by RUSSELL, J., in Re Campbell (5), yet in the present case it shows that the testator is treating the £20,000 and the £10,000 as one fund. In those circumstances, it seems to me that the £20,000 follows the destination of trusts which were effectively declared by the settlement, because under the settlement there is no doubt that the trust in favour of Lyon Playfair was fully effective. He had an indefeasible interest and that passed to his estate. Therefore, I come to the conclusion that, in the event which has happened, the £20,000 goes on the same trusts exactly as the £10,000 and the wife's trust fund under the marriage settlement of 1888.

[HIS LORDSHIP then dealt with cl. 8 of Lord Playfair's will and held that, on the true construction thereof, the sum of £10,000, which Henry Hickman covenanted to bring into the marriage settlement, and the sum of £20,000, bequeathed by Henry Hickman's will to the trustees of the settlement to be held on the trusts thereof, passed under the gift to Lady Playfair in cl. 8, and not under the residuary bequest, and, accordingly, in the events which had happened, the investments and moneys in the hands of the settlement trustees and representing these sums were now to be paid or transferred to the personal representatives of Lady Playfair as part of her estate.]

Declaration accordingly. Costs of all parties, as between solicitor and client, to be paid out of the capital of the £20,000.

Solicitors: Golding, Hargrove & Palmer (for the plaintiff and the first defendant); Field, Roscoe & Co. (for the second defendant); Stevens & Bolton, Farnham, Surrey (for the third defendant); Burton, Yeates & Hart, agents for Winterbotham, Ball & Gadsden, Stroud (for the fourth and fifth defendants).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. HUNT AND ANOTHER.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Parker, JJ.), May 15, 1950.]

Criminal Law—Gross indecency—No actual physical contact proved—Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (c. 69), s. 11.

A The appellants were charged with committing acts of gross indecency with one another, and evidence was given that they were found in a shed indulging in a grossly indecent exhibition, but that there was no physical contact between them. The jury, after having retired to consider their verdict, returned to court and informed the deputy chairman of quarter sessions that, though satisfied that the appellants intended to commit an offence, they wanted to know whether it was necessary for the prosecution to prove that there had been actual physical contact between the appellants. B The deputy chairman directed them that actual contact was not a necessary ingredient of the offence.

HELD: the direction given was correct.

C [AS TO GROSS INDECENCY WITH A MALE PERSON, see HALSBURY, Hails-ham Edn., Vol. 9, p. 399, para. 676; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 15, p. 753, Nos. 8122-8127 and Digest Supp.]

APPEALS against conviction and applications for leave to appeal against sentence.

D The appellants were convicted at Wiltshire Quarter Sessions of committing an act of gross indecency with each other and were sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment. The facts appear in the judgment of the court delivered by LORD GODDARD, C.J.

Rountree for the appellants.

Ackner for the Crown.

E LORD GODDARD, C.J., delivered the following judgment of the court. The appellants were convicted at Wiltshire Quarter Sessions of an act of gross indecency. I do not propose to go through the disgusting evidence. They are two grown men, and they were watched by the police because their movements caused suspicion, and they were found in a shed in positions which can only be described as constituting filthy exhibitions by the one to the other.

F The point on the appeal arises from the fact that the jury, having retired to consider their verdict, returned to court and asked for a direction whether, to constitute the offence of committing gross indecency between the appellants, it was necessary for the prosecution to prove that there had been some actual physical contact between them—touching their private parts, or something of that sort, with their hands. It is quite clear that physical contact is not necessary to constitute the offence. If two men put themselves in such a position that it can be said that there is a grossly indecent exhibition going on, G they can be found Guilty of committing an act of gross indecency. If a third person had walked into this shed, he would have seen the most shocking indecency between the appellants.

The deputy chairman, in dealing with the matter, put it in this way:

H "I do not know whether you mean that you are quite satisfied that no contact had taken place. Do you mean that? You are satisfied, I gather, that there was the intention there?"

The foreman of the jury: Yes.

The deputy chairman: But you are not satisfied that any actual act, any contact, had taken place?

The foreman of the jury: That is right."

The deputy chairman then told the jury that it was not necessary that there should be actual contact, but they had to decide whether or not there was an act of gross indecency. The act of gross indecency could, of course, be supported on the evidence that the appellants were indulging in a grossly indecent exhibition. In those circumstances, we cannot say that there was anything irregular at the trial. The jury came back and said they wanted further direction. Further direction was given to them, and we cannot say that it was otherwise than accurate. Therefore, the verdict must stand.

With regard to the sentence, it is a very different matter. This was a matter between two grown men, who, no doubt, are thoroughly ashamed of themselves. One of them has suffered a penalty in the loss of his occupation. The deputy chairman, however, has reported that the bench took a very serious view of this case, and he sentenced the appellants to twelve months' imprisonment each. In the opinion of the court, those sentences were not ones which the offence justified, because there was no element of corruption in it. The place where the appellants performed this act was not a public urinal. It was late at night and in a shed. It was an offence against the statute, but the court thinks that justice will be done if we reduce each sentence to one of three months' imprisonment to run from the date of conviction.

Appeal against conviction dismissed. Appeal against sentence allowed.

Solicitors: Taylor, Willcocks & Co., agents for Kinneir & Co., Swindon (for the appellants); Townsend, Swindon (for the Crown).

[Reported by H. McL. MORRISON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re MILL'S DECLARATION OF TRUST. MIDLAND BANK EXECUTOR AND TRUSTEE CO., LTD. v. MILL AND OTHERS.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., Cohen and Singleton, L.JJ.), June 14, 1950.]

Perpetuities—Settlement—Limitation dependent on void limitation—Accord with previous valid limitations—"Issue."

By a deed of declaration of trust a settlor settled certain investments (called "the trust fund") on trust to pay one half of the annual income thereof to his wife during her life and the other half thereof to his daughter during her life, and to pay the whole of the income to the survivor of his wife and his said daughter. By cl. 4 the settlor provided: "From and after the death of the survivor the trustees shall stand possessed of the trust fund in equal shares for all or any the children of his said daughter living at the death of the survivor who attain the age of twenty-one years or being female marry under that age." By cl. 5 he directed that each such child's share should be held on trust to pay the income thereof to such child for life, and by cl. 6 he provided: "After the death of each of such children the capital and income of the share of such child shall be held in trust for all or any one or more exclusively of the others or other of the issue of such child (whether children or remoter descendants) at such time and if more than one in such shares with such provisions for maintenance education advancement and otherwise at the discretion of any persons and with such gifts over and generally in such manner for the benefit of such issue or some or one of them as such child shall by deed revocable or irrevocable or by will or codicil appoint but so that under any appointment a child of the appointor shall not (otherwise than by way of advancement) take a vested interest except upon attaining the age of twenty-one years or upon marriage And in default of and until and subject to any such appointment in trust for all or any the children or child of such child who attains the age of twenty-one years or being female marry under that age and if more than one in equal shares . . .” By cl. 8: “Upon the death of the survivor of the wife and the said daughter and in the event of the said daughter dying without leaving issue who attains a vested interest the trustees shall sell and convert into money such part of the trust fund as does not consist of money and shall distribute the proceeds in manner following . . .” and the settlor gave sums of money to various charities and directed that the balance of the trust fund be distributed among certain named persons. On May 11, 1939, the settlor died. On Nov. 10, 1948, the settlor's daughter died, having married, but without there having been issue of her marriage. The settlor's widow survived the daughter.

HELD: on construction, the word “issue” in cl. 8 referred to grandchildren of the daughter and did not include children of the daughter; cl. 8, therefore, could not be regarded as alternative to cl. 4, but must be linked with cl. 6 and was a limitation to take effect on the failure of the events referred to in cl. 6; and, as those events were such as to transgress the rule against perpetuities, cl. 8 failed.

Decision of ROMER, J. ([1950] 1 All E.R. 789), affirmed.

[AS TO APPLICATION OF RULE AGAINST PERPETUITIES TO ALTERNATIVE LIMITATIONS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 25, pp. 143-145, paras. 240-243; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 37, pp. 102-106, Nos. 374-398.]

Case referred to:

(1) Lassence v. Tierney, (1849), 1 Mac. & G. 551; 15 L.T.O.S. 557; 41 E.R. 1379; 37 Digest 99, 346.

APPEAL by the second defendant, the Jewish Board of Guardians, from an order of ROMER, J., dated Mar. 8, 1950, and reported [1950] 1 All E.R. 789.

The summons was issued to determine the construction of certain clauses in a deed of declaration of trust executed by one Henry Mill. The arguments were directed to the question whether the fact that cl. 6 was admittedly void for perpetuity also caused cl. 8 (under which, among others, the Jewish Board of Guardians was beneficially interested) to fail. ROMER, J., held that cl. 8 did so fail. The Jewish Board of Guardians appealed.

R. S. Lazarus for the second defendant.

Cross, K.C., and B. S. Tatham for the first defendant, the settlor's widow.

The trustees of the deed and the daughter's personal representatives were not parties to the appeal.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSHERD, M.R.: This appeal arises out of a voluntary settlement made on Jan. 23, 1936, by the settlor, Mr. Henry Mill, who has since died. Broadly, the object was to make provision for his wife and descendants, and the present question has arisen because of the failure of his family. The first operative clause to which I need refer is that which provided for the income of the trust fund being payable to the wife during her life as to one-half and to his daughter, Agnes Martha Mill, during her life as to the other half and then for the whole income to be paid to the survivor. The daughter, Agnes Martha Mill, predeceased her mother, dying without issue.

Clause 4 of the settlement provides:

“From and after the death of the survivor [of the wife and daughter] the trustees shall stand possessed of the trust fund in equal shares for all or any the children of [the settlor's] said daughter living at the death of the survivor who attain the age of twenty-one years or being female marry under that age.”

It is the first limb of the argument of counsel for the second defendant that that clause, considered by itself, is a gift absolutely of the corpus of the fund in equal shares to such of the children, if any, of Agnes Martha Mill who (a) survive Agnes Martha Mill and their grandmother, the settlor's wife, and (b) attain twenty-one or, if female, marry under that age. I shall assume that part of the argument in counsel's favour, and I will next take cl. 5 which, on the assumption I make, is a limitation or cutting down of the absolute interest which has been previously conferred. That clause provides:

"The trustees shall stand possessed of the share of each of such children . . . upon trust to pay the income thereof to such child for his or her life."

Therefore, on the assumption on which I am proceeding, if there is a child who survives both mother and grandmother and is twenty-one, or, if a female, has married, that child takes a life interest only and not an absolute interest. Clause 6 is designed to provide for the ultimate destination of the corpus of the share of each child, and this clause, it is conceded, offends against the perpetuity rule. It provides:

"After the death of each of such children the capital and income of the share of such child shall be held in trust for all or any one or more, exclusively of the others or other of the issue of such child (whether children or remoter descendants) at such time and if more than one in such shares . . . as such child shall by deed . . . or by will appoint but so that under any appointment a child of the appointor shall not (otherwise, than by way of advancement) take a vested interest except upon attaining the age of twenty-one years or upon marriage."

As the argument has it, and I assume has it correctly, "each of such children" at the beginning of this clause again means such of the children of Agnes as survive and attain the age to which I have referred. There follows a provision that in default of appointment the share goes to the child's children at twenty-one, or earlier marriage in the case of a female, in equal shares. So, cl. 6 purports to postpone the vesting of the capital of these shares until the children of the daughter's child should attain at the earliest twenty-one years or marry below that age. The daughter was living at the date of the settlement, but she was unmarried and it needs no further reference to point out that this provision clearly went far beyond the limits allowed by the rule.

Then there is a hotchpot clause, over which I shall pass, and then comes the clause which has given rise to the present problem. In its composition the settlor has, indeed, wandered somewhat sadly from clear expression. He has forgotten that he is making a settlement and not a will, because he speaks of legacies and residue, but these imperfections, I think, do not make any difference to the present problem. Clause 8 is:

"Upon the death of the survivor of the wife and the said daughter and in the event of the said daughter dying without leaving issue who attains a vested interest the trustees shall sell . . ."

and then there is a provision for the distribution of the proceeds of sale (which in the event have turned out to be about £23,000) among a large number of bodies of persons of whom the second defendant is one, an order having been made that the second defendant should represent all persons interested under cl. 8. I need only refer to one other clause, viz., cl. 9:

"The statutory power of advancement shall apply for the benefit of any child or other issue of the said daughter."

I have observed in the course of my narrative that the argument of counsel for the second defendant must pre-suppose (and, as I have already stated, I am prepared to assume in his favour that he is right) that no interests under cll. 4, 5 and 6 are taken by any issue of the daughter save such children or descendants of such children as survive their mother and grandmother and also attain the age of twenty-one years or marry under that age. It is further assumed that cl. 4 did operate, save to the extent that the later clauses cut it down, to confer absolute interests, but the absolute interest is only an absolute interest in favour of children who qualify in the way I have stated. The result, without doubt, might have been highly capricious. To take one example, suppose that the daughter, Agnes, had had a son, that that son married and had children, and then, though, let us say, of ripe years, had died while his mother was still alive. The astonishing result would have been that the grandchildren of the daughter, the son's children, who were the only descendants of the settlor

A would be absolutely excluded from taking under this settlement. That result, however, is obviously possible to justify by the language the settlor has chosen to use. It is on that language and on the assumptions in regard to it which I have made that counsel for the second defendant has so neatly founded the rest of the argument.

B The rest of the argument is this. When you come to the vital cl. 8 you have there a double event supposed—first, the death of the survivor of the wife and daughter and “the event of the said daughter dying without leaving issue who attains a vested interest.” The settlor, says counsel, had indicated both before and after this clause that he understood quite well what is meant by the word “issue.” He has said in terms in cl. 6, “the issue of such child (whether children or remoter descendants)” and again in cl. 9 he uses the

C phrase “for the benefit of any child or other issue of the said daughter”. So, says counsel, there is no room for doubt that in cl. 8, when this phrase is used “of the said daughter dying without leaving issue,” he means without leaving children or more remote descendants. Counsel says there is no justification for departing from that prima facie meaning of the word “issue.” It will be useful if at this point I say that in the court below counsel preferred

D an argument based on the phrase “leaving issue” and said that it ought to be confined to “leaving issue living at the daughter's death,” and with that point ROMER, J., dealt. We have not been troubled with it in this court. I will return to the point that has been argued, and let me suppose that counsel is right. All else, I think, follows quite neatly from the assumption. In terms it is true that the settlor has stated the contingency to be that of the daughter

E dying without leaving children or more remote issue to take a vested interest, an event which on the face of it might happen a long way ahead, and would, therefore, be equally defeated by the operation of the rule against perpetuities as cl. 6 is defeated. But when the practical operation of the clause is examined in the light of what I have indicated, it emerges, says counsel, that the only event on which this clause can take effect, save the death of the survivor of

F the wife and daughter, is the death of the daughter without leaving children who attain the age of twenty-one or otherwise attain a vested interest under cl. 4, and, since that event must be within the period allowed by law, then in practice, though not in terms, cl. 8 is shown only to be capable of operation within the permitted period, and is, therefore, effective. The result depends on the various points I have already indicated and the fact that the settlor

G has chosen to make use of a series of provisions on which the so-called rule in Lassence v. Tierney (1) produces the result that the only circumstance in which there could be a total failure of the provisions in cl. 4, 5 and 6 is the failure of the daughter to have children who qualify under cl. 4. Once they have qualified under cl. 4 then, though cl. 5 and 6 may fail (and I assume for this purpose, as one must, that no question of perpetuities arises under H cl. 6), still the only effect of that failure would be to revive the original interest under cl. 4. If, on the other hand, there are never children under cl. 4 to take, then none of the other provisions of cl. 5 and 6 comes into operation at all and one passes, so to speak, straight from cl. 4 to cl. 8.

Counsel further says that the fact that cl. 8 opens with the phrase “upon the death of the survivor of the wife and the said daughter” shows that it is linked back to cl. 4, which opens with the phrase “from and after the death of the survivor,” and is not to be treated as part of the superimposed limitations which open with cl. 5, and that cl. 8, so to speak, is alternative to cl. 4, and, therefore, within the period. The argument has been further narrowed as the result of the argument in answer, which was no less brief and no less clear, and I am persuaded by it that ROMER, J., was right, for on this part of the case the learned judge said, after referring to the way in which the rule in Lassence v. Tierney (1) might work ([1950] 1 All E.R. 792):

"As a question of construction, however, I am of opinion that the word 'issue' in cl. 8 is referable exclusively to cl. 6 and was not intended to include children of the daughter. There is a clear distinction drawn in the settlement between children of the daughter and more remote issue. It is to the latter alone that the enjoyment of the capital was intended to pass, and it is with reference to them alone that the words 'vested interest' had previously been used. Accordingly, in my judgment, the event referred to in cl. 8 is the event of the daughter dying without leaving grandchildren or remoter issue who attain a vested interest under cl. 6."

In my judgment, that is correct, and for the reasons which the learned judge gives. If that is correct, it seems to me, and, indeed, counsel for the second defendant concedes, the foundation of his argument has gone.

I should, I think, be merely repeating what fell from the learned judge if I went more elaborately into this matter. It is sufficient for me to say that when in this clause the settlor speaks of the daughter dying without leaving issue who attain a vested interest, it seems to me he is referring, as the learned judge said, to the provisions of cl. 6 in which, for the first time, one finds a reference to taking a vested interest. It seems to me that, by using that language, the settlor is in effect saying: "in the event of the daughter dying without leaving issue who, as provided by cl. 6 of the settlement, attain an indefeasibly vested interest under that clause." I think it must mean that. I agree that it is no answer and is not fair to the argument of counsel for the second defendant to say that "issue" is confined to or means children. I agree that the language covers children and remoter issue, but, if he is right, the only practical effect it can have is as though "children" were written for "issue." I think the testator has shown that he knows what "issue" means—in other words, that the argument counsel used earlier in the case may now be turned somewhat against him. By this formula the settlor has indicated plainly that he is referring to the failure of the events for which he has provided in cl. 6, and I think that the opening language of cl. 8, though not particularly apposite in the circumstances, does not prevent cl. 8 being still part of what, after all, are the engrafted trusts—part of the provisions which the settlor is making for disposing of his corpus after the children's life interests, and are not intended to be alternative, so to speak, to cl. 4. For these reasons, I think the learned judge rightly determined this point and that the declaration he made was right.

COHEN, L.J.: I agree.

SINGLETON, L.J.: I agree.

Appeal dismissed. Costs of all parties as between solicitor and client to be paid out of the settled fund.

Solicitors: Stephenson, Harwood & Tatham (for the second defendant); W. R. Bennett & Co. (for the first defendant).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

KENWARD v. KENWARD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., Bucknill and Denning, L.JJ.), June 6, 7, 8, 1950.]

Nullity—Conflict of laws—Marriage of British subject in Russia—Validity—Requirements of Soviet law not observed—No intention by Soviet officials that ceremony should be effective marriage—Mistake—No right to consortium—Wife forbidden to leave Russia—Avoidance for failure of condition.

The husband, while serving in the Royal Navy, met his wife, a Russian subject, at Archangel, and they agreed to marry with the intention of living together in England. On Oct. 16, 1945, they went through a ceremony of marriage before a Russian official. No consent to the marriage was asked for or given, the parties did not make the declarations, and the official did not ask the questions, required by the Soviet Marriage Code, but a marriage certificate was issued and the marriage was registered. Two days later the husband left Russia. In April, 1947, marriages between Russian citizens and foreigners were forbidden, and the Russian government prevented the parties from making a matrimonial home together by refusing to allow the wife to leave Russia or to permit the husband to go there. It was contended on behalf of the husband (i) that the marriage was void or voidable because of the failure to comply with the lex loci celebrationis; (ii) that there was a want of consent because the parties entered into the marriage in the mistaken belief that the administrative Soviet practice of granting permission to wives of foreigners to leave the Soviet Union with their husbands would continue as it existed before the marriage or that the husband would be permitted to go and see his wife; (iii) that under English law marriage imposed a duty on the spouses to live together, whereas the Russian code did not impose such duty, and, therefore, the marriage did not comply with the essentials of marriage as understood by English law; and (iv) that the subsequent Russian government ban preventing the spouses from living together frustrated the marriage. HODSON, J., held that the marriage had not been invalidated for want of formalities. The husband appealed.

HELD: (i) several formalities essential to a valid marriage in Russia had not been observed, and, as in the circumstances it appeared clear that the Soviet officials did not intend the ceremony to be an effective and valid marriage and so intentionally omitted to comply with those formalities and to fulfil other requirements of the Code, the absence of the formalities resulted in the marriage not conforming with the lex loci celebrationis and so being invalid.

Decision of HODSON, J. ([1949] 2 All E.R. 959), reversed on this point.

(ii) although the Soviet Code laid down that the keeping of a common matrimonial home should be fixed by mutual agreement and that a change of residence by one spouse did not impose a duty on the other to follow, there was no evidence to support the proposition that the present marriage according to the law laid down by the Russian courts involved so great a denial of the elementary principle of consortium as would justify the English court in saying that it was no marriage at all.

(iii) there was no ground for holding that the parties married under a mistake because they believed that the Soviet practice of granting permission to wives of foreigners to leave Russia would continue to exist as it had existed before the marriage took place, because such beliefs and hopes about the future conduct of the Soviet government could not be classified as mistakes of fact or mistakes as to the nature of the transaction into which the parties were entering.

Decision of HODSON, J. ([1949] 2 All E.R. 959), affirmed on this point.

Per DENNING, L.J.: assuming that the marriage was not invalid for want of formalities, it was voidable by reason of a condition that had failed. A marriage of persons with different domicils might be voidable for failure of a condition imported by the personal law of one of the parties if they married on the basis of that law. It was a condition of the marriage in dispute that the parties should be allowed to live together. That condition had been destroyed by the subsequent action of the Soviet government, and, consequently, as an essential condition of the marriage had failed, the marriage was voidable in the English court on that ground.

[AS TO THE GENERAL PRINCIPLES OF VALIDITY OF MARRIAGE IN ENGLISH LAW, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 6, pp. 283-294, paras. 340-348; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 11, pp. 417-420, Nos. 835-864 and Digest Supp. and 2nd Digest Supp.]

APPEAL by the husband from a decision of HODSON, J., dated Nov. 9, 1949, refusing a declaration that his marriage contracted in October, 1945, in Archangel with a Russian citizen was void or voidable on the ground that the essential formalities for a valid marriage required under Soviet law had not been fulfilled, or, alternatively, that the marriage was invalidated for want of consent.

Cases referred to:

- (1) Nachimson v. Nachimson, [1930] P. 217; 99 L.J.P. 104; 143 L.T. 254; 94 J.P. 211; Digest Supp.
- (2) Warrender v. Warrender, (1835), 2 Cl. & Fin. 488; 6 E.R. 1239; 11 Digest 333, 218.
- (3) Smith v. Brown, (1705), 2 Salk. 666; 91 E.R. 566; 43 Digest 16, 86.
- (4) Baindail (otherwise Lawson) v. Baindail, [1946] 1 All E.R. 342; [1946] P. 122; 115 L.J.P. 65; 174 L.T. 320; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) Re Bethell, (1888), 38 Ch.D. 220; 57 L.J.Ch. 487; 58 L.T. 674; 11 Digest 413, 801.
- (6) Connolly v. Woolrich and Johnson, (1867), 11 L.C.J. 197; 3 C.L.J.N.S. 14; 11 Digest 328, 156 ii.

Idelson, K.C., and Simon for the husband.

The wife did not appear.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSLED, M.R.: This appeal raises matters of some little importance. Plainly they are matters of the utmost importance to the parties concerned, but the significance of the appeal may well be said to go beyond that which attaches to the individual characters in the case. The appeal arises out of one of a number of petitions that came before HODSON, J., all being petitions of British subjects who, during short sojourns in the dominions of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, entered into transactions of the nature of marriages with Russian women. It subsequently appeared that the authorities in Russia were unwilling either, on the one hand, to allow the wives to leave the Union and join their husbands, or, on the other hand, to permit the husbands to re-visit Russia. The husbands, therefore, found themselves, if the marriages were valid marriages, in the unhappy position of being, so far as can be seen, permanently deprived of any opportunity for further consortium with the women of their choice, but at the same time remaining in England with the status of married men and, therefore, unable to marry anyone else. In his judgment HODSON, J., noted that the conduct of the authorities in Russia might well be said to have shocked the conscience of civilised humanity, and no one approaching these cases can fail to be most sensible of sympathy for the persons concerned, but it has been said by a distinguished judge that it is no part of the judicial function to indulge in unregulated benevolence, and the question, therefore, in this case, as in the other cases which came at the same time before HODSON, J., is whether the husband can make good the case he has set forth to make and persuade this court to declare either that the so-called marriage was a nullity or that it should be dissolved.

In October, 1945, the husband was serving in the Royal Navy, and, as one of a party of two hundred sailors, he found himself in Archangel. He met there a woman who is the respondent to his petition and whose name is Nina Nikolaevna. After they had been acquainted for some time they came to the conclusion that they would like to be married. It is, I think, clear from the evidence that it was in the mind of the wife that, if she were married, she would, hostilities being ended, be able to leave Russia and live with her husband in England. There are some grounds for supposing that she was afraid that she might suffer at the hands of her fellow citizens as a result of the fact that she had associated with a British sailor in Archangel. However, apparently she took the lead in the proceedings which culminated at 9.30 p.m. on Oct. 16, 1945, in the ceremony or formality which I have described as being the marriage with which this petition is concerned.

It is right to say (because in justice both to the husband and the wife there should be no suggestion to the contrary) that no intimacy had occurred between them before the marriage, but for that night and the night of Oct. 17, they did sleep together in Archangel. Neither could speak, with any kind of fluency, the language of the other, but, as I have already said, the arrangements for the so-called marriage were largely undertaken by the wife. The evidence shows that she approached the official who conducted the marriage ceremony in Russia on a number of occasions. It is apparent from what the husband has said that some difficulty was encountered, and I think it fair to assume that the official, who was a woman, was seeking and taking instructions from higher authority. Eventually, the official notified the wife that, if she and the husband attended on Oct. 16, the ceremony would be performed. On Oct. 18 the husband rejoined his ship and shortly afterwards he sailed from Archangel. From that day to this he has never seen the wife. It appears from the evidence that the wife was genuinely anxious to join him. She wrote him letters in affectionate terms. When he got home and was discharged from the service he approached the Soviet Embassy officials in England and took such other steps as he could to see whether the wife would be allowed to come to England. She herself appears to have visited an institution, which possesses the cryptic initials of O.V.I.R. We know nothing of its composition or its duties, but it appears to have given her short shrift. It eventually told her not to come again and made it plain to her that she should not have gone through this form of marriage, and that no notice whatever would be taken of her requests to be allowed to leave Russia and join the husband. It has been made equally plain to the husband that he would not be permitted to re-enter Russia. Finally, there was evidence from an official of the Foreign Office from which we can properly take it as proved that the British government themselves intervened, and that, in the view of the Foreign Secretary, there is no hope of the Soviet authorities resiling in any way from the attitude which they have adopted.

On those facts various points have been submitted to us. In the first place, it was submitted here and in the court below that there was an absence of compliance with the necessary form which was required according to the law of Russia, the lex loci celebrationis, for a valid marriage in that country. Secondly, it was said that there was an absence of any such consent on the part of the two parties to this ceremony of marriage as to suffice to create the status of marriage. Both these arguments were rejected by HODSON, J. It had been intimated to him that other grounds might be available, though they were not taken. One ground was that, apart altogether from the question of formalities and consent, there was still no marriage, because, when regard is had to the local law of Russia, the union created, assuming it was effective at all, by the ceremony on Oct. 16, though called a marriage, did not satisfy the essential requirements of marriage as understood in these courts. To that argument the judge thought Nachimson v. Nachimson (1) was an answer. The second point intimated to the judge, but also not taken, was that the subsequent actions of the Soviet authorities were such that the marriage must be regarded as having been frustrated. That argument also the judge rejected, stating that there was no instance in the books of the doctrine of frustration ever having been applied to marriage as distinct from a marriage contract. Counsel for the husband asked to be given leave to put both those two latter points in addition to the ones debated before HODSON, J., and in the circumstances we gave him leave to do so.

I will deal with all these matters, but, anticipating at this stage the conclusion which I have reached, I am prepared to hold that, in all the circumstances, there was here no marriage. It is plain—and I shall develop the point presently—that all the formalities required by the law of Russia were not complied with. For my part I should be inclined to think that those matters of themselves might not go sufficiently to the root of the matter to enable the marriage to be challenged, assuming it to be open to challenge having regard to other parts of the Code. It is, however, not merely a matter of failure to comply with certain formal requirements of the Russian Marriage Code. It is necessary to judge, as it seems to me, whether or not that failure was essential by considering it in the light of other facts and (again I am anticipating my conclusion) two other very important facts in particular. The first is that, not long after this so-called marriage had occurred, the law of Russia was amended by adding a provision to the Code that all marriages between Russian citizens and foreigners were altogether forbidden. Secondly, the Russian authorities from the first moment when they were approached made it as plain as human agency can make it that, in no circumstances whatever, would they permit the two parties to this so-called marriage to rejoin each other. When those two matters are added to the absence of formalities, the inference I draw is that the authorities responsible in this case, though they eventually, if somewhat casually, carried through the necessary ceremony on Oct. 16, never intended or thought or supposed that the transaction would ever have effective form or consequence. In other words, the subsequent actions of the authorities seem to me to give the absence of formalities an importance which they might otherwise not possess.

At this stage, I should refer to the necessary Russian decrees. They are set out at length in the judgment of HODSON, J., and I should be taking up time unnecessarily if I read them again. The vital sections of the Code are s. 132 and s. 133 as amended. The substance of them is this. Section 132 puts on the parties intending to marry the obligation to subscribe to certain declarations as to the state of their health, physical and mental, and also whether they have been previously married, and so on. Section 133 imposes on the celebrating official or registrar the duty of reading to the happy pair the appropriate extracts from the Code, which are intended, among other things, to warn them of the grave consequences of making false declarations and also of the limits of the rights to consortium and other rights which a Russian marriage imposes on those who marry in Russia. By the amended provisions of s. 133 it is also incumbent on the registrar to enter on the passports of both parties an entry to the effect that they are married. The sections of the Code which the registrar has to read include those which state what are the essential requisites for a valid marriage in Russian law. They include mutual consent, the reaching of marriageable age, and matters of that kind. There are further provisions of the Code to which I must refer a little more fully, namely, s. 1 and s. 2. In Russia marriages are purely civil transactions, having no religious significance. Therefore, it is provided, first, that registration is the essential condition of marriage, and, secondly, that registration is "indisputable evidence of the existence of a marriage." Section 1 provides:

"Registration of marriage is established in State and social interests and also with the purpose of protecting the person and property, rights and interests of the spouses and the children. Only registered marriage creates the rights and duties of the spouses provided for by the present Code."

By s. 2:

"The registration of marriage in the departments of civil status is an undisputable evidence of the existence of a marriage."

I have referred to s. 1 because, in considering what was in the minds of those who played a part in the so-called marriage of these two persons, it is, I think, significant that the whole law of marriage in Russia opens with this phrase:

"Registration of marriage is established in State and social interests and also with the purpose of protecting the person and property, rights and interests of the spouses and the children."

It will be convenient that I should also here add a reference to two other sections which played some part in the debate. The first is s. 7 which is not very important except that it shows the emphasis which the new order in Russia lays on the equality of the sexes. Either of the two spouses may as his or her married name choose his or her existing name or any other name. Section 9 is more important:

"Both the spouses have complete freedom in the choice of occupation and professions. The order of keeping the common household is fixed by mutual agreement of the spouses. A change in place of residence of one of the spouses does not impose on the other a duty to follow the one."

In a book produced in court containing these various sections, there is a note to the effect that in 1931 there was a decision of the Supreme Court of the Union, the Civil Cassation Collegium of the Supreme Court of R.S.F.S.R., which is alleged to have laid down that "marriage does not impose on the spouses the duty of living together." I have referred to s. 9 and that decision because they play an important part in the argument, and I shall return to them. Having read the laws laying down the necessary formalities, it is right that I should state plainly that those formalities in certain respects were not complied with in this case. No declarations were called for from either of the spouses in accordance with s. 132, stating what was their condition of mind and body, whether they had been married before, and so forth. Equally, the registrar forbore to read to the parties any of the relevant parts of s. 4, s. 5 and s. 6 of the Code as she was enjoined to do by s. 133. Finally, though she appears to have had in her possession at one time the English and Russian passports of the husband, she also forebore, contrary to the provisions of s. 133 (1), to make any entry therein of the marriage ceremony or the marriage that she had purported to celebrate. The transaction of the marriage ceremony took a very short time. Although allowance must be made for the fact that the husband's knowledge of the Russian tongue was extremely imperfect, I see no reason why his evidence should not be accepted when he described the ceremony. He said that they arrived at 9.30 p.m., and that the only other person present was the young woman behind the desk whom I have described, I hope correctly, as the registrar. The wife opened the conversation by saying that they had come along as arranged and that the young woman knew all about it. The young woman, says the husband, "asked for my British passport and my Russian passport, which I handed over." Then:

"(Q.) Can you remember anything else being said? (A.) No, I do not remember anything else being said except that after she had written out the document she wished us luck, apparently, and we went on our way . . . I cannot recollect her signing anything."

Then he said he did not sign anything, but they did get a certificate. That was the whole thing. It took, apparently, about five minutes, and no questions were asked of the parties about their state of health, family, and so on, and there were no instructions in the proper way of living as married people according to the laws of Russia.

Those are all the facts. On them counsel for the husband argued that there was here so great a failure to comply with the formalities that the court should say that there was no marriage as provided by the local Russian law. My own conclusion is that these matters, when taken with others, are sufficient to produce the result that we can say here that there was no marriage. It will, however, be convenient, before I state my conclusions a little more precisely on that point and also deal particularly with the provision of s. 2 that the registration should be "indisputable" evidence of the existence of a marriage, that I should deal with the other arguments out of respect to them, though, because I do not accept them, I shall not deal with them very fully.

First, let me take this matter of no consent. HODSON, J., dealt with that by saying that he thought it was open to the husband to argue the point of no consent on the footing that the relevant law to be applied in judging whether or not there was consent on his part was English law, and I assume that that is correct. Then the judge goes on—as I have said, there were several petitioners before him—to say ([1949] 2 All E.R. 963):

" . . . the law of England, therefore, applies to the question whether or not they consented to their marriages, and the section of the Russian Code as to the conclusiveness of registration does not shut the door against argument directed to want of consent. It is clear that, if there is a mistake as to the identity of the person with whom the contract is made or an erroneous belief as to the ceremony—for example, a belief that the ceremony was one of betrothal, not of marriage—the marriage is void for want of consent. No such mistake can be put forward here, but it is said that in these four cases the marriages were entered into in the mistaken belief: (a) That the administrative Soviet practice of granting permission to wives of foreigners to leave the Soviet Union with their husbands would continue as it had done before the marriages took place; (b) that they would be permitted to go and see their wives after they had parted from them; and (c) that the marriages entered into imposed a duty on the spouses to live together, whereas in each case, in fact, by s. 9 of the Code no such duty was imposed on them."

A little later on he says (ibid., 963):

"There is no authority for introducing into the law of England mistakes of this kind invalidating marriage."

I agree. I cannot see myself that there was here so great, so fundamental a mistake as to the essentials of this transaction that the court would be justified in saying that the transaction had no binding or operative effect on the husband whatever. These beliefs and hopes about the future conduct of the Soviet government were merely beliefs and hopes. They cannot be classified as mistakes of fact or mistakes as to the nature of the transaction into which the husband was entering. I think the main idea in the mind of both parties was that they would live together in the way, according to the ordinary acceptance of humanity, that husbands and wives do live together. That fact, I think, is not affected by the circumstance that in Russia, if they chose to live there (which they did not contemplate in any circumstances), one party or the other could not have obtained relief in the courts for reasons or on grounds which could give a right to relief in these courts. I, therefore, leave that point.

It is sufficient for me to say that I entirely agree with and accept the conclusion of HODSON, J.

A I will now pass to the two points with which the judge did not deal or only dealt with summarily in the way I have earlier indicated. I will deal with them in the order in which counsel for the husband argued them. In formulating his first point he said: "Where a British subject domiciled in England enters into a marriage abroad, even though both parties are capable of marrying each other by their own personal laws, and even though the marriage complies quoad formalities with the local law, still the transaction is examinable in this court to ascertain if it also complies with the essentials of marriage as understood by the law of England." That is his first proposition, and I am prepared, for the purposes of argument at any rate, to accept it. In order to arrive at the conclusion sought, I think the argument eventually came down to this, B that the marriage here entered into did not comply with the essentials of marriage as understood by the English law because of the provisions of the Russian Code as regards consortium. I have already read s. 9 and the reference to the decision of the Civil Cassation Collegium, and, if I have understood the argument correctly, it is on that section and that decision that counsel for the husband has based this part of his case. I agree with him that the matter is not determined against him by the decision in Nachimson v. Nachimson (1). That was also a case of a Russian marriage, but was one of a marriage between two persons domiciled in Russia at the relevant date. The law as to dissolution of marriage in Russia appears to have been different in 1930 (when the case was decided) from what it is today. At that time, it appeared, the marriage could be dissolved by the simple expedient of one party stating in the form of C a declaration to the other: "This marriage is to end." It is, perhaps, not surprising that such a matrimonial system was found highly inconvenient in Russia and has been altered. Though marriages may be dissolved, as we understand, by the courts of Russia on any ground which the court thinks justifies the conclusion that the marriage has become distorted, nevertheless, in order to have the marriage dissolved a decree of the court is required. D E The making of a marriage was done in much the same way as now, that is to say, by appearing before a registrar. In Nachimson v. Nachimson (1) the two Russian parties having been married by going before a registrar in much the same way as the present husband, having afterwards left for Paris, and having ceased to hold the affection for each other that they had previously possessed, one of the parties, at the Soviet Consulate in Paris, wrote out a declaration F stating that the marriage was at an end. The question before the court in Nachimson v. Nachimson (1) was in the form of a Special Case: Had the petition and the respondent ever been husband and wife? If yea, was the marriage dissolved on the day on which the declaration was executed in Paris? The relevance of the case here is on the main question: Had the petitioner and respondent ever been husband and wife? G HILL, J., was of opinion that a negative answer should be given to that question on the ground that, since, according to the English conception of marriage, marriage is a voluntary union for life of one man and one woman to the exclusion of all others, the fact that the Nachimson marriage was dissoluble in so cavalier and perfunctory a manner meant that it failed to satisfy the English definition. This court came to a different conclusion. In the opinion of the Court of Appeal, the fact that a marriage could be dissolved easily according to the local law of the country H which had jurisdiction to dissolve it had nothing to do with whether the marriage had been validly created in the first instance. After all, in England it is now not so difficult in certain circumstances to dissolve a marriage. That fact does not alter the fundamental conception that marriage still is a union for life of one man and one woman to the exclusion of all others. The parties enter into matrimony in that state of mind. In the course of their judgments, all the judges referred to the well-known passage from LORD

BROUGHAM's opinion in Warrender v. Warrender (2). I will refer to a sentence from it which I take from the judgment of ROMER, L.J. ([1930] P. 236), because it is significant on another aspect of this case. In Warrender v. Warrender (2) the Scottish court had to consider whether they could entertain a suit to dissolve a marriage entered into in England between a domiciled Scotsman and a domiciled Englishwoman, so that the case obviously has a relevance to the present case. LORD BROUGHAM uses general terms in thus expressing his opinion (2 Cl. & Fin. 530):

"This marriage, good by the laws of one country, is held good in all others where the question of its validity may arise. For the question always must be, Did the parties intend to contract marriage? And if they did that which in the place they were in is deemed a marriage, they cannot reasonably, or sensibly, or safely, be considered otherwise than as intending a marriage contract. The laws of each nation lay down the forms and solemnities, a compliance with which shall be deemed the only criterion of the intention to enter into the contract."

Counsel for the husband was entitled to point out that the decision in Nachimson v. Nachimson (1) does not determine the question whether, though the form was good, if the marriage nevertheless on other grounds does not satisfy the requirements of the English conception of marriage it will be upheld in these courts. The court decided that simplicity in dissolubility does not invalidate the existence of the marriage. If counsel for the husband is entitled to say that the English conception of marriage involves necessarily the conception of the mutual rights and obligations of consortium, and if the so-called Russian marriage denies those rights and obligations, then, as he said, it is for a domiciled Englishman no more a marriage, whatever you may call it, than would be a polygamous marriage.

I do not think that Nachimson v. Nachimson (1) is an answer to this point. On the other hand, it seems to me the argument on this part of the case places a greater emphasis than it will bear on the language which I have read from s. 9 of the Code and the somewhat cryptic note of the decision of the Supreme Court of Russia. The last sentence of s. 9, which was much pressed by counsel for the husband, is:

"A change in place of residence of one of the spouses does not impose on the other a duty to follow the one."

That sentence immediately follows this sentence:

"The order of keeping the common household is fixed by mutual agreement of the spouses."

I should find it difficult to say with any confidence that the two sentences read together amount to anything substantially very different from the law of England as it is today as regards residence. It is true that the decision of the Supreme Court of Russia, if it means what the sentence at first sight seems to suggest, goes a good deal further: "Marriage does not impose on the spouses a duty of living together." What exactly does that mean? We have no evidence as to the facts of the case or any explanation of what the decision really lays down. The witness Wolff was only able to say when the case was brought to his attention: "I accept the reference." I am unable to derive from that brief note a proposition anything like sufficient to support the view that the husband's marriage, according to the law as laid down by the courts of Russia, involves so great a denial of the elementary principles of consortium as would justify this court in saying that on that ground it is no marriage at all. I, therefore, cannot accept the first of the points made for the husband.

As to the question of frustration, there is, I think, at first sight a considerable attraction in the argument. Whatever may have been in the mind of any of the persons who had any part in this so-called marriage on Oct. 16, 1945, the subsequent ban of the Soviet authorities renders it difficult to refute the proposition as an ordinary matter of language that this marriage has been frustrated, by which I mean that there is no possibility now of any practicable effect being given to it. As on another part of the case counsel for the husband adopted as part of his own argument certain passages from an earlier number of the LAW QUARTERLY REVIEW, it may not be inapposite to note that in the course of a reference to this very case, the editor or commentator says (April, 1950, p. 157):

"The learned judge [HODSON, J.] also held that the doctrine of frustration had never been applied to the status of marriage as opposed to a contract of marriage: 'to such a status the doctrine of frustration has no application.' If the world continues in its present unhappy state it may be become necessary for the law to accept such a doctrine because, without palliating the position assumed by the U.S.S.R., we must recognise that there are other governments, such as the United States, which, in certain circumstances, refuse to admit the foreign wives of their citizens. As these marriages have been frustrated in fact it is arguable that they should also be held to have been frustrated in law."

I am far from saying that any of those sentences are more persuasive than any of the arguments of counsel for the husband, but the point is obviously one of some significance today. As that reference indicates, it would be wrong, and, indeed, unjust to the Soviet authorities, to suppose that what they have done in this case is something the like of which is to be found nowhere else in the world.

It is unnecessary for the reasons I have indicated for me to express any final conclusion on this matter of frustration. As it has been argued, and as it is important, I think I should say just a word or two about the character of the argument for the husband. So far as its novelty is concerned, it is said that that is attributable to the history of our marriage law—for one thing, to the old ecclesiastical notion that marriage is a sacrament indissoluble in all circumstances; for another, to the fact that the doctrine of frustration as applied in a nexus, contractual or otherwise, is itself a recent innovation; and, thirdly, that in any case the doctrine, when applied to marriages, would in any case be of very limited scope and would necessarily require a condition of things in which none of the rights and obligations of the marriage was capable of continuing. So counsel for the husband formulated his case in language which I hope I have correctly noted as follows: "If, owing to the occurrence of an irresistible and extraneous event, neither party can thenceforward enjoy any of the rights or fulfil any of the obligations of the marriage state, the marriage is frustrated, and the court in the interests of common-sense and justice will declare that the marriage has terminated on the occurrence of that event." I record that argument as we have had the advantage of hearing it (and it may be necessary hereafter for a court to pronounce finally on it), but I think there are difficulties about it. I am not satisfied that a case such as Smith v. Brown (3) about slaves forms a true analogy. I think that even the careful language chosen by counsel for the husband might lead to some remarkable consequences. How is the court to decide whether the event which has happened is not only extraneous but irresistible? If the doctrine is to be applied to marriages between domiciled Englishmen and foreigners, there is no reason why it should stop there and should not apply to marriages between two domiciled English persons. If the latter, then it would appear to introduce a ground for dissolution of marriage which is not found in the statute. I will say no more about it.

I will come back to the first ground which I stated and give my reasons more precisely for concluding, as I do, that, in the light of all the facts in this case, the failure to comply with the formalities laid down in the sections of the Russian Code was more than incidental, but that it was essential and shows as a matter of necessary inference that the officials who were concerned in this matter did not themselves regard this marriage as being more than a casual affair, not in the least likely to last more than some forty-eight hours, and that it was for that reason they thought that there was no point in writing entries in the passports and reading extracts from the Russian Code or asking questions as to whether the husband had at any time been a lunatic or previously married. A

The first question (and it is on this matter that I venture to form a different view from HODSON, J.) is what is the effect of s. 2 of the Code which states that registration is indisputable evidence of the existence of a marriage? HODSON, J., having observed on the absence of compliance with the statutory requirements, said ([1949] 2 All E.R. 962):

"This opinion [i.e., the opinion mentioned hereafter] assuming its authoritativeness, does not, to my mind, assist the parties to the marriage or either of them to dispute the existence of a registered marriage, since such dispute is forbidden to them by the terms of s. 2 of the law of 1926. I think this section is conclusive against the argument directed against the validity of the act of registration and it is irrelevant that the registrars omitted to perform some of the duties imposed on them by the Code as a preliminary to the registration itself. The essential feature existed that prior to the registration there was, subject to the argument with which I will deal hereafter regarding 'mutual consent to marry.' The registration even if no more than a ministerial act, is conclusive as between the parties, at any rate as to matters of form." B

With all respect to the judge, I do not accept that view, and it does not seem to me to be in accordance with the evidence and the opinion expressed by Mr. Wolff, the expert witness. It would, I think, be very surprising if it were so. As I have already said, there are certain essential requirements to a valid marriage in Russia. One is that the parties are not already married to somebody else. It would be obvious, that if, in fact, it turned out that one of the parties was already married, the appropriate proceedings could then be taken to set aside the certificate which had been given by the registrar. On other grounds relative to the requirements of a valid marriage, I should suppose that the court, on an appropriate application, could, if necessary, declare the marriage invalid notwithstanding the registration. That natural assumption seems to me to be in accordance with the evidence. Mr Wolff was asked this question: C
"I want to ask you about that word 'indisputable.' I have before me an official publication of the Commissar of Justice in R.S.F.S.R.", and that was handed up. The witness's answer is this: "The pronouncement comes from the first department of the Ministry of Justice, which department was entitled to give comments on the law, and explanations of the law. Mr. Idelson directs my attention to the explanation of this law which was given by this department. Here one sees that s. 2 of the Code of Marriage, Family and Guardianship Laws must be understood in this sense, that the registration of a marriage for the inscription of civil status is indisputable evidence of the existence of the marriage, and can be upset only in a court of law. That is the first, and the second thing is that the department established for the drafting of the laws and the codification of the laws states that the disputing of a registered and of an unregistered marriage can take place in a law court at the demand of all interested State bodies." Then this question is put: "Mr. Wolff, is it fair to sum up this authoritative interpretation of the law in this way—that a certificate of registration is proof and indisputable proof as the law says, and if anyone wishes to attack its validity the doors of the court are not closed to him?" and he says: "That is so." Later, HODSON, J., in reference to the question what the registrar should have done and did not do, asked this D
E
F
G
H

question: "You are not trying to suggest, are you, that, if the registrar omits to ask some necessary questions, this affects the registration and the whole thing is invalid? (A.) On the contrary—" Then the witness is interrupted and HODSON, J., says: "I did not think it was. I suppose the same situation might arise as we are familiar with in this country. For example, supposing children marry under age without the consent of their parents, once they are married it cannot be undone. (A.) I go further with regard to the formalities. If something is omitted and nobody objects, it can be rectified by the registrar himself, but if it goes to the root of the matter it can go to the court like any other question."

I take that evidence to mean that the witness is supporting the opinion of the commissar (referred to by HODSON, J.), that, though for the purpose of ordinary human commerce the production of a certificate is conclusive evidence of the marriage as stated, it does not prevent either party to the marriage or some other interested party, such as the State, going to the court and saying: "This certificate was wrongly given and must be set aside." The witness clearly points out that such a result would only be obtained, where certain formalities had been omitted, if the omission went to the root of the matter. That I take as the premise upon which I shall proceed, and the question, therefore, is briefly in the circumstances of this case—and I emphasise that phrase—was the omission here essential? Did it go to the root of the matter? At one time in the argument it was suggested that there was at any rate a discretion in this court whether we should accept the validity of a foreign marriage at all as a matter of comity; but, having regard to the passage in LORD BROUGHAM's speech in Warrender v. Warrender (2) which I have already read, I do not think it is open to this court to say that the conduct of the Soviet authorities is such that we are not compelled by comity or by any other reason to accept the validity of a marriage if it was validly effected according to the local law. It is, therefore, a matter of essential formality. It is agreed that the form laid down was not adhered to. It is quite true that on the evidence it would not have made any difference, so far as I can see, to the conduct of these two parties if the registrar had required the husband to state whether he had ever had venereal disease, or whether there was insanity or tuberculosis in the family, or whether he had been married to somebody else, and, if so, how many children he had had, nor would it have impressed the mind of the husband, who would not have understood a word of what was said, if the registrar had read out s. 4, s. 5 and s. 6 of the Code. I attach more importance to the question of the entry on the passport, because once that entry was made it would be impossible for the husband, if he had been so minded, to conceal the fact that he had been married. Although it is true that the amended section requires the entry after the ceremony, still the fact that the entry was not made is one of the points which seems of real significance as throwing light on the question what view the Soviet authorities were taking of this so-called marriage. They deliberately forebore to do what they ought to have done and failed to make the entry which would have made plain to the world that the husband had married the wife.

The next thing that is important, and, to my mind, is of great significance, is that the evidence shows that from the start, as soon as the wife went to this mystical O.V.I.R. and made inquiry, and as soon as the husband made application through the Soviet Consulate Service, it was made plain that, in no circumstances whatever, would any facilities be given for the wife to join the husband or for him to join her. Nothing could be plainer than that. I draw the inference that that was the intention from the beginning. She had made the application to the registrar. Apparently, it was delayed and put off until she was told that, if they came on the evening of the following day, the ceremony would be performed, that is to say, on Oct. 16. It must have been known to the Russian authorities that the British ship would sail from Archangel on Oct. 18. They must have realised that the sailors would then leave Russia. It seems to me plain from the whole nature of the proceedings that the authorities were taking the view: Well, we can allow them to go through the ceremony. Its practical effect will not be a union for life, but it will enable them to spend two nights together in Archangel. At that time or not very long afterwards, the law was amended, and it became part of the municipal law of Russia that marriages between citizens of the R.S.F.S.R. and foreigners were prohibited. It was stated that that prohibition came into effect on Apr. 1, 1947, which is eighteen months after this transaction. I take the view that we should infer that the Soviet authorities from the first took the view that marriages between British sailors and Russian girls were not marriages to which the smallest regard would thereafter be paid. If that is right, then, the absence of formalities and particularly the absence of any entry on the passport of the husband has so great a significance that I think they go to "the root of the matter" in the language of the expert witness. I conclude, therefore, that this so-called marriage was never a marriage which this court would recognise because it never conformed to the lex loci celebrationis. I would, therefore, allow the appeal and make a declaration according to the first prayer of the petition.

BUCKNILL, L.J.: I agree that the appeal should be allowed for the reasons given by SIR RAYMOND EVERSHED, M.R., and I will only add a few words in deference to the trial judge from whose views we are differing. In the first place, it is clear that, while the English courts recognise a foreign marriage, at the same time they scrutinise with care such a marriage, especially when one of the parties is a British subject domiciled and resident in this country. It is proper in those circumstances that the court should be satisfied that all the observances laid down by the foreign State as essential to create a valid marriage have been fulfilled. In the present case it is clear that nothing took place between the husband and the Russian girl which would constitute a marriage according to English law. I may just refer very shortly to what actually happened on Oct. 16, 1945, when they attended at the registry office. There was a young woman behind the desk. No one else was present. They said: "We have come along to get married." The young woman said she knew everything about it. She asked the husband for his British passport and his Russian passport. He handed them over. The woman then wrote out a document and wished them luck, and they went away. She did not ask the husband or the wife any questions. She did not ask either of them to sign the register, and she did not write anything on his passport. Proceedings of such a kind do not, in my opinion, amount to a valid marriage according to English law, and the question arises whether it was a valid marriage according to Russian law. It is clear, I think, from the evidence of the Russian legal expert that since 1926 the Russian government had intended to tighten up the essentials of a valid marriage. They intended to do that in the interests of the State and of society as a whole as well as in those of the parties. The Code, accordingly, laid great stress on registration. I think that "indisputable" does not mean indefeasible. It merely means that, prima facie, the document proves what is stated therein. It does not debar anyone from raising the point in a court of law that what is described as a marriage in the certificate was, in fact, not a valid marriage. For instance, the parties may have been incapable of contracting marriage. The Russian law also laid down strict rules as to what was to be done before the certificate was issued. The parties were to be questioned. Very sensible questions were to be put to them, not only whether they had been married or were married or what children they had, but whether they had ever suffered from venereal disease and whether they were, or had been, mentally deficient or lunatic. Not only were those questions to be asked, but the parties were to be told that it was a criminal offence not to answer them correctly. They were to sign the register and, what seems to me also important, a copy of the register was to be made on the parties' passports so that wherever they went their passports would show that they were married. In fact, none of those things was done on this occasion, I think these rules and conditions are the essential requisites of a valid marriage according to Russian law. I do not think that they were unessential and that the only essential thing was that the parties before they went to the registrar should have consented to marry.

A It is clear that difficulties had arisen in the mind of the young woman who presided over this office whether a British sailor could marry a Russian girl, and the matter was put off from time to time and higher authorities were consulted. In face of the difficulty which had arisen, none of those essential requisites was complied with, and the Russian government then refused the so-called wife permission to join her husband. The conclusion which I draw is that the Russian officials in charge of the marriage registry at Archangel
B did not intend that these two people should contract a valid marriage, and it is for that reason that the Russian government is refusing to allow them any opportunity of coming together. It seems to me a strange state of things if proceedings which do not comply with the requisites of a valid marriage according to Russian law, should be regarded as a valid marriage binding on this young man in England, and that he should be tied for the rest of his life
C to somebody whom he is unable to see by the law of Russia and who is only a wife in name. I should be sorry to have to subscribe to such a doctrine. I think, for the reasons which SIR RAYMOND EVERSHED, M.R., has given, that this court is justified in declaring that this was no valid marriage, and that the husband is entitled to the declaration for which he asks.

D DENNING, L.J.: I do not differ from the views of my brethren that this marriage lacked some essential formalities, but I prefer to rest my opinion on a different ground. Some of these Russian marriages may not be invalid for want of formalities, and I am prepared to assume that this marriage is not invalid on that ground. Nevertheless, I think it is voidable by our law by reason of a condition which has failed. The English law of marriage is familiar with a condition which makes a marriage voidable. We grant a decree of nullity not only when a marriage is absolutely void from its inception, as in the case of a bigamous marriage, but also when it is only voidable for failure of some condition on which its validity depends. It may be voidable for some cause which is already existing at the date of the marriage, as when a husband has venereal disease of which he has not told his wife, or when a wife is pregnant by another man which she has not disclosed to her husband, or E it may be voidable for a cause which only comes into being after the marriage, as when one of the parties wilfully refuses to consummate the marriage, or, after repeated efforts, turns out to be impotent. So far as English marriages are concerned, when both the parties are domiciled here, the various conditions of validity are well known. Indeed, they are for the most part prescribed by statute and we have no authority for introducing any new condition
F by way of frustration. So far as foreign marriages are concerned, when both the parties are domiciled in the country where they are married, we only look to the validity of the marriage by the laws of that country, and do not import additional conditions from our own jurisprudence. If it is valid there, then, even if it lacks in our eyes some of the essentials of marriage, as, for instance, if it is potentially polygamous, we still regard it here, for many purposes, as G a valid marriage: Baindail (otherwise Lawson) v. Baindail (4).

H When we come to marriages between persons domiciled in different countries, the position is different. The formal validity of the marriage is, no doubt, governed by the law of the place where the marriage takes place, but the substantial validity of it may depend on the personal law of one or other of the parties to it, that is, on the law where he or she is domiciled. The personal law of one party may attach a fundamental condition to marriage which does not exist in the personal law of the other, and, if he marries on the basis that that fundamental condition will apply, then it would be most unjust to hold him to the marriage after the condition has been broken or has failed. It all depends on whether the parties marry on that basis or not. If they do, then you may find that a marriage, although valid by the local law, is voidable by reason of a condition imported by the personal law of one of the parties.

I can best illustrate my meaning by marriages between a woman of a monogamous domicile and a man whose domicile is polygamous, and vice versa. When an Englishwoman marries a man of a polygamous race at a registry office in England, the substantial validity of the marriage as well as its formal validity depends on the personal law of the wife and not on the personal law of the husband. It is a condition of the marriage that it should be monogamous. Suppose that the couple afterwards go to live in the husband's homeland and he takes to himself another wife, as he may lawfully do there. The English wife cannot sue for divorce in England. She must bring a suit for divorce, as distinct from nullity, in his homeland because he is domiciled there, but she cannot succeed in it because polygamy is there permitted. Has she then no remedy? I say she clearly has a remedy in our courts. It was a condition of the marriage, imported by her personal law, that the man should not take to himself another wife during the lifetime of the first. When the man took a second wife, that condition was broken and the marriage was voidable at her instance in our courts for failure of the condition. She should get a decree of nullity. Now take a case where an Englishwoman domiciled here marries a man of a polygamous race in his homeland by the ceremonies of his country, well knowing that she is entering into a marriage that is potentially polygamous. The substantial validity of that marriage depends on the personal law of the husband and not on the personal law of the wife. The marriage is valid by the law of that country and is, I should have thought, valid here. There was no condition of the marriage that it should be monogamous. If he in his own country takes to himself another wife, the English wife cannot complain. She could not ask in these courts for the marriage to be avoided.

Re Bethell (5) supports the view that the substantial validity of a marriage may depend on the personal law of one of the parties to it, but I am not sure that the decision itself would be the same today. The case where a domiciled Englishman marries a woman of a polygamous race should, I think, be determined on the same principles as I have stated for the converse case. No differences of race or colour or religion entitle us to treat such a marriage on a different footing. If he marries a woman in her homeland by the ceremonies of her country, well knowing the kind of marriage into which he is entering, the substantial validity of the marriage, as well as its formal validity, should then depend on her personal law and not on his. The marriage is valid by the law of her country and should also for many purposes be regarded as valid here. It should not be treated as altogether invalid simply because it is potentially polygamous. If he has children by her they should be regarded as legitimate, and if he, during her lifetime, without dissolving the marriage, should come to England and go through a form of marriage here with another woman, the second marriage would be a nullity, because no one here can take to himself a second wife during the lifetime of the first: Connolly v. Woolrich (6) and Baindail (otherwise Lawson) v. Baindail (4).

These considerations lead me to the conclusion that a marriage may be voidable for failure of a condition imported by the personal law of one of the parties, if they married on the basis of that law. I turn, therefore, to this marriage in Russia between an English sailor and a Russian woman and ask myself: Was there any condition on which its validity depended? In my opinion, it was a condition of the marriage that the parties should be allowed to live together. The parties intended to come to England to live, and in England the right to matrimonial consortium is an essential condition of every marriage. The husband married his wife on the basis that that fundamental condition should apply. It was a condition of the marriage, imported by his personal law. That condition has been utterly destroyed by the subsequent action of the Soviet government. This couple spent two nights together, and since then for the last five years they have never been allowed to meet, let alone come to this country as they intended. The husband has not been allowed to go to the wife, and she has not been allowed to come to him. There is no hope of their ever being allowed to meet again. An essential condition of the marriage has failed solely by the action of the Soviet government, and for failure of that condition the marriage is voidable in these courts. Justice requires that the husband should be free from this illusory marriage. I agree that the appeal should be allowed and a decree of nullity pronounced.

Appeal allowed. Declaration of nullity of marriage granted.

Solicitors: Boyce, Evans & Sheppard (for the husband).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

ROSE v. ROSE.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Bucknill, Somervell and Denning, L.J.J.), June 15, 16, 1950.]

Divorce—Maintenance—Amount—Wife's earning capacity—When to be taken into account.

A wife, who had obtained a decree of divorce on the ground of her husband's adultery, applied for an order for maintenance. Her husband was employed at a salary of £735 a year. There were two children of the marriage, one of whom was an infant aged four and a half years and in the custody of the wife. The wife, aged forty-one, had no means of her own and was not trained for any work, and during the period of the marriage, which had existed for twenty years, she had not been required to earn any money. After the divorce, as a temporary measure, she obtained board and lodging with a friend who owned a school, where she assisted in cooking meals and her child obtained free education. It was contended for the wife that, in arriving at the amount of maintenance ordered to be paid to her, WILLMER, J., wrongly attributed a notional earning capacity to her and based his calculation on the husband's earnings plus that notional figure.

HELD: the question whether the earning capacity of a wife is to be taken into account in assessing maintenance depended on the facts of each case, and no general rule could be laid down. In the present case, where the wife had never been required to earn money during her married life, where she had to look after a young child, and where she had no normal trade or calling, her earning capacity should not be taken into account.

Per DENNING, L.J.: if a wife does earn, her earnings must be taken into account; if she is a young woman with no children and obviously ought to go out to work in her own interest, but does not, her potential earning capacity ought to be taken into account; if she has worked regularly during the married life and might reasonably be expected to work after the divorce her potential earnings ought to be taken into account. Except, however, in cases such as those, it does not as a rule lie in the mouth of a wrongdoing husband to say that the wife ought to go out to work simply in order to relieve him from paying maintenance.

[AS TO THE AMOUNT OF MAINTENANCE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, pp. 790, 791, paras. 1252, 1253; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 502-504, Nos. 5379-5396 and Digest Supp.]

APPEAL by the wife from an order of WILLMER, J., made on Mar. 10, 1950, whereby he had reduced to £3 a week, subject to deduction of tax, an order made by Mr. Registrar HAWKES for payment of maintenance at the rate of £4 a week tax-free. It was admitted by counsel for the wife that the free-of-tax order could not stand, and the Court of Appeal was asked, not to reinstate the registrar's order, but to increase the order made by the judge to £4 a week subject to tax. It was shown to the satisfaction of the court that WILLMER, J., in fixing the amount of £3 a week, had taken the potential earning capacity of the wife into account.

F. Donald McIntyre for the wife.

Latey, K.C., for the husband.

SOMERVELL, L.J.: This is an appeal from an order by WILLMER, J., who varied an order for maintenance made by Mr. Registrar HAWKES. The petitioner in the divorce proceedings was the wife, who obtained a decree based on her husband's adultery. The parties had been married some twenty years, and at the material time there were two children, one of whom was about four and a half years of age. The husband, a chartered civil engineer, was chief assistant bridge engineer to the Gloucestershire County Council. His gross salary was some £710 a year at the time when he swore his first affidavit, and it had risen to £735 a year when he swore the affidavit which was considered by WILLMER, J., on the appeal from the registrar. The registrar had made an order for maintenance of £4 a week free of tax. That expression is capable of more than one meaning, but we were told—and this is the construction I would expect to be put on it—that it meant such sum as after deduction of tax at the standard rate would leave £4 a week, representing approximately £375 a year. When the matter came before the judge it was conceded by counsel for the wife that the registrar's order could not stand. The judge reduced the amount to £156 a year—i.e., £3 a week—less tax. It is from that reduction that the wife appeals to this court.

What is asked for is, not the reinstatement of the registrar's order of £4 a week free of tax, but an order for maintenance at £4 a week subject to tax, instead of £3 a week subject to tax. In respect of the child there has been an order, which is not contested, for £1 a week. Leave to appeal was granted by this court on the ground that the judge had gone wrong in principle in that he had arrived at the figure of £156 by attributing to the wife a notional earning capacity—that is to say, he had added that notional capacity, in the same way as if it were actual earnings, to the husband's income to arrive at the joint income, and had then based his figure of maintenance on an appropriate proportion of the joint income so calculated. I am satisfied that WILLMER, J., did arrive at his figure by attributing a notional earning capacity to the wife. I am also satisfied that the figure the judge took into account was about £100.

The question is whether that is wrong in law on the facts of the case. I do not propose to consider whether or in what circumstances earning capacity ought to be brought into the calculation in the case of a wife who has not been required to earn any money during the matrimonial life, but, in my view, where during the matrimonial life the means of the husband were such that the wife was not required to go out and earn money, then, in determining the proper sum for maintenance, it would prima facie seem to be wrong that the husband should be able to say: "Now you must go out and work, and the only sum I can be ordered to pay is one based on the results of your going out to work, which you did not have to do when you were my wife and which

A you would not have had to do if I had not committed adultery and broken up the home"—as in the present case. That prima facie approach seems to me to be plainly right in a case such as this, where the marriage had lasted for some twenty years. The wife is a woman of forty-one years of age, who has no normal trade or calling, though, no doubt, she is capable of doing domestic work, and there is a child of some four and a half years of age for her to look after. Therefore, I think the appeal succeeds, and that the order should be for £4 a week less tax.

B BUCKNILL, L.J.: I agree with the judgment which has just been delivered. It seems to me that WILLMER, J., would not have disturbed the figure fixed by the registrar if it were merely a question of amount. I feel that he must have amended it because he felt that the registrar had not taken into
C consideration the earning capacity of the wife, and counsel for the husband has said that during the discussion before WILLMER, J., he submitted that the earning capacity of the wife could be put at £2 a week. Unfortunately, we have not got any record of the judgment, but I am satisfied that that was why WILLMER, J., altered the figure. The question whether the earning capacity
D of the wife should be taken into account, in my opinion, must always depend on the particular facts of the case. I would be sorry to lay down any general rule about it, but it seems to me that in a case such as this, where the facts are as stated in the judgment of SOMERVELL, L.J., it would be wrong to reduce the liability of the husband to maintain his wife by reckoning that the wife could, if she saw fit, go out with her child and earn some money by doing domestic work. The wife in this case is not trained to do any special work, and I do not know that she could do anything else. What she did for a short time was to work in the kitchen for a friend. I agree that the appeal should be allowed.

E DENNING, L.J.: I also agree. A very important matter in awarding maintenance is the conduct of the parties. In this case it has been established that the husband broke up the marriage after twenty-one years of married
F life, leaving the wife with two children, one of them very young. It was a particularly bad case because the husband committed adultery with a Swiss student help who came to the house. After the divorce the wife claimed maintenance, and the question is whether she ought to go out to work. I agree that no general rule can be laid down on the matter, but this wife is certainly
G under no legal duty to go out to work in order to reduce the maintenance that her husband should pay. It would be quite unreasonable to expect her to do so when she has to look after a young child. If a wife does earn, then her earnings must be taken into account; or if she is a young woman with no children, and obviously ought to go out to work in her own interest, but does not, then her potential earning capacity ought to be taken into account; or if she has worked regularly during the married life and might reasonably be expected to work after the divorce, her potential earnings ought to be taken into account. Except in cases such as those, however, it does not as a rule lie in the mouth of a wrongdoing husband to say that the wife ought to go out to work simply in order to relieve him from paying maintenance. I agree that the appeal must be allowed.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Hepburns (for the wife); Gibson & Weldon (for the husband).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

GOODLASS WALL AND LEAD INDUSTRIES, LTD. v.
ATKINSON (INSPECTOR OF TAXES).

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Simonds, Lord Normand, Lord Morton of Henryton, Lord MacDermott and Lord Reid), May 10, 11, 15, June 23, 1950.]

Income Tax—Income from foreign possessions—New source in year of assessment—Shares in foreign company—Acquired prior to 1942-43—Income first received in 1942-43—Liability to tax in that year—New source of income “in any year of assessment”—Finance Act, 1926 (c. 22), s. 30, proviso (ii).

By s. 30 of the Finance Act, 1926: “All profits or income in respect of which any person is chargeable . . . under Case V of sched. D may respectively be assessed and charged in one sum: Provided that . . .

(ii) If in any year of assessment any person acquires a new source of any such profits or income or an addition to any source of any such profits or income, income tax in respect of the profits or income from that source or from the addition to that source shall be computed separately . . . and in the case of profits or income chargeable under . . . Case V of sched. D the provisions of proviso (b) to sub-s. (1) of the last preceding section of this Act shall apply.” By s. 29 (1), proviso (b): “. . . (i) income tax shall be computed, as respects the year of assessment in which the income first arises, on the full amount of the income arising within that year.”

Prior to 1937 the taxpayers acquired certain shares in a company incorporated in Argentina. For some years they had also owned shares in other foreign companies producing dividends and had been assessed to income tax under sched. D, Case V, in respect of the income from such other shares on the basis of the income received in the immediately preceding year without differentiating between the items making up their foreign possessions, in accordance with s. 30 of the Finance Act, 1926. In January, 1943, the taxpayers for the first time received a dividend on their shares in the Argentine company, in respect of which an additional assessment was made for the year 1942-43 in purported reliance on proviso (ii) to s. 30 of the Act of 1926. The taxpayers contended that the opening words of the proviso: “If in any year of assessment any person acquires a new source of any such profits or income,” referred to the year in which the source was acquired (i.e., to a year before 1937), and that the subsequent words, “income tax in respect of the profits or income from that source . . . shall be computed separately,” referred to income of that year, and, as in the present case there was no income then, the proviso had no application.

HELD: on the true construction of proviso (ii) to s. 30 of the Act of 1926 the income tax thereby required to be computed separately was tax on profits or income of the year of assessment in which the new source of the income was acquired; in the present case the new source of income was not acquired in the year 1942-43; and, therefore, the proviso did not apply and the additional assessment must be discharged.

Decision of the Court of Appeal ([1948] 2 All E.R. 1095), reversed.

[FOR THE FINANCE ACT, 1926, s. 30, proviso (ii), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 12, p. 271.]

Case referred to:

- (1) Brown v. National Provident Institution, Ogston v. Provident Mutual Life Assocn., [1921] 2 A.C. 222; 90 L.J.K.B. 1009; 125 L.T. 417; 8 Tax Cas. 57; 28 Digest 62, 316.

APPEAL by the taxpayers from a decision of the Court of Appeal (TUCKER, COHEN and ASQUITH, L.JJ.), dated Nov. 26, 1948, and reported [1948] 2 All

E.R. 1095, reversing a decision of SINGLETON, J., dated July 8, 1948, and reported ibid., 653, on a Case stated by the Special Commissioners of Income Tax.

A Before 1937 the taxpayers acquired the whole of the issued ordinary shares in a foreign company. In January, 1943, the foreign company declared a dividend for the first time on its ordinary shares. The sterling equivalent of the amount of this dividend received by the taxpayers was £7,434, and an additional assessment in this sum was made on the taxpayers under sched. D, Case V. The Special Commissioners discharged the assessment and an appeal by the inspector of taxes was dismissed by SINGLETON, J. The Court of Appeal restored the assessment, holding that the taxpayers had acquired a new source of income within the meaning of proviso (ii) to s. 30 of the Finance Act, 1926, so that income tax was to be computed in respect of the year 1942-43 in accordance with s. 29 (1) proviso (b) (i) on the full amount of the income arising within that year. The facts and the relevant sections of the Finance Act, 1926, are set out in the opinions of LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON and LORD MACDERMOTT.

C Donovan, K.C., and Graham-Dixon for the taxpayers.
The Solicitor-General (Sir Frank Soskice, K.C.), Tucker, K.C., and R. P. Hills for the Crown.

The House took time for consideration.

June 23. The following opinions were read.

D LORD SIMONDS: My Lords, I have felt great difficulty in coming to a decision in this case, but as your Lordships are unanimous in thinking that the appeal should be allowed, I do not think that I should be justified in occupying the time of the House by an expression of my doubts. I propose, therefore, to concur in the conclusions to which you have come.

E LORD NORMAND: My Lords, the key to the problem in this difficult case is in the meaning of the words "in any year of assessment" in proviso (ii) of s. 30 of the Finance Act, 1926. These words must, if possible, bear the same meaning in proviso (ii) as in proviso (i), and both provisos must be construed in the light of the leading enactment of the section. The section requires all profits or income in respect of which any person is chargeable either under r. 1 of the Rules Applicable to Case III of sched. D or under Case IV of sched. D or under Case V of sched. D to be respectively assessed and charged in one sum. F Here we are concerned with Case V. I think that there is in the leading enactment an implied reference to the particular year of assessment, viz., the year on which the person chargeable is being assessed on the income of that year. The measure of the income is (s. 29 (1)) the full amount of the profits or gains of the year preceding the year of assessment. Here the reference to the particular year in which the person chargeable is being assessed is explicit. So from the outset we are concerned with a year of assessment, meaning the year in which an assessment is being made on a person in respect of the income of that year measured by the income of the previous year.

G The provisos are exceptions to the rule that the income of the year preceding the year of assessment is to be the measure of the profits of the year of assessment. Proviso (i) deals with the case in which any person charged or chargeable H in respect of any such income (viz.: income chargeable under r. 1, Case III, or Case IV, or Case V of sched. D) ceases to possess any particular source of such income, and it provides that income tax in respect of the income from that source shall be computed separately and that the provisions of s. 31 shall apply as if the cesser of the possession of the source were the discontinuance of a trade. I pause there to point out that "the income tax" which is to be computed separately is apparently the income tax on the profits of the year in which the cesser of possession takes place. Section 31 (1) (a) provides that when in any year of assessment a trade is permanently discontinued, a person charged or chargeable with tax in respect thereof shall be charged for that year on the amount of the profits or gains of the period beginning Apr. 6 in that year and ending on the date of discontinuance. Thus "in any year of assessment" can only mean that year in which the person is to be charged for that year, and in s. 30, proviso (i), the words "any year of assessment" must have the same meaning.

Before going on to proviso (ii) of s. 30 I will deal with an argument submitted by the Solicitor-General against this construction of the words "in any year of assessment" in s. 30, proviso (i). He said that in the year of assessment next after the year in which an investment was sold, the taxpayer would be taxed on the income of that investment under s. 29, unless the words "any year of assessment" were construed as the equivalent of "at any time." I do not agree with this submission. In the case supposed, the income from the investment sold must in the year in which it is sold be treated under the proviso as income from a separate source and the tax on it must be separately computed, and it is, therefore, not part of the global income in that year of the whole mass of Case V investments. In the next year the investment no longer exists as a source of income and there is no basis of chargeability: Brown v. National Provident Institution, Ogston v. Provident Mutual Life Asscn. (1). The taxpayer, therefore, has no need to bring the income from the sold investment within the scope of proviso (i) in any year after the year of sale, nor to extend the application of this proviso by construing "any year of assessment" so as to include any year but that year. If the same construction of "any year of assessment" is applied in proviso (ii) of s. 30, the year of acquisition of the new source is "the year of assessment" and it must also be the year in which the income tax in respect of the profits or income from that source is to be separately computed. The proviso is not concerned with any year in which a new source has been acquired unless it has yielded income in that year, nor is it concerned with any year after the year in which the new source was acquired. Income for the years after the year of acquisition will in all cases fall under the rule of the leading enactment of the section. The Crown's answer to this was put alternatively. If, it was said, "any year of assessment" must be construed as "any year in which an assessment is being made," the inspector must call for a return in every year of new sources acquired in the year and if they yield no income in that year he must compute the income tax at zero. This, I must confess, appears to me to be an imaginary procedure. There is no provision in the Income Tax Acts which authorises a demand for a return of new sources of income until they yield a profit, and the computation of the income tax on investments which have never yielded income is no better than a fiction. Failing that argument, the Crown contends that the words "in any year of assessment" mean no more than "at any time," but that results in assigning different meanings to technical words of income tax law in two parts of the same section, and it is, therefore, a construction which should, if possible, be avoided.

It is in the second half of proviso (ii), where the consequences of separating the income of the acquired source from the income of other Case V investments are expressed, that the appellants run into difficulties. The proviso appears in terms to apply with broad generality the whole provisions of proviso (b) of sub-s. (1) of s. 29. Proviso (b) is divided into four paragraphs and of these the first and fourth alone are capable of being applied on the appellants' construction of s. 30, proviso (ii). For that proviso ex hypothesi applies only if the new source is acquired and yields income in the same year, but paras. (ii) and (iii) of proviso (b) of s. 29 (1) (b) apply only if the income first arose in the year preceding the year of assessment. The appellants are, therefore, constrained to construe proviso (ii) of s. 30 as if it applied s. 29 (1), proviso (b), subject to the implied reservation "so far as applicable." This is not an impossible construction, but it is by no means a convincing and satisfactory solution of the appellants' problem.

I have not so far referred to the definition of "year of assessment" in s. 237 of the Income Tax Act, 1918. Unless the context otherwise requires, "year of assessment" is there defined as meaning

"... with reference to any tax, the year for which such tax was granted by any Act granting duties of income tax."

The appellants maintain that the year for which tax was granted by any Act granting duties of income tax means the year of charge under each successive Finance Act in respect of income for that year. Accordingly, in proviso (ii) of s. 30 the words "year of assessment" mean the year in which income on the investment acquired in that year falls to be taxed under the Finance Act for that year. I think, with some hesitation, that the appellants' construction is right, and, if so, the definition confirms the meaning of the words which I have inferred from their context. There are difficulties which neither the appellants nor the Crown have succeeded in solving, but the greater difficulties seem to me to be in the way of the Crown's success. In any event, in a doubtful case the Crown must fail.

LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON [read by LORD REID]: My Lords, this appeal raises a question as to the true construction of proviso (ii) to s. 30 of the Finance Act, 1926. The construction contended for by the Crown, and upheld by the Court of Appeal, results in a charge to income tax being imposed on the appellants for the year 1942-43 in respect of certain income from a foreign investment arising in the same year. The construction contended for by the appellants, and upheld by the Special Commissioners and by SINGLETON, J., would result in the normal "preceding year" basis of assessment being applied, pursuant to the provisions of s. 29 (1) of the Finance Act, 1926, that is, the income in question would be taken into account for the purpose of making the assessment for the year 1943-44.

The facts are fully set out in the Case Stated and may be summarised as follows. The appellants "reside" and carry on business in the United Kingdom. They own all the issued ordinary shares, of a total nominal value of $900,000, in Goodlass Wall y Cie, a company incorporated in the Argentine Republic, which I shall hereafter call "the Argentine company." These shares were issued to the appellants from time to time as follows: 1932, nominal value $500,000; 1933, nominal value $100,000; 1934, nominal value $200,000; 1936, nominal value $100,000. The appellants at all material times also held shares in other foreign companies, and received dividends thereon in the year ended Apr. 5, 1943, and in earlier years. Assessments to income tax were made on the appellants yearly in respect of these dividends, under Case V of sched. D to the Income Tax Act, 1918, the basis of the assessment in each year being the income received in the immediately preceding year. No dividend was received from the holding of shares in the Argentine company until the year 1942-43. In January, 1943, the Argentine company declared a dividend upon its ordinary shares, amounting in sterling to £7,434. The assessment on the appellants for the year 1942-43 under Case V of sched. D was made before this dividend was declared, but, on being informed of the declaration of this dividend, the Crown caused the additional assessment for 1942-43, which is the subject of this appeal, to be made in respect thereof. This was done in purported reliance on proviso (ii) to s. 30 of the Finance Act, 1926.

It is convenient at this point to set out s. 30 and s. 31 of the Act of 1926, together with the relevant portions of s. 29 of the same Act.

"29 (1). Such enactments in the Income Tax Acts as provide that income tax under sched. D shall in certain cases be computed on the full amount of the balance of the profits or gains, or on the full amount of the income, upon an average of three years, and so much of rr. 1 and 2 of the Rules applicable to Case IV of sched. D as provides that income tax under that Case shall be computed on the full amount of the income which arises, or which has been or will be received, in the year of assessment, shall cease to have effect, and any income tax in respect of profits or gains or income chargeable under Case I, Case II, Case IV, or Case V of sched. D which would but for the foregoing provisions of this section have been computed as aforesaid shall be computed, subject to the provisions of this Part of this Act and subject as hereinafter provided, on the full amount of the profits or gains or income of the year preceding the year of assessment: A Provided that—(a) Any person charged with income tax in respect of the profits or gains of any trade, profession or vocation which has been set up or commenced within the year preceding the year of assessment shall be entitled, on giving notice in writing to the surveyor within twelve months after the end of the year of assessment, to be charged to income B tax on the amount of the profits or gains of the year of assessment; and (b) In the case of income tax chargeable under Case IV or Case V of sched. D—(i) income tax shall be computed, as respects the year of assessment in which the income first arises, on the full amount of the income arising within that year: (ii) where the income first arose on some day in the year preceding the year of assessment other than Apr. 6, income tax shall C be computed on the income of the year of assessment: (iii) where the income first arose on Apr. 6 in the year preceding the year of assessment, or on some day in the year next before the year preceding the year of assessment other than Apr. 6, the person charged shall be entitled, on giving notice in writing to the surveyor within twelve months after the end of the year of assessment, to be charged on the amount of the income of that year, and if the tax charged has been paid, any tax overpaid shall be repaid: (iv) references in this proviso to income which arises or which arose shall, in cases where income tax is to be computed by reference D to the amount of income received in Great Britain or Northern Ireland, be construed as references to income which is or was so received. 30. All profits or income in respect of which any person is chargeable either under E r. 1 of the Rules applicable to Case III of sched. D, or under Case IV of sched. D or under Case V of sched. D may respectively be assessed and charged in one sum: Provided that—(i) If in any year of assessment any person charged or chargeable in respect of any such profits or income as aforesaid ceases to possess any particular source of any such profits or income or any part of any such source, income tax in respect of the profits F or income from that source or that part shall be computed separately, and the provisions of the section in this Part of this Act which relates to the discontinuance of a trade, profession or vocation, shall, subject to the necessary modifications, apply in any such case as if the cesser of the possession of the source or part were the discontinuance of a trade: (ii) If G in any year of assessment any person acquires a new source of any such profits or income or an addition to any source of any such profits or income, income tax in respect of the profits or income from that source or from the addition to that source shall be computed separately, and in the case of profits or income chargeable under r. 1 of the Rules applicable to Case III the provisions of para. (1) of r. 2 of those Rules shall apply, and in the case of profits or income chargeable under Case IV or Case V of sched. D H the provisions of proviso (b) to sub-s. (1) of the last preceding section of this Act shall apply: (iii) Where any income in respect of which any person has previously been charged or chargeable under Case IV or Case V of sched. D becomes at any time chargeable to tax by deduction under the provisions of r. 7 of the Miscellaneous Rules applicable to sched. D, the provisions of para. (i) of this proviso shall apply as if that person had at the time aforesaid ceased to possess the security or possession from which the income arises: (iv) Where income arising to any person from any security or possession in any place out of Great Britain and Northern Ireland ceases at any time to be chargeable to income tax by deduction under the provisions of r. 7 of the Miscellaneous Rules applicable to sched. D, the provisions of para. (ii) of this proviso shall apply as if that security or possession were a new source of income acquired by that person at that time. 31 (1) Where in any year of assessment a trade, profession or vocation is permanently discontinued, then, notwithstanding anything in this Part of this Act—(a) the person charged or chargeable with tax in respect thereof shall be charged for that year on the amount of the profits or gains of the period beginning on Apr. 6 in that year and ending on the date of the discontinuance, subject to any deduction or set-off to which he may be entitled under the section of this Part of this Act which provides for relief in respect of certain losses or under r. 13 of the Rules applicable to Cases I and II of sched. D, and, if he has been charged otherwise than in accordance with this provision, any tax overpaid shall be repaid, or an additional assessment may be made upon him, as the case may require; (b) if the profits or gains of the year ending on Apr. 5 in the year preceding the year of assessment in which the discontinuance occurs exceed the amount on which the person has been charged for that preceding year, or would have been charged if no such deduction or set-off as aforesaid had been allowed, an additional assessment may be made upon him, so that he shall be charged for that preceding year on the amount of the profits or gains of the said year ending on Apr. 5, subject to any such deduction or set-off as aforesaid to which he may be entitled. (2) In the case of the death of a person who, if he had not died, would, under the provisions of this section, have become chargeable to income tax for any year, the tax which would have been so chargeable shall be assessed and charged upon his executors or administrators, and shall be a debt due from and payable out of his estate.”

It is common ground between the parties that if proviso (ii) to s. 30 does not apply to the present case, the additional assessment in question must be discharged, and the dividend of £7,434 will appear for the first time in the assessment of income under Case V of sched. D for the year 1943-44, along with the other dividends received by the appellants from their foreign investments in the year 1942-43. It is also common ground between the parties, in your Lordships' House, that a taxpayer can “acquire a new source of income” within the meaning of proviso (ii) if he acquires shares from which income may arise at some future time. Arguments which may be inconsistent with this view were advanced in the courts below by the Crown, but are not now relied on.

The respective contentions of the parties in your Lordships' House may be summarised as follows. The appellants contend that the words “if in any year of assessment any person acquires a new source of any such profits or income” and the words “income tax in respect of the profits or income from that source . . . shall be computed separately” both relate to the same year of assessment. “The year for which income tax is being computed in the present case,” they say, “is the year 1942-43. We did not acquire any new source of income in that year, since the shares in the Argentine company had all been acquired by the year 1936. Thus, the event which brings proviso (ii) into play has not happened.” The Crown, on the other hand, contends that the proviso applies to any case in which a new source of income is acquired in any year of assessment, and income arises from that source in the year of acquisition or in any subsequent year. The Crown does not now rely on the words “or an addition to any source” in proviso (ii).

My Lords, if proviso (ii) had ended with the words “computed separately,” I should have had no hesitation in accepting the appellants' contention, which gives to the earlier part of the proviso the natural meaning of the words used.

It is necessary, however, to consider whether there is a context which should lead this House to accept the contention of the Crown. Counsel for the Crown contended that such a context could be found in the latter words of the proviso,

“ . . . and in the case of profits or income chargeable under r. 1 of the Rules applicable to Case III the provisions of para. (1) of r. 2 of those Rules shall apply, and in the case of profits or income chargeable under Case IV or Case V of sched. D the provisions of proviso (b) to sub-s. (1) of the last preceding section of this Act shall apply.”

They pointed out that, if the appellants' contention were correct, it would be impossible to apply to Case V income coming within proviso (ii) to s. 30 the whole of the provisions of proviso (b) to s. 29. “According to the appellants' contention,” they said, “proviso (ii) to s. 30 only comes into operation if a new source of income is acquired and in the same year income arises from that source. If this happens, it would be possible to put sub-cl. (i) of proviso (b) to s. 29 into operation, but the latter sub-clause of proviso (b) could never operate in respect of that income.” This is admitted by counsel for the appellants. Counsel for the Crown also pointed out that a similar difficulty would arise, under the same part of proviso (ii), in the case of income coming under Case III, since only the first portion of the provisions of para. (1) of r. 2 of the Rules applicable to Case III could be brought into operation. This is, however, in substance the same argument as that which I have already stated in regard to Case V income, and need not be further elaborated. While I appreciate that this argument on the part of the Crown is of some weight, the difficulty would be surmounted, at least to some extent, if the concluding words of proviso (ii) “shall apply” were construed as meaning “shall apply so far as applicable.”

I do not think that there is any other context which supports the contention of the Crown, but there is a context which, in my view, strongly supports the contention of the appellants. It is quite clear that in proviso (i) to s. 30 the words: “If in any year of assessment any person charged or chargeable in respect of any such profits or income as aforesaid ceases to possess any particular source of any such profits or income . . .” and the words “income tax in respect of the profits or income from that source . . . shall be computed separately” both relate to the same year. In other words, the income tax there referred to is the income tax for the year in which the taxpayer ceases to possess the particular source of income. I cannot believe that the very similar words in proviso (ii), which immediately follows proviso (i) in the same section, are to be construed in a different sense, and if they are to be construed in the same sense the income tax referred to in proviso (ii) must be the income tax for the year in which the taxpayer “acquires a new source.”

Giving due weight to the contexts relied on by the parties respectively, I see no sufficient reason why your Lordships should not give to the earlier part of proviso (ii) the meaning which it would naturally bear in the absence of any context, and I have come to the conclusion that the appellants' construction of proviso (ii) is correct. I am assisted in coming to this conclusion by a consideration of certain practical difficulties which arise in applying the Crown's construction to the facts of the present case. The Solicitor-General was invited by your Lordships, in the course of his argument, to explain how proviso (ii) would operate if his contention were correct. He asked the House to assume, for the sake of simplicity, that the appellants had acquired all their shares in the Argentine company in the year 1935-36, and continued as follows— I trust that I am correctly reproducing the substance of his explanation: “The inspector of taxes would ‘note’ that the appellants had acquired this new source of income in a year of assessment. That is enough to bring proviso (ii) to s. 30 into operation, and the inspector would note that, under the proviso, income tax in respect of the income from that source must be ‘computed separately.’ The income tax so computed would be nil in each year of assess-

A ment up to and including the year 1941-42. In the year 1942-43 income arose from this source for the first time and the inspector rightly made the assessment which is the subject of this appeal, applying proviso (b) to s. 29, as he is told to do by proviso (ii) to s. 30." I do not think that any better explanation could have been given, but I find this explanation unconvincing. Your Lordships were not referred to any statutory provision which requires a person or company, on acquiring a new investment which is producing no income, to inform the inspector of taxes of this acquisition, and it was never explained to my satisfaction how he would come to learn of it. Moreover, neither leading counsel for the Crown was able to refer your Lordships to any statute which laid down the procedure to be followed by the inspector of taxes, as outlined by the Solicitor-General. These practical considerations supply a further reason why I cannot accept the Crown's construction of proviso (ii) to s. 30. B I should add that counsel for the appellants relied very strongly on the definition of "year of assessment" which appears in s. 237 of the Income Tax Act, 1918, but I do not find this definition of any assistance in the present case.

C My Lords, I regret to find myself at variance with the view expressed by the Court of Appeal. I think I have sufficiently explained why I cannot accept the Crown's construction of proviso (ii) to s. 30, and, even if I gave more weight to the arguments in favour of that construction, I should still feel a very real doubt whether the proviso does or does not justify the assessment now in question. In these circumstances, it would be contrary to well established principles to uphold the assessment. I would allow the appeal and affirm the determination of the Special Commissioners that the assessment must be discharged. The Crown must pay the costs of the appellants here and below. D E LORD MACDERMOTT [read by LORD NORMAND]: My Lords, the appellants having acquired, prior to 1937, certain shares in Goodlass Wall y Cie, a company incorporated in the Argentine Republic, received for the first time a dividend thereon, amounting to £7,434, during the fiscal year 1942-43. In the same year and also in the preceding year they had received dividends from other foreign companies and had been assessed to income tax on them under Case V of sched. D. On learning of the payment of £7,434 the Crown raised an additional assessment for 1942-43 in respect thereof. This was done on the view that proviso (ii) of s. 30 of the Finance Act, 1926, applied to this payment. The question now is whether this view was well founded in law. If so, the additional assessment should stand and the present appeal be dismissed. F If not, the appeal should be allowed and the additional assessment discharged, it being common ground that in that event the appellants' assessment for 1942-43 in respect of income from foreign possessions fell to be computed on the amount thereof arising in the year 1941-42 which, as already indicated, included no dividend from the Argentine company.

G Section 30 of the Act of 1926 consists of a single sentence (which I shall refer to as the main enactment) followed by four provisos. I need not quote the section in its entirety, but it will be convenient to set out the main enactment and the first two provisos. These, with the omission of certain references therein to the rules of Case III and to Case IV which do not, in my opinion, throw any light on the question to be decided, read as follows:

H "30. All profits or income in respect of which any person is chargeable . . . under Case V of sched. D may . . . be assessed and charged in one sum: Provided that—(i) If in any year of assessment any person charged or chargeable in respect of any such profits or income as aforesaid ceases to possess any particular source of any such profits or income or any part of any such source, income tax in respect of the profits or income from that source or that part shall be computed separately, and the provisions of the section in this Part of this Act which relates to the discontinuance of a trade, profession or vocation, shall, subject to the necessary modifications, apply in any such case as if the cesser of the possession of the source or part were the discontinuance of a trade: (ii) If in any year of assessment any person acquires a new source of any such profits or income or an addition to any source of any such profits or income, income tax in respect of the profits or income from that source or from the addition to that source shall be computed separately . . . and in the case of profits or income chargeable under . . . Case V of sched. D the provisions of proviso (b) to sub-s. (1) of the last preceding section of this Act shall apply."

Considered alone the main enactment but fortifies the appellants' contention that, by virtue of the change in the basis of assessment effected by s. 29 (1) of the Act of 1926, the tax for 1942-43 should be computed on the income of the preceding year from their foreign possessions considered as a single source. This was not disputed and the case for the Crown depended altogether on the applicability of the exception contained in the second proviso. Before considering the provisos, however, it may be observed that the terms of the main enactment relate to a year in respect of which the subject concerned is chargeable to tax. The meaning remains unaltered if, after the word "chargeable", there are inserted the words "in any year of assessment." The main enactment is, I think, clear enough without this addition, but it serves to emphasise the nature of the subject-matter which the provisos are intended to qualify.

Coming to proviso (ii) it will be well to refer at once to the opposing contentions regarding its construction and operation. As I understand them, their substance may be stated thus. For the appellants it was said that the opening words of the proviso, "If in any year of assessment," refer to the particular year for which tax is being computed, in this case the year 1942-43; that the additional source, the shares in the Argentine company, was not acquired in that year; and that, in consequence, the condition was not satisfied and the proviso could not be applied. For the Crown stress was laid on the word "any," and it was submitted that "in any year of assessment" was an expression wide enough to include any year previous to the year for which tax was being computed. The condition of the proviso, the argument proceeded, was, therefore, satisfied by the acquisition of the additional source prior to 1942-43, with the result that the proviso applied and in turn brought proviso (b) (i) of s. 29 (1) into operation so as to make the appellants chargeable in 1942-43 in respect of the income arising in that year from the additional source.

My Lords, the natural meaning of the words "in any year of assessment," when they are read in the light of their immediate context and with due regard to the terms of the main enactment, is, in my opinion, that contended for by the appellants. The structure of the text and the language used are such as to link these words naturally and grammatically, not only with the year of assessment to which the main enactment relates, but also with the year in respect of which the direction "shall be computed separately" is given. The interpretation favoured by the Crown, on the other hand, would give no real effect to the words "of assessment"; would read "acquires" as "acquires or has acquired"; and in certain cases, such as the present, would necessitate a computation based on events standing years apart. I doubt if the Income Tax Acts provide adequate machinery for a process of that kind, but, however that may be, I think the language of the proviso down to the word "separately" cannot, without straining, be said to contemplate the acquisition of a new source and its initial productivity as occurring in different years.

It remains to see whether the case for the Crown can be supported by the wider context on which it relied. Two points call for consideration in this connection. Both sides agreed that on any rational construction the crucial phrase, "If in any year of assessment," must have the same meaning in proviso (ii) as in proviso (i) and both claimed that it had. For the Crown it was said that if in proviso (i) this phrase related, as the appellants submitted, to the year of separate computation thereby directed, the subject would in the following year suffer tax in respect of the lost source and the application of para. (b) of s. 31 (1) would produce a further anomaly. I am not satisfied that these results would follow, but I need not encumber this opinion with my reasons for that view, as I think the wording of proviso (i) is such as to preclude any real doubt as to what is meant by "any year of assessment" therein.

A It is the year in which a person is "charged or chargeable in respect of any such profits or income" and "ceases to possess any particular source of any such profits or income." I do not think any other reading is possible without disregarding the clear import of the language, and if that is so it seems no less clear that the year of separate computation is the same year. I am, therefore,

B of opinion that the point under discussion serves only to strengthen the interpretation of proviso (ii) advanced on behalf of the appellants.

The second point arises on the concluding words of proviso (ii) which say that "the provisions of proviso (b)" of s. 29 (1) shall apply. On the appellants' construction of "in any year of assessment," proviso (ii) only bears on the computation of a single year, the year which sees the new source acquired and

C yielding income after acquisition. In cases within proviso (ii) this, it was conceded, means that, in the course of the separate computation directed by that proviso, the only provision of proviso (b) of s. 29 (1) which can be applied is para. (i). That paragraph enacts that tax under Case IV or Case V is to be computed, as respects the year of assessment in which the income first arises, on the full amount of the income arising within that year. But this paragraph

D of proviso (b) is followed by two other substantive provisions of which, for present purposes, only para. (ii) need be mentioned. It enacts that where the income first arose in the year preceding the year of assessment, tax is to be computed on the income of the year of assessment. On the Crown's construction of proviso (ii) of s. 30 the process of separate computation is not limited to a single year, and, accordingly, if that is the sound construction, effect can

E be given not only to para. (i) of proviso (b) of s. 29 (1) but also to para. (ii) and, for a similar reason, to para. (iii) as well. This, it was said, was a strong indication that the Crown's was the correct interpretation, for what proviso (ii) applies is not "the appropriate provision" but "the provisions" of proviso (b). My Lords, I do not think it was in dispute that in cases falling within proviso (ii) of s. 30 the Crown would, in certain circumstances, lose tax if resort to proviso (b)

F of the preceding section were limited to para. (i) thereof. That, no doubt, lends point to the argument under discussion, but it does not conclude it. The problem is one of construction throughout, and the question, as I see it, comes to this—Do the implications of the application of the "provisions of proviso (b)" suffice to outweigh the considerations in favour of the appellants' interpretation which arise on the earlier parts of s. 30? In my opinion, they

G do not do so. I think the whole tenor of the relevant portions of the section, apart from the reference to proviso (b), manifests the meaning contended for by the appellants with a certainty which ought to prevail. The Crown's construction would not only involve a modification of what seems to me to be plainly conveyed by the important first part of proviso (ii); it would also, by giving the expression "in any year of assessment" a different sense in each

H of the first two provisos, lead to an inconsistency in the structure of the section at variance with its obvious design. In short, I think less disrespect is done to the natural signification of the language used by adding at the end of proviso (ii) some such phrase as "in so far as the same are capable of taking effect" than by introducing the changes necessary to let the proviso read as the Crown says it should. It may be that the failure to make provision for cases in which a new or additional source of income does not become fruitful until after the year of acquisition, constitutes a defect in the scheme of the taxing code, but if a fair reading of the text reveals the defect it is not for the courts to repair the omission. For these reasons I think the additional assessment was bad. I would, therefore, allow the appeal.

LORD REID: My Lords, for some years before 1943 the appellant company had owned shares in an Argentine company which had never produced any income and had also owned shares in other foreign companies which had produced income. In January, 1943, the appellants for the first time received a dividend from its holding in the Argentine company. That dividend amounted to £7,434, and the appellants were assessed to income tax on that sum under sched. D, Case V, for the year 1942-43, the year during which the income had been received.

The general principles which now govern assessments under Case V are contained in s. 29 and s. 30 of the Finance Act, 1926. In the first place, s. 30 requires that, subject to the exceptions therein stated, all income in respect of which any person is chargeable under Case V must be assessed and charged in one sum. The section uses the word "may", but it is, I think, clear that its provisions are mandatory and not permissive. Then s. 29 requires, again subject to exceptions, that income tax in respect of income chargeable under Case V shall be computed on the income of the year preceding the year of assessment. The exceptions relating to Case V are set out in proviso (b) to s. 29. They apply to "the year of assessment in which the income first arises," the next following year, and, where the taxpayer so elects, the next year again. During these years the general rule is not to be followed, but tax is to be computed on the income arising during the year of assessment. As s. 30 directs that all income of a taxpayer chargeable under Case V is to be taken together and assessed in one sum, the year "in which the income first arises" must mean the first year in which any income chargeable under Case V arises, and if the matter stopped there subsequent changes in the sources from which Case V income was obtained would be immaterial and the acquisition of a new source would not bring the proviso into operation again. Income from a new source would simply be pooled from the beginning with the rest of the taxpayer's Case V income and the general rule of s. 29 would apply so that income tax on income from the new source would first become payable in the year following the year in which it was received. But that result is to some extent prevented by the second proviso to s. 30. To what extent it is prevented is the principal matter for decision in this case. This case turns on the interpretation of the second proviso, but that proviso cannot be taken by itself without regard to the meaning of the first proviso and I must, therefore, quote both. The relevant part of the section is in the following terms:

"All profits or income in respect of which any person is chargeable either under r. 1 of the Rules applicable to Case III of sched. D, or under Case IV of sched. D or under Case V of sched. D may respectively be assessed and charged in one sum: Provided that—(i) If in any year of assessment any person charged or chargeable in respect of any such profits or income as aforesaid ceases to possess any particular source of any such profits or income or any part of any such source, income tax in respect of the profits or income from that source or that part shall be computed separately, and the provisions of the section in this Part of this Act which relates to the discontinuance of a trade, profession or vocation, shall, subject to the necessary modifications, apply in any such case as if the cesser of the possession of the source or part were the discontinuance of a trade: (ii) If in any year of assessment any person acquires a new source of any such profits or income or an addition to any source of any such profits or income, income tax in respect of the profits or income from that source or from the addition to that source shall be computed separately, and in the case of profits or income chargeable under r. 1 of the Rules applicable to Case III the provisions of para. (1) of r. 2 of those Rules shall apply, and in the case of profits or income chargeable under Case IV or Case V of sched. D the provisions of proviso (b) to sub-s. (1) of the last preceding section of this Act shall apply."

The crucial question in the case can, I think, be stated in this way. For what year or years does the second proviso direct that income tax in respect of income from a new or additional source shall be computed separately?

A But before coming to that question it is necessary to determine what is meant by a new source of income. The section applies to income chargeable under Case III, Case IV and Case V—for brevity I shall call such income Case III income, Case IV income and Case V income. The section treats these three classes of income separately. In considering whether certain Case V income is income from a new source or how the proviso applies to it, it is immaterial
B whether or not the taxpayer is in receipt of Case III or Case IV income. I may add while referring to Case III income that the second part of the second proviso directs different rules to be applied where Case III income is in question from those which apply in the other cases, but I am satisfied that there is no material difference between the two and, therefore, for the purposes of this case, I can consider the section as if it only applied to Case V income: no further light is
C thrown on it by discussing its application to Case III income. A "new source" of Case V income implies that the taxpayer already had a source of such income when he acquired the new source. If he did not, there is no need for the proviso as the case would fall directly under proviso (b) to s. 29 to which I have already referred. Originally there was a controversy in this case about what is meant by a "new source." It was contended for the Crown that a D person does not acquire a new source of income merely by acquiring shares or other property which may later yield income, but that those shares or that other property only become a "new source" of income when they actually begin to yield income. That contention was unsuccessful and it is not now maintained. It is now admitted, and I think rightly admitted, that the appellants acquired a new source of income in acquiring the shares of the Argentine company in and before 1936 although no income arose from those shares until 1943.

E I can now return to what I have called the crucial question in the case. The proviso does not state expressly for what year or years income tax in respect of income from a new source is to be computed separately. The appellant contends that the direction to compute separately refers back to the initial words of the proviso so that the direction only refers to the year of assessment
F in which the new source was acquired. The Crown, on the other hand, contends that the direction refers forward to the subsequent part of the proviso so that separate computation must continue for a sufficient period to enable full effect to be given to the provisions of proviso (b) to s. 29 (1). If this contention is correct then separate computation must in every case continue for two years (or for three years if the taxpayer so elects) and separate computation will G only begin when the new source begins to yield income.

I think it right to consider first what is the natural meaning of the language of the second proviso. Its framework can, perhaps, be more clearly shown if I contract what is not essential in this connection and express the proviso thus—If in any year of assessment a certain thing happens income tax in respect of certain income shall be computed separately and in the case of Case III
H income certain rules shall apply and in the case of Case IV or Case V income certain other rules shall apply. I think that the natural interpretation of such a provision is that the direction to compute separately refers solely to the year of assessment specified and that the part of the proviso which follows that direction and is introduced by the word "and" is intended to set out the manner in which the separate computation already directed is to be done. There appear to me to be two main objections to the Crown's interpretation. In the first place, it makes the words at the beginning "in any year of assessment " meaningless: they might as well be "at any time" or even be omitted altogether, because according to the Crown it does not matter when the new source was acquired, the only thing that matters is when income from it first arose and that may be long after the year in which it was acquired. I would find this objection formidable in any case, but it becomes much more formidable when one looks at the definition of "year of assessment" in s. 237 of the Income Tax Act, 1918:

"In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires:— . . . 'Year of assessment' means, with reference to any tax, the year for which such tax was granted by any Act granting duties of income tax."

On the appellant's interpretation of the proviso this definition is exactly in point, but the Crown is forced to argue that the context does not permit its application. I find it difficult, if not impossible, so to hold because the phrase "year of assessment" is apparently used in this proviso with reference to a tax, the tax which the immediately succeeding part of the proviso directs to be computed separately. But I think that, by itself, this objection would not be fatal and I proceed to the next which arises out of the language of the latter part of the proviso. Somewhere a direction must be found as to the period during which there is to be separate computation: no one suggests that this is to go on indefinitely and I find it difficult to read into a provision in the form "and" certain rules shall apply a direction that the separate computation earlier mentioned shall continue for so long as is necessary to enable the whole of those rules to apply. That may have been the intention, but I do not find it easy to suppose that a person having that intention would express it in the way in which this proviso is expressed. The strength of the Crown's case is that where there is a direction that certain rules shall apply one would naturally expect that there would be at least some cases in which they could all apply, but admittedly on the appellants' interpretation paras. (ii) and (iii) of proviso (b) to s. 29 (1) and the corresponding provisions in the Rules applicable to Case III can never have any application to a case under this proviso. On the appellants' construction para. (i) of proviso (b) will apply if any income from the new source arises during the year of assessment in which the source was acquired, but not otherwise. This is not a satisfactory interpretation, but, in my judgment, it is not an impossible interpretation. I think that the direction to apply these rules can mean that they shall be applied, but only in so far as they can be applied during the year for which separate computation has already been directed.

There is a further argument from the provisions of proviso (i) to s. 30. What I have called the framework of this proviso is very similar to that of the second proviso. Both begin: "If in any year of assessment" something happens, both then direct separate computation of tax without expressly stating for what period, and both conclude "and" certain rules shall apply. If it could be shown that in the application of the first proviso cases can be found where the intention of the proviso would plainly be defeated if separate computation of tax is limited to the year of assessment specified, that would be a strong reason for holding that both must have been intended to have a wider application. If, on the other hand, the apparent purpose of the first proviso can be fulfilled without any separate computation in any year of assessment other than that specified, that would be an equally strong reason for adopting the appellants' interpretation of the second proviso. The first proviso deals with the case of a person holding several sources of Case V income (or of Case III or Case IV income) who in the course of a particular year of assessment ceases to possess one of them and it directs the application of certain provisions as if the cesser of possession of the source were the discontinuance of a trade. Is there any application of these provisions which is impossible if tax is only computed separately in the year of assessment specified in the proviso? The Crown argued that separate computation would also be necessary in the year following and in certain cases in the preceding year. As regards the year following, which I shall call year 2, the argument was put in this way. Suppose a taxpayer to have ten sources of Case V income at the beginning of year 1 and to sell one, called A, during the year. Suppose further that A has yielded income in year 1 before its sale. As regards year 1 there is no difficulty: the statute directs separate computation of tax on the income from A in year 1. But when you come to year 2 it is said there is a difficulty. Tax in respect of year 2 is payable on the income in year 1 from all Case V sources taken together. In year 2 the taxpayer only holds nine sources and he is not intended to be taxed in that year on any income from source A which he ceased to possess during year 1. But, it is said, unless the proviso also applies in year 2 he will be taxed in that year on the income received from all Case V sources including A in year 1. I think that this argument is fallacious for this reason. The reason why the income from all ten sources is pooled is because s. 30 says so, but proviso (i) to that section makes an exception. It says that the income from source A in year 1 is to be taken out of the Case V pool of that year's income. So the Case V pool of year 1 income only includes the income from the other nine sources. When you come to compute tax for year 2 you are told to go to the Case V pool for year 1. But when you get there you do not find any income from A in it because during year 1 the proviso took it out. In other words the proviso only operates in year 1, but the result of that operation is reflected in year 2 because tax for year 2 is based on what happened in year 1. I take next the second argument, the argument with regard to the penultimate year. This argument is based on s. 31 (1) (b) of the Act of 1926. This section allows the Inland Revenue to make an additional assessment for that year if the actual income for that year from what I have called source A exceeds the amount on which the taxpayer was charged, i.e., the actual income from source A in the year before the penultimate year. It is said that to operate this provision requires separate computation of the tax due in the penultimate year in respect of income from source A. I do not think so. There is no question of disturbing the original assessment or the original computation of tax for that year, and that computation would take into account the income from source A as included in what I have called the Case V pool. All that happens is that liability is adjusted by an additional assessment. I have, therefore, come to the conclusion that the Crown has failed to show that it is ever necessary in giving effect to proviso (i) to s. 30 to compute tax separately in respect of any year of assessment other than that in which the taxpayer ceases to possess the particular source, and if that be right the argument from proviso (i), far from helping the Crown, adds materially to the weight of the considerations favouring the appellants' interpretation.

The only other question which I need notice is whether there are any general considerations in favour of the Crown's contention. The result of the special methods of computation which apply at the beginning and end of a taxpayer's possession of a particular source of income is that very frequently the total sum on which he is assessed to tax for the whole years of his possession of the source differs materially from the total amount of income which he has received from it, and if it could be shown that one of the interpretations put forward in this case generally produced a more equitable result than the other that might be entitled to some weight. But that has not been shown, and probably could not be. Taking all the considerations with which I have dealt and giving due weight to them, I am left in no doubt that the appellants' interpretation of the proviso is that which ought to be accepted and I, therefore, agree that this appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Linklaters & Paines (for the taxpayers); Solicitor of Inland Revenue (for the Crown).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

MOLE v. MOLE.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Bucknill, Somervell and Denning, L.J.J.), June 13, 14, 1950.]

Divorce—Evidence—Privilege—Letter by husband to probation officer—Probation officer consulted by wife, but not accepted as conciliator by husband.

On the hearing of a petition by a wife for divorce on the ground of the husband's alleged cruelty and desertion, the wife sought to adduce in evidence a letter which the husband had written to a probation officer in answer to a letter written to him by the probation officer after he (the probation officer) had been consulted by the wife with a view to effecting a reconciliation between the parties. The husband objected to the evidence being given on the ground that the letter was privileged, but it was argued that it should be admitted since the husband had not accepted the probation officer as a conciliator.

HELD: the letter was privileged and should not be admitted.

McTaggart v. McTaggart ([1948] 2 All E.R. 755), applied.

Bostock v. Bostock ([1950] 1 All E.R. 25), doubted by DENNING, L.J.

[AS TO COMMUNICATIONS "WITHOUT PREJUDICE," see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 13, pp. 703-705, para. 774; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 22, pp. 375-378, Nos. 3836-3860.]

Cases referred to:

(1) McTaggart v. McTaggart, [1948] 2 All E.R. 754; [1949] P. 94; [1949] L.J.R. 82; 2nd Digest Supp.

(2) Bostock v. Bostock, [1950] 1 All E.R. 25; 114 J.P. 59.

APPEAL by a wife from an order of Mr. Commissioner BUSH JAMES, K.C., made on Jan. 27, 1950, whereby he refused to grant a decree nisi to the wife on the ground of the husband's alleged cruelty and desertion.

The parties were married on July 28, 1945, and lived together from December, 1945, when the husband came out of the army, until Mar. 30, 1946, when the wife left the husband on the ground of his alleged cruelty. In June, 1946, the wife consulted a probation officer with a view to effecting a reconciliation. The probation officer wrote a letter to the husband who replied on June 4, 1946. The commissioner ruled that the husband's reply to the probation officer was not privileged, but found that the husband had not been guilty of cruelty and that the wife had no just cause for leaving the husband. The Court of Appeal allowed the appeal and ordered a new trial on the ground that the commissioner had failed to direct his mind to the question whether the desertion by the wife had terminated by reason of a bona fide offer by her to return to the husband. The case is reported only on the point relating to the admissibility of the evidence of the letter written by the husband to the probation officer.

Seuffert for the wife.

The husband appeared in person.

BUCKNILL, L.J., after stating the facts, held that there was no ground for the wife's allegation of cruelty, but that, on the issue of desertion, the appeal should be allowed and a new trial ordered since the learned commissioner had failed to deal with the question whether the wife had made a bona fide offer to return to the husband. [HIS LORDSHIP then referred to the husband's letter to the probation officer, and continued:] At the trial, when the probation officer was called, the husband took the objection that this letter was privileged in accordance with the opinions given by two lords justices in McTaggart v. McTaggart (1), but the learned commissioner ruled that it was not privileged. He seems, however, to have dismissed the letter by saying that the husband wrote it in a pique and did not mean what he said. In my opinion, the letter was privileged and should not have been admitted. Counsel for the wife argued that the opinions expressed by the lords justices in McTaggart v. McTaggart (1) only applied when both sides have accepted the probation officer as a conciliator between them. I do not think that that is what was intended in those opinions. DENNING, L.J., said ([1948] 2 All E.R. 755):

A “The rule as to ‘without prejudice’ communications applies with especial force to negotiations for reconciliation. It applies whenever the dispute has got to such dimensions that litigation is imminent. In all cases where the estrangement has reached the point where the parties consult a probation officer, litigation is imminent. It is clear that there is a dispute which may end either in the magistrates’ court or the divorce court. The probation officer has no privilege of his own from disclosure . . .”

B This dispute had got to the stage where litigation was imminent. The wife had seen a solicitor, the parties had been living apart for two years, and there was no reasonable prospect of their becoming re-united. It seems to me that if the husband, instead of writing this letter, had gone to see the probation officer and had told him verbally what he wrote in this letter it would be impossible to argue that that statement would not be privileged under the rule formulated in McTaggart v. McTaggart (1). I think the principles stated by COHEN and C DENNING, L.J.J., in McTaggart’s case (1) should be applied. It is essential, if a reconciliation is to be attempted, with the probation officer as intermediary, that statements made by either party, as soon as the probation officer is asked to act in that capacity, should be treated as privileged. Counsel for the wife suggested that if one applies that principle at such an early stage as in the present case, it tends to prejudice the working of another principle, viz., that a spouse is no D longer in desertion if he or she has made a bona fide attempt to be taken back, and he argued that if such a bona fide attempt is made through a probation officer it ought to be taken into account. There is some force in that argument, but one must bear in mind that, in matrimonial disputes, the State is also an interested party and is more interested in reconciliation than in divorce, and if the rule as to privilege tends to promote the prospects of reconciliation, I think it ought E to be applied, although it may make it difficult for the spouse in some ways to prove a bona fide attempt to return home. That difficulty can always be got over by the deserting spouse writing a suitable and bona fide letter and sending it by registered post to the deserted one.

SOMERVELL, L.J.: I agree.

F DENNING, L.J.: I agree so fully with all that BUCKNILL, L.J., has said that I do not wish to add anything, except to say that I do not accept the correctness of Bostock v. Bostock (2). I take it that the principle of McTaggart v. McTaggart (1) applies not only to probation officers, but also to other persons such as clergy, doctors, or marriage guidance counsellors, to whom the parties resort with a view to reconciliation when there is a tacit understanding that the G conversations are without prejudice. I see no reason why the solicitors of the parties should be in any different position.

Appeal allowed; new trial ordered.

Solicitors: Smiles & Co. (for the wife).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. AVES.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Parker, JJ.), June 19, 1950.]

Criminal Law—Receiving—Recent possession of stolen property—Direction to be given to jury.

On an appeal against a conviction of receiving stolen goods,

HELD: where the only evidence on such a charge is that the accused person was found in possession of property recently stolen, the jury should be directed that they may infer guilty knowledge (a) if the prisoner offers no explanation to account for his possession, or (b) if they are satisfied that the explanation he does offer is untrue, but, if the explanation offered is one which leaves the jury in doubt whether he knew that the property was stolen, they should be told that the case has not been proved, and, therefore, the verdict should be Not Guilty.

[AS TO POSSESSION OF GOODS RECENTLY STOLEN, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 9, pp. 555, 556, para. 944; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 15, pp. 972, 973, Nos. 10,861-10,879.]

Case referred to:

- (1) R. v. Schama, R. v. Abramovitch, (1914), 84 L.J.K.B. 396; 112 L.T. 480; 79 J.P. 184; 15 Digest 972, 10,865.

APPEAL against a conviction of receiving.

The appellant was convicted at London Sessions on an indictment charging him with receiving stolen property. The Court of Criminal Appeal now dismissed the appeal, and LORD GODDARD, C.J., indicated a proper form of summing-up to be adopted in receiving cases where the evidence is only that of recent possession.

C. I. Poole for the appellant.

S. A. Morton for the Crown.

LORD GODDARD, C.J., delivered the judgment of the court in which he stated the facts, said that one of the grounds on which the appeal was based was that the jury had not been properly directed in accordance with what had been laid down in R. v. Schama and Abramovitch (1), and continued: Where the only evidence is that an accused person is in possession of property recently stolen, a jury may infer guilty knowledge (a) if he offers no explanation to account for his possession, or (b) if the jury are satisfied that the explanation he does offer is untrue. If, however, the explanation offered is one which leaves the jury in doubt whether he knew the property was stolen, they should be told that the case has not been proved, and, therefore, the verdict should be Not Guilty.

I think I might add this as an addendum to the formula above stated. If there is evidence that the prisoner was in possession of property recently stolen and also other evidence which tends to show guilty knowledge, then the judge should direct the jury in the terms which I have mentioned on the question of recent possession, and should then go on to deal with the other evidence against the prisoner which may or may not be consistent with the explanation, if any, which he has given.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Registrar, Court of Criminal Appeal (for the appellant); Solicitor, Metropolitan Police (for the Crown).

[Reported by H. McL. MORRISON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

CONWAY v. GEORGE WIMPEY & CO., LTD.

[KING'S BENCH DIVISION (Sellers, J.), June 8, 9, 12, 20, 1950.]

Negligence—Negligence of servant—Liability of master—Accident to unauthorised passenger in lorry—Extent of duty to take care.

A The defendants were a firm of contractors engaged on building work at an aerodrome, and they provided lorries for the purpose of conveying their employees to the place of their work on the site. In the cab of each lorry was a notice indicating that the driver was under strict orders to carry no passengers other than the defendants' employees during the course of and in connection with their employment, and that any other person travelling on the vehicle did so at his own risk. The driver of the lorry in question in the present case had also received oral instructions to that effect. In fact, it was not unusual for men not employed by the defendants to make use of the defendants' lorries as a means of transport, although it was not established that the defendants knew of the practice. The plaintiff, a labourer employed by P., Ltd., another firm of contractors engaged on work at the aerodrome, while on his way to work, hailed one of the defendants' lorries and was permitted by the driver to ride on it for some distance across the aerodrome. In dismounting the plaintiff was injured, and he claimed damages from the defendants for the driver's negligence.

B HELD: the driver of the lorry was acting outside the scope of his employment in carrying the plaintiff and had no authority to do so, and, therefore, the defendants were not liable for his negligence.

C [AS TO THE DUTY TO TAKE CARE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 23, pp. 571, 572, para. 825; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 36, pp. 12-16, Nos. 33-60.]

Cases referred to:

- E (1) Hay (or Bourhill) v. Young, [1942] 2 All E.R. 396; [1943] A.C. 92; 111 L.J.P.C. 97; 167 L.T. 261; 2nd Digest Supp.
 (2) Twine v. Bean's Express, Ltd., (1946), 175 L.T. 131; 2nd Digest Supp.
 (3) Davis v. Swan Motor Co. (Swansea), Ltd., [1949] 1 All E.R. 620; [1949] 2 K.B. 291.
 (4) Buckland v. Guildford Gas Light & Coke Co., [1948] 2 All E.R. 1086; [1949] 1 K.B. 410; 113 J.P. 44; 2nd Digest Supp.

ACTION.

F The plaintiff claimed that the defendants were liable for the negligence of a lorry driver employed by them, as a result of which he suffered physical injury. The jury having found that the driver was equally responsible with the plaintiff for the accident, the question of the defendants' liability was, by agreement between the parties, left to the judge. The facts appear in the judgment.

Seuffert for the plaintiff.H. Edmunds for the defendants.Cur. adv. vult.

H June 20. SELLERS, J., delivered the following judgment. This case was tried by a jury, and by agreement between the parties it was left to me to decide, on the law and on the evidence and such inferences therefrom as I was free to make, whether the defendants were liable for any negligence the jury might find against the driver of the defendants' lorry concerned in the accident.

On May 1, 1948, the plaintiff was employed as a labourer by some contractors, named J. W. Page, Ltd., at Heath Row aerodrome. On his way to work, shortly before 8 a.m., he hailed a lorry belonging to the defendants and driven by their servant, which was crossing the aerodrome taking a number of the defendants' servants to their work. The lorry stopped, and the plaintiff was given a lift for a short distance. After some communication with the driver, the plaintiff dismounted over the off-side of the lorry and somehow got his right leg under the off-side rear wheel, whereby the leg was so badly crushed that it had to be amputated a few inches below the knee. The circumstances in which the plaintiff dismounted were fully dealt with before the jury, who found both the plaintiff and the lorry driver equally responsible for the accident. The plaintiff's special damage, mainly for accrued loss of wages, had been agreed at £555. A The jury assessed the general damages at £1,000 and awarded the plaintiff half of that, £500 and all the special damage, £1,055 in all. Notwithstanding that the jury held the parties equally to blame, counsel for the defendants accepted that the jury were entitled to award damages as they did and he did not wish to argue that only half of the special damage could be recovered. In these circumstances, and as, in my view, the plaintiff cannot recover at all, that B interesting, and, perhaps, difficult, question does not arise for my determination.

In the course of the argument on the issue for my consideration, it was accepted by the plaintiff's counsel that the defendants' liability could only be based on a vicarious responsibility for the negligence of their servant, the driver of the lorry, but on occasions the argument seemed to go beyond this. The defendants were the main contractors for the building of the Heath Row C aerodrome where they employed many men. As the area is large and the men worked in a number of scattered places, the defendants customarily had a number of lorries available at appropriate times for the conveyance of their men. The vehicle in question was an open lorry, with sides and back, designed for the cartage of materials and with no provision for men to get on or off except by climbing over the back or sides as best they could. On the offside towards D the cab there was a tank under the level of the lorry floor, which could be used as a foot-rest or step and which the plaintiff was using at the time of the accident. In addition to the defendants, there were other contractors on the site, including the plaintiff's employers, who had only a small number of men working there. It was not unusual for men not employed by the defendants to get a lift across the aerodrome on the defendants' "men-carrying" lorries. The plaintiff knew of this practice, and I accept his statement that he thought he had as much E right as anyone else to ride in them. His view was that there was no question about it. He had not seen a notice or been told to the contrary. Other witnesses stated that these lorries were frequently used by men who were not servants of the defendants. The men working on the aerodrome had no marks F distinguishing those employed by the defendants from others, and I am not satisfied that the defendants' drivers in general knowingly carried men who were not the defendants' servants, or that the defendants' driver on this occasion took the plaintiff on the lorry knowing that he was not one of the defendants' men.

It was not suggested, and certainly it was not established, that the defendants G knew that men other than their own were using the lorries in this way. The argument was that the defendants ought to have known what was happening and that the plaintiff and others like him would use the lorries, and, therefore, they owed a duty to such persons as those who might reasonably be anticipated by them to be likely to be injured by the negligent driving of their servant: Hay (or Bourhill) v. Young (1). Such considerations are relevant in H considering the duty and obligations of the driver of the vehicle, but, in my view, they are not relevant in considering the responsibility of the defendants. The defendants were clearly under no duty to provide free rides for other contractors' servants or anyone else who happened to be crossing the aerodrome. Neither were the defendants under any duty to give them notice that the lorries were not for them. The defendants limited the scope of the driver's duty and authority in the present case by the following notice which was affixed in the cab and of which the driver was fully aware:

"The driver of this vehicle has strict orders to carry no passengers other than employees of G. Wimpey & Co., Ltd., during the course of and in connection with their employment. Any other person travelling on this vehicle does so at his own risk."

The driver had also received express oral instructions from the defendants' transport manager that he was to carry the defendants' men only.

A In these circumstances, I cannot find that the plaintiff has established against the defendants any right to be on the lorry or any authority in the driver to allow him to be there and to be driven thereon. The case, as I see it, is completely covered by the decision of the Court of Appeal in Twine v. Bean's Express, Ltd. (2), and the reasoning of LORD GREENE, M.R., therein from which I take two short extracts (175 L.T. 132):

B " . . . if the question is asked : Was the driver, Harrison, in giving a lift to the deceased man acting within the scope of his employment ? The answer is clearly 'No.' He was doing something that he had no right whatsoever to do, and qua the deceased man he was as much on a frolic of his own as if he had been driving somewhere on some amusement of his own quite unauthorised by his employers . . . He was in fact doing
C two things at once. He was driving his van from one place to another by a route that he was properly taking when he ran into the omnibus, and as he was driving the van he was acting within the scope of his employment. The other thing that he was doing simultaneously was something totally outside the scope of his employment, namely, giving a lift to a person who had no right whatsoever to be there. In my opinion, once
D the facts are understood the case is a perfectly simple one, and there is only one answer to it."

It was argued for the plaintiff that the written notice in the cab was a general notice which might well be applicable when the vehicle was travelling on the highways, but that the conditions in the aerodrome were quite different and called for specific instructions in respect of the special circumstances there,
E and reliance was placed on the fact that after this accident notice boards were put up by the defendants in certain convenient and conspicuous places on the aerodrome stating that the lorries were for the defendants' men only. I do not feel able to accept those contentions. They still leave the driver without authority at the material time to carry the plaintiff, and the plaintiff without authority or title to be on the lorry at the time of this accident which F has had so unfortunate a result for him.

I was referred in the course of the argument on behalf of the plaintiff to Davis v. Swan Motor Co. (Swansea), Ltd. (3), and to Buckland v. Guildford Gas Light and Coke Co. (4), but these cases do not refer to vicarious liability of employers for the acts of their servants. They deal, in my view, with quite different issues. I give judgment for the defendants with costs.

G Order accordingly.

Solicitors: J. H. Milner & Son (for the plaintiff); Stanley & Co. (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re PRIMROSE (BUILDERS), LTD.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Wynn-Parry, J.), May 25, 1950.]

Company—Winding-up—Preferential creditor—Advances for payment of wages—Advances by bank on current account on being satisfied that an amount equal to advance would shortly be paid in—Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38), s. 319 (4).

On Apr. 30, 1948, a company opened a current account with a bank and arranged to overdraw the account up to £175, the limit of the overdraft being subsequently raised to £3,500 and later to £5,500. No payment into the account was appropriated either by the company or by the bank to meet any particular payment out. In July, 1948, the company was informed by the bank that drawings must be restricted to wages only, in the absence of further credits, and the bank also requested the substantial reduction of the overdraft. In August, 1948, the bank indicated that an increase in the overdraft could not be permitted even for the payment of wages. During the relevant period of four months under the Companies Act, 1948, s. 319 (1), nine cheques were presented, the first two made out to "cash," and the rest to "wages," and on the presentation of each cheque the bank insisted on being satisfied, before honouring it, that payment in of about the same or of a greater amount would shortly be made. On May 9, 1949, the company was compulsorily wound-up and the bank claimed to be preferential creditors under the Companies Act, 1948, s. 319 (4), in respect of amounts advanced by them during the preceding four months for the purpose of paying wages.

HELD: the account had been conducted throughout as an ordinary current account; the payments which the bank required to be made into the account were in general reduction of the overdraft and were not to be regarded as having been appropriated to the refunding of the sums supplied by the bank in cashing the cheques drawn for wages; and, therefore, the bank were entitled to be treated as preferential creditors under s. 319 (4).

Rule in Clayton's Case (1816) (1 Mer. 572), applied.

[AS TO RIGHTS OF PERSON ADVANCING MONEY TO PAY CLERK OR SERVANT, see HALSBURY, 1949 Edn., Vol. 5, p. 752, para. 1224; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 10, pp. 944-946, Nos. 6466-6477.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) National Provincial Bank, Ltd. v. Freedman and Rubens, (1934), (unreported).
- (2) Clayton's Case, (1816), 1 Mer. 572; 35 E.R. 781; 3 Digest 179, 334.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS issued by the National Provincial Bank, Ltd., in the compulsory winding-up of Messrs. Primrose (Builders), Ltd., for an order that a decision of the liquidator rejecting the bank's claim to priority under the Companies Act, 1948, s. 319, be varied. The bank originally claimed to have priority in respect of advances in respect of wages amounting to £3,646 8s. 11d., but now claimed to have the liquidator's decision varied to the extent of £2,524 9s. 11d. only. The facts appear in the judgment.

P. J. Sykes for the National Provincial Bank, Ltd.

O. J. Shaw for the liquidator.

WYNN-PARRY, J.: The company was incorporated in December, 1947, and on May 9, 1949, it was ordered to be wound-up compulsorily. In due course the bank lodged a proof, claiming to rank as preferential creditors in respect of amounts advanced by them to the company for the purpose of paying wages and salaries and accrued holiday remuneration. The total amount of the advances specified in the proof is £3,646 8s. 11d. I should add that the bank also lodged a proof claiming in respect of other moneys to rank as unsecured creditors. As regards the proof claiming to rank as preferential creditors, the liquidator rejected the claim in toto on various grounds, and the question which I have to determine is whether or not, and, if so, to what extent, he was justified in doing so.

By the Companies Act, 1948, s. 319 (1), it is provided:

- A “In a winding-up there shall be paid in priority to all other debts . . .
(b) all wages or salary . . . of any clerk or servant in respect of services rendered to the company during four months next before the relevant date . . .”

which, under s. 319 (8) (d) (i), in the case of a company which has been ordered to be wound-up compulsorily, is the date of the order, assuming, as was the case here, that no provisional liquidator had been appointed. By sub-s. (4) of that section it is provided:

- C “Where any payment has been made—(a) to any clerk, servant, workman or labourer in the employment of a company, on account of wages or salary; or (b) to any such clerk, servant, workman or labourer or, in the case of his death, to any other person in his right, on account of accrued holiday remuneration; out of money advanced by some person for that purpose, the person by whom the money was advanced shall in a winding-up have a right of priority in respect of the money so advanced and paid up to the amount by which the sum in respect of which the clerk, servant, workman or labourer, or other person in his right, would have been entitled to priority in the winding-up has been diminished by reason of the payment having been made.”

It is to be observed, in regard to that sub-section, that there is no obligation on the person seeking to rank as a preferential creditor to show that the money advanced for the purposes specified in paras. (a) and (b) of that sub-section was so advanced pursuant to any agreement or arrangement, nor, in my view, is it incumbent on such person to assert and prove that his aim in so advancing such money was with a view to becoming a preferential creditor. If he satisfies the conditions in the sub-section, the result, as a matter of law, will be that he achieves the priority given by the section.

- G The facts in this case are to be extracted from a volume of affidavit evidence, as supplemented by the cross-examination of two of the deponents—Mr. F Pollard, the manager of the branch of the bank at which the company kept its account, and Mr. Primrose, the chairman and managing director of the company. The account was opened on Apr. 30, 1948, the company being introduced by a Mr. Simmance, who was already a customer of the bank. The arrangement at the outset was that the company should be entitled to overdraw its account up to a limit of £175, the bank being induced to agree to that course on having a guarantee from Mr. Simmance, limited to £200. Subsequently, the authorised limit of the overdraft was raised, first, to £3,500, and, secondly, to £5,500, in each case, on the guarantee of Mr. Simmance, together with the lodging with the bank by him of security collateral to the respective guarantees. Throughout the whole period the account was conducted as a normal current account.

- H According to the evidence of Mr. Pollard, which I accept, no payments into this account were ever appropriated either by the company or by the bank to meet any particular payments out, nor was there any agreement between the company and the bank that there should be any such appropriation, and Mr. Pollard told me that, had such a thing been suggested, he would not have agreed to it. I am satisfied from his evidence that he kept a watch on the account and that over the latter part of the period he kept a very close watch on it. In July, 1948, Mr. Pollard told Mr. Primrose that the company's drawings on the account must be restricted to wages only, in the absence of further credits. He agreed with him to allow the company to draw two cheques for £237 odd and £277 odd for wages, pending the receipt of the remittance which he said he was expecting. Later, on at least two occasions, Mr. Pollard, acting on the instructions of his head office, told Mr. Primrose that the overdraft must be substantially reduced within a reasonable period and also indicated that he did not intend to allow the overdraft to be increased even to pay wages. A

It appears to me that this desire of the bank that the overdraft should not be increased by payment of wages in the absence of further credits, and their desire that the overdraft should, within a reasonable time, be reduced, provides the whole key to the various subsequent conversations between Mr. Pollard and Mr. Primrose. There is a wealth of evidence which I do not propose to review in detail, but, in my judgment, it comes to this, that over the material period the course was followed that, first on Fridays, and latterly on Thursdays, which, according to the evidence, is the usual day in the building trade on which money for wages is drawn from the bank, cheques were presented by the company to the bank. Those cheques, for the last four months before the winding-up order, which is the period contemplated by s. 319 of the Act, were made out in the first two cases to "cash," and in the rest of the cases to "wages." In the case of every one of the material cheques—there are nine—except in the case of one for a sum of £55 drawn on Feb. 17, 1949, the details of the manner in which payment was required are written on the back of the cheque, and on every occasion Mr. Pollard or his assistant insisted on being satisfied, before agreeing to honour those cheques, that a payment or payments substantially equal to or exceeding the amount thereof would shortly be paid in. B C D

On behalf of the liquidator it is argued that the arrangement on each occasion was a special arrangement by which the bank agreed to make the particular advance—for on each occasion it was an advance—on the terms that that particular advance should be repaid within a short time through the expected credit being paid in. For the bank it is insisted that no such arrangement was ever made, and that the only object which Mr. Pollard had in being satisfied on each occasion that payments substantially equal to the particular wages cheque should be paid in was to ensure that in the result the overdraft should not be substantially increased. It is said against Mr. Pollard that certain language, which he used to Mr. Primrose and which admittedly was somewhat loose language, supports the liquidator's contention, because, as is said by Mr. Pollard himself, to take but one example, on Nov. 13, 1948, following on instructions received by him from his head office, he told Mr. Primrose that no increase in the borrowing would be allowed, and that wages would have to be provided for or any increase in the overdraft secured. He explains that by the words "provided for" he meant that the overdraft must not increase by the payment of the wages cheques, and that there must be sums paid in to the account to prevent such increase. On behalf of the liquidator it is said that that supports his contention that there was this special arrangement in each case, but, on the other hand, when such a conversation is related to the context, and when one remembers that it had been impressed on Mr. Primrose that, while the bank was willing, so far as it could, to honour cheques for wages, it was not willing that the overdraft should be increased, and, indeed, was anxious that it should be permanently reduced, the words used by Mr. Pollard have quite a different significance. E F G H

I have the guidance of what was said by CLAUSON, J., in the unreported case of National Provincial Bank, Ltd. v. Freedman and Rubens (1), which is a very similar case to the present, and unfortunately did not find its way into the reports. In that case, CLAUSON, J., said on an almost exactly similar contention:

"The truth of it is that danger always occurs when loose expressions used by the people whose business it is to carry on the details of business are regarded with more attention than the real settled methods of business which appear in the books kept by banks and other responsible persons."

As I have said, the account which the bank kept with the company, the pass sheets relating to which were regularly supplied to the company and which evoked no protest from them, disclosed a true current running account, and that circumstance is a strong pointer to the accuracy of Mr. Pollard's evidence in this regard.

The matter really comes down to this: Is the rule in Clayton's Case (2) to be applied to this account, or is there sufficient evidence before me to show that that rule, by agreement between the parties, was not to apply as regards these particular cheques drawn for "cash" or "wages"? Everything, in my view, points to the conclusion that the rule in Clayton's Case (2) does apply, and that there is not only no sufficient evidence, but, in my judgment, no evidence at all on which a court could come to the conclusion that that rule was to any extent, by agreement between the parties, not to apply in any particular instance.

Here, again, I am fortified in my conclusion by what was said by CLAUSON, J., earlier in his judgment in National Provincial Bank, Ltd. v. Freedman and Rubens (1) as follows:

"There is a suggestion that there were conversations of a somewhat loose character from which it can be inferred that there was an arrangement that the cheques paid in were to be used simply to provide the cash to pay the wages. What seems to me to be most important is the way in which the account was kept. The way the account was kept shows perfectly clearly that that was not the transaction at all. The transaction was that these cheques reduced the overdraft, and that is the meaning of the bank account as it appears. I have got it before me. The cheques reduced the overdraft. The bank manager, whatever loose language he may have used, was not going to let the overdraft be permanently increased, and accordingly it was necessary for him to take care that the wages cheque was not paid until these cheques had gone into the account. But those cheques did not provide the wages; those cheques reduced the overdraft, and the wages cheque was paid by money which was advanced by the bank for the purpose. And that is shown in the clearest terms in the form of the account."

The only possible distinction which can be drawn between that case and the present one is that, owing to the greater degree of accommodation which the bank was prepared to afford in this case, the wages cheques were honoured before the expected credits were received. So far from that affording a reason for not following the earlier case, it appears to me to make the present case a fortiori.

In those circumstances, in my judgment, the conditions of the Companies Act, 1948, s. 319 (4), are fulfilled by the bank, because it is agreed to the extent of the figure which I have mentioned, viz., £2,524 9s. 11d., that the moneys advanced by the bank, in the circumstances to which I have referred, were applied in the payment of wages, and I find as a fact that those moneys were advanced by the bank for that purpose. To the extent of that sum, this application succeeds, and the decision of the liquidator must pro tanto be reversed.

Order accordingly. Costs to be paid out of the assets.

Solicitors: Wilde, Sapte & Co. (for the applicants); J. E. Baring & Co. (for the respondent).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

JOHN M. BROWN, LTD. v. BESTWICK.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., Cohen and Singleton, L.JJ.), June 16, 1950.]

Rent Restriction—Statutory tenant—Retention of possession after end of contractual tenancy—Lease of shop and dwelling-house—Dwelling-house sub-let—Expiration of lease—Tenant not then occupying dwelling-house—Subsequent resumption of possession—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 15 (1). A

By a lease dated Dec. 9, 1935, premises described as a shop and dwelling-house were let to the tenant until Dec. 25, 1949. During the currency of the lease he ceased to occupy the upper part of the premises which constituted the dwelling-house and sub-let it, and at the expiration of the lease he occupied only the business part of the premises. On Feb. 7, 1950, the sub-tenant vacated the premises, and the tenant resumed possession and took up his residence there with his family. On Feb. 20, 1950, the landlords began proceedings to recover possession, and the tenant pleaded that he was a statutory tenant protected by the Increase of Rent and Mortgage interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, s. 15 (1). B

HELD: on the expiration of the lease the tenant's contractual tenancy had come to an end and he had no statutory tenancy because at that time he was not in occupation of any part of the premises as a residence; on Dec. 25, 1949, therefore, he had ceased to have any interest in the premises for the purposes of the Rent Restrictions Acts, and his former interest was not revived by the fact that on Feb. 7, 1950, he obtained from his former sub-tenant possession of the residential part of the premises and took up his residence there; and, accordingly, the landlords were entitled to possession. C

Haskins v. Lewis ([1931] 2 K.B. 1), applied. D

[AS TO STATUTORY TENANTS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 334, 355, paras. 400, 401; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 556-559, Nos. 7029-7064 and Digest Supp.] E

Cases referred to:

- (1) Prout v. Hunter, [1924] 2 K.B. 736; 93 L.J.K.B. 993; 132 L.T. 193; 31 Digest 557, 7040.
- (2) Leslie & Co. v. Cumming, [1926] 2 K.B. 417; 95 L.J.K.B. 1007; 135 L.T. 443; 31 Digest 557, 7041.
- (3) Skinner v. Geary, [1931] 2 K.B. 546; 100 L.J.K.B. 718; 145 L.T. 675; 95 J.P. 194; Digest Supp. F
- (4) Haskins v. Lewis, [1931] 2 K.B. 1; 100 L.J.K.B. 180; 144 L.T. 378; 95 J.P. 57; Digest Supp.
- (5) Remon v. City of London Real Property Co., [1921] 1 K.B. 49; 89 L.J.K.B. 1105; 123 L.T. 617; 31 Digest 556, 7032.
- (6) Hutchinson v. Jauncey, [1950] 1 All E.R. 165; [1950] 1 K.B. 574. G

APPEAL by the landlords from a decision of His Honour JUDGE WILLES, sitting at Derby County Court, dated Mar. 22, 1950, dismissing an action for possession of a dwelling-house, part of which was used for business purposes, on the ground that the tenant was a statutory tenant at the date when the proceedings were commenced. The facts appear in the judgment of COHEN, L.J. H

L. A. Blundell for the landlords.

R. E. Megarry for the tenant.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSHERD, M.R.: I will ask COHEN, L.J., to deliver the first judgment.

COHEN, L.J.: This appeal raises a short point, but, like most short points under the Rent Restrictions Acts, it is not an easy one. The premises in question, situate at 143, London Road, Derby, were demised to the tenant on Dec. 9, 1935, under a fourteen years' lease which expired on Dec. 25, 1949. In that lease the demised premises were described as a shop and dwelling-house. During the currency of the lease the tenant ceased to occupy the upper part of the house which constituted the dwelling-house and sub-let it to a Mrs. Robinson. When the lease expired on Dec. 25, 1949, the sub-tenant was still in possession and the tenant occupied nothing but the shop and two other rooms on the ground floor which were used for business purposes, so that, at that time, the tenant was not residing on the premises or using any portion of them as a dwelling-house. The landlords then gave notice to the tenant that they required him to give up possession of the shop and also to get possession of the upper part of the premises from the sub-tenant. On Jan. 9, 1950, the sub-tenant paid one week's rent to the landlords or their agents. The tenant complied with the second portion of the request made by the landlords and got the sub-tenant out of the premises. She gave notice to the landlords that she had vacated them, but she gave possession of the premises, not to the landlords, but to the tenant. On Feb. 7 the tenant resumed possession of the upper part and went to live there with his wife and daughter. On Feb. 20, 1950, the landlords began proceedings against the tenant to recover possession. The landlords contended that as at the date on which the lease expired the tenant was not in possession or occupying any part of the premises as a dwelling-house he never became a statutory tenant thereof and could not claim to remain there under the provisions of the Rent Restrictions Acts, 1920-1939. The tenant argued that the county court judge must look at the position as it was on the date at which the plaint was issued, and that, as at that date he, who had been the contractual tenant, was in occupation of the premises, he was entitled to remain there under s. 15 (1) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920. He relied on Prout v. Hunter (1) and Leslie & Co. v. Cumming (2) as supporting that proposition, and the county court judge very reluctantly acceded to that submission.

From that decision the landlords appeal. They contend that the purpose of the Act is, as appears from Skinner v. Geary (3) and other cases, to protect residential tenancies, and that for the tenant to retain possession within the meaning of s. 15 he must reside on the premises. I do not propose to refer to all the cases to which counsel for the landlords called our attention. I think it is sufficient if I mention Haskins v. Lewis (4) where premises consisted of a basement, ground floor, first floor, and second floor. The tenant originally carried on a tailor's business in the shop which was on the ground floor and resided in the house with his family. He ceased to carry on the tailor's business and his daughter carried on a drapery business on the ground floor while his son carried on a betting business on the first floor. The tenant later removed to another house and sub-let two rooms in the basement of the original premises to one sub-tenant and two rooms on the second floor to another sub-tenant, in each case as a residence. The landlord then served notice to quit on the tenant and began proceedings for possession. The tenant sought to rely on the protection given by the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, and the county court judge found as a fact that the ground floor and the first floor constituted business premises and that the tenant had sub-let the remainder of the premises and so parted with possession of them. The Court of Appeal decided by a majority, SCRUTTON, L.J., and ROMER, L.J., GREER, L.J., dubitante ([1931] 2 K.B. 2):

"... that an order could be made for the recovery by the landlord of possession of the whole of the premises, notwithstanding that the basement and second floor had been sub-let to two tenants as residences, those sub-tenants being protected by s. 5 (5) and s. 15 (3), of the Rent Restrictions Act, 1920 ..."

The ratio decidendi on which SCRUTTON and ROMER, L.J.J., proceeded is, I think, most clearly stated in the passage from the judgment of ROMER, L.J., where he said ([1931] 2 K.B. 18):

"If it be right, as I think it is, to say that a tenant, who has given up possession of the whole of the premises, or who has sub-let the whole of the premises, is not entitled to the protection of the Act when his contractual tenancy comes to an end, it is equally true that where the contractual tenancy has come to an end and the tenant has given up possession of the residential portion of the premises and only remains in possession of part of the premises used solely for business purposes he is outside the protection afforded by the Act."

That passage prima facie covers in terms the facts of the present case. Counsel for the tenant pointed out, however, that the mind of the court was not there directed to what the position would have been if, as here, a tenant who had given up possession of the residential portion of the premises had recovered possession of them, no matter how, before proceedings were begun by the landlord to recover possession of the premises. In such a case, he said, the principle laid down by the Divisional Court in Prout v. Hunter (1) applies. He said there would be the utmost inconvenience if a different test were to be applied in deciding whether or not premises were within the Act, on the one hand, and, on the other hand, whether or not the tenant was a statutory tenant of those premises. It is clear, I think, from the cases that were cited that it has been held that, in determining whether or not a house is a dwelling-house to which the Act applies, regard must be had to the position at the moment of time when the plaint is issued, but it does not seem to me necessarily to follow from that that the same date must be looked at in deciding whether or not the tenant can properly claim to be a tenant of those premises either as contractual tenant or as statutory tenant. That conclusion would, I think, be inconsistent with the provisions of s. 15 (1) of the Act of 1920, which provides:

"A tenant who by virtue of the provisions of this Act retains possession of any dwelling-house to which this Act applies shall, so long as he retains possession, observe and be entitled to the benefit of all the terms and conditions of the original contract of tenancy . . ."

It seems to me an essential ingredient that the tenant should retain possession continuously of the dwelling-house. In saying that, I am not, of course, ignoring that in some cases he might retain possession although he was not in personal occupation. For instance, he might retain possession, if he were a sailor at sea, by the presence of his wife and furniture on the premises, or if he ceases to occupy the premises temporarily owing to ill health, as in one case cited by counsel for the tenant. Apart from such exceptional cases, however, where the intention to return is fully established, it seems to me that the tenant is not entitled to rely on the protection of s. 15 (1) unless he is continuously in residential occupation of the premises. I think, further, that that conclusion is reinforced, as counsel for the landlords submitted, by the provisions of sub-s. (3) of the section which provides:

"Where the interest of a tenant of a dwelling-house to which this Act applies is determined, either as the result of an order or judgment for possession or ejectment, or for any other reason, any sub-tenant to whom the premises or any part thereof have been lawfully sub-let shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, be deemed to become the tenant of the landlord on the same terms as he would have held from the tenant if the tenancy had continued."

On the facts of the present case the sub-tenant would clearly become the tenant of the landlords if the condition prescribed at the beginning of sub-s. (3) had been established and the interest of the tenant had been determined. That his contractual interest had determined is beyond argument, but counsel for the tenant sought to induce us to hold that his interest as a statutory tenant had not determined. If the date of Dec. 26, 1949, is regarded, it is plain that he was in occupation of no residential part of the premises. He was in occupation only of the shop. It seems to me that we should be applying the Act for a purpose for which it was plainly not intended if we were to hold that the occupation of business premises which are not protected by the Act was sufficient to preserve an interest for the tenant in the premises and prevent sub-s. (3) operating. It seems to me that on Dec. 25, 1949, the tenant ceased to have any interest in the premises for the purposes of the Rent Acts. I do not think the interest can be revived by the fact that he obtained from his former sub-tenant—I say “former” because she had ceased to be his sub-tenant on Dec. 25, 1949—possession of the premises on Feb. 7, 1950.

Counsel for the tenant suggested that so to hold was inconsistent with the decision of this court in Remon v. City of London Real Property Co. (5). In that case the question at issue was different. The question was whether a tenant who had admittedly remained in possession of premises continuously from the time that his contractual tenancy had come to an end could rely on the Increase of Rent, &c., Act, 1920, which afforded him protection, but did not come into force until after the determination of his contractual tenancy. The Court of Appeal held that he could. BANKES, L.J., said ([1921] 1 K.B. 54):

“It is however clear that in all the Rent Restrictions Acts the expression ‘tenant’ has been used in a special, a peculiar sense, and as including a person who might be described as an ex-tenant, some one whose occupation had commenced as tenant and who had continued in occupation without any legal right to do so except possibly such as the Acts themselves conferred upon him.”

This court had to consider the effect of that case in Hutchinson v. Jauncey (6) where SIR RAYMOND EVERSHERD, M.R., said, in the course of his judgment, that Remon v. City of London Real Property Co. (5) showed that, in determining the question whether or not the tenant was entitled to possession, the court must have regard to the law as it was when the court was deciding the matter. It is manifest that, having regard to the various questions which arise under the Acts in relation to different subject-matters, different dates may be material. I do not think there is anything in Remon’s case (5) which affects the question which we are now determining. I would add, too, that that case seems to depend on the continued occupation of the premises by the tenant. In the present case there was no such continued occupation and I cannot see any answer to the point which counsel for the landlords made, that on Dec. 26, 1949, the tenant’s contractual tenancy had come to an end and there was no statutory tenancy since at that time he was not in occupation of any part of the premises as a residence. It seems to me that, if we were to come to a contrary conclusion we should be using Acts which were intended to protect residential premises for the purpose of protecting business tenancies which are outside the Act.

For these reasons I have come to the conclusion that we can accede to the request which the county court judge made at the end of his judgment, when he said he sincerely hoped that on appeal his decision might be found to be erroneous. I would allow the appeal.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSHERD, M.R.: I agree. The tenant has sought to establish a legal right under this somewhat complex legislation to the continued occupation of these premises on part of which he has for many years carried on his business. The question is whether, in the circumstances, he is entitled to remain? Counsel for the tenant said that he would be in much greater difficulty if during the interregnum between Christmas, 1949, and the re-entry into possession by the tenant in February, 1950, he had been in occupation of no part of the premises. He did not concede that in those circumstances he must have failed, but he did agree that his case would have been more difficult. I think that on that hypothesis he would have failed for the simple reason that he could not then say that he was a tenant who had "retained possession" of a dwelling-house. Counsel for the tenant, as the foundation of his case, has argued that on the facts of the present case, the tenant did retain possession and continue to occupy that part of the premises which was used for business purposes, and, by so doing, when he came to occupy again the residential part, the latter occupation was, so to speak, fed by the continued occupation of the business part so as to enable the tenant to relate back his occupation of the whole premises after Feb. 7 to the original contractual tenancy, since there was originally a demise only of the one composite set of premises.

In my judgment, that distinction does not prevail. It seems to me that during what I have called the interregnum the tenant is unable to show that he was occupying anything as a dwelling-house, and, therefore, the necessary nexus was broken and the necessary condition for the bringing into existence of a statutory tenancy in the tenant was destroyed. I think, as COHEN, L.J., has stated, that the fact that, so far as I can see, the sub-tenant acquired a statutory tenancy of the residential part is a further and grave obstacle in the tenant's way, for his own alleged statutory tenancy quoad the residential part is, so to speak, separated from its contractual parent by a statutory tenancy in another, to which the tenant's statutory tenancy is not alleged to bear any kind of relation. It is true that in Haskins v. Lewis (4) the point we have to determine was not before the court. I agree, however, that the passage which COHEN, L.J., has cited from the judgment of ROMER, L.J., as a matter of principle covers the present case and I, therefore, follow it. As regards Remon v. City of London Real Property Co. (5) I can add nothing to what COHEN, L.J., has said by way of grounds for thinking that in this case it has no application. The essential condition of occupation of the dwelling-house as such was not satisfied during the period until February, 1950, and for the reasons already stated I think by that time the chain was broken. For these reasons I think that this appeal should be allowed.

SINGLETON, L.J.: I agree.

Appeal allowed with costs in both courts.

Solicitors: Gregory, Rowcliffe & Co., agents for Taylor, Simpson & Mosley, Derby (for the landlords); G. A. Hathway, agent for Flint, Bishop & Barnett, Derby (for the tenant).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

FOSTER v. ROBINSON.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., Cohen and Singleton, L.JJ.), June 19, 20, 21, 1950.]

Landlord and Tenant—Surrender of tenancy—Surrender by operation of law—Tenancy from year to year—Termination—Grant of licence to former tenant to occupy premises rent free.

Rent Restriction—Surrender of tenancy—Contractual tenancy from year to year—Agreement to terminate tenancy and grant of licence to former tenant—Validity.

The landlord, a farmer, was the owner of a cottage which had been occupied for many years by the defendant's father who worked for the landlord on the farm and paid a yearly rent of £6 10s. for the cottage. In May, 1946, the defendant's father, owing to age and infirmity, had ceased to work, and it was then verbally agreed between him and the landlord that he need not pay any further rent but could continue to live in the cottage for the rest of his life rent free. Thereafter rent was neither demanded nor tendered. The defendant's father remained in the cottage until Jan. 15, 1950, when he died intestate. The defendant, the administratrix of her father's estate, had lived with him in the cottage for a number of years and resided there at the time of his death. The landlord informed the defendant of his intention to sell the cottage with vacant possession on Apr. 6, 1950, and he allowed her to reside there rent free until that date, but she refused to leave the cottage. In an action for possession by the landlord the county court judge found that under the agreement between the landlord and the defendant's father in May, 1946, which was made in good faith, the contractual tenancy had ceased to exist and the defendant's father became a licensee with permission to occupy the cottage rent free for the remainder of his life, and that, as the parties had acted for nearly four years in conformity with the agreement, the defendant was now estopped from asserting that the original tenancy still existed. Accordingly, an order of possession was made in favour of the landlord. On appeal by the defendant,

HELD: (i) the agreement between the defendant's father and the landlord in May, 1946, was effectual to produce a surrender of the tenancy by operation of law, and the defendant was estopped from asserting that the old tenancy still existed.

Metcalfe v. Boyce ([1927] 1 K.B. 758), applied.

(ii) in determining the question whether there was a surrender by operation of law of premises within the control of the Rent Restrictions Acts, the same principles must be applied as those which would be applicable in any other case; there was sufficient evidence on which the county court judge could find that the agreement of May, 1946, was a genuine transaction; and there was nothing in the Rent Acts which would prevent its having effect as a surrender of the tenancy.

Turner v. Watts (1928) (97 L.J.K.B. 403), applied.

[AS TO SURRENDER BY OPERATION OF LAW, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 20, pp. 269-274, paras. 302-307; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 31, pp. 511-525, Nos. 6585-6718.]

FOR THE RENT AND MORTGAGE INTEREST RESTRICTIONS (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1933, s. 3 (1), see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 13, p. 1048.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Brown v. Draper, [1944] 1 All E.R. 246; [1944] K.B. 309; 113 L.J.K.B. 196; 170 L.T. 144; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Lyon v. Reed, (1844), 13 M. & W. 285; 13 L.J.Ex. 377; 3 L.T.O.S. 302; 153 E.R. 118; 31 Digest 512, 6596.
- (3) Wallis v. Hands, [1893] 2 Ch. 75; 62 L.J.Ch. 586; 68 L.T. 428; 31 Digest 135, 2696.
- (4) Winter Garden Theatre (London), Ltd. v. Millenium Productions, Ltd., [1947] 2 All E.R. 331; [1948] A.C. 173; [1947] L.J.R. 1422; 177 L.T. 349; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) Metcalfe v. Boyce, [1927] 1 K.B. 758; 96 L.J.K.B. 376; 136 L.T. 606; 91 J.P. 55; Digest Supp.
- (6) Oastler v. Henderson, (1877), 2 Q.B.D. 575; 46 L.J.Q.B. 607; 37 L.T. 22; 31 Digest 523, 6701.
- (7) Turner v. Watts, (1927), 97 L.J.K.B. 92; Affd., (1928), 97 L.J.K.B. 403; 138 L.T. 680; 92 J.P. 113; Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the defendant from a decision of His Honour JUDGE SHOVE at Scunthorpe and Brigg County Court, dated Apr. 5, 1950, granting possession of a cottage to the landlord.

The landlord, a farmer, was the owner of a cottage. Shortly after the 1914-1918 war the defendant's father was engaged to work for the landlord on his farm, and at the time of that engagement and in consequence of his employment the cottage was let to the defendant's father at a rent of £3 5s. a half year. Shortly before May, 1946, the defendant's father, owing to age and infirmity, gave up work, and in that month there was made between him and the landlord a verbal agreement whereby the existing tenancy was to cease, the landlord was not to charge rent any more, and the defendant's father was to be allowed to live in the cottage for the remainder of his life rent free. On Jan. 15, 1950, the defendant's father died. The defendant, a daughter of the deceased, had lived with him in the cottage for a number of years and was residing there at the date of his death. The landlord informed the defendant that it was his intention to sell the cottage, but that she could continue to reside there rent free until Apr. 6, 1950. On Feb. 18, 1950, letters of administration were granted to the defendant who refused to leave the cottage, claiming that at the date of his death her father was still a contractual tenant under the original tenancy and that that tenancy was now vested in her. The county court judge found that the agreement made between the landlord and the defendant's father in May, 1946, was a genuine transaction with the effect that the contractual tenancy ceased to exist and the defendant's father became a licensee with permission to remain in the cottage for the remainder of his life, and, as the parties had acted for nearly four years after May, 1946, in conformity with the agreement and as no rent had been tendered or demanded during that period, that the defendant was estopped from asserting that the original tenancy still existed and could not now deny that it had been validly determined. On appeal by the defendant it was contended on her behalf that the contractual tenancy of the cottage had not been determined either by agreement or by operation of law, and that the parties to the agreement made in May, 1946, could not, as between themselves, free the cottage from the protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts. The facts appear in the judgment of SIR RAYMOND EVERSHERD, M.R.

M. Hoare for the defendant.

Widgery for the landlord.

SIR RAYMOND EVERSHERD, M.R.: Although I have come to the conclusion that there is no ground for disturbing the decision of the county court judge, I would like to make it plain that I regard this as a case which, in the last resort, turns on a question of fact, and that there was evidence to support the essential finding of fact of the learned county court judge. I say that because I am not unmoved by some of the points made by counsel for the defendant to the effect that, if this decision is supported, those landlords who make a practice of studying decisions under the Rent Acts may seek to improve their position by making arrangements with their tenants which are based on this decision with a view to defeating the protection which the Acts intend to give to tenants.

The subject-matter of the action is property which until his death at the beginning of this year was in the occupation of Mr. Robinson, whose personal representative is the defendant. The main point which counsel for the defendant has argued is that the transaction relied on by the landlord amounted to a "contracting out of the Rent Act," and by that he meant doing something which seeks to circumvent the duty imposed by statute on the court. If that was the effect of the transaction, it might well be rendered ineffective on the ground stated. According to s. 3 (1) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933:

"No order or judgment for the recovery of possession of any dwelling-house to which the principal Acts apply or for the ejection of a tenant therefrom shall be made or given unless . . ."

On analysis, that part of the section amounts to this, that by no arrangement can the court be empowered (where the conditions are present, namely, where there is a dwelling-house and a tenant thereof within the ambit of the Rent Acts) to make an order for possession save subject to the conditions laid down in the section. I should be the last to suggest that there should be any reservation made to that general principle, and, indeed, it would be quite outside the competence of the court in any event to do so, but the language which I have read from s. 3 (1) presupposes that there is a dwelling-house to which the Rent Acts apply, namely, a dwelling-house let to a tenant as such. The real question in this case may fairly be put thus: Was there at the relevant date a letting to a tenant of a dwelling-house within the scope of the Rent Acts?

Another general point I will refer to in order that I may dispose of it. In Brown v. Draper (1) LORD GREENE, M.R., delivering the judgment of the court, pointed out ([1944] 1 All E.R. 247) that in the case of a rent-controlled property there are only two ways in which a tenant whose contractual tenancy has come to an end can lose the protection of the Acts. One is by giving up possession, and the other is by having an order made against him by the court. As counsel for the landlord pointed out, that observation in terms related to the case of a tenant whose contractual tenancy had come to an end—in other words, to the case of a statutory tenant. In the present case the only question open in this court is whether the original contractual tenancy still subsisted. It is no part of the case with which we have to deal that at the date of his death Mr. Robinson was, not a contractual tenant, but a statutory tenant. I think, however, that it is equally fair to say that the observation of LORD GREENE is true generally, and that where there is a rent-controlled house there are only two ways in which the protection of the Acts can be lost. Either there must be an actual giving up of possession or its equivalent by the tenant, or there must be an order against the tenant which the court has power to make. Again, however, all that depends on the premise that there is a house let as a dwelling-house within the meaning of the Rent Acts and subject to the control of the Acts.

Mr. Robinson had worked for the landlord for a great many years, and his occupation of the cottage in question first took place after the first world war. The rent payable was £6 10s. per annum and at that rent Mr. Robinson continued to occupy the cottage until May, 1946. At some date before May, 1946, owing to his age and infirmity, Mr. Robinson ceased to work, and in May, 1946, the landlord called on Mr. Robinson and it was arranged that the existing tenancy would cease, that the landlord would charge no more rent, and that Mr. Robinson could live in the cottage for the rest of his life rent free. Mr. Robinson accepted those conditions. The learned judge has found as a fact that there was no question here of the landlord trying to get any unjust advantage. The judge accepted as true the landlord's description of the transaction and found as a fact that the agreement was a great deal more than a mere agreement for the reduction or a remission of rent, and that its express and primary condition was that the deceased's tenancy was to cease. All those matters were questions of fact. Mr. Robinson died at the beginning of 1950, and, therefore, the only oral evidence which could be given was that of the landlord, but the learned judge referred to one piece of corroboration. It appeared that for many years the rent was paid regularly half-yearly and receipts were given, but after this transaction there was a change of this practice. The last receipt was produced dated May 2, 1946, being a receipt signed by the landlord for £3 5s., and it is a fact that thereafter the old practice of tendering rent and getting a receipt stopped altogether. In other words, the payment of rent for these premises ceased and there was never any question of a demand for rent or of payment or tender of rent. So far as the transaction was to the advantage of the deceased the advantage was enjoyed.

The argument for the defendant is put on two grounds. First, it is said that the transaction which I have described was ineffective according to law to amount to a surrender, and, therefore, to a determination of the existing agreement. That is an argument independent altogether of the effect of the Rent Restrictions legislation. Secondly, it is said that, even if, apart from the Rent Acts, it would have been so effective, the prohibitive effect of the Rent Acts to which I have alluded made it ineffective in this case.

First, it is important to notice that we are dealing here with a situation which, so far as the evidence is concerned, appears to have been contractual from the start. There is no evidence, for example, that there was ever any demise, any lease at any time of the premises. There is, indeed, no evidence that there was ever any written contract of tenancy. I think, however, that we must take it that the position immediately before this interview of May, 1946, was that Mr. Robinson was a yearly tenant or a tenant from year to year of the cottage in question. The only significance of what I have said is that I venture to think, when dealing with this aspect of the problem, that it makes it rather more easy to draw the inference that there was a surrender by operation of law if there is no existing estate or demise which might require a more formal or precise transaction. There is no question here of a surrender by express document effective for that purpose. If there is a surrender at all, it is a surrender by operation of law. A

That there may be such a surrender apart from any writing is clear, and that condition is expressly preserved by s. 52 (2) (c) of the Law of Property Act, 1925. What then amounts to a surrender by operation of law? We have been referred to many cases including that of Lyon v. Reed (2), and to the well-known judgment of PARKE, B., in that case. I think that for present purposes it is sufficient and accurate to refer to the passage in FOA'S GENERAL LAW OF LANDLORD AND TENANT, 7th ed., p. 617, 618, para. 987: C

"It has been laid down that in order to constitute a surrender by operation of law there must be, first, an act of purported surrender invalid per se by reason of non-compliance with statutory or other formalities, and secondly, some change of circumstances supervening on, or arising from, the purported surrender, which, by reason of the doctrine of estoppel or part performance, makes it inequitable and fraudulent for any of the parties to rely upon the invalidity of the purported surrender." D

The fact that the doctrine of estoppel really forms the foundation in such a case as this of the alleged surrender by operation of law is, I think, clearly discerned from the judgment of CHITTY, J., in Wallis v. Hands (3). E

The question in the present case is whether on the facts as found by the learned county court judge there are circumstances which prevent the tenant from asserting that the old relationship has been superseded by the new. Put in its simplest form, if there is a new arrangement which the tenant represents by his conduct that he is asserting, then he is estopped from denying that the landlord was capable of entering into that new arrangement, and, if the new arrangement could not be entered into if the old agreement subsisted, it follows that the tenant is equally prevented from denying that the old agreement has gone. There was some argument in the present case in regard to the proper conclusion as a matter of law to be drawn from the transaction if it is properly described in the language I have already referred to. It is divided into more than one section. First, the existing tenancy ceased. Then comes the second point: What took its place? The answer to that is: "I would charge him no more rent and he would live there for the rest of his days rent free." My own conclusion from that statement of the facts is that the old tenancy was extinguished by the creation instead of a licence for the former tenant, Mr. Robinson, to occupy these premises without any payment of rent for the rest of his days. Since the recent decision in Winter Garden Theatre (London), Ltd. v. Millenium Productions, Ltd. (4) I think that, although a licence of that kind may, apart from the terms of the contract, be revoked, it may now be taken that, if the landlord, having made that arrangement, sought to revoke it, he would be restrained by the court from so doing. Thus, the result is arrived at that Mr. Robinson was entitled as licensee F

G

H

to occupy the cottage without charge for the rest of his days, and he did so. I prefer that analysis of the case. An alternative would be to say that he became tenant at will, likewise coupled with a promise that the tenancy at will would not be determined. If a tenancy was created it is said that it required a written instrument. If it did, I am not saying that the present case would not be one in which the acts following the transaction would supply part performance sufficient to make it equivalent to a written agreement, but it is unnecessary to express a final view about it because I think here there was a licence.

In my judgment, having regard to what occurred afterwards, there is no good ground for supposing that such an arrangement would not have the effect necessarily of producing a surrender by operation of law of the pre-existing tenancy. I think that some of the cases cited provide examples which strongly support that view. One is Metcalf v. Boyce (5), where a police constable, formerly a tenant, as the result of an arrangement, which was, apparently, parol only and did not disturb the continued occupation of the constable in fact, produced the result that the constable ceased to be a tenant and became a licensee. In Oustler v. Henderson (6) it was pointed out by BRETT, L.J., (2 Q.B.D. 579) that a mere agreement to effect some new transaction will not of itself suffice to produce a surrender by operation of law. Nothing that I have said in any way impinges on the validity of that observation. It is not here a question of mere agreement. There was here an agreement, plus superadded acts in pursuance of the agreement, which I think were sufficient to show that effect in the fullest sense was given to the agreement and that the new agreement made was inconsistent with the continuation of the old tenancy. I, therefore, consider that unless the matter is affected otherwise by the Rent Acts there is no good ground for saying that the present case, on the facts as found, would not suffice to produce a surrender by operation of law.

I now come to the provisions of the Rent Acts. In the case of an ordinary tenancy uncontrolled by the Rent Acts, if by notice to quit or by any other means the contractual tenancy is determined but the tenant stays on in possession, either he is a trespasser or he must be treated as staying on by the assent of the landlord, and, therefore, by reference to some new arrangement. In regard to the Rent Acts, the position is not quite the same. The mere determination of a contractual tenancy does not of itself mean that the tenant has become a trespasser, for without the existence of some new supervening arrangement he might, and prima facie would, remain by virtue of his statutory right to do so under the Rent Acts, i.e., as a statutory tenant. That fact is one which must always be borne in mind in cases of this kind by the judge who has to determine whether all the facts in the case amount to a surrender by operation of law. In considering that matter he must bear in mind the proper inference to be drawn from the fact that it is a rent-controlled house. I will not pursue that further for, as I have already said, there is no question here of Mr. Robinson having been a statutory tenant at the date of his death, but I have mentioned the matter because it is relevant to the question which the judge had to determine: What is the proper inference of fact to be drawn in the particular case?

Counsel for the defendant has boldly asserted that where there is a rent-controlled house and a rent-controlled tenancy there is no means whereby, whatever the parties might intend, they can get themselves out of that situation.

The strongest case which was put was that of a lease under seal, say for seven years, at a rent which brought the tenancy within the Rent Acts. Two years before its termination the parties enter into a new deed which starts by reciting the surrender of the first lease and then grants a new demise to the tenant for ninety-nine years, determinable on the tenant's earlier death, at a peppercorn rent. Counsel says that that is quite ineffective. I find it very difficult to suppose that such a transaction is prohibited and rendered wholly ineffective by the Rent Acts, but, of course, that is not the present case. Another instance of the sort of transaction which might occur was put by SINGLETON, L.J., early in the argument. A landlord may say to a tenant: "You are getting on in years. Which of these two things would you prefer. I am grateful to you for all you have done and I am willing that this present tenancy should be ended and that you should remain on as my licensee, and I will undertake that in no circumstances whatever will I seek to disturb your occupancy for the rest of your life and you need not pay rent. That will give me the advantage, if I survive you, that after your death I shall be able to get vacant possession, but I shall not be able, by relying on any of the provisions of the Rent Acts or otherwise, to disturb your occupancy during your life. Alternatively, stay on as you are. I may try and get rid of you if I can find alternative accommodation, and, of course, the right that you will enjoy will persist in favour of your daughter or whoever otherwise under the Act may be entitled to it after your death. Which do you prefer?" Let us suppose the tenant says: "I prefer the former, so that I can spend my life here and die here and I need not pay any more rent."

If all that were given effect to by a carefully drawn agreement, it seems to me very difficult to suppose that the court would have to say: "We cannot pay the slightest regard to it—though it may be that the landlord can claim ten years' arrears of rent." Indeed, such a view would appear to be inconsistent with the conclusion of this court in Turner v. Watts (7) where the bargain was that the tenant should buy the premises, and the contract, therefore, provided that the tenancy should cease. He was thereafter to be a tenant at will paying interest on the unpaid purchase money. The proposed sale went off altogether, but it was held that by the transaction, which was bona fide entered into, the tenancy had gone, and that, therefore, there was nothing capable of protection under the Acts. The example of SINGLETON, L.J., if effected by a carefully drawn document, could not, in my view, be distinguished in principle from Turner v. Watts (7). I am content to accept what is said in MEGARRY ON THE RENT ACTS, 5th ed., p. 10:

"... there is nothing to prevent the parties from so arranging matters that there is nothing to which the Acts can apply, provided the transaction in question is a genuine transaction and not a mere sham ..."

The mere fact that there is a written document, a document under seal, cannot, it seems to me, affect the essential validity of the transaction. The difference in the two types of case is a matter of evidence rather than of substance. If here the facts which the learned judge has found are the equivalent of what could be stated in a written document, why should there be any distinction? I confess that if I had been trying this case I am by no means sure that I would have reached quite the same conclusion as did the judge. That is not suggesting that I would in any way have impugned the good faith of the landlord, but I am not sure that I would have found the transaction proved. There is nothing said about any of the other terms of the arrangement or of the terms of the original tenancy. I might, therefore, not have found the facts as the judge found them, but I might well have been wrong. I am very anxious to avoid any suggestion that a decision in the landlord's favour would open the door to all kinds of devices whereby a landlord could go to a sick tenant and get him to agree to some arrangement which was really to the advantage of the landlord and the grave disadvantage of the tenant. I think the county courts may be relied on to protect tenants from that kind of thing, but this is a county court appeal and it is impossible to say that there is no evidence on which the county court judge could find that this was a genuine transaction and was effective.

Having so found, I can see no ground in principle why the transaction should not have the result the parties intended it should have. I think it amounts to this, that the determination of the former tenancy was equivalent to delivery up of possession under that tenancy and then a resumption of possession under a new transaction immediately afterwards. I think, to use the language of COCKBURN, C.J., in Oastler v. Henderson (6) (2 Q.B.D. 578) there was a virtual taking of possession. If the key had been handed over and then been handed back the next minute that would have symbolised the delivery up and the grant of possession and I cannot think that it vitally matters that that performance was not gone through. That is the effect of a surrender by operation of law in such a case as the present and the learned judge has so found, and, there being evidence to support that finding, we would not be justified in differing from his conclusion as to fact, and, if not, it seems to me the conclusions which I have stated necessarily follow. The whole question is: Was the old contractual tenancy determined? Was it determined as the result of surrender by operation of law? The learned county court judge found that it was, and I think that that is a finding supported by the evidence without any misdirection in law and that this appeal should be dismissed.

COHEN, L.J.: I agree with the conclusion which my Lord has reached and with his reasons therefor. Counsel for the defendant invited us to say that different principles had to be applied in determining the question whether or not there had been a surrender by operation of law where the premises were such as, if let, would come within the control of the Rent Restrictions Acts from those which would be applied in other cases. Counsel for the landlord denied that there was any distinction at all, and I think he was right. It seems to me that in determining whether or not there was a contractual tenancy in existence the same principles must be applied in deciding the question whether there has been a surrender by operation of law to premises which are within the control of the the Rent Acts as those which would be applicable in any other case. That is not to say that the fact that the premises are within the control imposed by the Act is immaterial. It is, I think, a very material factor for the county court judge to take into account in investigating the transaction alleged to have given rise to the surrender by operation of law and deciding whether it was a genuine transaction in exact accordance with that which it purported to be, or was, as was said in one case and in the passage in Mr. MEGARRY'S book to which my Lord referred, a mere sham. But if the county court judge comes to the conclusion that the transaction was genuine, and that the result of that genuine transaction was to effect a surrender by operation of law, I see no reason, and I know of no provision in the Rent Restrictions Acts, which prevents him giving effect to that conclusion. In the present case the learned county court judge has obviously carefully considered both the value to be attached to the evidence of the landlord, having regard to the fact that Mr. Robinson was dead, and the question of the intention of the parties and the effect of the transaction. He has found it was a genuine transaction, and on his finding it seems to me that the inevitable consequence is that there was a surrender by operation of law, and, therefore, that there was, at the material time, no contractual tenancy in existence which could in any circumstances have entitled the defendant to protection under the Rent Restrictions Acts. For these reasons, I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

SINGLETON, L.J.: I am of the same opinion. I look on the matter in this way: (i) the defendant, as administratrix of her father's estate, has only the rights which her father had as occupier; (ii) the learned county court judge has found that from May, 1946, until his death the father was a licensee, paying no rent, but being entitled to remain in the cottage for the rest of his life; (iii) this is not a case of contracting out. If this correctly states the position, we are not concerned with the Rent Acts, for s. 3 (1) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, only limits the power of the court in the case of a house to which the Acts apply. They do not apply to one which is the subject-matter of a licence. They apply to a house or a part of a house let as a separate dwelling at a rent within the purview of the Acts: see s. 2 (2) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920.

If the learned county court judge is right, the house was not let after May, 1946. The real substance of the matter lies in this. The landlord, who had farmed a farm on which Mr. Robinson was employed, allowed him to have the house at a weekly rent of 2s. 6d. Another farmer occupying the farm employed Mr. Robinson subsequently, but after a period Mr. Robinson had to give up work. The learned county court judge found that by May, 1946, the deceased, owing to age or infirmity, had given up work, and in that month there was made between him and the landlord an arrangement which is the crucial point in the case. That arrangement was that the tenancy which had existed for some years should cease, Mr. Robinson should remain in the house for the rest of his days, and the landlord should charge him no rent. The learned county court judge came to the conclusion that that was a licence and no more.

Speaking for myself, if, on seeing the landlord, I had formed the impression of him which the learned judge formed, I should have no doubt as to the arrangement made, for support is to be found for it in two or three respects. First, in support of the arrangement or agreement which the landlord set up there is the fact that thereafter for the remaining three-and-a-half years of Mr. Robinson's life no rent was proffered and no rent was demanded. After the death of Mr. Robinson the landlord wrote to the defendant this letter: `

"Dear Maud, No doubt Harry would tell you what I'm doing re your cottage and Wilkinsons—I have decided to sell them both some time in March, and you can stay on rent free as before until Apr. 6, as I shall sell your cottage with vacant possession on Apr. 6, 1950. Spilman & Glasier, auctioneers, are acting for me. Hoping you are keeping well. Yours sincerely, W. H. Foster."

That letter, telling the defendant what he proposed to do, shows an arrangement of the kind to which the landlord spoke. The defendant herself in the course of her evidence was asked questions. She said: "I only know of arrangement by what father told me." If the evidence of the landlord himself was accepted by the learned judge, he was well justified in finding the agreement he did find.

We were urged to say that to uphold this judgment would be to open wide the door so as to enable people to defeat or to get round the provisions of the Rent Restrictions Acts. I do not take that view. I regard this as a case in which the landlord acted perfectly properly and in the interests of the tenant. Not a word can be said against him. Although judges in county courts who have these matters before them obviously must be careful before they find an agreement of this kind, I do not think this court ought to hesitate to uphold this judgment in favour of a landlord who was acting, as I think, in the best interests of the occupier of the house. It is for the county court judge to find the facts, and he has done so in a most careful judgment. He came to the conclusion that from May, 1946, the occupier was not a tenant at all. I agree with that finding. The position of the father was altered by agreement between the parties; there was a complete change. The father became a licensee, at least he could not be heard to say that he was anything more than that. At his death he had had the advantage of the agreement and had paid no rent for three and a half years, and his daughter, the defendant, cannot be in a better position. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for William Bains, Brigg (for the defendant); Waterhouse & Co., agents for Sowler & Gibson, Brigg (for the landlord).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

COLEBORN AND SONS, LTD. v. BLOND.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Bucknill and Denning, L.J.J., and Roxburgh, J.), May 22, June 21, 1950.]

Purchase Tax—Chargeable process—Conversion of army wireless type vehicle into shooting brake—Finance Act, 1946 (c. 64), s. 16 (1), (3).

A The defendant was the owner of a vehicle which had originally been constructed as a wireless type army vehicle, having two seats in the driver's compartment for the driver and the officer in charge of the vehicle, and two seats in the truck portion for the use of men working the field wireless apparatus intended to be carried therein. The plaintiffs, on the defendant's orders, did work on the vehicle so as to convert it into a shooting brake, having eight seats, a pair of back doors instead of the tail board which the vehicle originally had, a permanent roof and a new floor. The Commissioners of Excise demanded purchase tax from the plaintiffs, amounting to £186 8s. 4d., which the plaintiffs paid. The plaintiffs demanded reimbursement by the defendant of the amount so paid, but the defendant contended that purchase tax was not chargeable.

B
C
D HELD: the shooting brake was a different article from the vehicle before conversion, and, therefore, the work done by the plaintiffs was a "process of manufacture" within the meaning of the Finance Act, 1946, s. 16 (1) and (3), by which was made a vehicle constructed solely or mainly for the carriage of passengers; such a vehicle was "chargeable goods" within the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1940, s. 19 (1) and sched. VII, and of a class specified in sched. IV to the Act of 1946; and, therefore, the process applied was a "chargeable process" attracting liability to purchase tax under s. 17 of the Act of 1946.

Guildford Corpn. v. Brown ([1915] 1 K.B. 256), applied.

[FOR THE FINANCE ACT, 1946, s. 16, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Vol. 39, p. 745.]

E Cases referred to:

- (1) Gamble v. Jordan, [1913] 3 K.B. 149; 82 L.J.K.B. 743; 108 L.T. 1022; 77 J.P. 269; 38 Digest 221, 539.
- (2) Guildford Corpn. v. Brown, [1915] 1 K.B. 256; 84 L.J.K.B. 289; 112 L.T. 415; 79 J.P. 143; 38 Digest 222, 540.
- (3) French v. Champkin, [1920] 1 K.B. 76; 89 L.J.K.B. 131; 122 L.T. 95; 83 J.P. 258; 39 Digest 241, 168.

F APPEAL by the plaintiffs from an order of CASSELS, J., made on Feb. 9, 1950, dismissing the plaintiffs' claim for reimbursement of purchase tax paid by them in respect of work done by them to the defendant's order in converting an army wireless type vehicle into a shooting brake. CASSELS, J., held that the work did not constitute a chargeable process attracting purchase tax. G The facts appear in the judgment of BUCKNILL, L.J., and are summarised in the headnote.

J. P. Ashworth and Youds for the plaintiffs.

J. R. D. Crichton for the defendant.

Cur. adv. vult.

H June 21. The following judgments were read.

BUCKNILL, L.J.: This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from a judgment in favour of the defendant given by CASSELS, J. The claim was for £186 8s. 4d. paid by the plaintiffs by way of purchase tax to the Commissioners of Excise in the following circumstances. In June, 1947, the plaintiffs, under a contract with the defendant, supplied and built a shooting brake body on to a former War Department motor vehicle. The Commissioners of Excise then demanded payment of £186 8s. 4d. purchase tax on the vehicle by virtue of the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1940, and the Purchase Tax (Charges) (No. 1) Order, 1947. The plaintiffs paid the sum and claimed to be reimbursed that amount by the defendant. The defendant denied that purchase tax was chargeable as claimed, and the issue in the case was whether that was so or not. CASSELS, J., decided that the tax was not chargeable, and it is from that decision that the plaintiffs appeal.

Before referring to the material facts I will set out the relevant sections and orders. The Finance (No. 2) Act, 1940, s. 18 (1), enacted that:

"A tax, to be called purchase tax, shall be charged, subject to and in accordance with the provisions of this Part of this Act, on the wholesale value of all chargeable goods bought under chargeable purchases."

Section 19 (1) provides:

"Chargeable goods are goods falling within any of the classes specified in the first or second column of sched. VII to this Act and not falling within any of the classes specified in the third column of that schedule."

No. 23 of the items of chargeable goods set out in sched. VII is:

"Road vehicles and cycles . . . being vehicles . . . constructed or adapted solely or mainly for the carriage of passengers, except as specified in the third column."

The third column enumerates as goods mentioned in the first column but not chargeable, "Tramcars, trolley vehicles, omnibuses and charabanes. Ambulances, invalid carriages and perambulators." The Finance Act, 1946, s. 16, enacted:

"(1) For the purposes of any enactment relating to purchase tax, a person shall be deemed to apply a chargeable process if he applies any process of manufacture which results in chargeable goods of any of the classes specified in sched. IV to this Act; whether or not the goods to which the process was applied were, before the process was applied, goods of the same class or any other class specified in that schedule . . . (3) In this section, the expression 'process of manufacture' means a process applied so as to make goods or in the course of the making of goods."

Schedule IV to the Act enumerated the relevant classes of goods to which chargeable processes could be applied, and one class was "road vehicles and cycles (whether mechanically propelled or not)." Section 17 provides for the charging of purchase tax on goods resulting from the application of any chargeable process, and makes the person who applies the process accountable for the tax.

The relevant facts of the case were that the defendant, having bought the vehicle in question in December, 1946, took it to the plaintiffs with a view to converting it into a shooting brake. The vehicle had been originally constructed as a "Humber four-wheel drive pick-up vehicle wireless type." That was admitted by counsel before us, and it was also admitted that the learned trial judge was in error when, in his judgment, he said (I quote his own words):

"The vehicle originally was a Humber wireless and personnel type. I am anxious to state those names and that description with some little care and precision, for the reason that I do not think there was a type of this vehicle properly described as a wireless type and another type of this vehicle properly described as a personnel type. It was a wireless and personnel type itself."

The difference between the two types is material, in my opinion. In each type there were two seats in the driver's compartment, one for the driver and one for the officer in charge of the vehicle. In the wireless type, the truck portion contained a field wireless apparatus and two seats for the use of the men working the apparatus. In the personnel type there was no wireless apparatus and there were three seats in the truck instead of two, the third seat occupying the space which in the wireless type housed the wireless apparatus. It appears from the evidence of a Mr. Berry, who had practical experience in the use of this kind of vehicle by the army during the war and was accepted by the judge as a reliable witness, that the vehicle was issued to officers, and its main task was to convey the officer when reconnoitring, or observing, if the guns were in action, and that the wireless was mainly used for receiving and issuing fire orders to those firing guns. The wireless apparatus was detachable from the vehicle, and if that was done the vehicle could be used as a passenger carrying vehicle, and was used for the purpose of visiting ordnance dumps and drawing rations, etc. The truck portion had no entrance door, but a tail board which was hinged at its bottom edge.

When the defendant took the vehicle to the plaintiffs for the purpose of producing a shooting brake, it was then described as being an open truck body behind a cab. The seats had been taken out and there was no canopy or roof, but the wheels, engine, bonnet and scuttle were the same as when the vehicle was originally constructed. I do not think it is necessary to describe in detail the work done by the plaintiffs to the vehicle in building on the chassis a new wooden body. When complete it contained eight seats, a pair of back doors, a permanent roof and a new floor. The learned judge's comment on the result of the work was that the plaintiffs had done it up and made it look so different from what it originally was that its own mother would scarcely have recognised it. The plaintiffs supplied all the material which was used in the construction of the body. The work was finally completed in September, 1947.

The crucial question in the case seems to me to be whether the work done by the plaintiffs was a process of manufacture which made, or was in the course of making, a vehicle constructed solely or mainly for the carriage of passengers. If it was such a vehicle when it was originally constructed, then the work done by the plaintiffs in converting it into a shooting brake was, so to speak, merely a change of dress, but not a change of character. There is no direct authority on the point, which seems to depend for its decision on the inference to be drawn from the admitted facts. In my opinion, the mere fact that a vehicle in the course of the work for which it was designed habitually carries a man or men does not ipso facto make it a vehicle constructed solely or mainly for the carriage of passengers. Every vehicle, unless controlled by wireless, must have a driver, and is, in a sense, constructed for the carriage of a passenger, but the Act says "constructed . . . solely or mainly for the carriage of passengers," and, therefore, if the accommodation for carrying passengers were only incidental to the use of the vehicle for other purposes it would be exempt. Thus, the crew of an armoured car or the driver and attendants in an ambulance are all, in one sense, passengers, but the main purpose which causes their presence in the vehicle is not their transportation from place to place. The cause of their presence in the vehicle is that they may use it for the special purposes for which it was constructed.

In my opinion, the error which the judge made in failing to distinguish between the wireless type and the personnel type of this particular species of car indicates a failure to distinguish between the two different purposes for which each type was used. Moreover, I think that the concluding words of the Finance Act, 1946, s. 16 (1), indicate that, even if the vehicle was originally constructed to carry passengers, yet, if the work done by the plaintiffs was to manufacture a thing which was different from what it was before the work was done—in other words, if the work was such as to involve an alteration in the article so fundamental as to produce a different article—the purchase tax would be chargeable on the article so produced. In my opinion, if one applies these tests, then the shooting brake was a different article from the article before the work was done.

The cases to which we were referred do not seem to throw much light on the problem. They rather indicate the difficulty of coming to a right decision in this case. On the meaning of the words "making goods" there is Gamble v. Jordan (1). A man was charged with the offence of using, for the purpose of making an article of bedding, flock manufactured from rags. The person charged had taken rag flock from an old mattress for the purpose of re-stuffing the same mattress with the same flock. The magistrate held that the re-stuffing of a mattress was the making of an article of bedding, and convicted the man, but on appeal the conviction was set aside. BANKES, J., in his judgment, said ([1913] 3 K.B. 153) that, in his opinion, no distinction ought to be drawn between the word "manufacture" and the word "make." He thought that the true meaning of making or manufacturing an article was "bringing into being" that article. On the other hand, in Guildford Corpn. v. Brown (2) a man charged with an offence under the same Act as in Gamble v. Jordan (1) had taken flock manufactured from rags from two old mattresses and put the same flock without any addition to or subtraction from it into new covers. On appeal, the Divisional Court held that it was "manufacturing" a mattress if one took flock out of an old cover and put it into a new one.

As LUSH, J., remarked ([1915] 1 K.B. 259):

"... there is a great difference between re-making an old article and making a new one. It is clear on the facts of this case that the respondent made a new article..."

The reasoning of LUSH, J., seems applicable to the case before us. It is true that the new vehicle had as some of its component parts parts of the old vehicle, but that does not prevent the work being described as making a new article, if the new vehicle is sufficiently different from the old vehicle.

In French v. Champkin (3), the question for decision was whether a certain carriage was a vehicle constructed or adapted for use, and used solely, for the conveyance of any goods in the course of trade within the meaning of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888, s. 4 (3). The EARL OF READING, C.J., in the course of his judgment, said ([1920] 1 K.B. 79):

"The justices seem to have treated the word 'adapted' as if it were synonymous with 'suitable' or 'apt,' whereas it must be construed as meaning altered so as to make the vehicle apt for the conveyance of goods. The words are intended to cover the case of a vehicle which was not constructed solely for the purpose of conveying goods in the course of trade, but after its construction has been made apt for that purpose. If the vehicle has not been originally constructed for the conveyance of goods it is still entitled to exemption if by some alteration it has been made suitable for the purpose mentioned."

It is not suggested in the present case that the vehicle had been adapted for the carriage of passengers before it became the property of the defendant, and the fact that it could be used for the conveyance of passengers did not make it a vehicle constructed solely or mainly for the carriage of passengers, if that was not its primary purpose. In my judgment, therefore, the vehicle was not originally constructed or adapted solely or mainly for the carriage of passengers. Alternatively, even if it was so constructed, the work done by the plaintiffs was of such a nature as to bring into being an article different from that which it had been before that work was done. I, therefore, think that this appeal should be allowed.

DENNING, L.J.: In order that a process of manufacture should attract purchase tax, it must be "applied so as to make goods or in the course of the making of goods." There must, therefore, be a making of goods which is, I think, different from the repair, alteration, or improvement of goods. If the thing remains in substance the same thing, even though repaired, altered or improved, purchase tax is not payable, but, if the work has made it into a different thing altogether, then purchase tax is payable. The line between these two is very difficult to draw, because it is so much a question of degree. Speaking generally, I should have thought that if you replace an old engine by a new one, or an old body by a new body, you are not making a different vehicle. You are altering and improving an old one, and purchase tax is not payable. But a point may be reached where you are not really altering or improving an old car, but are making use of it, or the various parts of it, to make a different car altogether. That point has, I think, been reached here. This old army wireless-type vehicle was, so to speak, the raw material out of which the shooting brake was made. This is a case where a new thing was made out of two parts—one part being the old chassis and the other part being the new body—and the two parts when assembled together make a different thing from either of them separately. In my opinion, therefore, purchase tax was payable on it.

ROXBURGH, J.: I agree.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Bower, Cotton & Bower (for the plaintiffs); Cartwright, Cunningham & Co., agents for Donnison, Edwards & Cornish, Liverpool (for the defendant).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

BOGUSLAWSKI AND ANOTHER v. GDYNIA AMERYKA LINIE.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Bucknill, Cohen and Denning, L.JJ.), May 3, 4, 5, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, June 15, 1950.]

International Law—Recognition of foreign government—Retroactive effect — Payment of compensation to officers and men of Polish merchant navy on their leaving their ships—Offer made in London on July 5, 1945, by Minister of old Polish government, on behalf of Polish shipping company—Recognition by British government of new Polish government from midnight on July 5/6, 1945—Offer accepted and acted on, in England, after recognition of new Polish government.

In 1940 the government of the Polish State, which had escaped from Poland when that country was occupied by Germany, established itself in London and was recognised by the British government as the government of Poland. It controlled the Polish merchant navy, which now had its home ports in England. On June 28, 1945, the Polish Provisional Government of National Unity was established in Poland, and on June 29 it wrote to the British government asking for recognition. On the same day, in view of the possibility that the British government would withdraw its recognition of the old Polish government, the old government made a decree, giving effect to resolutions of its Council of Ministers (a) to determine the employment of its civil servants and pay them a gratuity of three months' salary, and (b) to pay a similar gratuity to the office staffs of its shipping companies on determination of their employment, the gratuity in this case to be paid out of the moneys of the enterprises concerned. On July 2, 1945, representatives of the Polish Captains' and Officers' Union and the Polish Seamen's Union asked the association representing the Polish shipping companies for a similar compensation to be paid to their members in the event of the new Polish government taking over the Polish navy. On July 3 the Minister of Industry, Commerce and Shipping of the old Polish government, acting on behalf of the shipping companies, informed the representatives of the unions that he was proposing that seamen who left their ships on account of the change of government should be treated in the same way as the office staffs of the shipping companies, and, in the presence of the representatives of the unions, he dictated a telegram to the head of the Polish shipping department, stating inter alia that, on the authority of the government and in consequence of claims put forward by the unions of officers and seamen, who were unwilling to return to waters controlled by the Soviet Union, he asked the Minister of War Transport that all Polish ships be first directed to United Kingdom ports so as to give the officers and seamen the possibility of disembarking in ports considered as home ports, and he declared that, in the event of their leaving their ships owing to the political situation, captains, officers and men should be entitled to compensation on equal footing with government officials and shipping companies' staff. On July 5 a telegram in those terms was sent by the Minister, through the curator of the defendant shipping company (one of the Polish shipping companies), to the master of the Morska Wola, a motor vessel belonging to the defendant company, which was then lying in the Manchester Ship Canal. The telegram, which ended with a request that it should be brought to the notice of the crew, was read to the officers on the same day and to the seamen on the following day. At midnight on July 5/6, the British government recognised the new Polish government. The certificate of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs which proved this fact stated: "Up to and including midnight of July 5/6, 1945, His Majesty's government in the United Kingdom recognised the Polish government having its headquarters in London as being the government of Poland, and as from midnight of July 5/6, 1945, His Majesty's government in the United Kingdom recognised the Polish Provisional Government of National Unity as the government of Poland, and as from that date ceased to recognise the former Polish government having its headquarters in London as being the government of Poland." Acting on the telegram of July 5, the first plaintiff, an officer in the Polish merchant navy, who had been serving in the Morska Wola at all material times, left her on July 11, and the second plaintiff, a seaman in the Polish merchant navy, who joined the ship on July 4, left her on July 7. In an action by the plaintiffs against the defendant company for payment of the compensation alleged to be due to them, the defendant company denied liability and contended inter alia that the recognition of the new Polish government by the British government on midnight of July 5/6, 1945, operated retroactively to June 28, 1945, with the result that the British government would not recognise as valid the acts of the old Polish government done after that date.

HELD: (i) the statement in the Secretary of State's certificate that the British government recognised the old Polish government until midnight on July 5/6, 1945, and the new Polish government thereafter had the same effect as if the Secretary of State had said that the new Polish government was recognised as from midnight on July 5/6 as the legitimate successor of the old Polish government, and, therefore, all acts done in England by the old Polish government before midnight on July 5/6 were valid and binding on the new Polish government unless and until the new government rescinded or repudiated them, an event which had not occurred in regard to any act relevant to the present case.

(ii) assuming that the recognition by the British government of the new Polish government had retroactive effect, the principle that there could not be more than one government of a foreign State recognised at the same time, truly stated, was that there could not be two governments recognised in respect of the same territory at the same time, and, therefore, a recognition of the validity of acts done by the old Polish government between June 28, 1945, and midnight on July 5/6, 1945, outside the area which was under the de facto control of the new Polish government did not infringe that principle.

(iii) the agreement of July 3, 1945, was a valid agreement between the Minister, acting on behalf of the shipping companies, on the one side, and the officers' and seamen's unions, on the other side, that the Minister would dispatch a telegram in the terms of the draft dictated in the presence of the representatives of the union; the Minister fulfilled his obligation thereunder when he dispatched the telegram of July 5; and, therefore, the plaintiffs were not entitled under this agreement to the compensation claimed.

(iv) the telegram of July 5, 1945, constituted an offer, made by the Minister on behalf of the defendant company, which could be accepted until it was withdrawn; as it was not withdrawn, either by the company or by the new government, there was a binding contract between the company and the plaintiffs when the plaintiffs accepted the offer by their conduct in leaving the ship; it was immaterial (a) that the offer was not communicated to the second plaintiff until after July 5, and (b) that neither of the plaintiffs acted on the offer until after that date; and, therefore, the plaintiffs were entitled to the compensation specified in the telegram.

[AS TO RECOGNITION OF FOREIGN STATES, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 13, pp. 619, 620, para. 691, and ibid., Vol. 26, p. 254, para. 568; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 22, pp. 148-150, Nos. 1262-1273.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Aksionairnoye Obschestvo A. M. Luther v. Sagor (James) & Co., [1921] 3 K.B. 532; 90 L.J.K.B. 1202; 125 L.T. 705; 11 Digest 309, 17.
- (2) Lazard Brothers & Co. v. Midland Bank, Ltd., [1933] A.C. 289; 102 L.J.K.B. 191; 148 L.T. 242; Digest Supp.
- (3) Haile Selassie v. Cable and Wireless, Ltd. (No. 2), [1938] 3 All E.R. 677; [1939] Ch. 182; 108 L.J.Ch. 190; 160 L.T. 120; Digest Supp.
- (4) Banco de Bilbao v. Sancha, [1938] 2 All E.R. 253; [1938] 2 K.B. 176; 107 L.J.K.B. 681; 159 L.T. 369; Digest Supp.
- (5) Guaranty Trust Co. v. United States, (1938), 304 U.S. 126.
- (6) Re Amand, [1941] 2 K.B. 239; 110 L.J.K.B. 524; subsequent proceedings, on appeal, sub nom., Amand v. Secretary of State for Home Affairs, [1942] 2 All E.R. 381; sub nom., Amand v. Home Secretary and Minister of Defence of Royal Netherlands Government, [1943] A.C. 147; sub nom., R. v. Secretary of State for Home Affairs and Minister of Defence of the Royal Netherlands Government, Ex p. Amand, 111 L.J.K.B. 657; 167 L.T. 177; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (7) Lorentzen v. Lydden & Co., Ltd., [1942] 2 K.B. 202; 111 L.J.K.B. 327; 167 L.T. 365; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (8) The Arantzazu Mendi, [1939] 1 All E.R. 719; [1939] A.C. 256; 160 L.T. 513; sub nom., Spain Republic Government v. Arantzazu Mendi, 108 L.J.P. 55; Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the defendant company (a Polish shipping company) from an order of FINNEMORE, J., dated July 21, 1949, whereby he awarded sums of £176 5s. and £123 to the plaintiffs respectively, as compensation equal to three months' pay due to them from the defendant company.

The first plaintiff was an officer and the second plaintiff was a seaman in the Polish merchant navy, and they were serving on July 5, 1945, in a ship belonging to the defendant company. Until midnight on July 5/6, 1945, the Polish merchant navy was under the control of the Polish government which had its headquarters in London and the navy's home ports were in England. As from midnight on July 5/6, 1945, the British government ceased to recognise the Polish government having its headquarters in London, and recognised the Polish Provisional Government of National Unity, which had been set up in Poland on June 28, 1945, as the government of Poland. On account of the political situation, the first plaintiff left his ship, which was then lying at the Manchester end of the Ship Canal, on July 11, 1945, and the second plaintiff left it on July 7, 1945. In an action brought by them against the defendant company for payment of compensation alleged to be due to them on their leaving the ship, they based their claims on (i) an agreement alleged to have been made on July 3, 1945, between the Minister of Industry, Commerce and Shipping of the Polish government in London, acting on behalf of the defendant company, on the one side, and the representatives of the Polish officers' and seamen's unions, acting on behalf of all their members, on the other side, and, alternatively, on (ii) an offer contained in a telegram, sent by the Minister on behalf of the defendant company on July 5, 1945, and accepted by the plaintiffs by their conduct in acting on it. The defendant company denied liability under Polish law and further contended that the recognition by the British government of the new Polish government operated retroactively to June 28, 1945, and, therefore, acts done by the old Polish government after that date would not be recognised by the British government as valid. FINNEMORE, J., found that the agreements were valid under Polish law, and rejected the contention of the defendant company in regard to the retroactive effect of the recognition by the British government of the new Polish government, on the grounds (a) that the Polish merchant navy was not in the area over which the new government had control, and (b) that, as the certificate of the Foreign Secretary, which proved the fact of the recognition of the new government, expressly stated that the British government recognised the old government until midnight on July 5/6, 1945, acts done by the old government while it was still recognised must be valid, and, accordingly, the learned judge gave judgment for the plaintiffs. The facts appear in the judgment of COHEN, L.J.

Pritt, K.C., Scott Henderson, K.C., and A. J. Hodgson for the defendant company.

Thorpe, K.C., and Niall MacDermot for the plaintiffs.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 15. The following judgments were read.

COHEN, L.J.: This is an appeal from a judgment of FINNEMORE, J., given on July 21, 1949, by which he awarded to the plaintiffs respectively £176 5s. and £123, with interest in each case at eight per cent. from Feb. 8, 1946, to the date of judgment, and costs. I will state later the basis on which those sums were claimed.

Before recounting the events which gave rise to the claim, it might be convenient to list the dramatis personae. The plaintiff Boguslawski was an officer in the Polish merchant navy. At the material times he was serving, as second engineer, in S.S. Morska Wola, owned by the defendants. He was a member of the Polish Captains' and Officers' Union (hereinafter referred to as "the officers' union"). Mr. Dabkowski was at the material time chairman and acting secretary of that union in London. The plaintiff Krupka was a seaman in the Polish merchant navy and claims to have been serving at all material times in the same ship as his co-plaintiff. He was a member of the Polish Seamen's Union (hereinafter referred to as "the seamen's union") of which Mr. Fligel was at all material times the chairman. The defendants were a Polish limited company, 98½ per cent. of the share capital of which was owned by the Polish State. The defendants were at all material times managing the ships of two other Polish companies. Mr. Plinius was a member of the board of management of the defendants, and was on Sept. 2, 1942, appointed curator of the defendants under Polish war-time legislation. The old Polish government was the government of the Polish State which, after Poland had been overrun by Germany, left Warsaw and established itself first at Angers and then, in 1940, in London. I shall refer to it hereafter as the old Polish government. Mr. Kwapinski was the Minister of Industry, Commerce and Shipping in the old Polish government. The new Polish government was the Polish Provisional Government of National Unity, which, on June 29, 1945, wrote to His Majesty's government, claiming that it had been established on June 28, 1945, pursuant to the decision of the Crimea conference, and asking for recognition by His Majesty's government. I shall refer to it hereafter as the new Polish government.

The events in the drama cover a very short period. On June 25, 1945, the Council of Ministers of the old Polish government passed a resolution to determine the employment of civil servants and to pay them on such determination a gratuity of not less than three months' salary. On the same date the council resolved to pay to employees of Polish shipping enterprises a gratuity on an equal footing to that payable to State employees, with the proviso that the gratuity was to be paid out of the moneys of the enterprises concerned. On June 28, 1945, on which date, as I have said, the new Polish government claims to have been established, the President of the old Polish government made a decree giving statutory effect to the resolution as regards civil servants. The resolution as regards employees of shipping enterprises was inserted in Part 2 of that decree, but it was not contended that this inclusion had any statutory effect or of itself gave any legal right to the plaintiffs in this action. Before that decree had been published, Mr. Kwapinski had, on June 26, 1945, sent for Mr. Plinius and told him of the resolution passed by the Council of Ministers as regards shipping enterprises, but Mr. Plinius had said that it could not be in the interests of the defendants to immobilize their ships and he must refuse to implement the resolution so far as officers and seamen were concerned. His attitude was confirmed at a meeting held on June 27 at which were present Mr. Plinius and the curators of the other two shipping lines which were being managed by the defendants. At this meeting it was decided to adopt the Minister's suggestion as regards employees ashore, but not as regards officers and crews of ships.

On July 2, 1945, letters were written by the officers' union and the seamen's union to Mr. Kwapinski and to the association which represented all the Polish shipping lines, asking for pay for a number of things, including three months' compensation for their members in the event of the taking over of the Polish merchant navy by the new Polish government, in the same way as was being done regarding employees ashore. On July 3, 1945, Mr. Kwapinski had an interview with representatives of both unions. Mr. Fligel and a colleague of his represented the seamen's union. The learned judge states what happened at this interview as follows:

"Mr. Kwapinski said that he would agree that out of the moneys of the defendant company or the other shipping companies the sailors who in fact left their ships because of this change of government should be treated the same, or substantially the same, and should be entitled to the three months' gratuity which was being given to the other people. Mr. Kwapinski told the trade union representatives that the government was paying three months' gratuity to civil servants, that the shipping lines were going to do the same to their office staffs, and that he was proposing that seamen should be treated the same way. He then, in their presence, dictated a telegram to the head of his shipping department."

The effect of that telegram is summarised by the learned judge in the following passages of his judgment:

"That telegram . . . referred to what was happening about the political situation, and said that the Ministers had decided to discharge all officials of the government and pay them compensation, and then it said: 'At the same time, on the authority of the government I made a declaration to the Minister of War Transport, on behalf of the Polish crews, requesting that no ships of the Polish merchant navy be directed to waters under the Soviet control.' That was another point they were anxious about. Then it said: 'The trade organisations of officers and seamen are of the view that until free, unfettered and democratic elections are held they are unable to return to homeland as well as to take ships to waters controlled by the Soviet Union. I also asked that in this case all Polish ships be first directed to the United Kingdom ports so as to give the officers and seamen the possibility to disembark in ports considered as home ports.' Then comes the part that we are considering in this case: 'I also declared that in the event their leaving the ships owing to the above-mentioned causes the captain, officers and seamen are entitled to compensation on equal footing with government officials and shipping companies staff . . . captains of the ships are requested to bring the above to the notice of the crews'."

It is on what transpired at this interview that the plaintiffs rely as constituting the agreement on which they primarily sue. On the same day Mr. Plinius had an interview with Mr. Kwapinski, at the latter's request. Mr. Plinius says that Mr. Kwapinski said that the board of management of the defendants must reverse the decision they had taken on June 27, 1945, not to offer compensation to officers and seamen who might leave their ships by reason of the impending change of government. Mr. Plinius refused and left the Minister. Another interview, however, took place on the next day (July 4) at which Mr. Plinius was shown a telegram which was, so far as material, in the same terms as that which had been dictated by Mr. Kwapinski at his interview with the union officials. Mr. Plinius at first refused to send it, but ultimately, on its being pointed out to him that it was being sent by the Minister and that he was merely being used as a post office, he agreed to send it and did so on July 5, 1945. In its final form, as dispatched to the master of the Morska Wola, it read as follows:

"Priority. Captain Morska Wola c/o Lamports Manchester. For Miezkowski. In connection with the political situation now prevailing and in view of the announcement of Anglo-Saxon governments on possibility of withdrawing recognition from the Polish government the Council of Ministers at meeting on June 29 decided to discharge all officials of the government administration and to pay those discharged compensation on the day of publication of the decree. At same time on authority of the government I made a declaration to Minister of War Transport on behalf of Polish crews requesting that no ships of Polish merchant navy be directed to waters under the Soviet control. I have done so as a consequence of claims put forward by the interested organisations. The trade organisations of officers and seamen are of the view that until free unfettered and democratic elections are held they are unable to return to homeland or take ships to waters controlled by the Soviet Union. I also asked that in this case all Polish ships be first directed to United Kingdom ports so as to give officers and seamen the possibility to disembark in ports considered as home ports. I also declared that in event their leaving ships owing to above-mentioned causes captains officers and seamen should be entitled to receive suitable compensation. Captains of ships are requested to bring the above to notice of crews. Jan Kwapinski, Minister."

It is common ground between the parties that "suitable" in this telegram meant "three months," and the plaintiff Krupka deposed that the captain of the ship told them so. The telegram was received by the master of the Morska Wola on the same day and was in due course read to the officers and crew. The plaintiff Boguslawski, who had been serving in the ship since before July 5 heard it on July 5, but it only reached the plaintiff Krupka (who joined the ship on July 4) on July 6. The plaintiff Boguslawski left it on July 11. Mr. Kwapinski wrote a letter to Mr. Plinius and to the curators of the other two lines managed

A by the defendants, purporting to act under powers conferred by the legislation which provided for the appointment of curators, and pursuant to the resolution of the Council of Ministers passed on June 25, 1945. By it he directed the curators to pay gratuities to officers and seamen who left their ships on the same scale as that paid to the shore employees of the respective companies. That letter bore date July 5, 1945, but did not reach any of the curators before July 7, and did not reach Mr. Plinius until July 10. It appears improbable, therefore, that the letter was dispatched before July 6. In the meantime, as at midnight on July 5/6, His Majesty's government had recognised the new Polish government. Paragraph 1 of the certificate of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs which proves this fact is in the following terms:

B "1. Up to and including midnight of July 5/6, 1945, His Majesty's government in the United Kingdom recognised the Polish government having its headquarters in London as being the government of Poland, and as from midnight of July 5/6, 1945, His Majesty's government in the United Kingdom recognised the Polish Provisional Government of National Unity as the government of Poland, and as from that date ceased to recognise the former Polish government having its headquarters in London as being the government of Poland."

C I have now stated all the material facts other than the relevant Polish law which is, of course, in our courts a question of fact. I shall deal with the question of Polish law when I come to consider the points thereon taken by counsel for the defendants.

D The plaintiffs commenced the present action on Feb. 8, 1946. By their statement of claim they based their right to relief on an agreement, alleged to have been made at the interview on July 3, 1945, between Mr. Kwapinski, acting on behalf of all Polish shipping companies, on the one side, and the representatives of the two unions, acting on behalf of all their members, on the other, whereby it was provided that, in the event of such members leaving their ships, they should be entitled to receive compensation on an equal footing with all government employees of the State and the staff of Polish shipping companies. They alleged in the alternative that the plaintiffs, by leaving their ships on the faith of the telegram signed by Mr. Kwapinski (dispatched by Mr. Plinius and communicated to them by their captain), had accepted the offer contained in that telegram, which offer, the plaintiffs said, had been made by Mr. Kwapinski on behalf of the defendants. They made other alternative allegations including, as we understand the pleadings, an allegation that the defendants by Mr. Kwapinski had contracted a unilateral obligation to the plaintiffs which was binding on the defendants after communication to the plaintiffs without the necessity for any acceptance. The defendants denied liability under Polish law, alleged that the representatives of the union had no authority to make the oral agreement set up by the plaintiffs, and pleaded, in the further alternative, that the transaction alleged was a contract of donation and invalid for want of notarial act. They further alleged that the effect of the recognition of the new Polish government by His Majesty's government at midnight on July 5/6 was retroactively to make the old Polish government incompetent after June 28 to carry out any legislative, administrative or other function on behalf of the Polish State.

H FINNEMORE, J., found for the plaintiffs. He rejected the argument based on the effect in English law of the recognition of the new Polish government, on the ground that the new Polish government had not prior to midnight on July 5/6 any control over Polish ships and Polish seamen because they were all far removed from the area over which the new Polish government was at that time exercising de facto control. He also relied on the fact that the certificate of the Secretary of State specified the exact hour at which recognition was accorded to the new Polish government and impliedly withdrawn from the old Polish government, and said:

"I should have thought, and I so hold—there being no authority on this that I know at all—that, where the government of this country in terms certifies that it recognises one government up to midnight on July 5 and another government thereafter, the acts done by that government recognised up to midnight in this country while it was still recognised as the government must be valid. Otherwise this certificate would seem to mean little or nothing. And I think, if that is so, there can be no retroactive effect back, for example, to June 28, as is pleaded in this case."

That difficulty being out of the way, the learned judge held that the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed. He summarised the objections taken by the defendants to the plaintiffs' claim as follows: (i) that the Minister had no power to make this contract; (ii) that, if he did make it, it was a collective agreement and under Polish law should have been in writing; (iii) that the trade union officials had no right or authority to enter on behalf of their members into whatever it was they did enter into; (iv) that, if it was merely a unilateral obligation, it was unenforceable as against the company; (v) that, if it was argued (as, of course, it is) that the men ratified the action of the trade union officials by leaving their ships, they had no power to ratify such an arrangement; (vi) that, at the most, this arrangement of July 3 was what in Polish law is called a "donation" and that a donation must be in a special form, what is called "notarial form," and that, plainly, this arrangement was not in that proper form. He found in the plaintiffs' favour that (i) the Minister had power under cl. 19 of an Act passed on Mar. 30, 1939, to make on behalf of the defendants the contract alleged; (ii) it was not a collective agreement within art. 445 of the Polish Code of Obligations, because something given to workmen on one occasion only could not be a collective agreement, at any rate where it did not affect future entrants into the trade or profession; (iii) the union officials had power to make the alleged agreement on behalf of the plaintiffs or, at any rate, if they had no such authority, they purported to do so, and the plaintiffs by leaving their ship ratified the contract; (iv) quite apart from the question of contract, Mr. Kwapinski had entered into a unilateral obligation on behalf of the defendants to pay the compensation claimed and that obligation, being communicated to or accepted or ratified by the union representatives, or, alternatively, the plaintiffs, became a bilateral enforceable obligation; (v) if the contract relied on would otherwise have been a contract of donation within art. 354 of the Code of Obligations and, therefore, valid only if made in notarial form, it was taken out of that article because it was made under a moral duty and was, therefore, within art. 355 (3).

From that decision the defendants appeal and base their appeal on the same points which they took in the court below. Two further points emerged before us. The defendants contended that (i) interest not being claimed as a matter of contract, the right to it is governed by the law governing procedure (in this case, English law) and, accordingly, interest should only have been allowed at the rate of four per cent.; (ii) having regard to the evidence of Dr. Bloch, the expert witness for the plaintiffs, the plaintiff Krupka, having only joined his ship on July 4, is not within the ambit of the contract alleged to have been made on July 3. I can dispose shortly of these two points. Counsel for the plaintiffs very properly admitted that the learned judge had allowed interest at eight per cent. on the basis of Polish law being applicable. He further admitted that this was an error, non-contractual interest awarded by way of damages being governed by the lex fori and not by the proper law of the contract. He also admitted—as he was bound to do, in view of the unanimous opinion of the legal experts—that under Polish law the contract alleged to have been made on July 3 enured only for the benefit of officers and seamen then serving on board ship and this excluded Mr. Krupka. He reserved, of course, Mr. Krupka's rights based on the telegram dispatched on July 5.

Counsel for the defendants put in the forefront of his argument the point that in English law recognition by His Majesty's government of a foreign government, de jure or de facto, has retroactive effect. Before I consider the validity of this point, I must premise that, although, as the certificate itself points out in para. 3 thereof, the question whether and to what extent recognition of a foreign government is retrospective is a matter of law for decision by this court, the facts as to the extent of recognition of the old and the new governments are decisively settled by the certificate of the Secretary of State. I have already read para. 1, which is the material part of that certificate for this purpose. It seems to me, as it did to the learned judge, that, where the Secretary of State certifies that His Majesty's government recognises one government up to midnight on a specified day and another government thereafter, the position is the same as if a Secretary of State were to certify, for example, that His Majesty's government recognised the government of one absolute monarch up to the moment of his death and the government of his son and heir thereafter. There would then be no question of retroactive effect—one government would be and could be recognised as the successor of the other. So here it seems to me that the Secretary of State is, in effect, saying that the new Polish government is recognised as from midnight on July 5/6 as the legitimate successor of the old Polish government. In these circumstances it seems to me that the acts of the old Polish government prior to midnight on July 5/6 are valid and binding on the new Polish government, at any rate unless and until the new Polish government rescinds or repudiates them, an event which, it is common ground between the parties, has not occurred so far as any act relevant to the present case is concerned.

Having reached this conclusion, it is not strictly necessary for me to consider what the position would be if the recognition by His Majesty's government of the new Polish government were to have some retroactive effect. As, however, the matter was fully argued, I ought to say that, even on this basis, I would doubt whether counsel for the defendants was entitled to succeed. He argued that recognition not only validated all acts of the new Polish government done during what he conveniently called the twilight period (i.e., the period between the date on which that government attained power and the date of recognition by His Majesty's government), but also invalidated all acts, whether executive or legislative, done during the twilight period by the old Polish government. He admitted that there was no reported case that went this length, but he said that the principle laid down by this court in Aksionairnoye Obschestvo A. M. Luther v. James Sagor & Co. (1), and approved by the House of Lords in Lazard Brothers & Co. v. Midland Bank, Ltd. (2), was sufficiently far-reaching to entitle him to succeed. That principle is concisely stated by LORD WRIGHT in the latter case, where the question at issue was whether or not the Industrial Bank, a Russian company, was an existing company or had been duly dissolved under Russian law. LORD WRIGHT said ([1933] A.C. 297):

“The Industrial Bank was a corporation established by an Act of the Tsar; but the governing authority in Russia, as recognised in the English courts, is now and has been since October, 1917, the Soviet State. Soviet law is accordingly the governing law from the same date in virtue of the recognition de facto in 1921 and de jure in 1924 by this country of the Soviet State as the sovereign power in Russia. The effect of such recognition is retroactive and dates back to the original establishment of Soviet rule which was in the 1917 October Revolution, as was held by the Court of Appeal in Aksionairnoye Obschestvo A. M. Luther v. James Sagor & Co. (1).”

In Luther's case (1), however, the question at issue was the validity of acts done by the foreign government in territory indisputably under its de facto control, and I think that the ambit of the decision was correctly stated by BENNETT, J., in Haile Selassie v. Cable & Wireless, Ltd. (No. 2) (3), where he said ([1938] 3 All E.R. 684) that Aksionairnoye Obschestvo A. M. Luther v. James Sagor & Co. (1) had reference:

"... exclusively to the acts of a de facto government and a de jure government, both recognised as such by His Majesty's government and both claiming to have jurisdiction in the same area with reference to persons and property in that area."

Counsel for the defendants suggested that Banco de Bilbao v. Sancha (4) lent some support to his argument. In that case the question at issue was which of two sets of persons, each claiming to be the board of directors of a company incorporated in Spain, and having its corporate home at Bilbao, was to be treated as the legitimate board of directors. The court held that that question depended on the construction of the company's articles, that this question must be governed by the law from time to time prevailing at the place where the corporate home was set up, and that must be the law of the government recognised as the de facto government of the area which included the corporate home. It is true that the matter before the court was the question who were entitled to be managers of the English branch of the company, but the ratio decidendi was as I have stated. I do not think, therefore, that it carries the matter any further than it was carried in Luther v. James Sagar & Co. (1).

In the present case I am concerned, not with the validity of acts done in Poland by a Polish government, but with acts done in England by the old Polish government which are alleged to have given rise to a contract between the defendants and persons all of whom were outside Poland. Counsel for the defendants, as I have said, claimed that the retroactive principle still applied, but he found himself obliged to admit that there must be a limit to its application. Thus, he conceded that, if during the twilight period an Englishman paid in England a debt due to the Polish State to the proper officer of the old Polish government and got a discharge from him, an action in the English courts at the instance of the new Polish government to recover that debt must inevitably fail. He said, however, that the present case was not analogous (a) because the plaintiffs were Polish nationals, and (b) because the questions at issue were not in regard to the validity of a completed transaction, but whether an executory contract, or, on one view, an offer which had not yet resulted in a contract, remained in force after the recognition of the new Polish government. I do not think that either of these suggested distinctions affect the matter. The English sovereign affords his protection, not only to British subjects, but to foreigners for the time being in England. Counsel for the defendants admitted that no distinction could be made between British subjects and alien friends in England, but he said that we were dealing here with Polish subjects in Polish ships and, therefore, notionally on Polish territory. It seems to me, however, that the nationality of the plaintiffs and the ships is irrelevant, since the alleged contract of July 3, if made, was made in England, or, if the matter rests on the telegram, then the offer was made from England and, having regard to its nature, acceptance by leaving the ship could only take place outside Poland. I would add that there is clear evidence that the old Polish government was purporting up to midnight on July 5/6 to exercise control over the Polish merchant navy and no evidence that in the twilight period the new Polish government asserted any such control.

The second distinction presents more difficulty, but I derive great assistance from the judgment of STONE, J., in the Supreme Court of the United States of America, in Guaranty Trust Co. v. United States (5). In that case the question at issue was whether a debt admitted to have been at one time due from Guaranty Trust Co. to the provisional government of Russia (hereinafter referred to as "the Karensky government") was statute-barred at the date of issue of the writ. The answer to this question depended on whether a notice, given by Guaranty Trust Co. to the representative of the Karensky government that, for reasons stated, the company repudiated all liability for the alleged debt, was effective to set the statute running against the Soviet government and in favour of Guaranty Trust Co. The Supreme Court held that it was effective. STONE, J., delivering the judgment of the court, said (304 U.S. 140):

A "The government argues that recognition of the Soviet government, an action which for many purposes validated here that government's previous acts within its own territory . . . operates to set at naught all the legal consequences of the prior recognition by the United States of the provisional government and its representatives, as though such recognition had never B been accorded. This is tantamount to saying that the judgments in suits maintained here by the diplomatic representatives of the provisional government, valid when rendered, became invalid upon recognition of the Soviet government. The argument thus ignores the distinction between the effect of our recognition of a foreign government with respect to its acts within its C own territory prior to recognition, and the effect upon previous transactions consummated here between its predecessor and our own nationals. The one operates only to validate to a limited extent acts of a de facto government which by virtue of the recognition, has become a government de jure. But it does not follow that recognition renders of no effect transactions here with a prior recognised government in conformity to the declared policy of our own D government. The very purpose of the recognition by our government is that our nationals may be conclusively advised with what government they may safely carry on business transactions and who its representatives are. If those transactions, valid when entered into, were to be disregarded after the later recognition of a successor government, recognition would be but an idle ceremony, yielding none of the advantages of established diplomatic relations in enabling business transactions to proceed, and affording no protection to our own nationals in carrying them on. So far as we are advised no court has sanctioned such a doctrine."

E That decision is not, of course, binding on us, but I respectfully agree with every word that the learned judge said. I may add that, as FINNEMORE, J., pointed out, in the present case a contrary conclusion would be particularly unfortunate, since the certificate of the Secretary of State says not only that as from midnight on July 5/6 His Majesty's government recognised the new Polish government, but also that up to midnight His Majesty's government recognised the old Polish government.

F Counsel for the defendants points out that in Guaranty Trust Co. v. United States (5) the court was dealing with a completed transaction. I cannot, however, think that a different principle applies where the contract is executory. In either case the other party to the transaction has acquired a vested right.
A fortiori must this be the case where, as here, if there is a contract, that contract was made by the government not on its own behalf, but as agent for a third party, the defendants. A more difficult question is in regard to the position where G the action of the old government has at the date of recognition constituted not a contract but an offer which might, or might not, be accepted and thus lead to a contract. On the whole, I incline to think that counsel for the plaintiffs gave the right answer to this problem when he said that, assuming for this purpose that Mr. Kwapinski had authority to make the offer on behalf of the defendants, the offer, when made, became the offer of the defendants. Until accepted it could, no doubt, be withdrawn either by the defendants themselves or by the H new Polish government on their behalf if the war-time legislation remained in force. Until withdrawn, it could be accepted, and, in the present case, was accepted by the plaintiffs by their leaving their ship pursuant to the terms of the offer.

Counsel for the defendants objected that this conclusion involved the infraction of a well-established principle of international law which formed part of the municipal law of this country. That principle is that there cannot be more than one government of a foreign State recognised at the same time. I accept the principle, but I do not agree that a decision in favour of the plaintiffs will infringe it. The principle truly stated is that there cannot be two governments recognised in respect of the same territory at the same time, but a recognition of the validity of the acts done by the old government during the twilight period outside the area under the de facto control of the new government does not, in my opinion, involve the recognition of two governments at the same time in respect of the same area. Comity seems to us to be satisfied by a recognition of the validity of the acts done by the new Polish government during the twilight period in territory under its de facto control, and convenience requires that the validity of acts done in England by the old Polish government during the same period should not be questioned. I would add in passing that no conflict is involved in the present case, since the new Polish government has done nothing to invalidate the acts of the old Polish government which we are considering. For these reasons, I agree with the conclusion of FINNEMORE, J., that the defence based on English law fails.

I turn, therefore, to the questions of Polish law which determine whether the plaintiffs acquired rights which enable them to succeed in this action. On these points, while I differ from the learned judge in the court below on certain particulars, I find myself in complete agreement with his method of approach to the problem and with the result at which he arrived. He was faced on most points with a conflict of views between the experts. In reaching his conclusion he was, I think, entitled, as he did, to bear in mind that, while the bona fides of all the experts was unquestioned, Dr. Bloch was a recognised expert on the branch of law with which the court was concerned, whereas Dr. Szer and Professor Piotrowski, though they had some experience in that field, did not specialise in it. Moreover, there being that conflict and there being apparently no decision of a Polish court directly in point, the judge was entitled to apply his own mind to the translations of the relevant sections of the Code with which he had been supplied in order to determine which of the conflicting views of the experts was correct. I think he did so, and I agree with him that on most points this method of approach leads to the acceptance of Dr. Bloch's views.

With these preliminary observations, I turn to the six points of Polish law on which counsel for the defendants relied. First, as to the authority of Mr. Kwapinski to bind the defendants. It was common ground that this authority, if it existed, was to be found in the Act of Mar. 30, 1939, concerning the communications in the defence service of the State. Article 1 provided that, in the meaning of the Act, "communications" are considered all areas and functions connected with the transport of persons, goods and information. Article 2 specifically included sea transport. Article 13 (1) was in the following terms:

"In cases of outbreak of war or the issuing of mobilisation and cases where the defence interests of State as laid down by a resolution of the Council of Ministers will require, all means of communications become subordinate to the defence interests of the State."

Articles 17, 18 and 19 enabled the appropriate Minister on the occurrence of any of the events mentioned in art. 13 to assume the supreme management of various means of transport. Article 19, which is the relevant article for the purposes of this case, reads as follows:

"In conditions enumerated in art. 13 (1) shipping companies, whether owned by the local government authority or owned privately, shall be placed under the supreme management of the Minister of Industry and Commerce. The board of directors of such companies shall become executive organs of the Minister of Industry and Commerce."

Article 21 confers certain powers on the military authorities as distinct from the Ministers which, it was suggested, might have some bearing on the question we have to decide, but I am unable to derive any assistance from it.

Dr. Bloch took the view that art. 19 enabled the Minister to do anything he thought fit on behalf of and in the name of the companies, including the making of contracts on their behalf. That is the conclusion I should have reached from the language of the translation before us, but counsel for the defendants says, as did his experts at the trial, that this construction ignores the concluding words of art. 19, "The board of directors shall become executive organs of the Minister." He argued that (i) the board of directors were, under the statutes of the company, the executive organ of the company and remained so despite the Act of 1939; therefore (ii) the Minister's only power, if he desired the company to enter into a contract, was to direct Mr. Plinius (who was a member of the board of management and the curator in whom, under the war-time legislation, certain powers in relation to the company were vested) to enter into the desired contract in the company's name. It was suggested that, if Mr. Plinius was recalcitrant, the Minister's only remedy was to dismiss him and appoint another curator. This construction seems to me inconsistent with the language of the Act of 1939 and to defeat its purpose as a measure intended to be available in time of war. Counsel for the defendants also argued that, if the Minister had the power, he was not purporting to exercise it. That, said counsel, was clear from the fact that in his letter, dated July 5 and addressed to Mr. Plinius, he cited as his authority, not the Act of 1939, but art. 5 of the Act of Feb. 26, 1940 (the decree as to curatorship). I do not regard this as conclusive. The material question, in our opinion, is whether or not the Minister intended to enter into a contract on behalf of the defendants. If he did, and if in fact he had the power, the fact that he cited the wrong Act is, I think, immaterial. I agree with the learned judge in thinking that the effect of art. 19 of the Act of 1939 was to give to the Minister the widest powers in relation to the company, which he could exercise himself or delegate to the board of management if he chose to do so.

The next question is in regard to the authority of Mr. Dabkowski and Mr. Fligel to contract on behalf of the plaintiffs. This was challenged on two grounds. It was said (i) that the union had no power to make the alleged contract, and (ii) that, if the union had the power, there was no evidence to show that it could be exercised by Mr. Dabkowski and Mr. Fligel. The second point was not very strenuously argued, and I shall content myself with expressing my complete agreement with the observations of FINNEMORE, J., to the effect that the evidence quite satisfied him that these gentlemen were fully authorised to act. The first point must depend on the statutes of the unions. Among the objects of the officers' union was:

"2. to conclude agreements between the captains, navigating, engineer and radio officers of the Polish merchant navy on one side and the employers on the other side, also to regulate the relations among the members of the association."

The rules of the seamen's union state that one of its objects is to conclude agreements in respect of conditions of work and wages. I respectfully agree with the learned judge in the court below in thinking that, on any view of the arrangement made on July 3, it was plainly within cl. 2 of the statutes of the officers' union and was an agreement in respect of conditions of work and wages within the meaning of the statutes of the seamen's union. This conclusion accords with the evidence of Dr. Bloch. Counsel for the defendants, however, says that the authority given by the statutes was limited to making agreements which are collective agreements within art. 455 of the Polish Code of Obligations. I shall have to consider that section more closely when I come to consider whether the arrangement made on July 3 was a collective agreement within it. Suffice it for the moment to say that it is impossible to give this limited meaning to the word "agreements" in the statutes of the seamen's union, since they were adopted before art. 455 became law, and I see no reason to give a more limited meaning to the same word in the statutes of the officers' union.

The next question is: What did the Minister arrange (I use a neutral word) with the representatives of the unions on July 3? Counsel for the defendants, in his reply, suggested that he made no contract, but merely announced his intention of performing an executive act. That point does not seem to have been taken in the court below, nor do any questions seem to have been directed to the expert witnesses on that basis. In these circumstances, and having regard to the evidence of Mr. Kwapinski, Mr. Dabkowski and Mr. Fligel, we are not prepared to dissent from the judge's finding that a contractual agreement was reached on July 3. But what was that agreement? That is a question of fact and the evidence of the Polish lawyers is only admissible in so far as they can call the court's attention to provisions of the Polish Code or to decisions of Polish courts laying down principles of construction which are applicable to the facts of this case. The only relevant principles to which our attention was called were, I think, those which are to be found in arts. 107 and 108 of the Code of Obligations, which read as follows:

"Article 107. Declaration of will shall be interpreted in such a manner as it is required under the circumstances in which they were made by the principle of good faith and fair dealing. Article 108. In contracts one should examine mutual intention of the parties and the object of the contract rather than adhere to the literal meaning of the words."

With these articles in mind, I shall turn first to the only contemporaneous document, the note made by Mr. Dabkowski shortly after the interview, but would mention in passing that, on July 2 Mr. Dabkowski had written to the Minister asking him to issue orders to the Polish Shipowners' Association that the shipping companies should, among other things, pay captains and officers three months' compensation in the event of the eventual taking over of the Polish merchant navy by the new Polish government. That was one of the matters discussed on July 3, and Mr. Dabkowski's contemporaneous memorandum contains the following extracts on the subject:

"3. The compensation due to officers and men of Polish merchant navy in view of payment of compensation to the administrative staff of shipping companies, ships' crews should be paid compensation on equal footing. The representatives of both unions request that the Minister as supreme manager of shipping companies should make a binding declaration in this matter . . . As the payment of compensation will burden shipping companies with considerable expense and as they desire to have in this matter the view of the whole cabinet, the Minister obtained an appropriate resolution on June 25, 1945, which was published in the Journal of Laws on the day of this meeting. Further, the Minister declared that in exercise of supreme management of Polish merchant navy he gives to officers and men who will stop working aboard ships in consequence of the political changes the right to compensation on equal footing with administrative employees of the Polish merchant navy and civil servants."

Mr. Dabkowski confirmed that this document was a correct record of what happened at the interview, and so did Mr. Fligel. [HIS LORDSHIP then set out the most important parts of Mr. Kwapinski's evidence on the point, and continued:] In my opinion, the proper inference to draw from this evidence is that the parties had a contractual intent, but that the agreement was an agreement between the Minister, on the one side, and the unions, on the other, and not between the Minister and the unions contracting on behalf of their individual members. I do not read the agreement quite in the sense that the learned judge appears to have done in the passages of his judgment which we have already cited. I think the agreement was an agreement by the Minister that, acting on behalf of the shipping companies in the exercise of his powers under art. 19 of the Act of 1939, he would dispatch a telegram in the terms or to the effect of the draft he dictated in the presence of Mr. Dabkowski and Mr. Fligel.

The next question is whether that agreement was an agreement within art. 455 of the Code, which required a collective agreement to be in writing and made it void unless in writing. I do not think I need read the sections of the Code since the experts were all of opinion that, if an agreement was made which was a collective agreement in the sense that it was intended to apply to all the members of the union, or to a class of the members, but was intended to operate on one occasion only, it was not a collective agreement effected by art. 455 and need not be in writing. An illustration put to the witness was an agreement between the Employers' Federation and the unions that the members of the unions should have a day's holiday on the occasion of a particular football match. We see no distinction between such an agreement and an agreement, such as was made on July 3, to dispatch a particular telegram on a particular occasion.

A In our opinion, therefore, the agreement of July 3 was not a collective agreement within art. 455.

On the construction I have placed on the agreement of July 3, it will not enable the plaintiffs to succeed in this action, since the Minister fulfilled his obligation thereunder when he dispatched the telegram of July 5. This construction is not that adopted by the learned judge and it has the inevitable consequence that

C no question of ratification of that contract by the plaintiffs can arise. The plaintiffs can only succeed if they establish that the telegram constituted either (a) a unilateral obligation binding on the defendants as soon as communicated to the party or parties intended to benefit, or (b) an offer which was accepted by them. In the view that I have formed of the telegram, I need not go into the question of unilateral obligation for the following reasons. (i) I do not read

D the telegram as evidencing any intent to undertake any such obligation. I think it was intended as an offer which the officers and seamen could accept by leaving their ship. (ii) I agree with the learned judge that, if there was ever a unilateral obligation, it became bilateral when the plaintiffs walked off their ship.

The next question with which I have to deal is whether the offer contained

E in the telegram was accepted and thus a contract became binding between the parties. It was argued by counsel for the defendants that, as the acceptance did not take place until after the recognition of the new Polish government, no contract resulted. I have already given our reasons for rejecting this argument. Counsel for the defendants also said that the defendants could not be bound by the agreement, since the telegram was sent by the Minister and did not

F contain any statement that the compensation was to be paid by the defendants. I am unable to accept this argument. Article 107 of the Code which I have already read is, I think, in point. The intention of the Minister and of the union representatives that the payment was to be made by the companies is clearly established by their evidence. Bearing in mind that the plaintiffs knew when they accepted the offer that the new Polish government had been recognised,

G I think it is a fair inference that it was with the shipping companies that the plaintiffs were intending to contract. There remains the question whether this contract constituted a contract of donation within art. 354 of the Polish Code of Obligations and was, therefore, void for want of a notarial act. I agree with the learned judge in the court below that this question must be answered in the negative. Article 355 provides that:

H " ... the provisions concerning donations shall not apply to ... (3) increment of property which had been either promised or provided for, satisfied either a moral duty, or propriety of behaviour or custom."

I agree with the learned judge that, assuming the promised compensation constitutes an increment of property, it can fairly be said to have been given in satisfaction of a moral duty or propriety of behaviour. I respectfully adopt the words of his judgment where he says:

" Obviously there is no moral duty to say to the men: ' If you go off the ship without giving proper notice at a time when we want you badly to stop there, we are going to give you three months' compensation.' That would be absurd: there would be no moral duty at all. But, if the employer, recognising, as in this case, certain extraneous facts which, in his opinion, reasonably would lead people to give up their employment in any event, says, as he might well do: ' I am sorry about the position which has brought about the result that you will not be able to sail the ships, but, in view of what you have done and so that you will not be in great hardship, I am going to give you three months' gratuity,' I think that would be satisfying, on the part of the owner, a moral duty and would be expressing what might be called propriety of behaviour."

As I have already said, counsel for the defendants sought to distinguish the position of Mr. Krupka from that of Mr. Boguslawski on the ground that (a) he did not join the ship until July 4, (b) the telegram was not communicated to him until July 6, (c) he did not leave the ship until July 7. On the view that I have formed of the case, these distinctions do not amount to a real difference. The first point is disposed of by the fact that, in my view, the plaintiffs succeed, not on the alleged contract of July 3, but on the contract arising from the offer in the telegram of July 5 and its subsequent acceptance by the plaintiffs. The second two points are immaterial in view of my conclusion, based on the terms of the certificate of the Secretary of State, that all acts done in England by the old Polish government prior to midnight on July 5/6 are binding on the new Polish government, at any rate unless and until the new Polish government takes some step to cancel or repudiate them, an event which in this case did not occur. Had I taken a different view of the effect of the certificate of the Secretary of State, a difficult question might have arisen as regards Mr. Krupka in view of the fact that the offer was not communicated to him until after the recognition of the new Polish government, and that, under art. 30 of the Polish Code of Obligations, the expression of the will which is intended to be communicated to another person is deemed to be made when it reaches the said person in such a manner that he can acquaint himself with its context. But this point was not considered by the learned judge and does not seem to have been put to the experts on Polish law, and I think it better, therefore, to express no opinion on it. For these reasons, I think that the plaintiffs are entitled to retain their judgment with the variation only in the rate of interest allowed from eight per cent. to four per cent.

DENNING, L.J.: At the beginning of July, 1945, the officers and crews of the Polish merchant navy were in a quandary. The ships in which they were serving were not only Polish ships flying the Polish flag, but they were also, for all practical purposes, owned and controlled by the Polish government. That government, for instance, owned 98½ per cent. of the shares of the Gdynia Ameryka Linie. All through the war the British government had recognised the Polish government which had its headquarters in London as being the government of Poland, but the end of that government was in sight. The British government, in pursuance of an international agreement made at Yalta in the Crimea, had announced that it would soon recognise the new Polish government which had been set up in Warsaw and that it would no longer recognise the old London government. Many of the men thought that this foreboded ill. They foresaw that the new government in Warsaw would come under the control of the Soviet Union and they feared to go back to a Poland which was under Soviet control. They looked for a lead to their unions and they got it. The union leaders had discussions with the Polish Minister in London, Mr. Kwapinski, and, as a result of these discussions, the Minister sent a telegram to the captains of all the ships. It said, in effect, that any officer or man who left his ship in consequence of the political situation should receive suitable compensation. The telegram was sent out at noon on July 5. It soon reached the Polish motor vessel Morska Wola, which was lying tied up at the Manchester end of the Ship Canal. The captain was away in London. He had probably gone to take part in the discussions. In his absence the chief officer called a meeting of the officers and read the telegram to them. He told them that "suitable compensation" meant that compensation equal to the amount of three months' wages would be paid to all officers and men who left the ship. The officers discussed the position, but no decision was made that day as to what they should do. They went on with their work in the ship.

Before anything else happened, at midnight of July 5/6, 1945, the British government ceased to recognise the Polish government in London as being the government of Poland and recognised the new government in Warsaw as the government of Poland. The important question is: How did that affect the legal position? Did the telegram sent by the London Minister have any continuing effect after midnight? Could the men safely act on it afterwards? They did, in fact, continue to act on it. On July 6 the chief officer of the Morska Wola read the telegram in the seamen's mess, and told them that the compensation would be three months' pay for those who left the ship. The seamen discussed the position, but made no decision until the captain came back from London the next day and confirmed what the chief officer had told them. Soon afterwards the men left the ship. The carpenter, Stanislaw Krupka, decided to leave at once and did so on July 7, although he had only joined the ship on July 4. The second engineer, Jan Boguslawski, did not leave until July 11. He gave his reasons quite simply:

"I left the ship because everybody did, and I was promised that I would get three months' wages, and because the ship probably was going to waters under Soviet Union control and I didn't want to go there."

Jan Boguslawski and Stanislaw Krupka now bring this action in the High Court of Justice in England, claiming three months' wages. They do not bring the action against the Polish government. They could not, of course, do that, because a foreign government cannot be impleaded in our courts. They bring it against the shipowners, the Gdynia Ameryka Linie. They say that, when the Minister sent the telegram, he sent it as supreme manager of the shipping company, and thereby bound the shipping company to pay the men three months' wages if they left the ship, and, as they left it, they are entitled by contract to that sum. The outstanding fact in the case is that it was after July 6, 1945, that the men acted on the telegram. It is vital, therefore, to decide whether the telegram had any continuing effect after Mr. Kwapinski ceased to be Minister. Assuming that the men are right in saying that Mr. Kwapinski sent the telegram as supreme manager of the shipping company, nevertheless he was only supreme manager ex officio because he was Minister of Industry and Commerce. If his actions as Minister had no continuing effect after midnight on July 5/6, 1945, nor did his actions as supreme manager. So the question is whether his actions as Minister had any continuing effect.

On this question there is no relevant precedent to guide us, and the matter has to be considered on principle. At the outset it is necessary, I think, to consider what was the legal effect of our recognition of the Polish government, which had its headquarters in London from 1940 until 1945. Poland itself had been overrun by the Germans and was occupied by them, but the members of the government had escaped, and so had men and ships. There was, for the time being, no territory for the government to govern, but there were the men and the ships, and there was no reason why the government in exile should not exercise governmental functions in regard to them, provided that it had at its disposal the remedies which every government needs to enforce its decrees. No such remedies could have been exercised in England except by the permission of our government. No other government can exercise acts of sovereignty here except with our consent. That was freely given. The exiled governments established and exercised their functions here with the consent, and, indeed, on the invitation, of our government. They made, for instance, decrees imposing compulsory military service on the men and decrees requisitioning the ships. They had not the means to enforce the decrees, but the means were supplied by us. Thus, when a Dutch national deserted from the Dutch army, he was arrested by the metropolitan police, and, on an application for habeas corpus, our courts refused to release him: see Re Amand (6). When the Norwegian government made a decree requisitioning choses in action, the English courts gave effect to it: see Lorentzen v. Lydden & Co., Ltd. (7). I do not know that our courts would ever embark on an inquiry whether those decrees were constitutionally valid according to the pre-war constitution of the country concerned. If the exiled government was to exercise the functions of government, it must have the power to make decrees, and, if the old machinery could not be operated in exile, the exiled government must be able to adapt the machinery so far as necessary for it to exercise its functions here, otherwise our recognition of it might be rendered valueless to them and to us.

This all shows that the recognition by us of the Polish government in London was a very special recognition. We took that government, so to speak, under our wing, and allowed it to exercise here extraordinary powers over its men and ships, and these powers were recognised and enforced by our courts. The time came later—viz., at midnight on July 5/6, 1945—when we ceased to recognise that government, but I cannot believe that the de-recognition, if I may so describe it, had any retroactive effect in respect of acts done here. It could not render invalid acts which we had previously sanctioned as valid, nor could it take away rights and obligations which had accrued only because we had permitted them to accrue.

This brings me to the next question which is: What was the legal effect of our recognition of the Polish Provisional Government of National Unity, which was formed in Warsaw on June 28, 1945? We recognised it as the government of Poland as from midnight on July 5/6, 1945. To what extent did our recognition operate retroactively, to June 28, 1945? In the ordinary way, of course, our courts do give retroactive effect to the recognition of a government, in that we recognise the acts of that government within its proper sphere to have been lawful, not merely from the time of recognition, but antecedently from the time that it was an effective government. Thus, if it has already made decrees transferring to itself goods and chattels within its territory and sold those goods to British buyers, our courts will recognise the transfer as valid: see Aksionairnoye Obschestvo A. M. Luther v. James Sagor & Co. (1). If it has already passed legislation dissolving companies incorporated within its territory, our courts will hold the companies to be non-existent, as well here as there: see Lazard Brothers & Co. v. Midland Bank, Ltd. (2). The reason for this retroactivity is that, just as we recognise as lawful the decrees of the government which are made subsequent to our recognition of that government, so also we must recognise as lawful the decrees made prior to our recognition of the government, unless, indeed, we are to say that the government must re-enact those prior decrees before they can have any validity in our eyes. That would be a work of supererogation and humiliation to which that government might reasonably object, and it would be inconsistent with the sovereignty which is involved in recognition. The retroactive effect must, however, be confined to acts of the government within its proper sphere, i.e., acts with regard to persons and property in the territory over which it exercised effective control: see Banco de Bilbao v. Sancha (4); or acts with regard to ships which are registered there and whose masters attorn to them: see The Arantzazu Mendi (8). Just as the new government only gains its right to recognition by its effective control, so also the extent of the retroactivity is limited to the area of its effective control.

The relevant period in this case is from June 28, 1945, to midnight of July 5/6, 1945. During that week the Polish Provisional Government of National Unity had control only over the territory of Poland itself. It had no control over the men and ships who were subject to the Polish government in London. During that time no master of any of those ships attorned to the new Polish government. It follows, therefore, that our recognition of the new Polish government had no retroactive effect whatever, so far as those men and ships were concerned. The result of all this discussion is, therefore, that, in the eyes of our courts, until midnight of July 5/6, 1945, the Polish government in London had full right and title to exercise governmental functions in respect of the men and ships of Poland who, or which, were here or had their home ports here, and, as from that same midnight, they ceased to have any such right or title, and the same became vested in the new Polish government in Warsaw. There was, in short, at midnight a transfer by operation of law of all governmental functions and property from one government to the other. So far as our courts are concerned, it was nothing more than a case of an old government going out of office and a new government taking over. At such a time feelings may run high. The old government may be fearful of what the new government may do. The new government may cast suspicious eyes on what the old has done. But none of these things concerns these courts. In the eye of the law it was simply a case of one government succeeding to another by operation of law. On such a succession it is obviously desirable that there should be continuity in the administration of the affairs of State, and the law will make every presumption in favour of it. Decrees which were passed by the old government will remain effective, except in so far as the new government decides to repeal them. Rights and obligations which have become vested under the old government will remain intact unless the new government passes a decree divesting them, if it can lawfully do so. Orders which have been issued by the old executive may have lawfully been obeyed, unless the new executive countermands them. Curators who have been appointed by the old government will remain curators, unless and until the new government dismisses them. So, also, it seems to me that offers made by the old government may lawfully be accepted during the time of the new government, unless they have meanwhile been revoked. There may be a difficulty in enforcing the ensuing contracts, because the new government cannot be impleaded in our courts. But the principle of continuity is of paramount importance. It requires that the new government should stand in the shoes of the old government in all respects, except in respect of acts of members of the old government which were ultra vires or acts which were done by them, not in good faith as trustees for the State, but for an alien and improper purpose.

Applying this principle to the telegram of Mr. Kwapinski of July 5, 1945, I am of opinion that the declaration continued to be effective under the new government unless it was ultra vires or made in bad faith. But was it either of these? First, was it ultra vires? The intention of Mr. Kwapinski was that the compensation should be paid out of the funds of the shipping companies, and the declaration must be read as being made by him on behalf of those companies. They were, in effect, undisclosed principals. But had Mr. Kwapinski, as Minister, any power to bind the shipping companies by a declaration to that effect? It is quite clear that he, as Minister, was also supreme manager of the shipping companies, but it was said that his only power as supreme manager was to give directions to the curator, Mr. Plinius, and that, if Mr. Plinius refused to obey, as he did, the supreme manager could not do the act himself. I do not agree. It would, no doubt, be very exceptional for the curator to refuse, but, if he did, then, in Polish law, the supreme manager could do the act himself on behalf of the companies, and I think that, in English law, in like circumstances the result would be the same. The declaration was, therefore, within his powers. Secondly, did Mr. Kwapinski make the declaration in good faith, or did he do it for an alien and improper purpose? It was argued before us that it was most detrimental to the shipping companies for the men to leave the ships and thus immobilise them; that a payment of three months' wages if they left would have the effect of inducing them to leave and was, therefore, unjustifiable; and it was to be inferred that the purpose of the declaration was to embarrass the new government on its taking over the ships. If that was the purpose of the declaration, I do not think it would be valid. I am quite satisfied, however, that that was not Mr. Kwapinski's purpose. His concern was, not to embarrass the new government, but to act fairly by the men. He thought that, on a change of management, the men should be entitled to leave the ships if they wished, and he knew that, having regard to the political situation, many of them would leave in any event, gratuity or no gratuity. In the smaller affairs of life, old servants often prefer to leave when there is a change of master, and the new master should not take it against them if they do. So here Mr. Kwapinski thought that, if the seamen chose to leave, it should not be taken against them, and that, on leaving, they ought to receive a gratuity just as much as the civil servants. These sailors had served throughout the war, they had not only saved the Polish merchant navy, but had greatly extended it, and the new government was taking over the benefits of their work. If the men elected not to stay on under the new management, that was no reason why they should not receive a gratuity for the services they had rendered in the past. Those who chose to stay on would have the advantage of further employment, and might get a gratuity later on, if the new Minister chose to declare it. In these circumstances, it is quite impossible to say that Mr. Kwapinski was acting in bad faith or for an alien or improper purpose.

Applying, therefore, the principles which I have stated, it follows that, so far as the telegram is concerned, the new government stand in the shoes of the old government. The situation after midnight on July 5/6, 1945, was in this respect the same as before it. The telegram continued to have effect. It was, indeed, just as effective as if it had been issued by the new Minister or confirmed by him. The new Minister never revoked the declaration before the men left the ships. When they did leave, they became entitled to a gratuity from the shipping companies on whose behalf the declaration was made. I do not find it necessary to embark on a discussion of the Polish law about trade unions, collective agreements, and unilateral obligations, because, on the view I take, it is a simple matter of offer and acceptance—an offer in the telegram made on behalf of an undisclosed principal, which was accepted by the conduct of the men in leaving the ships. As far as I can see, whether you apply English law or Polish law, the result is the same. The men are entitled to the money. I agree, therefore, that the appeal should be dismissed.

BUCKNILL, L.J.: I also agree that the appeal should be dismissed. I cannot usefully add anything to the judgments which have been delivered by COHEN, L.J., and DENNING, L.J.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Constant & Constant (for the defendant company); Hilder, Thompson & Dunn (for the plaintiffs).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

PRINCE v. PRINCE.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sir Raymond Evershed, M.R., Tucker and Bucknill, L.JJ.), May 1, 2, June 26, 1950.]

Divorce—Appeal—Jurisdiction—Divisional Court—“No error of the court at the hearing alleged”—New evidence obtained after trial—Unsuccessful party entitled to appeal to Court of Appeal—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 523/L 9), r. 36.

A husband, whose petition for divorce on the ground of the wife's adultery was dismissed because the adultery was not proved, discovered new evidence after the trial tending to show that his wife had committed adultery, and he applied under the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947, r. 36, to the Divisional Court of the Probate Division for a re-hearing. The application was dismissed on the ground that the rule gave the Divisional Court no jurisdiction to entertain the application. On appeal, HELD: rule 36 of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947, was intended, or ought to be treated as having been intended, to give or preserve to a Divisional Court the right to order a new trial or a re-hearing in cases in which the parties would not in the ordinary course be entitled to go to the Court of Appeal; by the provision in the rule that an application for the re-hearing of a cause where “no error of the court at the hearing is alleged,” shall be made to a Divisional Court of the Probate Division, it was intended to exclude all cases in which an aggrieved party might seek, upon application according to the ordinary general procedure of the Court of Appeal, to challenge as erroneous the conclusion of the judge at the trial or hearing in the court below; in the present case the husband could have appealed to the Court of Appeal from the decision dismissing his petition on the ground that it was against the weight of evidence and he could also have applied for leave to call new evidence before the Court of Appeal; and, therefore, the decision of the Divisional Court was right.

[EDITORIAL NOTE. A rule in the terms of r. 36 of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947, first appeared as r. 46 of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1924. Later, it appeared as r. 36 of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1937, and r. 36 of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1944. The cases referred to in the present case which were decided after 1924 were decided on one or other of the above rules.]

AS TO APPLICATIONS FOR RE-HEARING, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, p. 779, para. 1233; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, p. 490, Nos. 5220-5233, and Digest Supp.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Smith v. Smith, [1897] P. 293; 66 L.J.P. 151; 77 L.T. 206; 27 Digest 490, 5221.
- (2) Garnett v. Garnett and Calderon, (1919), 35 T.L.R. 521; 27 Digest 490, 5224.
- (3) Manners v. Manners and Fortescue, [1936] 1 All E.R. 41; [1936] P. 117; 105 L.J.P. 26; 154 L.T. 271; Digest Supp.
- (4) Winter v. Winter, [1942] 2 All E.R. 390; [1942] P. 151; 111 L.J.P. 95; 167 L.T. 258; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (5) Petty v. Petty, [1943] 2 All E.R. 511; [1943] P. 101; 112 L.J.P. 97; 169 L.T. 224; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (6) Everitt v. Everitt, [1948] 2 All E.R. 545; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (7) Peek v. Peek, [1947] 2 All E.R. 578; [1948] P. 46; [1948] L.J.R. 833; affmd., [1948] 2 All E.R. 297; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (8) Howarth v. Howarth, (1884), 9 P.D. 218; 51 L.T. 872; 27 Digest 492, 5250.

APPEAL by the husband from a decision of the Divisional Court of the Probate Division, dated Oct. 14, 1949, dismissing his application for a re-hearing of the suit in which his prayer for divorce on the ground of the wife's adultery with the co-respondent was dismissed.

The husband based his application on the ground that new evidence had been found since the hearing of his petition. The Divisional Court held that it had no jurisdiction to entertain the application under r. 36 of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947. The facts appear in the judgment of the court.

Crispin and Stuckey for the husband.

R. H. Forrest and J. J. Clark for the wife.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 26. SIR RAYMOND EVERSHERD, M.R., read the following judgment of the court. This is an appeal from a judgment of the Divisional Court (LORD MERRIMAN, P. and ORMEROD, J.), whereby the court held that it had no jurisdiction to grant an application under the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1947, r. 36, for the re-hearing of the suit of Prince v. Prince and Campbell. In that suit JUDGE FRASER HARRISON, sitting as commissioner at Liverpool, granted a decree of divorce to the respondent wife on the ground of her husband's cruelty, and dismissed his prayer for a divorce on the ground of her adultery with the co-respondent and her cruelty.

Rule 36 states:

"(1) An application for re-hearing of a cause heard by a judge alone where no error of the court at the hearing is alleged shall be made to a Divisional Court of the Probate Division. The application shall be by notice of motion, stating the grounds on which it is based, filed in the Divorce Registry and served upon the opposite parties within six weeks after judgment. The notice shall be a fourteen days' notice and may be amended at any time by leave of the judge. (2) Any other application for re-hearing shall be made by way of appeal to the Court of Appeal."

This rule was made by LORD JOWITT, L.C., under the provisions of s. 1 of the Administration of Justice (Emergency Provisions) Act, 1939, and s. 99 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925. It follows the wording of a similar rule which was first made in 1924 to which we refer later.

The crucial point on which the application for a re-hearing turned related to the husband's charges of adultery against the wife. In his petition the husband, in addition to a general charge of adultery by the wife with the co-respondent, Colin Campbell, alleged adultery (a) from Nov. 10 to Nov. 19, 1947, at 102, Kirkstone Road, Litherland, the matrimonial home, and (b) on an occasion in January, 1948, at the same place. As regards (b) no evidence was given. The wife and the co-respondent filed answers denying the adultery, and gave evidence denying the charges. The evidence on the charge of adultery consisted partly of alleged confessions by the wife and partly of evidence of the presence of a man at night or in the early morning in the matrimonial home during the husband's absence from Nov. 10 to Nov. 19, 1947.

The important evidence as to the adultery related, therefore, to November, 1947, and there was also an incident in September, 1947. As regards the occasion in September, the husband's father proved that he visited his son's house in the evening. He saw a light in the bedroom, rang the bell and also knocked for about ten minutes. Eventually, the wife opened the door and told him that her husband was away. The father saw two or three stubs of cigarettes in the hearth. One was still smouldering and it had lipstick on it. The wife, in her evidence, said that she did not smoke cigarettes, and explained the cigarette ends by saying: "When he came to the house I was feeding the baby. I had just gone to bed and my friend had been from over the road. She smokes cigarettes and is a heavy smoker. Her name is Mrs. Jones. She is in London now though." The other incident was in November, 1947, when the husband was in hospital. He said that so far as he knew no one was living in his house at

A that time except his wife and their children. Two neighbours were called who said that they saw a man leaving the husband's house in the early morning and going into the house in the evening, and either positively identified him as the co-respondent or asserted that he was not the husband. By way of rebuttal of this evidence, the wife said that a workman had been working at the house early in the morning and that while her husband was in hospital she went on several evenings to the British Legion with her father. At the end of the case the wife was re-called at the request of the commissioner, who put these questions to her:

B "Q—When you went to the British Legion with your father who looked after the children? A—It was Mrs. Jones, but she is in London now. Q—Was that the Mrs. Jones who smokes? A—Yes. Q—And Mrs. Jones was the woman who always looked after the children? A—Yes. Q—Was she a great friend of yours? A—Yes.

C Cross-examined for the husband: Q—Have you brought Mrs. Jones here? A—She is in London. I haven't had any correspondence with her. Q—It was never suggested before that Mrs. Jones was in the house that week, was it? A—It was never asked."

D In his judgment the commissioner said that he had to decide whether adultery was committed from Nov. 10 to 19 at 102, Kirkstone Road, and that he thought the witnesses were wrong when they said that they saw the co-respondent entering or leaving the house. As regards the cigarette ends incident, the commissioner said: "I am satisfied that these cigarette ends were left there by Mrs. Jones who was looking after the children." The commissioner, therefore, clearly placed reliance on the evidence of the wife that her friend, Mrs. Jones, was in the house shortly before the husband's father called, and that she was also in the house in the evenings when the wife went to the British Legion. It was argued before us that this presence of Mrs. Jones in the house was inconsistent with the suggestion that the co-respondent was visiting the house at night while the husband was in hospital.

E After the judgment the solicitors for the husband succeeded in finding Mrs. Jones in London, and the husband then filed his application for a re-hearing on the following two grounds:

F "(a) That further evidence, to wit, the evidence of Gertrude Jones and Vera Smith and Martha Hulme and Maureen Bell and Henry Charles Prince, being evidence which is material to the issues between the parties to the above suit, has come to the knowledge of the above petitioner since the hearing of the above suit. (b) That had such further evidence been heard by the court, or if such further evidence were to be heard by the court on a re-hearing of this suit, it is submitted that the court would conclude that the above respondent and the above co-respondent could not be relied upon as witnesses of fact."

H In support of these allegations an affidavit by the husband was produced to the Divisional Court in which he referred to certain statements which, he said, had been made by Gertrude Jones and three other persons. The vital part of the statement of Gertrude Jones was that she lived at 90, Kirkstone Road, Litherland, from March to May, 1947. She was a friend of Mrs. Prince during that time, and once or twice, while she minded the two children, Mr. and Mrs. Prince went out to the cinema. She said that she left Litherland on May 26, 1947, and had not been there since, and that she was not in Litherland either in September or November, 1947.

Two questions were raised at the hearing of this appeal. One was whether this case came within r. 36. The second was whether, assuming it was such a case, the facts alleged in the copy statements attached to the husband's affidavit were such as would justify a re-hearing. In view of our decision on the first point, as hereinafter set out, we consider it unnecessary to express any opinion with regard to the second, which involves considerations peculiarly within the discretion of the court in which the jurisdiction is vested.

We, accordingly, turn to the important question raised in the Divisional Court and before us, as to the limit of the jurisdiction conferred by r. 36. The importance of the rule, apart from its obvious usefulness in preventing a miscarriage of justice in a matrimonial cause, is that the matters over which it confers jurisdiction are, or may be, withdrawn from the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal. Thus, in Smith v. Smith (1) an application was made to the Court of Appeal to order a re-hearing of a divorce cause heard by GORELL BARNES, J., without a jury. The application was regarded as covered by r. 62 of the Divorce and Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1865, as amended in 1885, which was in the following terms:

"An application for a new trial of the issues of fact tried by a jury or for the re-hearing of a cause, shall hereafter be made to a Divisional Court of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division."

The Court of Appeal held that it had no jurisdiction to make the order. LINDLEY, L.J., said [1897] P. 294:

"I think it clear, on looking at the Act and the rule that this application ought to be made to a Divisional Court of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division, and that we have no jurisdiction to entertain it."

The Act referred to by LINDLEY, L.J., was presumably the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1890, s. 1, which enacted:

"From and after the commencement of this Act every motion for a new trial, or to set aside a verdict, finding, or judgment, in any cause or matter in the High Court in which there has been a trial thereof, or of any issue therein with a jury shall be heard and determined by the Court of Appeal and not by a Divisional Court of the High Court . . ."

Smith v. Smith (1) had been tried by a judge alone and the application to the Court of Appeal was for a re-hearing. LINDLEY, L.J., appears, therefore, to have treated it as within the terms of r. 62 of the Divorce and Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1865, and not taken out of that rule by s. 1 of the Act of 1890. In 1892, in order, apparently, to bring the procedure in non-jury cases into line with cases where there had been trials with a jury, the Rules Committee constituted under the provisions of s. 19 of the Judicature Act, 1881, had made R.S.C., Ord. 39, r. 1, which reads as follows:

"... every application for a new trial or to set aside a verdict, finding, or judgment where there has been a trial with or without a jury shall be made to the Court of Appeal."

That rule does not appear to have been referred to at the hearing of Smith v. Smith (1) in the Court of Appeal, or, if referred to, it was, apparently, treated as subject to the divorce rule, r. 62, above-mentioned.

The question whether an application for a re-hearing of a divorce cause tried by a judge without a jury must be made to a Divisional Court of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division or to the Court of Appeal was again raised in the Divisional Court (LORD STERNDAL, P., and HILL, J.), in 1919 in Garnett v. Garnett and Calderon (2). Counsel for the applicant husband in the cause, which was contested and tried by HORRIDGE, J., without a jury, asked that the judgment should be reversed, mainly on the ground that the judge had misdirected himself as to the evidence, but also on the ground that vital new evidence was available. The court allowed the application on the ground that the judge had misdirected himself as regards the evidence. LORD STERNDALE, P., also said that the sooner the practice as to such appeals was altered the better. Counsel then referred to the decision in Smith v. Smith (1) and suggested that LORD STERNDALE, P., had power to make a fresh rule which would bring the practice as regards appeals into line with appeals from other Divisions, and the PRESIDENT said he might consider it when he had finished Prize work. Again, R.S.C., Ord. 39, r. 1, was not referred to. Five months later LORD STERNDALE was made Master of the Rolls, and no fresh rule was made until 1924.

In 1924, r. 46 of the Matrimonial Causes Rules was made. It was in substantially the same terms as r. 36 of the present rules. It introduced the words "where no error of the court at the hearing is alleged." It is clear from Garnett v. Garnett and Calderon (2) that the Divisional Court made the order for a re-hearing in that case because of an alleged misdirection by the trial judge, and one may fairly assume that the new rule was made so as to exclude such cases from the jurisdiction of the Divisional Court and so that (as in cases from other Divisions of the High Court) the Court of Appeal should have exclusive jurisdiction over them by way of appeal either to order a re-hearing or to reverse the decision or make such other order as might appear to be just. In other words, in so far as the general rule contained in R.S.C., Ord. 39, r. 1, had been treated as inapplicable or in conflict with r. 62 of the Rules in Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, 1865, the general rule was intended to apply thenceforth in all cases save for the limited exception provided by the new r. 46.

The scope of r. 46 was considered by the Divisional Court (apparently for the first time) in Manners v. Manners and Fortescue (3). In that case the respondent applied to the Divisional Court that the decree against her be set aside and the case re-heard on the ground that she had not been served with the petition. LORD MERRIMAN, P., in his judgment, said that there was no precedent to guide the court as to what was meant by the words "where no error of the court at the hearing is alleged." He said that he thought it would be most inadvisable to attempt to lay down any exhaustive definition of what those words meant, but it was quite plain that the wife was entitled to be heard, and there must be a re-hearing of the case. LANGTON, J., in his judgment, said that in the nature of things the cases which could fall within the rule must be comparatively few, but the rule must contemplate something more than the bare cases under Ord. 36, r. 33, in which judgment has been given by default. He continued ([1936] 1 All E.R. 46):

"I am not sure that it is not the proper way to regard this case to say that it concerns a suit which is not properly constituted in that there has been a failure in an indispensable step of the procedure. One then turns to inquire: But is it the fault of anyone concerned in the administration of justice here that that indispensable step was not complied with? Clearly it could not be the fault of the court, for everyone must be agreed upon reading [the] evidence that the court had ample evidence upon which to act and could, as both counsel agree, not have acted in any other way; nor could I see that any inquiries of the court could have in any way dealt with this subject so as to ensure that that indispensable step, the service of the petition, was complied with."

LANGTON, J., also dealt with the question whether it was proper that the judge who heard the case should also sit as a member of the Divisional Court on the application for a re-hearing, and in that connection he said (ibid., 47):

"... I think it is both right and desirable that he should, if possible, be a member of the court which considered the question of re-hearing. It is to be observed that in no sense is any action of his impugned, no error by the nature of things can be imputed to him, and his recollection, a little hazy, perhaps, but nevertheless probably refreshed as the matter goes on, is of inestimable assistance in dealing with this very limited class of case."

If the view of LANGTON, J., as expressed here, is correct, it seems to us that the scope of the rule could hardly include a contested case in which the judge, on an issue of vital importance, has elected to believe one witness and has rejected the evidence of another, and the application for a re-hearing is based on the hypothesis that the judge was in error in so doing, and will, when he hears the fresh evidence, realise that he was in error. We here use the word "error" as meaning or including the making of an incorrect inference as to the truth from the conflicting evidence before him.

The next reported case on the application of the rule is Winter v. Winter (4). In that case the husband asked for a re-hearing of the wife's petition on the ground that the decree which she had obtained by reason of his alleged desertion was against the justice of the case in that it was untrue that he had ever deserted her, and that he now wished to put the real facts before the court. The wife's petition had been duly served on the husband, who had deliberately decided to do nothing to oppose it and had not entered an appearance, so that the petition was undefended and the wife obtained her decree. The Divisional Court ordered a re-hearing, although, as LANGTON, J., said, the application, so far as the husband personally was concerned, had no vestige of merit. The order for re-hearing was made on the specific ground that in matrimonial matters there was always something more to be considered than the mere individual merits of the parties and it was the duty of the court to consider the interests of the State as well as the private interests in such cases. LANGTON, J., also pointed out that there was no possibility of an appeal to the Court of Appeal by the husband. Inasmuch as he had not entered an appearance it seems doubtful whether he would have had any locus standi on appeal.

Up to this point the Divisional Court had not considered any application for a re-hearing of a cause in which there had been a conflict of evidence on vital matters and in which the loser was seeking to obtain a re-hearing on the ground that fresh evidence was available which would put an entirely different complexion on the case. In such a case, if the Divisional Court has exclusive jurisdiction to order a re-hearing, such power obviously trenches on the general jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal to make a similar order. The question whether the Divisional Court had jurisdiction to order a re-hearing in a case in which there would be an obvious right of appeal was first raised in Petty v. Petty (5), a case heard by LORD MERRIMAN, P., and HENN COLLINS, J. The application was by the wife for the re-hearing of a contested case in which the wife asked for a divorce on the ground of her husband's cruelty and desertion and the husband denied those charges and charged the wife with desertion. Both parties gave evidence and called witnesses, and the judge dismissed the wife's prayer and gave the husband a decree because he preferred the husband's evidence to that of the wife. The basis of the wife's application for a re-hearing was that since the hearing she had obtained statements from several witnesses whose evidence would persuade the court that the truth lay with the wife and not with the husband. Also it was said that the preparation of the wife's case had been interfered with by enemy action. LORD MERRIMAN, P., in his judgment, said ([1943] 2 All E.R. 513):

"We feel, and we have said this very emphatically on these earlier occasions, that the peculiar jurisdiction vested in this court by r. 36 . . . should only be exercised in cases in which it is plain that this court is intended to have the jurisdiction to the exclusion of the Court of Appeal . . ."

After reviewing the history of the jurisdiction now embodied in the rule LORD MERRIMAN, P., said that, in his view, it was impossible to attach to the word "error" in the rule any interpretation or limitation based solely on any part of the earlier history of the court. He continued (ibid., 513):

"... it is much more likely that the words were deliberately chosen as being supposedly apt to impose a limitation upon our special jurisdiction to order a re-hearing, notwithstanding the vesting in the Court of Appeal of the general right to deal with such applications from this Division."

LORD MERRIMAN, P., when presiding in the Court of Appeal in the recent case of Everitt v. Everitt (6), again emphasised this limitation of the jurisdiction of the Divisional Court under r. 36. He said ([1948] 2 All E.R. 548):

"In dealing with cases under r. 36 the Divisional Court has always been careful to avoid any semblance of trespassing on the exclusive jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal . . . although, if the Divisional Court is satisfied that a case comes within the rule it is bound, as I pointed out in Peek v. Peek (7), to deal with it because no other court can do so: see also Smith v. Smith (1), decided in the Court of Appeal under r. 62 of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1865, as amended in 1885."

In Petty v. Petty (5), LORD MERRIMAN, P., after referring to Manners v. Manners (3) and Winter v. Winter (4), said ([1943] 2 All E.R. 514):

"Those two cases, which, so far as I know, are the only two cases in which a decision of this court on this point has been reported, are, as I think, clearly on the right side of the line; but equally, it seems to be impossible to assert that a case in which a judge having seen both spouses and their respective teams of witnesses and having deliberately attached the credibility to one side and not to the other, and in which this court is asked to say that the production it may be of a document or a new witness or a new set of witnesses is going to induce some other tribunal to say that the judge believed the wrong set of witnesses, is on the same side of the line or that it is possible to assert of such a case that no error of the court at the hearing is alleged. In saying this I do not ignore the point that in a case in which the process has not been served, or in which the party has deliberately abstained from attendance, it is not possible logically to deny that it is being said that the judge has believed a witness wrongly . . . It may be deliberate perjury. But although it is true that what is being asked is that it shall ultimately be held that the judge believed a witness wrongly and at the re-hearing the judge is to be invited to believe witnesses who will swear exactly the opposite, still, in those circumstances, unless there was something which made the story self condemnatory, the judge had no option but to believe the witness; there was no contest; there was no test of the credibility of the witnesses believed, unless it were what I might call some psychic test which would manifest itself through mere demeanour during the brief appearance of the witness in the witness box . . . Such a case as the present is, in my opinion, on the other side of any line which can be drawn, and is quite plainly a case which must be dealt with by the Court of Appeal."

HENN COLLINS, J., in his judgment, said (ibid., 514):

"One thing, however, seems to me to be quite clear, that, if it is alleged that on the materials before it that the court has arrived at a wrong conclusion, that is an error of the court. What exactly is meant by 'the material before the court' is another matter. In this case the materials before the court were witnesses on one side or the other, and the stories to which they deposed . . . It is now said that in truth and in fact HODSON, J., believed the wrong set of witnesses; if he had known some separate facts which it is proposed to adduce he would have discredited those whom he believed and believed those whom he discredited. That really must mean that he was unable to arrive at what is now alleged to be the truth on the materials before him—in other words, that he made an error. As long as those are the circumstances, I myself do not see how a case can be brought within the exception expressed in the words 'an error of the court.' "

The next reported case on the problem of the meaning of r. 36 is Peek v. Peek (7), which concerned a decree obtained in an undefended divorce petition by a husband on the ground of his wife's desertion. The parties had lived in Australia after their marriage and in about 1922 the husband had left Australia and returned to England on account of his work. The husband's case was that in 1922 his wife had refused to leave the marital home in Australia, and had thereafter refused to come to live with him. He admitted having an adulterous association with another woman in 1924 in respect of which he asked for the discretion of the court to be exercised in his favour. The petition, which was issued in 1946, was served on the wife in Australia in January, 1947, and the wife then wrote to the Divorce Registry in London saying that she had been unable to instruct solicitors and that her husband had deserted her. This letter was before the trial judge. She also applied for legal assistance as a poor person, but before this was granted the husband's petition was heard as an undefended suit and the trial judge granted him a decree nisi. The wife then applied to the Divisional Court for a re-hearing and in support of her application produced certain documents which made it highly probable that the husband had deserted the wife in 1922 and had committed adultery in that year, had told the wife about it, and had asked her to divorce him. Having regard to the fact that the wife did not enter an appearance to the petition the case was one in which she could not appeal in the ordinary course to the Court of Appeal, and, therefore, there was no question of trespassing on the exclusive jurisdiction of that court. The question which was much debated before the Divisional Court was whether the case was one in which "no error of the court at the hearing was alleged." LORD MERRIMAN, P., in his judgment, said ([1947] 2 All E.R. 584):

"... to assert of this case that any judge had no option but to come to the conclusion he did is, and must be, nonsense. I say that because the very request for the exercise of the discretion of the court itself implies, whether it is a defended or an undefended case, that the judge has an option. Otherwise, the discretion is meaningless."

LORD MERRIMAN, P., later in his judgment, said (ibid., 585):

"... if ever there was a case, undefended though it be, in which it is perfectly plain, not merely because the discretion was asked for, but also because there was on the face of the case as it was presented to the judge, and avowedly and openly presented, the gravest possible doubt whether any court could hold that desertion had been proved, the plainest possible option to the judge to decide the case otherwise."

LORD MERRIMAN, P., then said that the real point was whether the allegation which was made against the decision was an allegation that the court went wrong on the materials before it, or whether it was an allegation that the court went wrong because evidence on a vital matter was concealed from the court. He continued (ibid., 585):

"To my mind, it cannot make the slightest difference, logically, whether that question falls to be decided in an undefended or a defended case ... I reject altogether the argument that this matter depends solely on the question whether the case is defended or undefended ... this case is an illustration, not of a case in which the court went wrong on the materials before it, but rather of a case in which it is alleged that the court went wrong because evidence on a vital point was concealed from it ... when one analyses this case, the only thing which can be said to be error on the learned judge's part is a failure to appreciate, in the light of the documents which were not produced before him the full possible implications of those which were produced before him."

WALLINGTON, J., in his judgment, said that, in his opinion, one of the objects of r. 36 was to enable the Divisional Court to secure as far as possible that there should be a new trial of the real issues between the parties before permitting an appeal to the Court of Appeal, and that he entirely agreed that it mattered not whether the question arose in a defended or an undefended case. The Divisional Court, therefore, granted the application for a re-hearing. The husband appealed from this decision to the Court of Appeal, but the appeal was dismissed. The basis of the decision in the Court of Appeal was that on the material before the judge it was impossible to say that there was any error on his part which was alleged, because on the husband's evidence the judge was well entitled to come to the decision to which he came. TUCKER, L.J., and SOMERVELL, L.J., also said that they wished to keep open the question whether it may be immaterial to consider what happened at the trial, provided that the party seeking a re-hearing is basing his whole case on something quite irrespective of the course the case in fact took on the material before the court.

Before passing from Peek v. Peek (7) we would point out: (a) So far as the question of trespassing on the exclusive jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal is concerned, the defended case stands in a different light from the undefended case. If undefended, the respondent has in the ordinary course no right of appeal. If defended, the respondent has a right of appeal, and a further right in certain circumstances to call fresh evidence. In such a case the Court of Appeal may either hear the fresh evidence and dismiss the suit, or order a re-hearing, or dismiss the appeal. (b) Where the case is defended, and the trial judge on the vital issues prefers one set of witnesses to the other set, it appears to us that an error in the court at the hearing is, and must be, alleged if it is sought to call further evidence in order to try to persuade the court on a re-hearing that the judge's preference was erroneous. We think there is a difference, albeit a fine one, between an incorrect selection of conflicting testimony and an erroneous inference drawn therefrom, and an inference drawn from undisputed evidence which was justifiable on the materials before the court, although subsequently proved to be incorrect.

The question may be asked: What remedy the respondent spouse has in an undefended case if he is precluded from appealing to the Court of Appeal because he has not appeared in the suit and is precluded from asking the Divisional Court for a re-hearing because he cannot say that the court has not made an error at the hearing? It would seem that his remedies would be to obtain the intervention of the King's Proctor or of a bona fide member of the public under s. 183 (2) of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925. That sub-section is as follows:

"(2) After the pronouncing of the decree nisi and before the decree is made absolute, any person may, in the prescribed manner, show cause why the decree should not be made absolute by reason of the decree having been obtained by collusion or by reason of material facts not having been brought before the court, and in any such case the court may make the decree absolute, reverse the decree nisi, require further inquiry or otherwise deal with the case as the court thinks fit."

In Howarth v. Howarth (8) LINDLEY, L.J., said, when considering the application of this section (9 P.D. 229):

"... so far as I know 'any person' means anybody except the respondent and somebody who is the respondent in disguise, his agent, or his puppet."

We do not think, in considering whether r. 36 applies, that the test whether the case is defended or undefended is conclusive. For instance, a petitioner in an undefended case, whose petition has been dismissed, can appeal to the Court of Appeal and apply for leave to call fresh evidence which was not available at the trial. The judge might have said that on the evidence he was not satisfied that the adultery complained of had been established, but the fresh evidence, if admitted, might establish adultery conclusively. Though the distinction is a fine one there is, we think, a real difference between such a case as that supposed where the judge having evidence before him has (erroneously) failed to accept it or to draw the right inference from it, and the case earlier mentioned where the judge, because the evidence has been unchallenged and could not be tested, had, in effect, no option but to accept it. The distinction corresponds with the presence or absence of jurisdiction in the Court of Appeal. In the former case the unsuccessful party alleges (as in the latter he does not) error in the court. In the former case we think the Divisional Court would not have jurisdiction under r. 36, because the Court of Appeal has it and because error in a limited sense at least must be alleged.

We have set out the relevant decisions on the meaning of this rule and its predecessors before considering the precise point raised in the Divisional Court in the present case. The point is raised in the judgment of LORD MERRIMAN, P., where he said that there is no real distinction between the present case and Petty v. Petty (5), but that the observations made in the Court of Appeal in Peek v. Peek (7) raise the point which has not yet been decided, viz., that, if the principle is accepted that deception of the trial judge, by suppression of material facts, is the antithesis of his going wrong on the material before him, it makes no difference, provided the course of the trial warrants it, whether the suppression of the evidence or other malfeasance alleged as ground for a re-hearing is committed by the petitioner in presenting the case or by the respondent in rebutting it. The question is whether the decision of the Divisional Court in Petty v. Petty (5) imposed too strict a limitation on the jurisdiction of the court and whether it can be extended without trespassing beyond the bounds which, to use the words of LORD MERRIMAN, P., in his judgment in the present case in the court below,

“must necessarily be imposed at some point or another to avoid an overlap of jurisdiction between this court and the Court of Appeal?”

In this appeal we think that the application for a re-hearing does trespass on the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal, because the husband could have appealed from the decision of the judge on the ground that his decision was against the weight of evidence, and could also have applied for leave to call before the Court of Appeal the evidence which is indicated in his affidavit, and we think that it follows also from what we have just said that error of the court (i.e., in wrongly estimating the evidence) is necessarily alleged. In our opinion, therefore, the decision of the Divisional Court was right, and the appeal should be dismissed.

Having examined the history since 1857 of the statutes relating to appeals in matrimonial causes and the rules made thereunder, it seems to us from the circumstances in which r. 46 of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1924 (which was the forerunner of the present r. 36), came into existence (namely, the apparent conflict between the earlier matrimonial causes rules and the general jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal pursuant to the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1890, and the rules made thereunder) that r. 36 was intended, or ought to be treated as having been intended, to give or preserve to a Divisional Court (because of the peculiar public concern in matrimonial matters) the right to order a new trial or a re-hearing in cases in which the parties themselves would not in the ordinary course be entitled to go to the Court of Appeal. If this view is right, then it appears to us that by the phrase “no error of the court at the hearing is alleged” it was intended to exclude all cases in which an aggrieved party might seek, on application according to the ordinary general procedure of the Court of Appeal, to challenge as erroneous the conclusion of the judge at the trial or hearing in the court below. We add that, having regard to the difficulties of interpretation that have now emerged from the rule and because we think that the jurisdiction of the Divisional Court is, in the class of cases to which (as we think) it was intended to be confined, extremely valuable, consideration should be given to the drafting of a new rule in terms that would express more precisely the scope and limitation the jurisdiction is intended to have.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Chamberlain & Co., agents for Stanley Williams & Elsbey, Liverpool (for the husband); Jaques & Co., agents for T. R. Jones & Co., Liverpool (for the wife).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

COON v. DIAMOND TREAD CO. (1938), LTD.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Wynn-Parry, J.), June 6, 1950.]

Costs—Taxation—Review by court—Objection as to quantum—No error by master in principle.

On an inquiry as to damages, an official referee awarded the plaintiff a sum of £10,541, together with costs which he directed should be taxed. A bill of costs brought in by the plaintiff was reduced by the taxing master in respect of sums included in the bill in respect of the items "instructions for brief," fees and refreshers to leading and junior counsel, and fees of accountants whose services the plaintiff had used at the inquiry. The plaintiff objected to the reductions on the ground that the fees allowed were inadequate, and asked for the decision of the taxing master to be reviewed.

HELD: the complaint went to quantum only; it had not been shown that the taxing master had erred on a question of principle; and, therefore, the court had no jurisdiction to interfere with his decision.

Re Ogilvie ([1910] P. 243) and White v. Altrincham Urban District Council ([1936] 1 All E.R. 923), followed.

Re Lindsay's Estate ([1915] W.N. 246), explained.

[AS TO REVIEW OF TAXATION, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 31, pp. 227-230, paras. 251-254; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 42, pp. 210-217, Nos. 2346-2439.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Re Ogilvie, [1910] P. 243; 79 L.J.P. 113; 103 L.T. 154; 42 Digest 216, 2430.
- (2) Alsop v. Oxford (Lord), (1833), 1 My. & K. 564; 2 L.J.Ch. 174; 39 E.R. 794; 42 Digest 214, 2390.
- (3) Re Catlin, (1854), 18 Beav. 508; 52 E.R. 200; 42 Digest 216, 2423.
- (4) White v. Altrincham Urban District Council, [1936] 1 All E.R. 923; [1936] 2 K.B. 138; 105 L.J.K.B. 366; 154 L.T. 656; 29 B.W.C.C. 105; Digest Supp.
- (5) Re Lindsay's Estate, [1915] W.N. 246.
- (6) Boswell v. Coaks, (1887), 57 L.J.Ch. 101; 57 L.T. 742; 21 Digest 431, 131.
- (7) Smith v. Buller, (1886), 5 N.Z.L.R. 41; 42 Digest 142, g.
- (8) Re Bennett, [1950] 1 All E.R. 435 (n).

SUMMONS taken out by the plaintiff asking that an order of the taxing master as to the costs of an inquiry held by an official referee should be reviewed. The facts are fully set out in the judgment.

F. B. Alcock for the plaintiff.

E. I. Goulding for the defendants.

WYNN-PARRY, J.: The plaintiff, who is a fruit farmer in Kent, brought an action against the defendants, who owned a quarry and a crushing mill near the plaintiff's orchards, for an injunction and damages, the cause of action being rested in nuisance. In 1948 the action was heard by JENKINS, J., and, in the result, so far as is material for the purposes of this summons, certain undertakings were given by the defendants, the defendants were ordered to pay the plaintiff's costs of the action (as to which costs no question arises), and an inquiry was directed to be taken before an official referee as to the damage, if any, suffered by the plaintiff as the result of the acts of the defendants complained of in the action. The order directing that inquiry provided that the costs of the inquiry should be in the discretion of the official referee. The inquiry was heard before His Honour SIR TOM EASTHAM, K.C., on four and a half days in March, 1949, the plaintiff being represented by leading and junior counsel and the defendants by junior counsel. In the result, the plaintiff, in substance, was successful, the official referee awarding him £10,541 with costs which he directed should be taxed. In due course an order was made by ROMER, J., directing the defendants to pay the plaintiff the costs of the inquiry on the motion before him and the question of the costs was referred to the taxing master.

A bill of costs brought in by the plaintiff was taxed by the taxing master and a number of items were reduced. The matters in respect of which complaint is made are the reductions in respect of the figures included in the bill regarding the items "instructions for brief," fees and refreshers to leading and junior counsel for the plaintiff, and fees of accountants whose services were retained and used by the plaintiff on the inquiry. Following on the reduction of those items by the taxing master, objections were brought in on behalf of the plaintiff.

As regards the first item in respect "instructions for brief" it is said:

"The fee allowed is inadequate in a claim in which (a) damage and quantum are in issue; (b) the amount claimed was £16,347 and the amount admitted was £4,500 and final judgment was obtained for £10,574; (c) the vital importance of the case to plaintiff, not only in respect of heavy financial loss, but also possible future damage; (d) the case required a detailed examination of many schedules and pages of figures covering market prices, actual sale prices, numbers of trees, and the amount of crops of many varieties of apples, plums and pears, the inquiry occupying the time of the learned official referee for four and a half days."

To that the taxing master made this answer:

"This case was originally before the court on the question of liability, the costs of which I have previously taxed. The present taxation concerns the assessment of damages by the official referee. Having heard lengthy argument both on the taxation proper and on these objections I am satisfied that the fee which I have in the exercise of my discretion allowed for this item is fair and adequate. I, therefore, overrule this objection."

The reason for objecting to the first item was meant to cover the items relating to the fees and refreshers of both leading and junior counsel, and the master's answer on item 1 is expressed by him to cover those further items.

As regards the items in respect of the accountants' fees, the reasons for objection are given as follows:

"The reasons (b), (c) and (d) above are also relied on. The fees were wholly and necessarily incurred by the plaintiff to enable him to recover the damages to which he was entitled."

In reply to that the master's answer is:

"In allowing this fee I have taken into account the work done in preparing schedules and accounts, investigating the books, and perusing all necessary documents and papers. I consider that the fee which I have in the exercise of my discretion allowed to be fair and adequate. I, therefore, overrule this objection."

A The master adopts that reason in regard to the other two items respecting the accountants' fees. The whole case of the plaintiff is really expressed in the opening words of the objection: "The fee allowed is inadequate." It is against that background that I have to consider whether or not any case is made out for allowing a review.

B The law to be applied in such a case as this is conveniently stated by the Court of Appeal in Re Ogilvie (1). In the course of his judgment COZENS-HARDY, M.R., said ([1910] P. 244):

"It is of extreme importance that there should be no doubt as to the general rule on this subject."

C He then quoted with approval from the judgment of SIR JOHN LEACH, M.R., in Alsop v. Oxford (Lord) (2), where SIR JOHN LEACH, M.R., said (1 My. & K. 566):

D "Generally speaking, the decision of the master on taxation is final: he is the sole judge of the fact, whether the business has been done, and of the proper charge to be made for it; and it is further his duty to inquire whether the business was required to be done; for, if the solicitor negligently or ignorantly takes any unnecessary proceedings, it is the duty of the master to protect the client from any charge in respect of such proceedings. The court will only interfere where the master acts upon some mistaken principle."

After referring to the later case of Re Catlin (3), COZENS-HARDY, M.R., continued ([1910] P. 244):

E "I should be very sorry if any doubt were cast on that, for I can scarcely imagine a tribunal more unfit than a judge of the High Court to deal with questions of quantum on the taxation of costs. The taxing master is the person whose duty it is to decide questions of quantum, and it is not right for the judge to interfere in such a matter. If a question of principle arises, no doubt the court ought to interfere and consider and if necessary correct the view taken by the taxing master."

F BUCKLEY, L.J., said (ibid., 245):

G "On questions of quantum the decision of the taxing master is generally speaking final. It must be a very exceptional case in which the court will even listen to an application to review his decision. In questions of quantum the judge is not nearly as competent as the taxing master to say what is the proper amount to be allowed; the court will not interfere unless the taxing master is shown to have gone wholly wrong. If a question of principle is involved it is different; on a mere question of quantum in the absence of particular circumstances the decision of the taxing master is conclusive."

H That case was quoted with approval and the observations of COZENS-HARDY, M.R., and BUCKLEY, L.J., were adopted and followed in White v. Altrincham Urban District Council (4). That was a case which came before the Court of Appeal on appeal from the county court. The facts were that the applicant claimed compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, in respect of injuries sustained by him arising out of and in the course of his employment. At the hearing the judge took the view that the evidence given on behalf of the applicant did not support the claim made by him, and leave to amend was given as the evidence might support a different claim, but on the terms that the applicant should pay the employers' costs which had been thrown away, those costs to be taxed by the registrar. Included in those costs were fees paid to three medical witnesses, two for £8 8s. each and one for £10 10s., and on taxation the registrar allowed only £3 3s. for each witness. It was clear from the statement of the registrar of his reasons on the objection to the taxation carried in by the employers that he had properly directed his mind to the matters to which he was bound to give consideration. On an application for a review of the taxation the county court judge allowed the appeal, holding that £7 7s. was a reasonable allowance for each of the medical witnesses. He said this ([1936] 2 K.B. 40):

A

B

C

D

E

F

G

H

"In exercising my discretion in this particular case as to what should be a reasonable allowance for attendance, I had regard to (1) the nature of the injury to the workman and the alleged consequential symptoms; (2) the difficulty of the surgical and medical questions which might arise; (3) the advantage under the circumstances to have expert testimony from distinguished members of the profession; (4) the fee usually payable to such members to secure their attendance as witnesses in court at a distance from the centre where they practise; (5) my knowledge that in most if not all my courts in Circuit No. 7 allowances from five to eight guineas have in fact been made on taxation of such witnesses for similar attendances."

The Court of Appeal held that the county court judge had no jurisdiction to interfere with the discretion of the registrar in fixing the quantum of fees for medical witnesses. The judgments given were written. They deal, inter alia, with a point which was argued on the appeal that different considerations apply in regard to taxation of costs in the county court from those which apply in the High Court. The Court of Appeal decided that there was no such distinction and, therefore, applied the rule which prevailed in the High Court. In the course of his judgment SLESSER, L.J., said ([1936] 1 All E.R. 926):

"In my opinion, the judge had no power to disturb the discretion of the registrar expressly given him by the rule on a mere question of quantum unless the registrar has purported to exercise that discretion in a way not warranted by law."

GREENE, L.J., said (ibid., 928):

"The rule that the decision of a taxing officer on questions of quantum ought not to be overruled by the judge on a review of taxation has long been established. This rule, in my opinion, applies generally to taxation in the county court as it applies to taxation in the High Court, and it is only in exceptional circumstances (which do not exist in the present case) that a decision of the taxing officer on a question of quantum should be overruled."

GREENE, L.J., did not expressly refer to Re Ogilvie (1), but that case was specifically referred to both by SLESSER and SCOTT, L.JJ., in each case with approval.

Guided by the principles which emerge from those cases, the present case is, in my view, simply one in which the complaint goes to quantum and nothing more, and on that short ground is completely covered by those principles. It was sought to be argued by counsel for the plaintiff that the figures allowed in regard to the items in question were so inadequate as to lead to the conclusion that they could not be supported as being figures which any taxing officer exercising his judicial discretion could arrive at. In my view, there is no material before me which could possibly have enabled me to share that view. My attention was directed to a number of documents, including the points of claim and a number of schedules, prepared both on behalf of the plaintiff and the defendants, with a view to showing that the matter was complicated. It was not, however, disputed by counsel for the defendants that the matter might accurately be regarded as complicated, but it appears to me that the documents which were put before me and were described as showing on the face of them that the matter was complicated afford material against the plaintiff, for those documents were before the master and it is made plain by the wording of the master's answers that he considered not only the reasons for rejection stated in writing on behalf of the plaintiff, but also a lengthy argument on the matter. Therefore, it cannot be said that he did not have in his mind those considerations which he ought properly to have had in mind. Further, when one considers the type of objection which is made here, based as regards each item on alleged inadequacy as regards the amount allowed, and compares those items with the reasoning which led the county court judge to allow the appeal from the registrar in White v. Altrincham Urban District Council (4) it appears to me that there is good ground for the submission by counsel for the defendants that that case directly covers the present case.

In my judgment, I should be going directly contrary to the directions which I find in Re Ogilvie (1) and White v. Altrincham Urban District Council (4) if I were to accede to this application. It is entirely immaterial in such a case as the present whether the court would have been inclined to take a different course from that taken by the taxing master. Unless it be shown that the taxing master has erred on a question of principle, there is, on the authorities, no jurisdiction in this court to interfere with what he has done.

I ought, perhaps, to refer to the case which was relied on by counsel for the plaintiff, viz., Re Lindsay's Estate (5). That was a summons to review taxation and it was sought to be relied on as affording authority for the proposition that the court has jurisdiction to interfere if it emerges that the taxing master has acted on a mistaken impression with regard to the amount of work which was involved. The case is very shortly reported, particularly as regards the judgment of YOUNGER, J., which is as follows ([1915] W.N. 246):

"YOUNGER, J., said that it seemed clear that the taxing master had acted on a mistaken impression with regard to the work to be done on the hearing before ASTBURY, J. His lordship thought that the objections should be allowed, and as the same taxing master allowed the same fees on the original hearing, the amounts marked would be allowed."

There had been an original hearing before NEVILLE, J., in 1913. The matter stood over for a master's certificate to be made. The matter came back before the court, this time before ASTBURY, J., in July, 1914, when a different leading counsel was briefed for the applicant. His brief was marked with the same fee as that of the previous leading counsel, and, substantially speaking, the papers used on the original hearing were included. The taxing master struck off, first of all, about sixty-five per cent., but, on re-consideration, forty per cent. of the fees marked on the hearing before ASTBURY, J. Apparently, he took the view that unnecessary papers had been included in the briefs, and that the master's certificate made it clear that the applicant was entitled to the whole fund in the dispute, and that there was nothing left to be decided either by way of construction or contention. In other words, he had taken the view that there was nothing left to do but to work out the certificate. In my opinion, the correct explanation of the matter is that YOUNGER, J., formed the opinion on the argument of counsel for the applicant that the master had acquired a wrong impression as regards the effect of the master's certificate. So looked at, the case is one in which a question of principle and not merely of quantum was involved. As such, the case is entirely in harmony with the decided cases and is in no way inconsistent with either Re Ogilvie (1) or White v. Altrincham Urban District Council (4). In the result, the summons must be dismissed with costs.

Summons dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Chamberlain & Co. (for the plaintiff); W. C. Crocker (for the defendants).

[Reported by H. McL. MORRISON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

BRITISH MOVIE-NEWS, LTD. v. LONDON AND DISTRICT CINEMAS, LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Bucknill and Denning, L.J.J., and Roxburgh, J.), May 23, 24, June 21, 1950.]

Contract—Frustration—Change of circumstances—Power of court to qualify literal words of contract—Agreement to remain in force during continuance of statutory Order—Order continued by different statute and for different reasons.

On July 25, 1941, film distributors contracted with exhibitors to supply "news reels" for showing at a cinematograph theatre for a minimum of twenty-six weeks, the agreement (the "principal agreement") being thereafter terminable at four weeks' notice by either party and by the exhibitors on four weeks' notice at any time during the currency thereof after the first month. In March, 1943, the supply of film to the distributors was cut by one-third under the Cinematograph Film (Control) Order, 1943, and consequent thereon the distributors and exhibitors entered into a supplemental agreement, which provided: "1. That during the continuance of the Cinematograph Film (Control) Order, 1943, the following special conditions shall apply to the principal agreement: (a) the principal agreement shall remain in full force and effect until such time as the said Order is cancelled and thereafter for any unexpired period stipulated in the principal agreement . . ." On May 24, 1948, although the Order of 1943 had not been cancelled, the exhibitors purported to give four weeks' notice to terminate the agreements. The Order of 1943 had been made under the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 55 (which was made under the Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939), because it appeared to be necessary for maintaining during the war essential supplies of raw film. On Feb. 24, 1946, the Act of 1939 expired, and was replaced by the Supplies and Services (Transitional Powers) Act, 1945, but the Order of 1943 was continued in force to maintain and control essential supplies owing to the economic situation which had arisen after the war and to secure their equitable distribution.

HELD: although the supplemental agreement was framed in language which, taken literally, resulted in the agreement still being in force, the parties could not have contemplated that the Order of 1943 would be continued for a purpose different from its original purpose and could not have intended that the supplemental agreement should apply to the new situation which had arisen, and, therefore, notwithstanding the literal meaning of the words of that agreement, the court would not apply them to the un contemplated turn of events, but would hold that the exhibitors were entitled to give the notice of May 24, 1948.

Per curiam: No matter that a contract is framed in words which, taken literally or absolutely, cover what has happened, nevertheless, if the ensuing turn of events was so completely outside the contemplation of the parties that the court is satisfied that the parties, as reasonable people, cannot have intended that the contract should apply to the new situation, then the court will read the words of the contract in a qualified sense; it will restrict them to the circumstances contemplated by the parties; it will not apply them to the un contemplated turn of events, but will do therein what is just and reasonable.

Sir Lindsay Parkinson & Co., Ltd. v. Commissioners of Works and Public Buildings [1950] 1 All E.R. 208, applied.

[AS TO EXCUSES FOR NON-PERFORMANCE OF A CONTRACT, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn, Vol. 7, pp. 212-220, paras. 296-298; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 12, pp. 383-385, Nos. 3159-3166.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Raphael, Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Ezra, [1935] A.C. 96; sub nom., Re Sassoon, 104 L.J.Ch. 24; 152 L.T. 217; Digest Supp.
- (2) The Moorcock, (1889), 14 P.D. 64; 58 L.J.P. 73; 60 L.T. 654; 12 Digest 611, 5048.
- A (3) Shirlaw v. Southern Foundries (1926), Ltd., [1939] 2 All E.R. 113; [1939] 2 K.B. 206; 108 L.J.K.B. 747; 160 L.T. 353; Digest Supp.
- (4) Joseph Constantine S.S. Line, Ltd. v. Imperial Smelting Corp., Ltd., [1941] 2 All E.R. 165; [1942] A.C. 154; 110 L.J.K.B. 433; 165 L.T. 27; 2nd Digest Supp.
- B (5) Denny, Mott and Dickson, Ltd. v. Fraser (James B.) & Co., Ltd., [1944] 1 All E.R. 678; [1944] A.C. 265; 113 L.J.P.C. 37; 171 L.T. 345; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (6) Sir Lindsay Parkinson & Co., Ltd. v. Commissioners of Works and Public Buildings, [1950] 1 All E.R. 208; [1949] 2 K.B. 632.
- (7) Bush v. Whitehaven Town and Harbour Trustees, (1888), 52 J.P. 392; 2 Hudson's B.C., 4th ed., 118; 12 Digest 385, 3167.
- C (8) Jackson v. Union Marine Insurance Co., Ltd., (1874), L.R. 10 C.P. 125; 44 L.J.C.P. 27; 31 L.T. 789; 12 Digest 386, 3175.
- (9) Chandris v. Isbrandtsen-Moller Co. Inc., [1950] 1 All E.R. 768.
- (10) John Lee & Son (Grantham), Ltd. v. Railway Executive, [1949] 2 All E.R. 581.
- (11) Dennis Reed, Ltd. v. Goody, [1915] 1 All E.R. 919.
- D (12) Bennett, Walden & Co. v. Wood, [1950] 2 All E.R. 134.

APPEAL by the defendants, London and District Cinemas, Ltd., from an order of SLADE, J., dated Feb. 17, 1950.

SLADE, J., found that the defendants were liable to pay to the plaintiffs under two agreements dated respectively July 25, 1941, and May 3, 1943, the weekly sum of ten guineas in respect of the rental of news reel films until the expiration of the Cinematograph Film (Control) Order, 1943 (S.R. & O. 1943, No. 430). The facts appear in the judgment of DENNING, L.J.

Sir Roland Burrows, K.C., Pearson, K.C., and K. Potter for the defendants.
Paull, K.C., and T. G. Roche for the plaintiffs.

Cur. adv. vult.

F June 21. DENNING, L.J., read the following judgment. The question in this case is whether an agreement between the plaintiffs as film distributors and the defendants as film exhibitors, which was made during the war for the exhibition of news reels, is still in force. That agreement was expressed to remain in full force and effect "during the continuance of the Cinematograph Film (Control) Order, 1943," and that Order does still continue. So the film distributors insist that the agreement still remains in force, but the exhibitors say that the circumstances have changed so much that it has come to an end.

G That is the real question at issue, but before discussing it I must set out the facts more in detail. On July 25, 1941, the distributors agreed to supply news reels of British Movietone News to the exhibitors for showing at the Pavilion Theatre, Aylesbury, at ten guineas a week for a minimum period of twenty-six weeks, the agreement being thereafter determinable by four weeks' notice. It was agreed, however, that, notwithstanding the minimum period of twenty-six weeks, the exhibitors might terminate the agreement by one month's notice at any time after the first month. That agreement was still running when, in March, 1943, the Board of Trade decided to control the supply of cinematograph films. There was, of course, at that time a great demand for raw film for military purposes, and, in consequence, less was available for civilian purposes. The result was that the film distributors had their own supplies cut by one-third.

The legal machinery by which this was done was the Cinematograph Film (Control) Order, 1943, under which no person in the film industry was to acquire or supply any film except under the authority of a licence granted by the Board of Trade. The Board of Trade only granted the distributors of news reels two-thirds of what they had previously used.

Nevertheless, at that time nobody wanted the exhibition of news reels to be cut down. They were practically all war films supplied by film service units, and played a considerable part in the war effort. In Sir Gordon Craig's words "it was necessary to obtain the widest possible distribution of the news reel in the national interest." The difficulty caused by the shortage was solved by a "cross-over" system under which one news reel was made to serve two cinemas in one town, by being sent from one cinema to the other during the performance and shown at both. Furthermore, the news reels of the various distributors—there were five of them—were made interchangeable, so that a cinema which, for instance, took the British Movietone News would, if necessary, accept the Pathé Gazette instead. There was no difficulty at that time about an interchange, because the news reels were all much the same, being nearly all war films. The exhibitors still made the same weekly payment as they did before, so that, in spite of the cut, the distributors received the same income from the cinemas as before. In addition the exhibitors bound themselves to take the films, because that was in the national interest. All these arrangements were made under the aegis of the Board of Trade. Indeed, Sir Gordon Craig went so far as to say that the Board of Trade "were the instigators of the whole thing."

The new arrangements were embodied in a number of supplemental agreements between the distributors and the exhibitors. They were all in the same form, but the one we have to consider is a supplemental agreement dated May 3, 1943. It recited the principal agreement of July 25, 1941, and went on:

"Whereas by the Cinematograph Film (Control) Order, 1943, it has become necessary to restrict the consumption of raw film stock, now it is hereby agreed as follows : 1. That during the continuance of the Cinematograph Film (Control) Order, 1943, the following special conditions shall apply to the principal agreement: (a) The principal agreement shall remain in full force and effect until such time as the said Order is cancelled and thereafter for any unexpired period stipulated in the principal agreement; (b) One copy of a news reel will if necessary be used to serve two exhibitors during the same period, and this shall if necessary be deemed to include news reels supplied by other distributors not parties hereto; ... (d) The stipulated rental payable under the principal agreement shall continue to be paid irrespective of ownership of the film which is supplied to the exhibitor and notwithstanding that the same may not be that stipulated for in the principal agreement or not actually supplied by the distributor party hereto ... 3. All the conditions of the principal agreement shall remain in full force and effect in so far as the same are not excluded modified or varied hereby."

That supplemental agreement was clearly sufficient to bind the exhibitors to the "cross-over" and interchange arrangements, but the question is: For how long did it bind them? They want now to cancel the whole of their agreement with the distributors. They say that after the war was over the news reels ceased to consist largely of war news, and that the audiences did not find them acceptable. They, therefore, on May 24, 1948, gave four weeks' notice to terminate the agreements, and stopped taking the news reels altogether. But the distributors say that they have no right to do this. They say that, whether the exhibitors like to take the news reels or not, they must pay the £10 10s. a week until the Cinematograph Film (Control) Order, 1943, is cancelled. The judge has upheld their contention, and the exhibitor now appeals to this court.

The first point taken by the exhibitors is that they were entitled by the terms of the two agreements taken together to give four weeks' notice to determine them. They say that in the principal agreement there was a special condition enabling them, notwithstanding the minimum period of twenty-six weeks, to determine the agreement on four weeks' notice. They say that this special condition still remains in full force and effect notwithstanding that the supplemental agreement introduced a new minimum period, viz., "during the continuance of the Cinematograph Film (Control) Order, 1943." This is an attractive argument, but I doubt whether it is correct. The supplemental agreement says distinctly that the principal agreement shall remain in full force and effect "until such time as the said Order is cancelled." That seems to be inconsistent with any power to terminate beforehand. Any special condition enabling the distributor to terminate by four weeks' notice is clearly gone. So also the special condition providing for prior determination by the exhibitor also goes.

The second point taken by the exhibitors is that the supplemental agreement must be regarded as having come to an end on Feb. 24, 1946, or, at any rate, before they gave notice in May, 1948. They say that the change of circumstances justifies this conclusion. It cannot be doubted that there was a great change of circumstances. In 1943 the war was still on. The Cinematograph Film (Control) Order, 1943, was made under the Defence (General) Regulations, 1939, reg. 55, which in turn was made under the Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939, which expired on Feb. 24, 1946. It was only made because it appeared to be necessary or expedient (in the words of s. 1 (1) of the Act of 1939)

"... for securing the public safety, the defence of the realm, the maintenance of public order and the efficient prosecution of any war in which His Majesty may be engaged, and for maintaining supplies and services essential to the life of the community."

No doubt, it was expedient in 1943 to make the Order, so as to maintain the supplies of raw film which were essential for the life of the community, but after Feb. 24, 1946, the Order could not be justified on that ground. The war was over.

The life of the community was no longer in jeopardy. The military forces no longer required raw film with which to take photographs of the enemy positions. They were being demobilised. The service film units were being disbanded. The news reels were no longer all of one pattern, filled with war films supplied by the services departments. They were supplied by the producers who had to go out to find their own subjects and make their own photographs. So the news reels of one distributor might be of a very different pattern from those of another. This change of circumstance was reflected by a change in the statutes. The Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939, expired on Feb. 24, 1946, and was replaced by the Supplies and Services (Transitional Powers) Act, 1945. The Cinematograph Film (Control) Order, 1943, was continued in force, but it was no longer continued for the same purposes. It was only continued because it appeared to be necessary or expedient (see s. 1 of the Act of 1945)

"... for the purpose of so maintaining controlling and regulating supplies and services as—(a) to secure a sufficiency of those essential to the wellbeing of the community or their equitable distribution or their availability at fair prices ..."

No doubt, supplies of raw film were essential to the wellbeing of the community, and no doubt in February, 1946, they were in short supply and it was expedient to continue the Order so as to secure their equitable distribution, but this is a very different justification for the Order from that which held during the war. Then supplies of film were essential to the "life" of the community. Now they were only essential to its "wellbeing." In the course of 1946 it evidently became easier to obtain supplies of films, because on July 15, 1946, the Board of Trade took off all restrictions on cinematograph films "except the acquisition of news reel prints by a distributor for distribution in the United Kingdom." This meant that films were free of any control for all purposes and for all persons—big film companies and small home photographers alike—except for news reels. It may be that news reels used up so much raw film that there was not at that time enough available to free them too, but, as more supplies became available, this particular restriction might not be justified on the ground of shortage alone. It might have to be justified by additional grounds such as conserving dollars. If we imported less raw film, we spent less dollars; and one way of keeping down the imports of raw film was by keeping the restriction on news reels. So long as the restriction existed, it was an inducement for the trade to keep the "cross-over" arrangements which meant, of course, that less film would be used and less dollars expended. This change of circumstances was reflected by another change in the statutes. The Supplies and Services (Extended Purposes) Act, 1947, was passed which enabled the regulations and Orders to be continued in force, amongst other things, "for ... reducing imports ... from ... any countries and for redressing the balance of trade."

To sum up these changes, therefore, the Cinematograph Film (Control) Order, 1943, was made in 1943 in order to maintain supplies of raw film which was essential to the life of the community in time of war. It was continued after Feb. 24, 1946, in order to ensure the equitable distribution of raw film which was essential to the wellbeing of the community in time of peace, but which then was in short supply owing to the difficulties of transition from war to peace. It was continued after July, 1946, for news reels alone, probably in order to maintain the cross-over arrangements and thus import less raw film and save dollars. Alongside these changes in the legal position, there were the great changes in the general situation. In 1943, when the supplemental agreement was made, the war was on, the news reels of all five distributors were all of one pattern, being nearly all war films supplied by the service units, the exhibitors were expected, if not required, to show them in the national interest, and there was a shortage of raw film owing to military need. In 1948, when the exhibitors gave notice to terminate, the war was over, the news reels of the five distributors were of different patterns, being made by the various producers on their own lines, and there was no national interest which required them to be shown. There was still a restriction on raw film for news reels, but this was not owing to military needs, but to conserve dollars. In this new situation, rival views may be entertained as to what is the best policy. Why, it may be asked, should not an exhibitor be able to give up taking the news reels if he wants to? That would appear to save raw film, not expend it. But, it may be answered, the cross-over arrangement is the best way of saving film. It is dependent on all exhibitors being parties to it; and if any one can fall out if he likes, the whole arrangement is imperilled. These arguments of policy are, however, not for us. We must consider the legal position without regard to them.

The contest is a familiar one. On the one hand, the distributors point to the letter of the contract and say that it governs the case. "The words 'during the continuance of the Cinematograph Film (Control) Order, 1943,' are plain enough. So apply them. The Order still continues." On the other hand, the exhibitors say that, as events have turned out, we must disregard the letter of the contract and look to what the parties really had in mind. The Order was made in war to cover war conditions. The parties did not contemplate that it would be continued in peace, and they should not be held bound to it now.

Counsel for the exhibitors put his argument on three grounds:—(i) on the true construction of the supplemental agreement; (ii) on an implied term in it; (iii) on the change of circumstances since it was made, which was, he said, analogous to a frustration. But he said that these three grounds shaded into one another, because they were all really concerned in finding out whether the contract applied in the new situation. I agree with him. Let me explain why.

(i) When we construe a contract we see whether the parties have actually expressed in words an intention which covers the situation, and we apply the principles stated by LORD WRIGHT in Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Raphael; Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Ezra (1) ([1935] A.C. 42). (ii) When we imply a term, we recognise that the parties have not expressed themselves in words which cover the situation, but we impute to them an intention which we say they would have expressed if they had put their minds to it, and we apply the principles stated by BOWEN, L.J., in The Moorcock (2) (14 P.D. 68 et seq.), and by MAC-KINNON, L.J., in Shirlaw v. Southern Foundries (1926), Ltd. (3) ([1939] 2 All E.R. 124). (iii) When we say that a contract does not apply in a new situation because it is frustrated, we recognise that the words are wide enough to cover the situation, but we hold that they do not apply because the parties did not contemplate such a surprising turn of events, and we apply the principles stated by LORD WRIGHT in Joseph Constantine S.S. Line, Ltd. v. Imperial Smelting Corp., Ltd. (4) ([1941] 2 All E.R. 185, 186, 187) and Denny, Mott and Dickson, Ltd. v. Fraser (James B.) & Co., Ltd. (5) ([1944] 1 All E.R. 683).

In these frustration cases, as LORD WRIGHT said, the court really exercises a qualifying power—a power to qualify the absolute, literal or wide terms of the contract—in order to do what is just and reasonable in the new situation, and it can now by statute make ancillary orders to that end. Until recently the court only exercised this power when there was a frustrating event, that is a supervening event which struck away the foundations of the contract. In the important decision of Sir Lindsay Parkinson & Co., Ltd. v. Commissioners of Works and Public Buildings (6), however, this court exercised a like power when there was no frustrating event, but only an unanticipated turn of events. The facts were that under a building contract the employer stipulated, in addition to the contract work, for power to order extra work without any stated limit, and it was expressly provided that the sum to be paid to the contractor “should not be greater than the actual cost plus a net profit remuneration of £300,000.” The parties had contemplated that the work would cost about £5,000,000, but there was no provision in the contract to that effect. Extras were ordered, bringing the total cost up to £6,683,056. The employers paid that sum, plus the profit of £300,000. The contractors then claimed extra profit because of the extra work, and, despite the absolute terms of the contract, this court held that they were entitled to reasonable extra remuneration on this account. The judgments, if I may say so, are so valuable that they should be read in full, and I will not venture to read extracts from them. They are based on Bush v. Whitehaven Town and Harbour Trustees (7), which, in turn, was based on the leading frustration case of Jackson v. Union Marine Insurance Co., Ltd. (8). The judgments show that, no matter that a contract is framed in words which, taken literally or absolutely, cover what has happened, nevertheless, if the ensuing turn of events was so completely outside the contemplation of the parties that the court is satisfied that the parties, as reasonable people, cannot have intended that the contract should apply to the new situation, then the court will read the words of the contract in a qualified sense; it will restrict them to the circumstances contemplated by the parties; it will not apply them to the unanticipated turn of events, but will do therein what is just and reasonable.

This principle, as DEVLIN, J., has since pointed out, is the same principle as that which underlies the ejusdem generis rule and the suspension clauses in frustration cases: see Chandris v. Isbrandtsen-Moller Co. Inc. (9) ([1950] 1 All E.R. 772). It is, as he says, a recognition of the fact that parties with their minds concerned with the particular objects about which they are contracting are apt to use words, phrases or clauses which, taken literally, are wider than they intend, or, I may add, cover situations which they never contemplated. Recognising this fact, the court refuses to apply them literally to an unanticipated turn of events. This does not mean that the courts no longer insist on the binding force of contracts deliberately made. It only means that they will not allow the words in which they happen to be phrased to become tyrannical masters. The court qualifies the literal meaning of the words so as to bring them into accord with the contemplated scope of the contract. Even if the contract is absolute in its terms, nevertheless, if it is not absolute in intent, it will not be held absolute in effect. The day is gone when we can excuse an unforeseen injustice by saying to the sufferer: "It is your own folly. You ought not to have passed that form of words. You ought to have put in a clause to protect yourself." We no longer credit a party with the foresight of a prophet, or his lawyer with the draftmanship of a Chalmers. We realise that they have their limitations and make allowances accordingly. It is better thus. The old maxim reminds us that qui haeret in litera, haeret in cortice, which, being interpreted means: He who clings to the letter clings to the dry and barren shell, and misses the pith and substance of the matter. We have of late in this court paid heed to this warning, not only in Parkinson's case (6), but also in John Lee & Son (Grantham), Ltd. v. Railway Executive (10), Dennis Reed, Ltd. v. Goody (11), and Bennett, Walden & Co. v. Wood (12): and we must pay like heed now.

Applying these principles, the supplemental agreement says that it is to apply "during the continuance of the Cinematograph Film (Control) Order, 1943." Those words, taken literally, mean that the supplemental agreement is in full force and effect today, for the Order still continues and may, for aught one knows, continue for a long time yet. But the parties cannot have contemplated that it would ever last so long. It was made in war-time to deal with war conditions, and they must have contemplated that it would be cancelled at or shortly after the end of the war. They cannot have contemplated that it would be continued in peacetime to deal with dollar shortages—certainly not that it would still be continuing five years after the war had ended. That being so, the court should not apply the agreement in this un contemplated turn of events.

Counsel for the distributors says (and he put it in the forefront of his argument) that the court can only do this by virtue of an implied term, and he challenged counsel for the exhibitors to formulate the term which should be implied. That is, I think, a fallacy, because the principle to be applied is not based on a term implied by the parties. It is a qualifying power exercised by the courts, but if it is necessary to formulate the term I think that counsel for the exhibitors gave the right answer when he said that it was to be implied that the supplemental agreement continued for the duration of the emergency contemplated by the Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939, under which and for the purposes of which alone the Order was made in 1943, and, therefore, came to an end when that Act came to an end on Feb. 24, 1946, and with it the purposes for which the order was made.

In my opinion, the supplemental agreement ceased to apply before May, 1948, and the exhibitor was entitled to give, as he then did, four weeks' notice to terminate the principal agreement. The appeal should, therefore, be allowed, and the action dismissed with costs.

BUCKNILL, L.J.: I agree that the appeal should be allowed for the reasons given by DENNING, L.J., in the judgment which he has just delivered.

ROXBURGH, J.: I agree.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors: Sydney Morse & Co. (for the exhibitors); Freshfields (for the distributors).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. SEDGWICK.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL (Lord Goddard, C.J., Humphreys and Parker, JJ.), June 19, 1950.]

Criminal Law—Sentence—Preventive detention—Length of sentence—Normal period of eight years—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (c. 58), s. 21 (2).

A A sentence of preventive detention should be for seven years at least and should normally be for eight years, though it is proper to pass a sentence of even five years in the case of an old person in order to prevent him from spending the rest of his life in prison.

[FOR THE CRIMINAL JUSTICE ACT, 1948, s. 21, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., 1948 Statutes, pp. 175, 176.]

B Case referred to:

(1) R. v. Askew, [1949] 2 All E.R. 687; 113 J.P. 511.

APPEAL against a sentence of five years' preventive detention passed at Bradford Quarter Sessions on the conviction of the appellant on charges of office-breaking and larceny. The appellant had eleven previous convictions, but he had not previously been sentenced to penal servitude.

C No counsel appeared.

The following judgment of the court was delivered by LORD GODDARD, C.J.: The appellant was convicted at Bradford City Quarter Sessions of office-breaking and larceny and was sentenced to five years' preventive detention. The court gave leave to appeal because, in their opinion, it is not a case for such a sentence. On more than one occasion we have called the attention of courts of quarter sessions to the fact that (except to prevent an old man from spending the last days of his life in prison) five years' preventive detention is not a sentence which should be given. We laid this down in R. v. Askew (1). Preventive detention is justified where the court is of opinion that the public have to be protected against the depredations of the prisoner for a long period. A sentence of five years—which means, if the man behaves himself in prison, three years and four months—is not appropriate for preventive detention. If the court thinks it is a proper case for a sentence of preventive detention the irreducible minimum is seven years at least, and generally it should be eight years or even longer. We have called the attention of courts to the fact that when preventive detention was first brought into force by the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1908, the court had to give a sentence of not less than eight years because they had to pass first a sentence of penal servitude, which could not be for less than three years, and then a sentence of not less than five years' preventive detention. Now it is not necessary to pass a sentence of imprisonment before a sentence of preventive detention. Special places have to be set aside for prisoners undergoing preventive detention, and if courts continue to give sentences of five years the Prison Commissioners will be in difficulty because the places so set aside will be filled by people who are sent there for this short period instead of for the longer period which Parliament evidently desired. The statutory minimum of five years is very useful because, if a man aged, say, sixty-five years or more is brought before the court, it may be that the court does not wish him to spend his last years in prison. A sentence of five years' preventive detention would be properly given in that case, but in other cases it is useless to give such a sentence. If the court thinks that the longest time for which the man ought to be deprived of his liberty is five years, subject to the remission of one-third, then the proper sentence to give is five years' imprisonment and not five years' preventive detention.

H In the present case the appellant is obviously a public nuisance. He is thirty-nine years old and he has eleven convictions of dishonesty recorded against him.

He might well have been sent to preventive detention for a long time. The court has decided, however, that it is not going to increase the sentence, but it is going to do what the recorder ought to have done if he thought that five years was the proper period of punishment, and that is to impose a sentence of five years' imprisonment in place of one of preventive detention.

Sentence varied.

[Reported by H. McL. MORRISON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

A

KASLEFSKY v. KASLEFSKY.

B

[COURT OF APPEAL (Bucknill, Somervell and Denning, L.J.J.), June 16, 20, 1950.]

Divorce—Cruelty—Neglect by wife of husband and child—Refusal of sexual intercourse—Desire to end marriage—No evidence of intention to wound husband or of injury to his health.

A wife wrote to her husband while he was overseas with the forces asking for her freedom, and saying that she no longer wished to keep the child of the marriage and wished to have it adopted. On the husband's return she spent one night with him, refusing sexual intercourse, and thereafter slept in a separate bedroom. On one other occasion during the next two and a half years she declined to accede to the husband's request for intercourse, but no evidence was given to show why she refused. She showed a complete disregard of her wifely duties, neglecting to prepare meals for her husband and child, getting up late, and leaving the child to be cared for by the husband or by her mother.

C

D

HELD: in the absence of evidence that the wife's conduct was due to her intention to wound the husband's feelings, or that it had resulted in injury, or reasonable apprehension of injury, to his health, neither the writing of the letter in which the wife asked for her freedom and indicated indifference to the child of the marriage, nor her refusal of sexual intercourse, nor her neglect of the husband and the child could be held to be cruelty.

E

Birch v. Birch (1873) (42 L.J.P. & M. 23) and Squire v. Squire ([1948] 2 All E.R. 51), applied.

Per DENNING, L.J.: Gross neglect or chronic discord is not yet a ground for divorce . . . If the door of cruelty were opened too wide, we should soon find ourselves granting divorce for incompatibility of temperament. That is an easy path to tread, especially in undefended cases. The temptation must be resisted lest we slip into a state of affairs where the institution of marriage itself is imperilled.

F

[AS TO LEGAL CRUELTY, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, pp. 649-654, paras. 954-962; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 281-293, Nos. 2513-2694, Digest Supp., and 2nd Digest Supp.]

G

Cases referred to:

- (1) Westall v. Westall, (1949), 65 T.L.R. 337.
- (2) Birch v. Birch, (1873), 42 L.J.P. & M. 23; 28 L.T. 540; 27 Digest 288, 2608.
- (3) Squire v. Squire, [1948] 2 All E.R. 51; [1949] P. 51; [1948] L.J.R. 1345; 112 J.P. 319; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (4) Lauder v. Lauder, [1949] 1 All E.R. 76; [1949] P. 277.
- (5) Usmar v. Usmar, [1949] P. 1; [1948] L.J.R. 1418; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (6) Lissack v. Lissack, [1950] 2 All E.R. 233.

H

APPEAL by the husband from a judgment of His Honour JUDGE PUGH, sitting as a special commissioner in divorce, given on Mar. 2, 1950, whereby he dismissed the husband's petition for divorce presented on the ground of the wife's cruelty.

The learned commissioner found that the wife was lazy and neglected her duties as a wife and mother, but that there was no evidence that her acts were aimed specifically at the husband and no evidence that his health had been injured to any extent in consequence. The facts appear in the judgment of BUCKNILL, L.J.

Simon for the husband.

A The wife did not appear.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 20. BUCKNILL, L.J.: This is an appeal by a husband from a judgment of His Honour JUDGE PUGH, sitting as a special commissioner in divorce, dismissing his petition for dissolution of his marriage presented on the ground that his wife had treated him with cruelty. The husband asked the court to exercise its discretion in his favour because he has himself committed adultery. He is, in fact, living with the woman named in his statement, and she is pregnant by him. He told his wife about the adultery before this petition was filed, but the wife has not appeared to this suit, or made any cross-charges of adultery, nor does she seek to have the custody of the child of the marriage. She appears to be completely indifferent to the marriage, her husband and her son. Before I deal with the facts and the law I will read part of the commissioner's judgment, as follows:

D "I am most assisted by Westall v. Westall (1) and I hope I am following the guidance laid down for me by DENNING, L.J. I am prepared to find that this wife was lazy—I used the word 'sluttish'—and neglected her proper duties as a wife and mother, but there is no evidence before me that those acts were what are called intentional acts or aimed specifically at the husband. I have no evidence that those acts amounted to cruelty. I am satisfied of nothing more than that the husband was considerably worried. I am quite satisfied that his health was not to any serious extent injured. For all these reasons I refuse to grant a decree."

E I think the three points in the judgment are: (i) there is no evidence that the acts of the wife were intentional acts or aimed specifically at the husband; (ii) the health of the husband was not to any serious extent injured, and (iii) (although it does not appear in the words I have quoted) the commissioner expresses a very definite view that the wife's conduct amounted to constructive desertion. After the commissioner had given judgment counsel for the husband said: "It must be on a hypothetical basis. I understood your Lordship to say that the wife had deserted the husband?" The commissioner replied, "Yes, certainly. It looks as though there were all the materials there in the course of time." I mention that because it shows that the commissioner took a serious view of the conduct of the wife, because, in order to come to a conclusion that there has been constructive desertion, he must have thought that the conduct of the deserting spouse had been such as, in effect, to drive the innocent spouse away from home.

H First of all, was the commissioner justified in coming to the conclusion that there was no evidence before him that these acts were what are called intentional acts or aimed specifically at the husband? The parties were married in 1942, when they were each twenty-five years of age. In March, 1943, the son, Alan, was born, and in September, 1943, the husband went overseas in the forces of the Crown. He stayed overseas until April, 1946. According to his evidence, in October, 1944, while he was serving abroad he got a letter from his wife. He was asked this question: "What did that letter say? (A) It implied my wife wanted her freedom, and she no longer wanted to keep the child. She wanted it to be adopted." Unfortunately, the letter has not been available for the use of the court. I do not know what his answer to it was, and I do not know what happened thereafter between that time and his return in April, 1946. He said he tried to get home on a compassionate posting and failed, and when he was repatriated he was suffering from anxiety neurosis caused by worrying about his wife. That is his first charge of cruelty. That raises the point which runs through the whole of this case, namely, whether a wife who writes a letter of that kind, providing she genuinely means what she says, is treating her husband with cruelty. I think one cannot call such conduct cruelty if she was weary of her husband and weary of married life and wanted to be free. However reprehensible it may be from a matrimonial point of view, I do not think it amounts to cruelty. A

The next charge made against the wife by the husband is that she refused him sexual intercourse. He says that as soon as he got home she asked for a divorce, and refused to kiss him. They slept one night in the same room and she refused sexual intercourse. On the next night she slept in her mother's room and has slept there ever since. Only on one occasion after that first night did he ever ask his wife for sexual intercourse and she then refused. There, again, it seems to me that it depends on the motive behind the wife's conduct. If she had arrived at a state of mind during the years that her husband was overseas which made him quite repugnant to her from a sexual point of view, I think she was not cruel in declining to have sexual intercourse. It may be that she was not complying with her matrimonial vows, and in some respects it may be reprehensible, but to say that a wife who refuses to have sexual intercourse with her husband is being cruel to him seems to me to be a misuse of the word. If it could be proved that she refused intercourse solely because she knew it would injure his health and because she wished to inflict unnecessary pain and suffering on him, that would put the matter in quite a different light, but there is no evidence of that, and the letter which she wrote in October, 1944, seems to contradict it. D

The next charge against her is that she used to stay up rather late after everybody went to bed, and that she did not do any work at all, but stayed in bed late in the morning. During the whole of the time that the husband and wife were living together after the husband came back from the war they were living in the house of the wife's mother. The wife's mother owned a newsagent's business and the husband was working in it. I expect they went off early in the morning to get to their work and the husband says the wife's mother did all the cooking and the cleaning—I suppose because the wife refused to help in the work. The same remarks apply to that kind of behaviour of the wife as apply to the question of sexual intercourse. There is no evidence that she refused to do these things from any desire to inflict injury upon the husband. She did it because, as the commissioner says, she was sluttish and preferred to stay in bed to getting up. E F

The next charge at one time seemed to have a little more substance in it. The husband said that the boy, who was three years old when he came back from the army, was neglected by the wife. She kept him up until about nine o'clock in the evening, and the parties quarrelled about that. The husband was forced to put the child to bed, and when the child cried the wife wanted to go up and bring him down again and the husband had to restrain her from doing that. She did not keep the child very clean, and when the husband left on business in the morning the wife was still in bed and he had to give the boy his breakfast. When the husband left, the child was outside the wife's door crying for her to open the door and let him in. The husband said that either he or his mother-in-law used to wash and bathe the child because the wife would not do it. G

Did that amount to cruelty? We have been referred to a case which is relevant to the point, Birch v. Birch (2), heard before SIR JAMES HANNEN in 1873. It was a wife's suit for dissolution in which she alleged as cruelty to her that the husband frequently beat one of her children in her presence without cause. SIR JAMES HANNEN held that that conduct did not amount to cruelty. I will read the material part of his judgment (28 L.T. 540): H

“The cruelty proved by the wife was of this nature: The husband frequently beat one of his children with great violence and without cause . . .

A I have come to the conclusion that consistently with the authorities I cannot find that the petitioner has proved her case as regards cruelty. I must hold fast to the rule of my predecessors, that cruelty must be of such a character that it is dangerous to life, limb, or health. In saying that it must be such as is injurious to health, it does not follow that it must actually have reached that point at which injury has been caused. If there is reasonable ground to believe that it will be persisted in so as to cause mischief, then the party may bring that matter into court, because it is not necessary that he or she should wait until violence has actually occurred . . . With regard to the brutality of the husband towards the child, that cannot be relied upon. I do not say that it could not be under all circumstances; because, undoubtedly, if the evidence showed that the violence was committed upon the child for the express purpose of wounding the feelings of the mother to such an extent as to injure her health it would amount to cruelty. But there is nothing to support such a charge in this case . . .”

B That is a clear statement that brutality to the child would not amount to cruelty to the wife unless it was shown to have been done for the express purpose of wounding her feelings in such a way as to injure her health.

C The question to be considered is whether the law contained in that decision of SIR JAMES HANNEN, J.O., has been modified by the decision of the Court of Appeal in Squire v. Squire (3). I do not think the decision in Squire v. Squire (3) has had that effect. In that case the wife was found guilty of cruelty because she made excessive demands on her husband which included requiring him to read to her through the night and preventing him from sleeping, and the Court of Appeal held that the absence of a malignant motive did not prevent that conduct from amounting to cruelty in that particular case.

D I would refer to a passage in the judgment of EVERSHERD, L.J., where he said ([1948] 2 All E.R. 55):

E “As I read his judgment, the learned judge was of opinion that the absence of any spiteful or malignant intention on the part of the wife (as he found to have been the fact) was fatal to the husband’s claim. I am unable to agree with this view of the law. I do not say that proof of such an intention may not be an important, or, in some cases, even an essential, consideration, but in the circumstances of the present case, for reasons which have been stated by TUCKER, L.J., and which I need not repeat, I do not think proof of such an intention was a requisite for the husband’s success.”

F When considering what kind of case EVERSHERD, L.J., had in his mind when he said that “proof of such an intention may not be an . . . essential consideration” it may be relevant to note the argument put forward by counsel for the wife, when he said ([1949] P. 54):

G “This wife’s motives and intention become relevant when conduct otherwise innocent is shown to have had such an effect on the health of the victim as might amount to cruelty. Then the state of mind of the party complained of must be examined. If it can be shown that in a particular case a certain act was done with the purpose of causing harm, that may be cruelty.”

H I venture to think that that is one of the tests which one has to apply: Is the conduct of the wife, unless done for the express purpose of injuring the health of the husband, innocent in the sense that it is justified or justifiable in the circumstances? In cases such as refusal of sexual intercourse, or sheer laziness, or neglect of a child, I think that is conduct which is innocent so far as any charge of cruelty is concerned, unless it is done for the express purpose of causing injury to the health of the complaining spouse.

The statute which first made cruelty a ground for divorce introduced a new word on the subject. Section 2 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937, which substituted a new s. 176 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, gave power to the court to grant a decree of divorce if the offending spouse has, since the celebration of the marriage, "treated" the petitioner with cruelty. The earlier Acts simply said "guilty of cruelty." I think the use of the word "treated" indicates conduct aimed at the offended spouse. I respectfully agree with the judgment of DENNING, L.J., in Westall v. Westall (1), where he said (65 T.L.R. 337):

"Although malignity is not an essential element of cruelty as Squire v. Squire (3) shows, nevertheless intention is an element in this sense, that there must be conduct which is, in some way, aimed by one person at the other."

I think, therefore, that on the first point the commissioner was justified in coming to the conclusion that this wife had not treated her husband with cruelty because she had not been guilty of conduct which was aimed at the husband and which produced injury to health or reasonable apprehension of injury. That being so, I need not deal with the second point, in which I think there is substance, namely, that the commissioner said that he was satisfied of nothing more than that the petitioner was considerably worried. I think that reasonable apprehension of injury to health would be sufficient, and that the evidence does indicate that there was some reasonable apprehension of injury to health. It must be remembered, however, that the husband had met the woman with whom he started subsequently to live in adultery in August, 1948, and he did not see the doctor on the subject of his health until the autumn of 1948. "Autumn" is a vague word, and it may be that the injury to the health of which he complained, sleeplessness, and so on, was due to the fact that he had already formed an attachment for the other woman. It is not necessary for me to express an opinion on that point, because I think the case fails on the first point, that no conduct amounting to cruelty has been established in this case. That being so, in my view, this appeal must be dismissed.

SOMERVELL, L.J.: I agree with the reasons which have been given by BUCKNILL, L.J., on the issues raised and wish to add nothing.

DENNING, L.J.: In Westall v. Westall (1) we all said, if I remember rightly, that an essential element in cruelty is that there must be conduct which is in some way aimed at one person by the other. I adhere to all I there said, but the question now is what is meant by "aimed at." The cases fall into two categories. First, when the conduct consists of direct action by one against the other, it can then be properly be said to be aimed at the other, even though there is no desire to injure the other or to inflict misery on him. Thus, it may consist of a display of temperament, emotion, or perversion whereby the one gives vent to his or her own feelings, not intending to injure the other, but making the other the object—the butt—at whose expense the emotion is relieved. The sick wife in Squire v. Squire (3) had no desire to injure her husband, but she was guilty of cruelty because she made her husband the butt of her inordinate demands. The moody husband in Lauder v. Lauder (4) directed his sulkiness at his wife, although he had no wish to hurt her. So, also, the nagging wife in Usmar v. Usmar (5). Cases of this kind must, however, be carefully watched. When there is no intent to injure, they are not to be regarded as cruelty unless they are plainly and distinctly proved to cause injury to health.

Secondly, when the conduct does not consist of direct action against the other, but only of misconduct indirectly affecting him or her, such as drunkenness, gambling, or crime, then it can only properly be said to be aimed at the other when it is done, not only for the gratification of the selfish desires of the one who does it, but also in some part with an intention to injure the other or to inflict misery on him or her. Such an intention may readily be inferred from the fact that it is the natural consequence of his conduct, especially when the one spouse knows, or it has already been brought to his notice, what the consequences will be, and nevertheless he does it, careless and indifferent whether it distresses the other spouse or not. The court is, however, not bound to draw the inference. The presumption that a person intends the natural consequences of his acts is one that may—not must—be drawn. If in all the circumstances it is not the correct inference, then it should not be drawn. In cases of this kind, if there is no desire to injure or inflict misery on the other, the conduct only becomes cruelty when the justifiable remonstrances of the innocent party provoke resentment on the part of the other, which evinces itself in actions or words actually or physically directed at the innocent party.

- A This case involves the application of these principles to two matters of common occurrence. (i) This wife grossly neglected her husband and child, but her conduct was not aimed at him, nor had she any desire to injure or inflict misery on him. She was simply lazy. It was all very wrong of her, but it was not cruelty. It was a defect of character and temperament which he, having married her, must put up with. It led, no doubt, to discord between them, but gross neglect or chronic discord is not yet a ground for divorce. Even if the wife had herself been cruel to the child, that would not by itself be cruelty to the husband unless there was in some part an intention on her part to inflict misery on him. The converse case of cruelty by a husband to the children has, like habitual drunkenness, been specially made by statute a ground on which a wife can obtain an order against him in a magistrates' court, but it has not yet by itself been made a ground for divorce. In many cases, however, it will be so likely to cause distress to the wife that the husband may be presumed to have intended in some part to inflict misery on her. In the extreme case where a husband kills a child, the presumption becomes conclusive and he will be held to have treated his wife with cruelty even though he is insane: see the recent decision of PEARCE, J., in Lissack v. Lissack (6).

- (ii) This wife refused her husband sexual intercourse. If there was any ground for inferring that this was an intention to inflict misery on him it would, I think, be cruelty. The wilful and unjustifiable refusal of sexual intercourse is destructive of marriage, more destructive, perhaps, than anything else. Just as normal sexual intercourse is the natural bond of marriage, so the wilful refusal of it causes a marriage to disintegrate. It gives rise to irritability and discord, to nervousness and manifestations of temper, and hence to the breakdown of the marriage. The law should not look to those outward symptoms only. It should have regard to the underlying cause. If the refusal is persisted in so unreasonably and for so long that the court is able to infer that it was intended to inflict misery on the other, then it may be cruelty. That is not the case here. The disinclination on the wife's part may have proceeded from a faulty approach on the husband's side, or from ill-health or reluctance on her side, with no intention whatever of affecting him. It was, therefore, not cruelty.

- The result is that the husband's petition must be refused. I cannot help feeling, however, that in this case it might be a good thing if there were a divorce. The wife has shown a complete disregard of her wifely duties. She does not care for her child and is quite content for him to be brought up by another woman with whom her husband is now living. It might be a good thing if the union of the husband with this other woman could be regularised. The wife could facilitate this by herself suing for a divorce, but it is for her to decide whether she should do so or not. We cannot find that she has treated her husband with cruelty simply because she does not do so. If the door of cruelty were opened too wide, we should soon find ourselves granting divorce for incompatibility of temperament. This is an easy path to tread, especially in undefended cases. The temptation must be resisted lest we slip into a state of affairs where the institution of marriage itself is imperilled. I agree the appeal should be dismissed.

Solicitors: Montagu's and Cox & Cardole (for the husband).

[Reported by C. N. BEATTIE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

PAOLANTONIO v. PAOLANTONIO.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Tucker, Asquith and Jenkins, L.JJ.), June 19, 1950.]

Divorce—Petition—Service—Dispensing with service—Substituted service ineffective—Discretion of judge—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (c. 85), s. 42.

In a petition for divorce on the ground of the husband's desertion the wife sought leave to dispense with service of the petition on the husband whose last known address was in the United States. Repeated inquiries made by the wife over a period of three years through relatives and official channels had failed to trace the husband's whereabouts, the only information which she was able to obtain being that the husband had left for Europe and had not been heard of for some time. On an application by the wife under s. 42 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, for service of the petition on the husband to be dispensed with,

HELD: in exceptional cases the court had a discretion to dispense with service notwithstanding that the requirements laid down in Luccioni v. Luccioni ([1943] 1 All E.R. 384) (that the husband should be aware of the prosecution of the petition or of the intention of the wife to prosecute it and should have an opportunity to defend) were not present; in the present case the court was satisfied that the only possible method of substituted service was not only beyond the means of the wife, but would be ineffective; and, therefore, the court would exercise its discretion to dispense with service of the petition.

[AS TO DISPENSING WITH SERVICE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, p. 706, para. 1060; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, p. 396, Nos. 3928, 3929.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Luccioni v. Luccioni, [1943] 1 All E.R. 260; affmd., [1943] 1 All E.R. 384; [1943] P. 49; 112 L.J.P. 51; 168 L.T. 263; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) Evans v. Bartlam, [1937] 2 All E.R. 646; [1937] A.C. 473; 106 L.J.K.B. 568; sub nom., Bartlam v. Evans, 157 L.T. 311; Digest Supp.
- (3) Weighman v. Weighman, [1947] 2 All E.R. 852; 2nd Digest Supp.

APPEAL by the wife from an order of WALLINGTON, J., in chambers, dated May 17, 1950, refusing to dispense with the service on the husband of a petition for dissolution of the marriage on the ground of the husband's desertion.

The parties were married on July 12, 1944. At that time the husband was domiciled in the United States. The parties lived in England until September, 1945, when the husband left the matrimonial home and went to the United States. In December, 1945, the wife received three letters from the husband informing her of his intention never to live with her again. On Nov. 14, 1949, a copy of the wife's petition for divorce on the ground of desertion, a notice to appear, a memorandum of appearance, and a form of acknowledgement of service, were served on the husband by registered post at his last known address in the United States. Those documents were returned with a covering letter from the husband's mother stating that he had left for Europe and had not been heard of for some time. The wife then made additional inquiries through the husband's relatives and through the United States War Department, but she was unable to trace his whereabouts. In those circumstances she applied under s. 42 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, to dispense with the service on the husband of the petition for divorce, but her application was refused by WALLINGTON, J. The wife appealed.

B. Garland for the wife.

The husband did not appear.

TUCKER, L.J.: This is an appeal by the wife from an order made by WALLINGTON, J., in chambers, dismissing an application, pursuant to s. 42 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, to dispense with the service of a petition for divorce. Section 42 reads as follows:

"Every such petition shall be served on the party to be affected thereby, either within or without Her Majesty's dominions, in such manner as the court shall, by any general or special order from time to time direct, and for that purpose the court shall have all the powers conferred by any statute on the Court of Chancery: Provided always that the said court may dispense with such service altogether in case it shall seem necessary or expedient so to do."

A To my mind it is clear from the facts that every conceivable effort has been made and all reasonable steps taken to ascertain the whereabouts of the husband. I approach this case from the point of view that it is essential to our system of justice that parties to suits should be made aware that proceedings are being brought against them and that this is of supreme importance in matters like
B divorce which involve the status of parties and the welfare of children. The fullest inquiries, therefore, must always be made, and the circumstances must be exceptional before the court is justified in dispensing with the service of a petition. In the present case, actual service being impossible, the only possible substituted service would be by advertisement in some newspaper, but I think the probability of any advertisement reaching the notice of the husband is so
C remote that it can be dismissed from the case as a reasonable possibility or probability. Therefore, one is driven to inquire whether there is anything in the authorities which would prevent the learned judge, in the exercise of his discretion, dispensing with a form of service which on the face of it would be an expensive waste of time and serve no useful purpose.

D The leading authority in this class of case is Luccioni v. Luccioni (1). There the petition of the wife was dated Oct. 21, 1942. The wife charged her husband with desertion as from October, 1936, when, it was alleged, he had left her and gone to Morocco or to France. The husband was a French national and the wife went to Paris and ascertained an address at which it was believed he was living until shortly after the outbreak of war in 1939, since when she had received no communication from him or anyone on his behalf, and did not know his present
E whereabouts. As a result of the capitulation of France in July, 1940, substituted service was impossible, but, of course, the wife might have presented her petition in October, 1939, when service would have been possible. In dealing with the case, LORD MERRIMAN, P., said ([1943] 1 All E.R. 262):

"... in the case of petitions which involve a change of status, and where any form of substituted service is impossible, the court, before dispensing with service, should require to be satisfied that the respondent spouse has become aware of the fact that the petition is being prosecuted, or, at the very least, of the intention to prosecute it, and in either case has had time and opportunity to indicate whether he or she desires to defend. Whether this requirement is satisfied will, of course, be decided upon the merits of the individual case."

G On appeal to this court it was contended that that statement of the President amounted to his having imposed a fetter on himself in the exercise of his discretion under s. 42 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857. This court rejected that contention and SCOTT, L.J., in his judgment, cited the passage from the President's judgment in which he quoted from Evans v. Bartlam (2), and H proceeded (ibid., 385):

"In my view, however, LORD MERRIMAN, P., was not for one moment intending to impose limitations of that kind. The two or three hypothetical events connected with a petition to which he refers are each of them within the category of relevant matters for consideration in connection with the exercise of discretion: but I think he only spoke of them in that context as conceivably relevant matters which, if proved, would undoubtedly be additional reasons for the exercise of the discretion ..."

The other members of the court agreed and they also agreed with the decision arrived at by the learned President on the facts of the particular case. DU PARCQ, L.J., said (ibid., 386):

"I think that what was said by LORD MERRIMAN, P., may properly be regarded as a statement of such a general indication, though it is most important that every judge who is asked to make an order dispensing with service of a petition of divorce should remember that in matters of discretion no one case can be an authority for another."

Pausing there for the moment we reach the result that the matters referred to by the learned President were all very relevant matters proper to be taken into consideration when a judge is exercising his discretion under s. 42, but they are not conclusive, and it remains for the learned judge in every case to exercise his discretion unfettered by any rule which might tend to bind him.

In the present case, as it seems to me, the learned judge was concerned to see whether he could properly bring the case within the decision of this court in Weighman v. Weighman (3). In that case the respondent husband had gone to Canada in search of employment in 1926. From that date until 1943 he sent numerous letters to the wife, who continued to reside in England, in which he expressed his intention of returning to England when he could afford to do so. On July 7, 1943, however, he wrote a letter, which gave no address, informing his wife that he had left his previous address and that he never intended to return to England. After inquiries through relatives and official channels had failed to trace the husband's whereabouts, an order was made for substituted service by advertisement in a Canadian newspaper, but the cost of the advertisement was beyond the wife's means. The wife applied for service to be dispensed with altogether. It was held that mere want of means was not sufficient, but, as it was a fair inference from the facts that the husband knew that there was at least a likelihood of proceedings, it was a proper case for dispensing with service. In giving the leading judgment, BUCKNILL, L.J., set out the facts, referred to Luccioni v. Luccioni (1), and said that the court was satisfied that FINNEMORE, J., who had refused the application, had properly interpreted the decision of Luccioni v. Luccioni (1) and had not regarded himself as tied in the exercise of his discretion. The learned lord justice continued ([1947] 2 All E.R. 853):

"In my view, there are special facts in the present case which FINNEMORE, J., did not consider sufficiently. In view of the terms of the husband's letter of July 7, 1943, and of the facts that he had been away for twenty years and that in 1943 he intimated his intention never to return to his wife, the husband, in my opinion, must have known that he had deserted his wife and that that desertion had continued for more than three years. It is, therefore, in my opinion, a fair inference that he knew that the wife would take proceedings for divorce. In these circumstances I think the conditions laid down by LORD MERRIMAN, P. [in Luccioni v. Luccioni (1)] were fulfilled, the appeal should be allowed, and service of the petition on the husband dispensed with."

COHEN, L.J., agreed.

WALLINGTON, J., in the present case, had had Weighman v. Weighman (3) brought to his attention and he considered that the court there had evidently paid great attention to the terms of the letter of July 7, 1943, which were not set out in the judgment. Accordingly, he sent for the papers in that case, and it appeared that there were two letters produced, one from the respondent in Canada in November, 1940, indicating his intention to return to England when opportunity offered, and the all important letter three years later of July 7, 1943, which was in these words:

"Dear Mary, you want to know what I intend to do. Well, I know I will never come back to England. I have left Timmins and I do not know where

I am going, but I am only staying here until I make up my mind and so goodbye."

A This court thought that, in view of that letter, written after the respondent had left his wife for very nearly twenty years, and in reply to a letter he had evidently received from his wife asking what he was intending to do, it was a fair inference that he was communicating to her his final decision to leave her in such circumstances that he must have known that proceedings were contemplated and would almost necessarily follow. WALLINGTON, J., appears to have thought that that was the decisive factor in Weighman v. Weighman (3) and that he could find no comparable factor in the present case which would bring it within Weighman v. Weighman (3). With that decision I respectfully agree. I do not find it possible in the present case to draw the inference that the husband must know that by now proceedings for divorce have been instituted against him. B There is no communication from him since the period of desertion has run out. All that is relied on are statements made by him at the moment when he left his wife and in subsequent correspondence before the period of three years had elapsed. I think that if one was to say that the learned judge was wrong in refusing to draw this inference the result would be that in almost every case where C the petitioner was alleging desertion it might reasonably be argued that the respondent must always know that he has deserted the petitioner, and that, therefore, proceedings have been or will be instituted.

On that ground I should have arrived at the same conclusion as WALLINGTON, J., but that, to my mind, is not the end of this case because, as I have already indicated, the requirements laid down in Luccioni v. Luccioni (1) are not all embracing, and there must remain other cases, exceptional cases no doubt, of which I think the present is one, where a learned judge, in the exercise of his discretion under s. 42 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, may dispense with service notwithstanding that all the requirements suggested by LORD MERRIMAN, P., in Luccioni v. Luccioni (1) are not present. That, I think, follows from the decision of the Court of Appeal in that case. To refuse to exercise D the discretion in the absence of those requirements would be in effect to treat them as necessary elements before the discretion can be exercised. I think that is where the learned judge in the present case was led into error. Not being able to bring the case within the four corners of Weighman v. Weighman (3), he appears to me to have regarded himself as precluded from dispensing with service. Otherwise there could be no ground for refusing the order. I think E there must be cases of which the present is one, although they will necessarily be few, where once the court is satisfied, as I am in the present case, that the only suggested method of substituted service is not only beyond the means of the applicant, but will be ineffective, justice requires that the court should exercise its discretion to dispense with service of the petition. I would, accordingly, make that order.

G ASQUITH, L.J.: I agree.

JENKINS, L.J.: I also agree.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor: C. W. H. Davenport, Law Society's Services Divorce Department (for the wife).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re S. A. HAWKEN, LTD.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Wynn-Parry, J.), June 23, 1950.]

Company—Winding-up—Compulsory winding-up—Petition for relief under Companies Act, 1948, s. 210 (1), or for winding-up order—Petitioners' costs—Taxation—Affidavit in support of petition in addition to statutory affidavit—Documents exhibited to statutory affidavit—Acute conflict between parties—Petition grounded on allegation that affairs of company required investigation—Additional affidavit—Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38), s. 210 (1); s. 224 (1)—Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1949 (S.I. 1949, No. 330), r. 3, r. 30, Appendix, Form 9. A

A petition praying (i) for relief under the Companies Act, 1948, s. 210 (1), and, alternatively, (ii) that the company be wound-up compulsorily, was presented by three shareholders of a company, who were, between them, entitled to almost half of the company's issued share capital of £1,000, and one of whom was also a creditor of the company in respect of a loan of £1,750. The respondents to the petition were the company and Mr. and Mrs. H., who held most of the remaining shares. According to the allegations in the petition there was at the date of its presentation acute conflict between the parties, and, although there was no charge of fraud against any officer of the company, the petition was grounded on an allegation that the affairs of the company required investigation. It also contained an allegation that the company was insolvent and unable to pay its debts. The petitioners filed two affidavits: (i) an affidavit by the petitioners containing the matters set out in the statutory affidavit in verification of a winding-up petition (Form 9 in the Appendix to the Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1949), but exhibiting, in addition, a large number of documents in support of the allegations in the petition, including a draft balance sheet of the company's business as at Sept. 3, 1949, and a draft trading and profit and loss account for a period ending on that date; and (ii) an affidavit by a former secretary of the company to support certain allegations in the petition on a point which had been contested by the respondent shareholders before the presentation of the petition. The draft balance sheet showed that, after deducting the company's total liabilities from its assets, there was left a sum of £796 2s. 3d. to meet the amount of the share capital of £1,000. At the hearing of the petition the company and the respondent shareholders did not admit any of the allegations on which relief under s. 210 (1) of the Act was sought, but agreed to the winding-up of the company. A winding-up order was made and it was ordered that the petitioners' costs of the petition should be paid out of the assets of the company. On the taxation of costs, the taxing master disallowed the costs of the former secretary's affidavit and all costs in relation to the petitioners' affidavit other than the costs usually allowed in respect of the making and filing of the statutory affidavit, on the grounds (a) that, under s. 210 (5) and s. 365 of the Act, the Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1949, r. 3 and r. 30, applied to a petition under s. 210 (1), and, therefore, the statutory affidavit was sufficient to support the prayer under that section as well as the prayer for the winding-up of the company, and (b) that, by reason of the allegation that the company was insolvent and unable to pay its debts, the petition was demurrable on the face of it in regard to the relief claimed under s. 210. B
C
D
E
F
G
H

HELD: (i) if, at the hearing of the petition, the objection had been taken that the petition was on the face of it demurrable as it contained an allegation on behalf of all three petitioners, and not merely on behalf of the creditor petitioner, that the company was insolvent and unable to pay its debts, only the petition could have been looked at, but, on an application to the court to review the decision of the taxing officer, the court was entitled to look at the draft balance sheet which was before it, and, therefore, it could not proceed on the basis that the petition, so far as it claimed relief under s. 210 of the Act, was necessarily demurrable.

(ii) as the allegations in the petition in respect of the claim under s. 210 showed that there was acute conflict between the parties, and the petition was grounded on an allegation that the affairs of the company required investigation, the petitioners were justified in supplementing the statutory affidavit by exhibiting the documents and by filing the affidavit of the ex-secretary, and, therefore, the costs of these items should be allowed.

Per WYNN-PARRY, J.: "I can imagine few cases of petitions presented under s. 210 in which it would be wise, or even possible, to rely merely on the statutory affidavit."

A [AS TO AFFIDAVIT IN SUPPORT OF PETITION, see HALSBURY, Vol. 5, 1949 Edn., p. 623, para. 978; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 10, p. 850, Nos. 5637-5639.

FOR THE COMPANIES ACT, 1948, s. 210, see HALSBURY'S STATUTES, Second Edn., Vol. 3, pp. 630, 631.]

C Cases referred to:

(1) Re Rica Gold Washing Co., (1879), 11 Ch.D. 36; 40 L.T. 531; 10 Digest 838, 5497.

(2) Re Kaslo-Slocan Mining & Financial Corp'n., Ltd., [1910] W.N. 13; 10 Digest 838, 5499.

(3) Re Gold Hill Mines, (1883), 23 Ch.D. 210; 49 L.T. 66; 10 Digest 832, 5426.

(4) Re New Callao, Ltd., (1882), 47 L.T. 175; 10 Digest 850, 5637.

(5) Re St. David's Gold Mining Co., Ltd., (1866), 14 L.T. 539; 10 Digest 1042, 7255.

(6) Re South Staffordshire Tramways Co., (1894), 1 Mans. 292; 10 Digest 850, 5638.

(7) Re Ilfracombe Permanent Mutual Benefit Building Society, [1901] 1 Ch. 102; 70 L.J.Ch. 66; 84 L.T. 146; 10 Digest 840, 5512.

E SUMMONS on a review of taxation adjourned into court for judgment.

A petition was presented by three of the shareholders of a company, praying (i) that an order be made under the Companies Act, 1948, s. 210, for (a) the purchase of their shares in the company by the two respondent shareholders or by the company, and (b) for repayment by the respondent shareholders or the company of a debt due to the first petitioner, or (c) for such other order under the section as the court might deem proper with a view to bringing to an end the matters complained of in the petition; (ii) alternatively, that the company be wound-up by the court under the provisions of the Act; (iii) or that such other order be made as to the court should seem meet.

G The nominal capital of the company was £1,000, divided into one thousand shares of £1 each. The petitioners held, between them, 450 shares and the two respondent shareholders held, between them, 510 shares, the remaining forty shares being held by a sixth shareholder. According to the allegations in the petition, there was acute conflict between the petitioners and the respondent shareholders, and the petition alleged inter alia that a report of one of the petitioners, prepared on behalf of the directors of the company, showed that the company was suffering from dishonesty, presumably on the part of its employees, and that there was a suggestion by one of the employees that one of the respondent shareholders was responsible for a deficiency in the company's stock. The petition stated that the affairs of the company had been placed under investigation by the police, and it also contained an allegation that the company was insolvent and unable to pay its debts. In verification of the petition, the petitioners filed the statutory affidavit (Form 9 in the Appendix to the Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1949), and exhibited thereto a number of documents in support of their allegations. In addition, they filed an affidavit by a former secretary of the company in support of certain allegations which had been the subject of dispute between the petitioners and the respondent shareholders before the petition was presented. A draft balance sheet and trading and profit and loss account, which was among the documents exhibited to the petitioners' affidavit, showed that, after deducting the company's total liabilities from its assets, there was a sum of over £796 to meet the amount of the company's share capital of £1,000. The respondent company and respondent shareholders, while not admitting any of the allegations on which relief under s. 210 was sought, agreed to the petition being treated as a petition to wind-up the company. On Dec. 12, 1949, VAISEY, J., ordered, by consent, that the company should be wound-up, and he further ordered that the costs of the petitioners and the company should be taxed and paid out of the company's assets. On taxing the petitioners' bill of costs, the taxing officer disallowed (a) all costs of the petitioners' affidavit other than the costs usually allowed in making and filing the statutory affidavit, and (b) the whole of the costs relating to the affidavit of the former secretary. The petitioners lodged objections to the taxing officer's decision, but it was upheld by the registrar. The petitioners appealed to the judge from the decision of the registrar. The facts appear in the judgment.

A. F. M. Berkeley for the petitioners.

Denys Buckley for the respondents.

WYNN-PARRY, J.: This is a summons in the compulsory liquidation of the company, taken out by the petitioners on the petition on which the order to wind-up the company was made on Dec. 12, 1949.

The three petitioners petitioned as contributories and the first petitioner, Taylor, also petitioned as a creditor. The petition prayed, first, for relief under the Companies Act, 1948, s. 210, and, alternatively, that the company should be wound-up compulsorily. Put shortly, the case disclosed in the petition was that the three petitioners, on the one hand, and a Mr. and Mrs. Hawken, on the other hand, were between them entitled to the issued capital of the company, which was incorporated on June 17, 1949, namely, one thousand shares of £1 each, held by the two camps in, approximately, equal shares, the shares held by the petitioners having been paid for in cash, while the shares held by the Hawken camp, though treated as having been paid for in cash, appear to have been issued in return for the transfer to the company by the Hawken of an ice cream business and a timber business, perhaps an unusual combination for a business venture. Of the course of the timber business little is to be gleaned from the petition. The ice cream business was successful in its first season, but then the volume of business fell off and a draft account for the period up to Sept. 3, 1949, showed a small trading loss. The third petitioner, Mayhew-Sanders, reported that there was a big deficiency in stock and that the company was suffering from dishonesty, presumably on the part of its employees. He further reported that no proper stock records had been kept, that there were many unsatisfactory features concerning the company's administration and its control over its staff, and that it had been suggested by an employee that Mrs. Hawken was one of the persons responsible for the deficiency of stock. The petition further alleged that, at a directors' meeting held on Dec. 10, 1949, the petitioner, Mayhew-Sanders, proposed that the whole matter should be handed over to the Marlow police for investigation, and a resolution to this effect was passed against the opposition of Mr. and Mrs. Hawken. Mr. Hawken desiring time to consult his solicitors. With a certain economy of language, the petition then avers that thereafter Mr. and Mrs. Hawken adopted a hostile attitude to the petitioners and ceased to co-operate with them. Mr. and Mrs. Hawken are alleged to have opened a new banking account for the company. Mr. Hawken alleged through his solicitors that the two businesses which the company was carrying on were his, relying, no doubt, on the lack of regularity attending the taking over of these businesses. Finally, Mr. and Mrs. Hawken required the convention of an extraordinary general meeting with a view to passing a resolution removing the petitioners, Mayhew-Sanders and Taylor, from their offices as directors. This move was countered by the petitioner, Taylor, calling in a loan of £1,750, which, it is alleged, he had made to the company, and requiring payment of this sum and interest. Then the petition was launched claiming the alternative forms of relief to which I have referred. It alleged that the company was insolvent and unable to pay its debts.

The petitioners did not content themselves with supporting the petition by an affidavit in the statutory form (Form 9 in the Appendix to the Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1949), which reads as follows:

"I, A.B., of—, make oath and say that such of the statements in the petition now produced and shown to me, and marked with the letter A, as relate to my own acts and deeds are true, and such of the said statements as relate to the acts and deeds of any other person or persons I believe to be true."

They filed two affidavits. The first was an affidavit by the three petitioners, para. 1 of which contains the matter set out in the statutory affidavit. It then exhibits (i) the memorandum and articles of association of the company; (ii) an agreement, dated Mar. 28, 1929, between a Mr. Whittingham and Mr. Hawken by which Mr. Hawken is said to have acquired the businesses, which were subsequently, though with considerable absence of regularity, alleged to have been transferred by Mr. Hawken to the company; (iii) the minute book of the company; (iv) a draft balance sheet as at Sept. 3, 1949, and draft trading and profit and loss account for the period from Apr. 14, 1949, to Sept. 3, 1949, relating to the businesses [Exhibit "E"]; and (v) a bundle of correspondence containing letters passing between Mr. Hawken's solicitors and the company or the petitioner Mayhew-Sanders. The other affidavit was by the former secretary of the company dealing with registration in the name of the company, under the Registration of Business Names Act, 1916, of two names which had previously been used by Mr. and Mrs. Hawken. The purpose of this affidavit was clearly to support the petitioners' contention that the businesses in question had been acquired by the company.

The petition came before the court on Dec. 12, 1949. The company and Mr. and Mrs. Hawken were represented. The order recites that they did not admit any of the allegations in the petition on which relief under s. 210 of the Companies Act, 1948, was sought, but agreed to the petition being treated as a petition to wind-up the company. On this basis it was ordered by consent that the company should be wound-up. The order further provided that the costs of the petitioners and of the company of the petition should be taxed and paid out of the assets of the company. In due course a bill of costs was brought in on behalf of the petitioners. In taxing the bill the taxing officer disallowed all costs in relation to the affidavit of the petitioners other than the costs usually allowed in respect of the making and filing of the statutory affidavit, and the whole of the costs relating to the second affidavit, the total sum involved being £11 14s. 4d. The petitioners lodged objections to the disallowances, but the registrar upheld the decision of the taxing officer. From his decision the petitioners appeal.

It is said, in the first place, on behalf of the respondents, that the costs in question which relate only to the matters alleged in support of the relief claimed under s. 210 of the Act ought, in any event, to be disallowed, because the petition, so far as that relief is concerned, was demurrable on the face of it. The condition, on the existence of which the jurisdiction of the court depends, is that "the facts would justify the making of a winding-up order on the ground that it was just and equitable that the company should be wound-up," i.e., that, if the petition had been presented as a contributory's petition for the winding-up of the company, the court could have made such an order: see s. 210 (2) (b). The petition, as I have said, contains an allegation that the company is insolvent and unable to pay its debts, and, therefore, it is said, it is demurrable on the face of it. Prima facie, this would appear to be so. A contributory is not entitled to a winding-up order unless he can show that he has a tangible interest in the assets in a winding-up: see Re Rica Gold Washing Co. (1), per SIR GEORGE JESSEL, M.R. (11 Ch.D. 43); and an allegation that a company has no assets and is insolvent has been held to disentitle a petitioner to such an order: see Re Kaslo-Slocan Mining & Financial Corpn., Ltd. (2).

In the present case, however, this does not appear to me to be the end of the matter. The exhibit "E" to the petitioners' affidavit, viz., the draft balance sheet and trading and profit and loss account, shows that, discounting the items on the assets side of the balance sheet, "preliminary expenses £31 10s." and "Profit and Loss Account £172 7s. 9d.", neither of which can have any realisable value, the assets have a book value of £9,961 3s. 3d. Deducting the total of the liabilities, £9,165 1s., there is left a figure of £796 2s. 3d. to meet the amount of the share capital of £1,000. On those figures the contributories would appear to have, at least, a tangible interest in a winding-up. I am conscious of the fact that the balance sheet is a draft and not an audited document, but it was prepared by the firm of chartered accountants of which the petitioner, Mayhew-Sanders, is a member. The allegation of insolvency and inability to pay debts was, no doubt, included in the petition in aid of the alternative claim that the company should be wound-up because it had failed to pay the first petitioner, Taylor, in his capacity as a creditor, and it is an allegation which is common form in a creditors' petition. It is, however, an allegation which, on the form of the petition, is made on behalf of all three petitioners, and, but for the matters disclosed in the draft balance sheet, would, in my view, have proved fatal to the claim under s. 210 of the Act, had the case been fought and the point taken. The danger is thus disclosed of attempting to combine a claim by or as a creditor with a claim by or as a contributory in the same petition. Then, can I properly take into account the matters disclosed in the draft balance sheet? The objection, if taken at the hearing, would, as I have said, have been that the petition was demurrable. On a demurrer, only the pleadings—in this case, the petition—can be looked at. As the matter comes before me on an application to review the decision of the taxing officer, I necessarily have before me the draft balance sheet. I, therefore, know of evidence which could have been used to ground an application for leave to amend the petition by adding to the allegation that the company was insolvent and unable to pay its debts, an allegation that, nevertheless, the petitioners, on the information available, would have a tangible interest in the winding-up of the company. In these circumstances, in my judgment, I ought not to proceed on the basis that the petition, so far as it claimed relief under s. 210, was necessarily demurrable.

I turn, therefore, to the substantive question which is raised on this summons. Were the applicants right in adding to the statutory affidavit the material which they did add, and in filing the second affidavit by the former secretary? The conjoint effect of s. 210 (5) and s. 365 of the Act is that r. 3 and r. 30 of the Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1949, apply, and, therefore, having regard to the authorities, prima facie the statutory affidavit is sufficient to support a petition under s. 210. It is difficult to see why, on the language of r. 3 and r. 30, the statutory affidavit is applicable. In Re Gold Hill Mines (3), LINDLEY, L.J., said (23 Ch.D. 214):

"The statutory affidavit strictly is no proof of anything. It is hearsay as to almost everything in it, but it is sufficient to require an answer."

Its validity was challenged as long ago as 1882 in Re New Callao, Ltd. (4), but SIR GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., said that it had then been acted on for twenty years and the court could not throw any doubt on it. Notwithstanding the opportunities presented by subsequent Companies Acts, the legislature has not seen fit to replace this form of affidavit, which "strictly is no proof of anything," and which, therefore, presumably could not result in anyone who should take his oath on it getting into trouble.

A The result of the decided cases appears to be that, while the statutory affidavit is always necessary, it is not always sufficient: see Re St. David's Gold Mining Co., Ltd. (5), and Re South Staffordshire Tramways Co. (6); and it is never sufficient where the petition is based on allegations of fraud. In such cases the facts of the alleged fraud must be stated on affidavit: see Re St. David's Gold Mining Co., Ltd. (5), Re South Staffordshire Tramways Co. (6), and Re Ilfracombe Permanent Mutual Benefit Building Society (7), per WRIGHT, J. ([1901] 1 Ch. 110). The court has never attempted to state exhaustively the circumstances in which, apart from cases based on allegations of fraud, the statutory affidavit is to be regarded as insufficient. Each case must depend on its peculiar facts.

B In BUCKLEY ON THE COMPANIES ACTS, 12th ed., p. 1028, it is stated, in the note to r. 30 of the Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1949:

C "In general the petitioner ought not to file any evidence beyond the statutory affidavit, unless evidence is filed in opposition . . ."

I find this statement also in the 8th edition of BUCKLEY, dated 1902 [in a note to r. 36 of the Companies Winding-up Rules, 1890, at p. 882]. I accept this statement so far as it goes, but, of course, much depends on the scope of the words "in general." In the ordinary case of a creditors' petition for a winding-up order on the ground of insolvency, no more than the statutory affidavit can be D justified in the first instance. On the other hand, where the petition is grounded on an allegation that the affairs of the company require investigation, then, though no charge of fraud is made against any director or officer, it will probably be desirable in many, if not most, cases to supplement the statutory affidavit, and the court, in my view, ought not to be quick to disallow the costs of supplementary evidence in such a case. Again, where a petitioner must rely on documents if the petition is opposed, I should have thought that he would do right E to exhibit those documents. They form part of his case, and the respondents to the petition are entitled to know the case which is made against them. It appears to me to be no answer to say that, in the event, the documents proved unnecessary, because the petition was not resisted. The completeness of a petitioner's case may well induce a respondent not to resist. I can imagine few F cases of petitions presented under s. 210 in which it would be wise, or even possible, to rely merely on the statutory affidavit.

In the present case, according to the allegations in the petition, there was at the date of its presentation acute conflict between the parties. Not only was Mr. Hawken disputing that there was any agreement as to the taking over of the businesses from him by the company, but also it was disputed that there G was any case for relief under s. 210. In these circumstances, I think that the petitioners were justified in supplementing the statutory affidavit by exhibiting the documents which they did exhibit and by filing the affidavit of the former secretary. The application will, therefore, be allowed with costs, and the matter will be referred back to the taxing officer to deal with the question of quantum.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Davenport, Lyons & Barker (for the petitioners); Stafford Clark & Co. (for the respondents).

[Reported by H. McL. MORRISON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

WORKINGTON HARBOUR AND DOCK BOARD v. OWNERS OF THE S.S. TOWERFIELD

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Porter, Lord Normand, Lord Oaksey, Lord Morton of Henryton and Lord Radcliffe), March 13, 14, 15, 16, 20, 22, 27, 28, 29, 30, June 30, 1950.]

Harbour—Pilot—Compulsory pilot—Responsibility of shipowner—Action by shipowner against harbour board for negligence—Counterclaim by board for damage to harbour—Contributory negligence—Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 27), s. 74—Pilotage Act, 1913 (c. 31), s. 15.

In 1931 the W. Harbour Board notified the maritime public, by means of an inset in the appropriate Admiralty chart and by means of notices to mariners, of the facilities afforded to shipping by their harbour on payment of dues and charges. From 1933 onwards, under the heading "Dredged Depths," the chart bore the words: "In the approach channel and turning basin within the pecked lines a depth of 4½ ft. at chart datum is maintained by dredging (1933)," which meant, in effect, that the depth of the channel was maintained at the level of the dock sill. It was indicated that the channel was 250 feet wide. On Oct. 19, 1941, s.s. Towerfield, having a draft of twenty-three feet forward and twenty-four feet aft, arrived off W. Harbour, and took on the compulsory Trinity House pilot. High water was at 11.8 a.m., producing a predicted depth of thirty feet, one inch, at the dock sill. The pilot, after boarding the vessel, received a message from the harbour-master that the harbour tug was not available to assist in bringing the Towerfield into the dock, but the pilot decided nevertheless to bring her in. At 11.10 a.m. the Towerfield crossed the bar, steamed up the channel at three knots, and, after going about four hundred yards, grounded on the north side of the channel and subsequently broke her back. It was apparent that neither the advertised depth nor the advertised width of the channel had been maintained. The shipowners claimed damages from the harbour board in respect of (i) breach of the board's duty imposed by statute and at common law to take reasonable precautions that the approaches to the port were safe or to give warning that no such care had been exercised, and (ii) breach of contract or warranty that the condition of the harbour was in accordance with the Admiralty chart. The harbour board counterclaimed for damage to the harbour on the ground that it was due to the negligence of those in charge of the Towerfield, and also under the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847, s. 74. The harbour board had given no information either to the shipowners or the pilot as to the state of the channel at the place where the Towerfield went aground (which was within the channel as marked by the line of the northern dredging marks), nor had dredging been carried on continuously in the channel.

The Pilotage Act, 1913, s. 15, provides: "(1) Notwithstanding anything in any public or local Act, the owner or master of a vessel navigating under circumstances in which pilotage is compulsory shall be answerable for any loss or damage caused by the vessel or by any fault of the navigation of the vessel in the same manner as he would if pilotage were not compulsory."

The House found that the harbour board were negligent in not fulfilling their obligations by sounding and dredging and in not ensuring that the pilot and master were warned of the state of the channel, and that the pilot was guilty of negligent navigation. On the questions of liability:

HELD: (i) s. 15 (1) applied to the claim by the shipowners, whether it was in tort for negligence or for breach of contract between the harbour board and the shipowners; the word "answerable" in the sub-section meant "responsible," and (LORD OAKSEY dissenting) the shipowners were responsible under that section for the faulty navigation of the pilot, and, consequently, for the damage sustained by the ship as well as for the damage to the harbour; but, as the harbour board were also negligent, neither could recover from the other.

(ii) on the true construction of s. 74 of the Act of 1847, the shipowners were liable for damage caused by their ship to the harbour works notwithstanding the contributory negligence of the harbour board, but the damages would be limited to the damage directly caused to the works (which was conceded), and would not include, for instance, loss of revenue.

The Mostyn ([1928] A.C. 57), applied.

Det Forenede Dampskibs Selskab v. Barry Ry. Co. ([1919] L.L.R. 658), criticised by LORD NORMAND and LORD RADCLIFFE.

Order of the Court of Appeal ([1948] 2 All E.R. 736), varied.

[AS TO SHIPOWNER'S LIABILITY UNDER COMPULSORY PILOTAGE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 30, p. 940, para. 1302: AS TO LIABILITY FOR DAMAGE TO HARBOUR, see ibid., p. 985, para. 1374; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 41, pp. 911, 912, 974, 975, Nos. 8044, 8045, 8641-8656.]

Cases referred to :

- C (1) The Eurymedon, [1938] P. 41; 107 L.J.P. 81; 158 L.T. 445; sub nom., Corstar Owners v. Eurymedon Owners, The Eurymedon, [1938] 1 All E.R. 122; Digest Supp.
- (2) Boy Andrew (Owners), Ltd. v. St. Rognvald (Owners), Ltd., [1948] A.C. 140; [1948] L.J.R. 768; sub nom., Admiralty Comrs. v. North of Scotland and Orkney and Shetland Steam Navigation Co., Ltd., [1947] 2 All E.R. 350; 2nd Digest Supp.
- D (3) Dennis v. Tovell, (1872), L.R. 8 Q.B. 10; 42 L.J.M.C. 33; 27 L.T. 482; 37 J.P. 263; 41 Digest 974, 8641.
- (4) River Wear Comrs. v. Adamson, (1877), 2 App. Cas. 743; 47 L.J.Q.B. 193; 37 L.T. 543; 42 J.P. 244; affg., (1876), 1 Q.B.D. 546; 46 L.J.Q.B. 83; 45 L.T. 118; 41 Digest 974, 8643.
- E (5) Great Western Ry. Co. v. Mostyn (Owners), The Mostyn, [1928] A.C. 57; 97 L.J.P. 8; 138 L.T. 403; 41 Digest 974, 8645.
- (6) Det Forenede Dampskibs Selskab v. Barry Ry. Co., [1919] L.L.R. 658.
- (7) Anchor Line v. Dundee Harbour Trustees, The Circassia, Ellerman Lines v. Dundee Harbour Trustees, The City of Naples, 1922 S.C. (H.L.) 79; 58 Sc. L.R. 440; [1922] S.L.T. 137; 41 Digest 970 t.
- F (8) Williams v. Swansea Harbour Trustees, (1863), 14 C.B.N.S. 845; 143 E.R. 675; 41 Digest 979, 8676.
- (9) Bede S.S. Co. v. River Wear Comrs., [1907] 1 K.B. 310; 76 L.J.K.B. 434; 96 L.T. 370; 41 Digest 979, 8677.
- (10) The Tactician, [1907] P. 244; 76 L.J.P. 80; 97 L.T. 621; 41 Digest 902, 7951.
- G (11) The Prinses Juliana, Esbjerg Owners v. Prinses Juliana Owners, [1936] 1 All E.R. 685; [1936] P. 139; 105 L.J.P. 58; 155 L.T. 261; Digest Supp.
- (12) Thom v. Hutchinson (J. & P.), Ltd., 1925 S.C. 386; 41 Digest 911 q.
- (13) The Adam W. Spies, (1901), 70 L.J.P. 25; 41 Digest 683, 5124.
- (14) Davies (Davis) v. Mann, (1842), 10 M. & W. 546; 12 L.J.Ex. 10; 7 J.P. 53; 152 E.R. 588; 2 Digest 232, 214.
- H (15) Davenport v. R., (1877), 3 App. Cas. 115; 47 L.J.P.C. 8; 37 L.T. 727; 31 Digest 472, 6195.
- (16) Admiralty Comrs. v. S.S. Volute, [1922] 1 A.C. 129; 91 L.J.P. 38; 126 L.T. 425; 41 Digest 780, 6417.

APPEAL by the Workington Harbour and Dock Board from an order of the Court of Appeal dated July 9, 1948, and reported [1948] 2 All E.R. 736, varying an order of WILLMER, J., dated May 23, 1947.

The owners of s.s. Towerfield claimed damages against the Workington Harbour and Dock Board in respect of (i) a breach of the board's duty imposed on them by statute and at common law to take reasonable precautions that the approaches to the port and harbour of Workington were safe, or to give warning that no such care had been exercised, and (ii) a breach of contract or warranty by the board that the condition of their harbour was in accordance with a statement inserted at their request on the appropriate Admiralty chart from 1933 onwards, as a result of which on Oct. 19, 1941, the Towerfield ran aground on the northern side of the channel to a dock in the harbour. The board counterclaimed in respect of damage to the harbour.

WILLMER, J., held that the compulsory pilot was negligent, and that his negligence was the sole cause of the stranding. The Court of Appeal, by a majority, held that the shipowners succeeded against the board both on their claim in contract and on their claim in tort, and that the counterclaim failed. The facts appear in the opinions of LORD PORTER and LORD NORMAND.

Pritt, K.C., R. F. Hayward, K.C., and Fletcher-Cooke for the appellants, the Workington Harbour and Dock Board.

Carpmael, K.C., Naisby, K.C., and Boyes for the respondents, the owners of the s.s. Towerfield.

The House took time for consideration.

June 30. The following opinions were delivered.

LORD PORTER: My Lords, this is an appeal from the Court of Appeal which by a majority reversed the decision of the learned judge, found in favour of the respondents on their claim and dismissed the appellants' counterclaim. BUCKNILL, L.J., who dissented, would also have allowed the appeal in part, but, so far as the claim is concerned, he followed the findings of fact and inferences of WILLMER, J., and differed only in a legal conclusion as to the counterclaim which had been put forward by the respondents. The facts set out below are in the main based on the narrative of the learned judge and BUCKNILL, L.J. In substance they are not in dispute.

The plaintiffs are the owners of s.s. Towerfield, and they claim against the defendants, the Workington Harbour and Dock Board, in respect of damage sustained by the Towerfield through grounding in the approaches to Workington Harbour on Oct. 19, 1941. The defendants deny liability, and counterclaim against the plaintiffs in respect of loss and damage sustained by them through the grounding of that vessel which, they allege, was solely due to the negligence of those in charge of her. Alternatively, they claim that in the absence of negligence on the part of those in charge of the Towerfield the loss and damage sustained by them constituted damage done by the Towerfield to the harbour, in respect of which they contend that, under the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847, s. 74, the plaintiffs, as owners, are answerable to them as undertakers. The defendants admit that in consequence of the grounding the Towerfield sustained serious damage, and the plaintiffs in their turn concede that the defendants suffered loss and damage such as would constitute damage done to the harbour within the meaning of the Act of 1847.

The port of Workington is formed by the estuary of the River Derwent, and comprises an entrance channel, a turning basin, the Prince of Wales' Dock, and a tidal dock and harbour. The entrance channel runs in a north-west to south-east direction, and parallel with it on the south side is a pier, known as the south pier, extending some distance into the sea. The turning basin, which lies at the inner end of the entrance channel, is protected on the north by an L-shaped jetty, known as the north jetty. Seaward of the outer end of the north jetty, and on the north side of the entrance channel there were at one time two perches, the outer of which was approximately opposite the end of the south pier and was known as the barrel perch. The inner perch, which is known as the bush perch, is about half-way between the barrel perch and the end of the north jetty. Vessels proceeding to the Prince of Wales' Dock, where the principal loading and discharging berths are situated, must come up the entrance channel between the perches on the north side and the south pier on the south side, and on reaching a certain point must make a turn under port wheel into the turning basin, whence access to the dock is obtained. It is common ground that, at the time of the casualty in this case, the barrel perch was not in place. It is agreed, however, that the bush perch was there, though its precise location has been the subject of some dispute. Two leading beacons, situated on a waste piece of land called the shipbuilding yard, which lies ahead of a vessel proceeding up the entrance channel, are provided, and these when kept in line are supposed to afford a guide for vessels entering the port.

In 1931, in consequence of representations made to them by the defendants, the Admiralty agreed to publish, and did publish as an inset on chart No. 1346, a plan of Workington Harbour. This inset was expressed to be based on a plan supplied by the defendants and showed the entrance channel as having a width of 250 feet. Furthermore the line of the leading marks, which is stated to be 131 degrees true is shown as following substantially the middle of this 250 feet channel—if anything it is a little to the southward of the centre line. It is stated on the inset that in the approach channel and turning basin a depth of $4\frac{1}{2}$ feet at chart datum is maintained by dredging. This depth corresponds to seven feet below L.W.O.S.T., and is, in fact, the same as that over the Prince of Wales' Dock sill. In fact, the information given on the Admiralty chart inset is inaccurate and misleading. The advertised dredged depth has seldom, if ever, been maintained throughout the whole of the 250 feet channel. There is a bar abreast of the seaward end of the south jetty where silt tends to accumulate and where depths substantially less than that advertised are habitually to be found. Also on the south side of the channel along the south pier, and also along the northern side opposite to it, banks tend to form and have the effect of constricting the width of the navigable channel to something substantially less than the advertised width of 250 feet. The formation of these banks depends largely on the weather, the prevailing south-west wind having a tendency to cause a littoral drift of slag and rubble which sweeps along the coast and round the end of the south pier, to be deposited along the side of the channel. Floods in the River Derwent also tend to cause a deposit of silt in the channel, particularly on the north side. In consequence of these difficulties it appears that the defendants have never really succeeded in maintaining their advertised depth throughout the length and breadth of the entrance channel. Moreover, it is not the fact that the line of the leading beacons leads along the centre of the 250 feet channel, or to the south of it. On the contrary, it leads substantially to the north of the centre line. The reason for this, it appears, is that in 1927, when the Prince of Wales' Dock was opened, the entrance channel was originally constructed to a width of 150 feet only. The leading beacons were then erected to guide an incoming vessel down the centre of this 150 feet channel. In 1931 it was decided to widen the channel, by dredging a further width of one hundred feet along the south side. The leading beacons were, however, left in their original positions, so that, instead of providing a lead along the centre of the channel as it now is, they lead approximately fifty feet to the northward thereof. The inset was inaccurate in this respect when it was first published and was inaccurate in 1941 at the time of the casualty to the Towerfield. In addition to the leading beacons, dredging marks are provided to show the northern and southern limits within which dredging is to take place. These marks consist of two pairs of posts erected in the shipbuilding yard, close to the leading marks. The northern pair of posts, known as the north dredging marks, when in line, indicate the northern limit of dredging. The southern pair of posts, called the south dredging marks, similarly indicate the southern limit.

The Towerfield was a steel screw steamship of 4,241 tons gross register, 373 feet long and 52.4 feet beam, and at the time of her stranding was laden with a cargo of manganese ore. Her draft was twenty-three feet forward and twenty-four feet aft. On the morning of Oct. 19, 1941, she anchored outside the port where she was boarded by Trinity House pilot Craig. In her case pilotage into the harbour was compulsory. The weather was clear with a strong south-westerly breeze, and the tides were spring and making. High water was at 11.8 a.m. with a predicted rise of tide producing a depth of thirty feet one inch on the dock sill at high water, but the actual depth on the sill was thirty-one feet six inches. After Craig had come out to the Towerfield, he received a message from the harbour master that the defendants' harbour tug was not available to help to navigate the ship into the dock, owing to boiler trouble. Apparently he was not informed earlier because the harbour master did not know that the tug was out of action until after the pilot had started to go out to the ship. The evidence of Craig was that he then said to the master of the Towerfield: "There is no tug boat. What do you think about it?" The captain replied: "What do you think about it?" Craig replied: "Well, it is quite safe, I think. I think we can manage all right." He also asked the master whether the ship was handy, as she would have to be handy for the engines if they went in without a tug, and the master replied that she was. Captain Rowden, the master in question, said in his evidence that after they had got a message that the tug had broken down the pilot asked him whether he thought it was safe to go in, and the master replied: "Do you think it is safe?" The pilot said: "Yes," and (to quote from the master's evidence) "as the port was perfectly straight according to the chart I said I would go in; I could not see any danger." Substantially, therefore, their accounts agree.

The master had never entered Workington Harbour before and said that he relied on the pilot's local knowledge when accepting his decision to bring the ship in. There was nothing on the inset of Workington Harbour printed on the Admiralty chart No. 1346 to indicate that there would be any difficulty in navigating the ship up the channel. Neither Craig nor any agent of the defendants warned the master of any silting up in the channel which substantially reduced its width.

The steamship Ashbury, also inward bound to the Prince of Wales' Dock and in charge of Trinity House pilot Stevenson, entered the channel about half an hour before the Towerfield and was docked in safety. The Ashbury was loaded, had a beam of fifty feet and had a draft of twenty-two feet, one inch, but she had about eighteen inches less water when she entered the port than the Towerfield, and, therefore, the amount of water under her bottom in the dredged channel would be about the same as the Towerfield. The latter vessel crossed the bar at the seaward end of the south pier at 11.10 a.m., two minutes after high water, steamed up the channel at a speed of about three knots, and after going about four hundred yards took the ground on the north side of the channel about five hundred yards from the entrance to the Prince of Wales' Dock. Efforts to get her off failed and on the ebb tide she broke her back. After she had settled aground she was angled seven degrees to port of the line of the channel and when she came to rest her starboard bilge amidships was forty-two feet to the northward of the line of the leading marks. This put the ship's port side about ninety-four feet from the line of the leading marks and four feet on the channel side of the line of the north dredging marks at the place of stranding. There is no evidence how much of the lateral width of the ship was aground when she stranded. The evidence, however, is that the bottom at the place of grounding was silt, and this indicates that she was not held up by merely grounding with her port bilge. Mr. Deane, a consulting engineer called in on behalf of the respondents, took soundings round the ship when aground, and said that if the ship had passed five feet further away from the perch she would still have touched the ground. The fact that the ship listed about fourteen degrees to starboard as the water fell indicates that she was aground on a sloping bank. The Ashbury passed safely by the bush perch with her port side about seventy feet from the line of the leading marks, from which it may be inferred that the Towerfield when she grounded had at least twenty-eight feet of her bottom with water under it, because her starboard bilge was only forty-two feet from the line of the leading marks. At the trial, there was an issue of fact whether the Towerfield took the ground whilst proceeding on a steady course up the channel or whether before she took the ground she had lost steerage way and was set to leeward by the south-west wind on her starboard beam. On this issue the learned judge decided that the ship was coming up substantially parallel with the line of the channel and roughly in the position, with reference to the line of the leading marks and the line of the north dredging marks, which was occupied by her midships section when she was aground. This finding agrees with the evidence from the ship that she quietly came to rest when she took the ground and was not set to leeward.

It follows, therefore, that the ship stranded because Craig was deliberately bringing her up the channel in a position in which, as it turned out, there was insufficient water for her, and the first question for your Lordships' decision is whether Craig in doing this showed a lack of such care and skill as may be reasonably expected of a licensed Trinity House pilot.

Craig did not suggest that he told the helmsman to keep the ship on a course with the leading marks in line, or that the helmsman disobeyed any of his orders. He chose to come up to the northward of those marks because, as he said, he wished to counteract the freshet, which was coming down the river and would press on the ship's port bow as soon as the tide started to ebb. He knew that there was a bank which obstructed a large area across the south side of the dredged channel, and thought that if the ship was steered on the line of the leading marks a freshet which impinged on the north bank and was thrown off from it would strike the ship on the port bow and tend to push her head to starboard with the result that she would be set over to starboard and be in danger of getting ashore on the south bank before she could recover herself under port wheel. He considered that the safest way to navigate her up the channel was to keep the leading marks slightly open to the northward. The bush perch is erected about five hundred feet on the seaward side of the end of the north jetty, and he gave as another reason for keeping to the northward of the line of the leading marks in its vicinity that the ship had to round the end of that jetty under port wheel in order to enter the Prince of Wales' Dock, that the more he got to the southward, the sharper his turn would be, and that he was anxious not to have then to make too sharp a turn. Moreover, if he had the flood tide under him he might have to reverse his engines before starting to round under port wheel and this again would tend to cant his head to starboard, especially if he had no tug to assist him in his turning manoeuvre. The result of all these difficulties of navigation was that Craig, when he got near the bush perch, ceased to keep the leading marks in line and passed as near to the bush perch as he thought he could safely go. As he himself said: "You had to hug the perch very close to get up in the basin." He, therefore, did not keep on a course with the leading marks in line, and relied on his local knowledge in judging at which places in the channel there would be sufficient depth of water for the Towerfield to navigate safely to the northward of that line. His estimate was that at high water on that tide if he was within forty feet of the bush perch the ship would be afloat, but he intended to pass the perch at a distance of fifty to sixty feet. When the ship took the ground and remained stationary, her port bilge amidships was forty feet from the base of the perch.

Why Craig thought it was safe to take the Towerfield forty feet from the bush perch is not clear and his explanations differed from time to time. In his report to the pilotage authorities six days after the stranding he stated that the vessel grounded on an unknown ridge with her port bilge, and that the grounding could have been avoided if the perch marking the north side of the channel had been placed more towards the edge of the channel. He admitted that, so far as he knew, the perch had always been in the same position. He said that his attention was always on the perch, which he used as a "lead in." He did not agree that the perch was merely a dredging mark. He also said that he was not aware that the perch was as far as forty feet from the edge of the dredged channel and thought it was a bit misleading to have it so far away from the edge. In his deposition before the receiver of wrecks he stated that the stranding might have been avoided if the marking perch was placed more towards the channel. At the trial he suggested that the proper thing to do would be "to take the perch off the foreshore and put it on the river side—remove it about twenty to twenty-five feet or so further towards the channel."

This evidence, if it is accurate, shows that he was ignorant of the actual position of the perch with reference to the edge of the dredged channel. The chart inset shows the bush perch fifty feet from the north limit of the dredged channel so that if the chart was relied on it would clearly be unsafe to take the ship within forty feet of it. Even on his own evidence, there does not appear to be any justification for Craig's idea that the perch was a navigational mark, indicating with any degree of precision where the edge of the dredged channel was or that he might expect to navigate the Towerfield forty, fifty or sixty feet to the southward of it. It is, indeed, reasonably plain that he placed no reliance on, and made no use of, the north dredging marks as an aid to his navigation. He says he could not see them because of factory smoke. His course was determined by the distance which he estimated his ship's port side was from the bush perch, and he was content to judge it by this factor.

A good deal of discussion took place in all the tribunals which heard the case as to whether the dredging marks should have been relied on at all inasmuch as it was said (i) that they were merely an indication to the dredger of the limits to which the channel was to be dredged; (ii) that, in any case, they did not mark, or, at any rate, could not be depended on as marking, a line up to which the channel indicated on the chart had been dredged; (iii) that they might indicate either the top of the bank lining the channel from which the ground would slope down to a less extended dredged channel, or the actual limit to which the full depth of the dredging extended. I should, I think, myself infer that they were meant to indicate the line up to which the full depth of the channel would extend and that a stranger to the port might be expected so to regard them, but the true conclusion is not of much importance as they played no part in the course actually chosen. It is undisputed that there was a considerable encroachment into the dredged channel alongside the south pier. Various estimates of its extent were made by those who gave evidence at the trial, but it is, I think, enough to record the statement of the harbour master that on Oct. 20 there was only a distance of eighty-one feet from the line of the leading marks to the bank which had formed in the southern half of the channel.

I am content, therefore, to accept the view that Craig knew that there was a bank of considerable dimensions on the south shore which justified him in keeping towards the north side of the channel, but that does not mean that he should be excused for taking his ship so far to the northward as he did. The facts established in reference to the north shore were that a bank had been in existence there from the month of February, that at one time it had extended as much as fifty feet into the channel opposite the bush perch, but that it had been dredged and materially reduced at any rate up to Oct. 8, but, as was corroborated by the stranding of the Towerfield, continued to exist, was seen by one of the other two pilots and by the harbour master, and might have been seen by Craig on Oct. 6 or 7 from the shipyard on the south shore, and on Oct. 17 from the north shore, though it then was two feet under water and was not visible from either of the other two points. Craig disputed its visual existence on Oct. 6 and 7, had not visited the north shore on Oct. 17, and said generally that it was formed of silt which a succeeding freshet washed away, but he had made no inspection to see whether it was still there or not.

A The necessary conclusion from these findings is that Craig thought that the line of dredging marks was less than forty feet from the bush perch, knew there was from time to time an encroachment on the north side of the channel opposite that perch, trusted to its being washed away by the freshet, but took no steps to make a close inspection of its constitution or extent from its immediate neighbourhood either on Oct. 6 or 7 or on Oct. 17, and in any case trusted himself to be able to judge his distance from the bush perch by eye alone though an estimate of distance from a given point is notoriously difficult more particularly in the case of a moving ship. The fact is that usage had made him overconfident. He had, no doubt, piloted smaller ships up in safety and failed to take sufficient precautions when dealing with a ship of the size of the Towerfield.

B The question, then, is: Was his action negligent or a mere error of judgment? It may be said in his favour that he knew and feared the southern encroachment, that the freshet impinged on and was turned southwards by the north bank, so that it tended to push to the southward the bow of a ship proceeding up the channel, that some hugging of the northern shore was, therefore, justified and that for some days there had been a considerable freshet which might tend to diminish the northern encroachment, that he was proceeding up the river when the ebb tide was beginning and that the supplement to the WEST COAST OF ENGLAND PILOT contained the warning that with an ebb tide care is necessary to prevent the freshet catching a vessel on the port bow if the turn into the turning basin is not made early. Nevertheless, our assessors says that a safe course, and, indeed, the only safe course, would have been to follow the line of the leading marks. The assessors in the Court of Appeal, on the other hand, thought that no course was absolutely safe, but that to proceed a little to the north of that line was the best course which he could pursue. Ultimately, the matter is one for your Lordships' decision, and I should myself be content to accept the view that there was no substantial danger in proceeding up the channel in the conditions obtaining provided a course on, or somewhat, but not too far, north, of the leading marks was followed. But I do not agree with the contention that so great a divergence as, in fact, was adopted was permissible, and, in particular, that so close an approach to the north bank was justified, inasmuch as at least the possible, and, indeed, the probable, inference from observed or observable fact was that an encroachment existed, and had existed there for a considerable time. Still less excusable, in my opinion, was the trust which the pilot placed in his power to judge by the eye alone the distance of the bush perch from the line of his approach up the channel.

E In this last view, your Lordships have the advantage of confirming your impression from an answer given to a question put to our assessors. When asked:

G "Was it good seamanship for the pilot to judge his distance from the edge of the dredged channel by reference solely to the bush perch (a) apart from the conditions obtaining, (b) in the conditions obtaining, i.e., a strong south-west wind and with freshet,"

H they answered "No!" to both these questions. With these answers I myself agree. So far, therefore, as the pilot is concerned, I suggest to your Lordships that the inset chart, and for that matter the observations and warnings to be found in the WEST COAST OF ENGLAND PILOT, are irrelevant in his case. Craig neither made use of nor placed any reliance on them. He was guided solely by his own experience and prepared even to take a risk. One of his answers in cross-examination may be quoted as exemplifying his willingness to do so. He was asked, "Although you could not see the bank on the morning of Oct. 17, you knew there was a bank there?" and he replied, "Well, I did not think there was anything like that to break the ship up."

The learned judge found that he knew there was a shoal at the north bank opposite the bush perch, and further that, had he availed himself of the opportunity of observing that part of the channel at low water on Oct. 6 and 7, he could not have failed to see that it was unsafe for the navigation of a ship of the Towerfield's size, and I agree with BUCKNILL, L.J., that he had evidence on which he could so find. It is not of course suggested that Craig knew that the place over which he was navigating was too shallow; but he did know of an encroachment in that neighbourhood and did not take due care to avoid it. A Having regard to the established facts, the argument presented on behalf of the respondents that the Towerfield should have been able to be navigated anywhere in the dredged channel has little relevance. The pilot, it is true, meant to shape his course within it, but he meant to do so by estimating his distance from the bush perch and not by the dredging marks, and, even if he had been guided by the latter, he ought not to have taken a line so close to them B or failed to allow for the possibility of silting.

I have dealt with this portion of the case at some length because in spite of one's natural sympathy with the pilot I find myself in disagreement with the findings of the majority of the Court of Appeal, and of the same opinion as BUCKNILL, L.J., and WILLMER, J. The question of the negligence of the harbour authorities presents less difficulty. All four judges who have considered C the matter are in agreement on this point.

No doubt, the appellants' task of keeping the approach dredged to the depth shown on the inset was rendered less easy of accomplishment by war-time conditions, and if their only fault had consisted in a failure to do so, I do not think I should find them to blame. It is the failure to warn rather than the failure or inability to act to which exception can be taken. It was suggested D on their behalf that a sufficient indication of the dangers to be met with were to be found in the warning contained in the supplement to the WEST COAST OF ENGLAND PILOT. Originally that publication had contained the statement that depths of $4\frac{1}{2}$ ft. are maintained in the basin and in the channel in the approach to it, but this assurance is qualified in the supplement when it says: "less depth will be found in places; owing to the difficulty of dredging in the E outer bar, depths of about one foot are common there." This phraseology, however, is, to my mind, totally inadequate to convey the information that there were banks on each side of the channel rising considerably above that height and extending some way into the channel itself. In the circumstances, in my view, a much clearer statement of the condition of the approach should have been given. But it is said that the harbour authority were not responsible F for inviting the Towerfield to enter the port of Workington. In war-time vessels were directed by the Ministry of Transport through its officials, and by them might be directed or diverted to any port. The only duty of the port authorities, therefore, was to keep the official in charge of their district informed of the position of their port, of its capacities and of any dangers to be avoided.

My Lords, I doubt whether the appellants fulfilled their duty towards entering G ships by passing on such information as they had, or ought to have had, to the Ministry. But, even if they were under no direct obligation to the ship herself, I am of opinion that they did not comply even with the lesser duty which they accept. The Ministry's official in charge of the port of Workington was a Mr. Motley. His headquarters were, I think, in London, but he was in constant communication, mostly by telephone, with the various ports to which his H responsibility extended. In the case of Workington, he states that he was well posted, and that he was pretty definite that, if there was any encroachment, Mr. Monkhouse, the harbour-master, would have stated it, but it appeared in cross-examination that the information which he received was in the form of figures showing, as he says, the latest height of silt in the fairway and the greatest height of silt where the vessel would have to navigate to enter the port. Mr. Motley did not speak of any information which he received except in this general way. He did not particularise the facts transmitted to him, and I should not myself regard his evidence as meaning more than that he was told the depth of water which might be expected over the bar and in the channel for a vessel keeping substantially on the line of the leading marks, but as making no reference to the serious encroachments which ate into both the north and south sides of the dredged channel. It was on this information that he directed the Towerfield to Workington and he may well have been justified in doing so, being ignorant of any peculiar difficulty in entering the port, and trusting the harbour authority to ensure that the master was fully informed of the course he would have to follow and the dangers to be avoided. However that may be, any information supplied to him did not, in my opinion, absolve the appellants from putting the condition of the channel fully before the master of a vessel entering the port so that he might consider the expediency of entering, and the dangers which might necessitate his intervention with the navigation of the ship by the compulsory pilot. To determine what he would have done had he been fully informed is a speculative inquiry when the event and its consequences are already known, and the inference to be drawn as to his conduct would not, in my view, have been resolved by asking him to give his reactions at the time of the trial of the case. Action on his part would only have been justified in a moment of crisis, nevertheless he might have refused to go in or have refused to allow the vessel to be navigated so far to the north of the channel, but I do not think it can be said that the accident would not have happened but for his ignorance. He was not to blame, but the pilot was and the pilot's fault was at least a cause of the disaster.

The appellants' negligence, however, was not confined to a failure to warn the respondents of facts within their knowledge. They also failed to use due diligence to ascertain the facts with which they should have been acquainted. The soundings, as the learned judge has found, were taken in a hasty and slipshod manner, but even so they showed the accretions on the north and south. Moreover, no soundings had been taken since Sept. 22, and no dredgings had been done on the north side after Oct. 9. On these facts, the learned judge, as BUCKNILL, L.J., points out, found the appellants to blame for failing to maintain the width and depth of the channel advertised (thereby rendering the published information misleading), in failing to ascertain by proper and regular soundings what obstructions existed in the channel and exactly where they were, and in failing adequately to warn the users of the port of dangers which the harbour authority knew or ought to have known. To these faults the lord justice adds the failure to warn the owners of the ship or their agents (including the pilot Craig) of the lack of sounding after Sept. 22, and of dredging after Oct. 9. In answer to these charges, the appellants rely on the contention that the pilot was intimately acquainted with the port and that he knew, or at any rate they were entitled to assume that he knew, its exact condition. I do not think that such an assumption was justified. It was not true in fact, and, even if he owed a duty to acquaint himself with its shortcomings, they, I think, owed a duty to warn any incoming ship whether that duty was imposed by contract or by invitation. It may well be that it is the duty of a pilot to acquaint himself with all the conditions of a port which are reasonably within his acquirement. In the present case, I doubt whether he was able himself to ascertain all the facts, but, even if he was and did not do so, I should hold the harbour authority in fault. They knew that, on the information which they had supplied, a ship of the Towerfield's draft might be directed to Workington by Mr. Motley. They had received notice that she had been so directed, and knew that by the regulations of the port she must be navigated by a compulsory pilot. In these circumstances, in my view, it was their duty to the ship, even if they owed none to the pilot or to Mr. Motley, to see that the pilot which she was compelled to take and the official whose duty it was to direct her to a particular port had full information of the conditions with which she would meet. For these reasons, which but repeat those which influenced the minds of the judge of first instance and the Court of Appeal, I should hold that the harbour authority were guilty of negligence.

The learned judge, however, though he found both parties negligent, nevertheless was of opinion that the disaster was brought about by the fault of the pilot alone and not by that of the harbour authorities. If the appellants had taken steps to ensure that Craig was supplied with the full information at their disposal and had not assumed that he would find out the facts for himself this result might follow, but they did not do so. Their failure to warn him was always a factor contributing to the loss of the ship and continued to exert its influence until she went ashore. As in the case of The Eurymedon (1), and that of The Boy Andrew (Owners), Ltd. v. St. Rognvald (Owners), Ltd. (2), it had not ceased to play its part before the final dénouement. It is no answer to say that the pilot could have inquired and, therefore, had means of ascertaining what were the actual conditions of the channel. If the only duty owed by the harbour authorities was to the pilot, this fact might afford them some excuse, but, in my opinion, it was for them vis-à-vis the ship to ensure that the compulsory pilot who must be employed was furnished with the requisite information to enable him to bring her in safely. If he had been informed of the northern encroachment he would almost certainly have taken a safer course, and the Towerfield, like the Ashbury, have reached the dock in due course. It follows that, in my view, both the pilot and the appellants were negligent. The owners and their master, however, were not implicated, and the question then arises whether they are infected with the wrongdoing of Craig. Here, again, all the members of both courts who have heard the case are in agreement.

Under the rule of the common law as it stood in October, 1941, the owners and the harbour authority would alike have been precluded from recovering if the pilot is to be regarded as the servant or agent of the former. On the other hand, being a compulsory pilot he would not have been so regarded before Jan. 1, 1918. Up to that date, under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 633, a shipowner was expressly excused from being affected by the fault of a compulsory pilot, but by the Pilotage Act, 1913, s. 15, which came into force on Jan. 1, 1918, it was enacted that:

“(1) Notwithstanding anything in any public or local Act, the owner or master of a vessel navigating under circumstances in which pilotage is compulsory shall be answerable for any loss or damage caused by the vessel or by any fault of the navigation of the vessel in the same manner as he would if pilotage were not compulsory.”

On this language it was urged on behalf of the owners that the only effect of the change in the law was that they would be liable for any loss or damage to other persons which was caused by the negligent navigation of their ship in a case where negligence was to be imputed to them, but that, on the other hand, the provisions of the section did not prevent them from recovering in respect of any damage from which they themselves had suffered. They were to be liable to the others because they were answerable to them, but, it was contended, to say that an owner was “answerable” presupposed a claim on him, and in no way prejudiced a claim by him. A claim on him he could not resist, but, if there was a claim by him, his remedy was not affected. The problem has been dealt with by BUCKNILL, L.J., in a careful and exact consideration of the Act itself and of its predecessors, from which he comes to the conclusion that both parties are affected by the terms of the Act. SCOTT, L.J., with whom ASQUITH, L.J., agreed, reached the same conclusion from his knowledge of the object which the Act was intended to bring about coupled with the consideration that, inasmuch as, in his view, its terms were ambiguous, the court was entitled to resolve that ambiguity by referring to the end aimed at.

My Lords, I arrive at the same result, but by a somewhat different method of approach, and on what I believe to be the true construction of the Act itself. The section says that the owner or master shall be answerable for any loss or damage caused by the vessel or by any fault of the navigation of the vessel. In the present case, the damage to the Towerfield was, undoubtedly, caused by faulty navigation, but when the Act says that the owner shall be answerable for that faulty navigation, it has to be determined whether "answerable" means more than that the damage, whether done to or done by his ship, is his responsibility, or is confined to damage done by the ship. Either view, no doubt, is theoretically possible, but I do not think that, read in its context, the use of the word "answerable" would naturally convey the suggestion that, though the shipowner is liable for any damage done by the pilot's fault, yet he can recover for his own damage in full. "Answerable", as I think, simply means "responsible," and a shipowner, who through a compulsory pilot is responsible for faulty navigation, is responsible for damage to his own ship as well as for injury to the property of another. It follows that neither pays for the damage which has been done to the other, nor can recover his own damage from the other who is implicated.

In so far as the respondents' claim is said to fail by reason of a tortious act on the part of the pilot of the ship, the majority of the Court of Appeal accept this construction of the statute, but, in their opinion, the liability imposed on the shipowner for the negligence of a compulsory pilot has no application to an action in contract, and in this case they have held that, inasmuch as the inset chart was issued by the Admiralty at their instigation, the appellants offered to receive any ship entering or intending to enter the port of Workington on the terms that the channel was safely dredged to the extent indicated on the chart, and that that offer was accepted by the Towerfield by entering the port.

My Lords, for the purpose of this decision, and without staying to consider its accuracy, I am prepared to accept the suggestion that such a contract was so formed, but I do not find myself able to agree with the contention that the withdrawal of the protection given to ships employing a compulsory pilot affects only cases where a claim in tort is made. Taking the view which I do that on the true construction of the Act a shipowner is, after the beginning of 1918, to be responsible for the acts of a compulsory pilot, I do not find myself influenced by a consideration of the history of the negotiations leading to a change in the law. The provisions of the Act, as I think, themselves plainly attribute to shipowners liability for the fault of a compulsory pilot in all cases, and I can, therefore, see no reason for differentiating between contract and tort, more particularly as this appears to have been accepted as the correct view from the time when the Act came into force until the present day.

There remains, however, to be determined the contention put forward by the appellants that, though their negligence may be one of the causes of the disaster, yet they can recover by reason of the terms of the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847, s. 74. Its material words run as follows:

"The owner of every vessel . . . shall be answerable to the undertakers for any damage done by such vessel . . . or by any person employed about the same, to the harbour, dock, or pier . . . and the master or person having the charge of such vessel . . . through whose wilful act or negligence any such damage is done shall also be liable to make good the same . . . Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend to impose any liability for any such damage upon the owner of any vessel, where such vessel shall at the time when such damage is caused be in charge of a duly licensed pilot whom such owner or master is bound by law to employ and put his vessel in charge of."

The section has, my Lords, been considered at least four times and has twice been fully discussed. Had I been left without guidance, I should myself have thought that one of two broad constructions might have been adopted. (i) It might have been held that the shipowner was liable as an insurer whenever the damage inflicted on the harbour works was done by his vessel. At the time when the section was enacted and until the Pilotage Act, 1913, came into force, the harshness of such a result was mitigated by the fact that the owner was exempted from liability when the vessel was in charge of a compulsory pilot, but the fact that that limitation on his liability has now been withdrawn cannot affect the construction to be placed on it. (ii) It might have been decided that the Act was procedural and that liability was only imposed in case the navigation of the vessel was in fault. In the first reported case Dennis v. Tovell (3), a Divisional Court, in deciding a Case stated by justices, entertained no doubt that liability existed though the damage was the result of inevitable accident without any fault of those in charge. In the River Wear Comrs. v. Adamson (4), however, where the matter was fully discussed, LORD GORDON took the first view and LORD CAIRNS, L.C., the second. The other noble lords agreed with LORD CAIRNS in holding the shipowner not liable, but with considerable doubt and in the case of the majority, as I think, because that liability only attached where the ship was still in charge of and controlled by some person. This, at any rate, seems to have been the reasoning on which the Court of Appeal acted, and your Lordships' House approved their judgment.

The next case to reach your Lordships' House was Great Western Ry. Co. v. The Mostyn (Owners), The Mostyn (5), but before that case was considered ROCHE, J., in Det Forenede Dampskibs Selskab v. Barry Ry. Co. (6) followed the decision in the River Wear case (4) in holding a shipowner not absolutely liable, but excused in a case where the damage to the harbour works was, in part at least, caused by the fault of the harbour authority. As I read the decision in The Mostyn (5), however, the majority of their Lordships took the view that the shipowner was responsible for damage done to harbour works whether he was in fault or not, save in a case similar to that decided in the River Wear judgment (4). Accordingly, where the ship had been abandoned and was therefore out of the control of its owners, they agreed that no liability attached under the section. But save for that concession they decided in terms, as I think, that the only exception from liability was that afforded to an abandoned ship.

My Lords, until The Mostyn (5) decided the true effect of the wording of the section, a profound difference of view as to its construction was to be found among those who practised in that branch of the law which is devoted to shipping matters, but that dispute has now been decided on broad lines, and like VISCOUNT DUNEDIN, who, though he was of the other opinion, expressed his satisfaction that a clear rule for future cases had been laid down, I cannot think that fine distinctions should be introduced which would limit the generality of the decision which has been reached. I would only add that, like those of your Lordships who are of the same opinion, I would limit the damages to the damage directly caused to the harbour in which, as the respondents concede, is to be included the restoration of the channel to the condition in which it was before the stranding of the Towerfield, but I would not embrace among them anything for any loss of revenue to which the appellants have been put thereby. Save to this extent, I think the claim and counterclaim fail. I would, accordingly, allow the appeal, and dismiss both claim and counterclaim except in so far as direct damage as indicated above has been caused by the Towerfield to the appellants' harbour. Each party should I think pay his own costs throughout.

LORD NORMAND: My Lords, the appellants are a statutory body owning Workington harbour to which they invite shipowners to send their ships for loading and unloading on condition of paying harbour rates and dues. The invitees are entitled to assume that the appellants will exercise reasonable care to prevent the peril of damage to ships resorting to the harbour from any unexpected danger of which the appellants knew or ought to have known. The duty of invitees and their servants or agents is to navigate the ship with care and skill in conformity with the standard of good seamanship: Anchor Line v. Dundee Harbour Trustees, The Circassia (7) (1922. S.C. (H.L.) 83).

A Whether there was a contract between the appellants and the respondents that the Towerfield should discharge in the appellants' dock is uncertain. The evidence for it is imprecise and vague, and it is difficult to discover how or by what agency privity of contract was established and impossible to discover what were the terms of the contract, if any, and whether it included any warranty as to the depth and width of the channel, by which vessels entering the harbour approached the dock. Mr. Motley, an official of the Ministry of War Transport, and Mr. Highton, the managing trustee of the appellants' board, gave evidence about the arrangements between the board and the Ministry, the charterers of the Towerfield. Mr. Motley said that he received daily from the manager of the board, Mr. Monkhouse, a berthing statement showing the vessels in the port, the dates of berthing and the dates when they expected to finish, with a note giving the amount of silt in the fairway of the channel. He appears to be referring to the depth of water at the bar and not to lateral encroachments further up channel which narrowed it without closing it. With that information before him, he recommended to the shipping diversion room that the port could accommodate a particular vessel. Mr. Highton said that if the channel was obstructed, the appellants advised the Ministry of War Transport and the Foreign Ore Control Department and said: "We have this obstruction or this lack of depth; we may not get it away for ten days, fifteen days or three weeks," and that was their guide to routing vessels to Workington. He undertook to produce evidence in writing that warning had been given of encroachment at the side of the channel, but nothing was produced. There is nothing material in the statement of Mr. Monkhouse. It is not proved that any communication was made to the owners of the Towerfield, except a direction from the Ministry to her master to proceed to Workington, and there is no evidence that any warranty about the condition of the channel was given by E the appellants to the owners or to any servant or agent of the owners.

The respondents attempted to build up a special contract with a warranty of depth on the inset plan on the Admiralty chart and the WEST COAST OF ENGLAND PILOT, 1933, and 1941 supplement, which were on board the Towerfield and which the master had studied before he decided to enter the channel. A note on the inset plan stated that F

"in the approach channel and turning basin, within the pecked lines, a depth of $4\frac{1}{2}$ ft. at chart datum is maintained by dredging (1933)."

A depth of $4\frac{1}{2}$ ft. at chart datum corresponds to seven feet below low water of spring tides and is the depth of the sill of the dock for which the Towerfield was destined. If that depth had been maintained there would have been G thirty-one feet, six inches, of water everywhere in the channel when the Towerfield entered it at high water on the morning of Oct. 19, 1941, and, with her draft of twenty-four feet aft, she would have had more than seven feet of water under her. The WEST COAST OF ENGLAND PILOT, 1933, and 1941 supplement, modified the note on the inset plan. It contained a note that a depth of $4\frac{1}{2}$ ft. was

H "maintained as far as possible by dredging in the turning basin and the channel in the approach to it; but less depth would be found in places owing to the difficulty of dredging in the outer bar; depths of about one foot are common there."

The information about the depth in the channel in these publications had been furnished by the appellants for the purpose of publication in them.

The uncertain effects of wind, weather, tide and unpredictable casualties are adverse to the idea that Admiralty charts are intended to constitute a standing offer carrying a warranty that ships entering the charted ports will find the same conditions as those indicated by the symbols or printed directions on the chart. The charts are subject to modifications published in notices to mariners and in official publications, such as the WEST COAST OF ENGLAND PILOT, and in later prints or editions of the charts themselves, but it is not possible for publication to keep abreast of events, nor for all ships to have on arrival from a foreign port the latest publications. A depth which is maintained by dredging must vary from time to time, because dredging may be interrupted by conditions not within the harbour authority's control. The intention and purpose of notices like the notice of depth on the inset plan is to invite vessels of suitable draft to load or discharge in the harbour. There is a representation that the harbour authority is endeavouring, and will endeavour, to maintain the indicated depth by dredging, and it is no more than a representation without contractual intention or effect. In Williams v. Swansea Harbour Trustees (8) and Bede S.S. Co. v. River Wear Comrs. (9) advertisements of the depth of water at a dock sill had been published by the harbour authorities themselves and on their own responsibility. It was held that there was an implied warranty that there was a safe ingress and egress for vessels loaded up to the standard indicated by the advertised depth of the water on the dock sill. Commercial advertisements published by a harbour authority are not in pari casu with official charts and sailing directions, and the present case is not ruled by the cited decisions. I think that there was no contract, but that the appellants, knowing that the masters of ships would be led to expect, from their study of the chart and sailing directions, to find a fairway of about the width and depth indicated, were bound to give warning of dangerous obstructions of which they were or ought to have been aware. A

The main question is, therefore, whether the parties performed the duties incumbent on them as invitor and invitee respectively. WILLMER, J., held that the respondents had proved a want of reasonable care in three respects: failure to maintain the width and depth of the channel, failure to ascertain by properly carried out and regular soundings what obstructions existed in the channel and exactly where, and failure adequately to warn users of the port of the dangers of which, as harbour authority, they knew or ought to have known. To these three findings of negligence and failure of duty, BUCKNILL, L.J., added a fourth, that the appellants failed in their duty to warn the owners of the ship or their agents (including the pilot Craig) that they had taken no proper steps by sounding since Sept. 22 to ascertain what the state of the channel was and what obstructions, if any, were in it and that the dredgers had not been at work on the north side of the channel since Oct. 9, 1941. E

The facts relevant to these findings are not disputable. On Oct. 19, 1941, on the south side of the channel in the neighbourhood of the bush perch, a shoal extended about eighty feet into the channel and opposite it on the north side the shoal on which the Towerfield came to grief extended about twenty feet into the channel which was thus reduced to a width of about 155 ft. of navigable water. These shoals had long given trouble to the appellants, who had endeavoured to reduce them by dredging. On the south side, south-west winds cause a drift of slag and rubble which sweeps along the coast and round the end of the south pier and is deposited along the southern edge of the channel. On the north side, floods in the river Derwent cause a deposit of silt along the edge of the channel. Since February, 1941, the appellants had known that the shoal on the north side was a serious encroachment, and had from time to time reduced it both in extent and height by dredging. But dredging was, for reasons for which the appellants were not responsible, not regularly carried out, and the dredger was not employed on this shoal between Oct. 9 and Oct. 19. The obligation to remove obstructions is an alternative obligation; the harbour authority must either remove the obstructions or they must take reasonable G care to warn the owners of vessels which they invite to the port of any obstructions which are, or ought to be, known to themselves and which may create an unexpected danger. Soundings were necessary for the purpose of directing the dredgers, and for the purpose of discharging the duty of warning it was necessary that the soundings should be carefully taken so as to determine the height and extent of the obstructions. But the soundings were hurriedly and negligently taken. The means at the disposal of the appellants were poles about fifteen or twenty feet long, and they could only be used at low spring tides. Yet on frequent occasions spring tides were allowed to pass without taking soundings. The last soundings before the stranding of the Towerfield were taken on Sept. 22, 6 and 7 was neglected. No sufficient care was taken to fix the position of the soundings or to define the limits of the encroaching shoals. But, such as they were, the soundings showed that in wet weather, when the river was in flood, a considerable increase in the height and area of the shoal on the north side might take place unless dredging was regularly kept up.

H

The harbour master knew about an hour and a half before she entered that the Towerfield's draft was not less than twenty-four feet. He also knew that no tug would be available to assist in her navigation. Yet he made no attempt to warn her master of the gross obstructions in the fairway. The explanation offered is that he assumed that the pilot knew all that needed to be known about them, and that the pilot would inform the master. He was not entitled to make these assumptions, and the appellants must be held to have failed to perform the duty owed to the Towerfield's owners.

The pilot also is a user of the harbour, and the appellants were under a duty to warn him as well as the master of the Towerfield against any unexpected dangers affecting the navigation of the channel. But the pilot was not a stranger to the port and it was his business to make himself familiar with the conditions affecting safe navigation within it. The appellants were not bound to warn him of dangers of which any competent pilot ought to have known, for the measure of the duty to warn of unexpected dangers must depend on the qualifications and presumable knowledge of the person to whom the duty is owed. But there is one respect in which I think it is proved that the appellants failed in their duty to the pilot. It is not enough that a pilot should know of the existence of obstructing banks. He should know as accurately as is reasonably possible the limits of the navigable water in the channel. That knowledge was not available to him because the appellants, as has been shown, neglected their duty. The neglect can be brought to a precise date, for the learned judge has held that there was no reason why soundings were not taken on Oct. 6 and 7. I agree with the finding, and my conclusion is that there was here a breach of the duty owed to the pilot in failing to make available to him records of reasonably accurate soundings taken at the latest practicable date.

Next, did the pilot perform his duty of navigating the Towerfield with care and skill as a good seaman would? He was not misled by the inset plan on the Admiralty chart, and he relied on his own knowledge of the harbour and the channel and on his experience and skill. He entered the channel on the north side of the line of the leading marks at slack water of high tide. His speed was $2\frac{1}{2}$ to 3 knots. His intention was to pass the bush perch at a judged distance of fifty-five or sixty feet from the port side of the ship, and he says that he believed he could pass with safety at a distance of forty feet from the perch. He meant to turn to port at a short distance up channel from the perch. He says that he had often come up in this way, hugging the perch. The reason which he gives is that if the vessel were further to the southward the freshet from the river would tend to force her bow to starboard and to carry her towards the shoal to the south. When the Towerfield took the ground her port bilge keel was forty feet from the perch and was only four feet south of the line of the dredging marks, which approximately indicates the northern limit of the channel. Craig professed less knowledge of the conditions of this small harbour than I think he must have had, but at least he knew that there was a shoal on the north side of the channel at the perch, and in one of his answers in cross-examination he said, "Well I did not think there was anything like that to break the ship up." The nautical assessors have advised us that it was not good seamanship for the pilot to trust to his ability to judge his distance from the edge of the channel solely by reference to the bush perch, and to take the ship as close as forty feet from it, if he knew of the tendency for a bank to form on the north shore. I agree with this advice. The fact that the pilot committed an error of thirty per cent. in judging his distance from the perch demonstrates how imprudent it was to trust to his judgment of distance from it. I think it is probable that he failed to allow for the effect on the ship of a strong south-west wind. The excuse given by him for keeping so close to the northern edge of the channel—that the freshet might have forced the ship to southward—raises a question of seamanship, and we are advised that he should have kept to the line of the leading marks. The experience of the pilot who safely brought in the Ashbury on a line only twenty feet north of the leading line may not altogether dispose of Craig's alleged fear of the effect of the freshet, because the tide was still making when the Ashbury came in, and the force of the freshet is greater at slack water. But a third pilot, Tennent, testified that he usually came in slightly to the south of the leading line until he was as far up as the bush perch and that, so long as the ship was on a course 130° true, which is the bearing of the leading line, she would have the freshet ahead till she reached the bush perch, and when she passed the bush perch she would have the freshet on her port bow. Craig also attempted to justify his navigation by saying that the harbour master had instructed the pilots to keep to the north, but this part of his evidence was not accepted by the learned judge. He further said that the freshets tended to clear away the north shoal. But if this had sometimes occurred in certain conditions of tide and weather, it is proved that in the period from February to October, 1941, the bank persisted and tended to increase with the freshets. The conclusion to which I have come is that the pilot was at fault, that he ought to have kept to the line of leading marks and that the excuses put forward by him for the course which he took are displaced by the evidence. A B C D E

WILLMER, J., held that the fault and negligence of the appellants did not contribute to the casualty because a careful and skilful pilot with Craig's knowledge of the harbour and channel could have avoided the accident. Whether a particular fault or negligence has contributed to the causation of an event is a question of fact, and the answer is in most cases an inference drawn from all the relevant circumstances. The appellants were in breach of a duty which they owed to the shipowners and to the master of the ship as representing them. It was a duty to warn against perils not to be expected by strangers to the port. It is necessary to bear in mind that before the ship entered the area of compulsory pilotage and before the navigation was handed over to the compulsory pilot a question arose whether it was prudent to enter the channel at all, and that even after the compulsory pilotage area was entered the ship's master was not deprived of all responsibility and of all power to act to prevent damage to his ship. The master is not merely entitled, but is bound, to point out to the compulsory pilot that he may be mistaken in an opinion he has formed: The Tactician (10). He is also entitled, in order to avoid immediate peril to take the navigation out of the hands of the pilot, but, if he does so, he must be prepared to shew justification: The Prinses Juliana, Esbjerg Owners v. Prinses Juliana Owners (11). Unfortunately, these considerations were not dealt with in the judgment of WILLMER, J., when he was assessing the part played by the appellants' negligence in bringing about the stranding. F G H on the channel, the question whether to enter the port would have been much more difficult for him than it seemed on the evidence before him on the morning of Oct. 19. It was said that he ought to have been asked what he would have done if he had been told of the existence and extent of the obstructing shoals. Such a question, though not, in my opinion, incompetent, would have been of little value to the court. Being a hypothetical question it would not have elicited a fact as imprinted on his memory, but an expression of opinion coloured by the event which has led to this litigation. The court must proceed on the probabilities; and if the case had been free from the complications brought about by war, the question what the master would have done would have admitted of an easy solution. The advice which we have received from our assessors is that a skilled master would not have agreed as a good seaman to bring the ship up at all if he had been told of the existence of a bank on the south shore extending about eighty feet into the channel, and the existence of a bank on the north shore extending about twenty feet into the channel in the position shown on the plan. I agree with that advice, and I consider that the master of the Towerfield is entitled to be treated as a skilled master and a good seaman. But the issue is complicated by circumstances not within the realm of seamanship. The master had to weigh the risk of damage to his ship and cargo by mine or torpedo if he stayed outside and he had to bear in mind that delivery of the cargo was urgent and important for the production of munitions. It is not easy to estimate what the master would probably have done. The harbour master, who had fuller knowledge of all the circumstances and whose statement seems honestly made, expressed the opinion that in the conditions of tide and weather he should not have attempted to enter without a tug. It is legitimate to take account of that evidence, and of the evidence that there would have been no delay in unloading the Towerfield's cargo if she had entered port the next day. The harbour master naturally emphasised the importance of the tide and weather conditions and the absence of a tug, but these in themselves could not, I think, have presented great difficulty to the passage of the ship through an unobstructed deep channel 250 feet wide. It was the existence of the obstructions in combination with the conditions of weather and tide and with the absence of a tug that made the navigation of the channel hazardous. On the whole it is fair to conclude that a prudent master would have refused to go in on the morning of Oct. 19. But I am convinced that, if he had consented to go in knowing the position and extent of the obstructions, he would not have allowed his ship to be steered along the northern edge of the channel and close to the bush perch, and the Towerfield would not have been stranded. I am, therefore, of opinion that the appellants' breach of the duty of reasonable care which they owed to the owners and the master of the Towerfield contributed to the stranding.

If the master had known about the shoals near the perch which encroached

The pilot's negligence also contributed. Even with the knowledge which he had, his navigation was negligent and it brought the Towerfield to disaster on a bank, the existence of which was known to him, though he did not know how far it encroached into the channel. It is not necessary to decide whether the pilot was negligent in failing to take more accurate observations of this bank at low water, particularly on Oct. 6 or 7. If the appellants had done their duty on these dates, precise information would have been available to him about the then limits of the bank and observations by him would have been unnecessary. The truth is that with the knowledge which he had the pilot's navigation of the ship was negligent, but with the knowledge which ought to have been available to him if the appellants had done their duty, no man in his senses would have brought the ship so close to the bush perch. The appellants' default of duty towards the owners of the Towerfield and their default of duty towards the pilot and the pilot's negligence in navigation are so closely interwoven that it is not possible to single out one of them as the real cause of the casualty, and all must be held to have contributed.

The respondents have posed a question on the construction of the Pilotage Act, 1913, s. 15, which has not hitherto been decided. The section enacts :

"(1) Notwithstanding anything in any public or local Act, the owner or master of a vessel navigating under circumstances in which pilotage is compulsory shall be answerable for any loss or damage caused by the vessel or by any fault of the navigation of the vessel in the same manner as he would if pilotage were not compulsory. (2) This section shall not take effect until Jan. 1, 1918, or such earlier date as His Majesty may fix by Order in Council, certifying that it is necessary to bring the section into operation in order to enable His Majesty to comply with an international convention. (3) As from the date of the coming into operation of this section, s. 633 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, shall cease to have effect."

The respondents admit that a shipowner is "answerable" in a claim against him by a harbour authority for damage caused by the negligence of a compulsory pilot in navigating the ship, but they deny that s. 15 applies in a claim by a shipowner against a harbour authority. In that claim they say that the common-law prevails and that the shipowner is not "answerable" for the contributory negligence of a compulsory pilot.

Article 5 of the International Convention for the Unification of Certain Rules of Law Respecting Collisions which was signed at Brussels in 1910 ((1911) Cmd. 5558) provided that:

"The liability imposed by the preceding articles attaches in cases where the collision is caused by the fault of a pilot, even when the pilot is carried by compulsion of law."

Although the Maritime Conventions Act, 1911, amended the law so as to bring into operation the rules for division of loss in collisions and some other changes of the law agreed on at Brussels, it did not abolish the defence of compulsory pilotage. That was not done till the Pilotage Act, 1913, s. 15, came into operation on Jan. 1, 1918. But s. 15 is not limited in its scope to collision actions, and the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 633, which, under s. 15 (3), ceased to have effect on Jan. 1, 1918, was also a section of general scope and not limited to collision actions. Section 633 enacted that:

"An owner or master of a ship shall not be answerable to any person whatever for any loss or damage occasioned by the fault or incapacity of any qualified pilot acting in charge of that ship within any district where the employment of a qualified pilot is compulsory by law."

The wording of s. 15 is not happy. The word "answerable" is not the cause of the difficulty, and it is merely the equivalent of "responsible." But the words "answerable for any loss or damage caused by the vessel," though apt when the claim is against the owner of a ship, are incapable of applying when the claim is by the owner for damage done to his ship. The words "answerable for any loss or damage caused by any fault of the navigation of the vessel" are ill chosen and clumsy, but they are capable of applying to the shipowner's claim. No logical reason was put forward by the respondents for a construction which leaves compulsory pilotage still available as an answer to the plea of contributory negligence, and in collision actions since 1918 the compulsory pilot has been treated in all questions of fault as if he were the servant of the owners of the vessel under his charge. In Thom v. Hutchinson (J. & P.), Ltd. (12) the representatives of a ship's engineer, who was drowned in consequence of negligent navigation by a pilot within a compulsory pilotage area, claimed damages from the owners. The owners pleaded, inter alia, that the engineer and the compulsory pilot were fellow servants. The First Division of the Court of Session dismissed the action as irrelevant. LORD CLYDE (Lord President) founded his judgment on s. 15, and he held (1925. S.C. 393) that it created the relation of master and servant between the shipowner and the pilot, "with all the legal qualifications attaching to it." LORD CULLEN said (ibid.) that the effect of the section "is that the liability of the owner is to be the same as if the pilot on board had been voluntarily employed," and that "the compulsory pilot is to be regarded under this enactment as the servant of the owner." I respectfully agree with the decision and with the reasoning of these learned judges. The judgment of SIR FRANCIS JEUNE, P., in The Adam W. Spies (13), construing s. 633 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, also supports the view that the words "answerable for damage caused by the fault" of a compulsory pilot are broad enough to cover both a defence to an action brought against the ship and an answer to a defence of contributory negligence.

I, therefore, respectfully agree with the judgment of BUCKNILL, L.J., on this question and I am unable to take the view which commended itself to SCOTT and ASQUITH, L.JJ., that the Pilotage Act, 1913, s. 15, does not apply when a shipowner is suing or being sued in contract.

The appellants' claim, as founded on the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847, s. 74, remains for consideration. The material words of this section are:

"The owner of every vessel . . . shall be answerable to the undertakers for any damage done by such vessel . . . or by any person employed about the same, to the harbour, dock, or pier, or the quays or works connected therewith, and the master or person having the charge of such vessel . . . through whose wilful act or negligence any such damage is done shall also be liable to make good the same . . . Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend to impose any liability for any such damage upon the owner of any vessel, where such vessel shall at the time when such damage is caused be in charge of a duly licensed pilot whom such owner or master is bound by law to employ and put his vessel in charge of."

The proviso has been impliedly revoked by the Pilotage Act, 1913, s. 15 (1). Section 76 of the Act of 1847, inter alia, gives a remedy over to the owner who has had to make satisfaction for any such damage wilfully or negligently done by the master or person in charge. Section 74 was considered by this House in River Wear Comrs. v. Adamson (4). The decision was that the commissioners were not entitled to recover the cost of damage done to a pier when a wreck from which the crew had been removed was driven against it by the wind. The speeches of the noble and learned lords who decided the case left considerable doubt both about the ratio of the decision and about the construction of the section.

In The Mostyn (5), this House had again to construe the section and to consider the speeches delivered in Adamson's case (4). The House was not unanimous, but the majority held that the owner of a vessel doing damage to a harbour, dock or pier is responsible to the undertakers for the damage whether occasioned by negligence or not, and explained that in Adamson's case (4), the ground of decision was that the section did not extend to damage by a derelict ship which was no longer under the control of any human agency. VISCOUNT HALDANE said ([1928] A.C. 63):

"The words, taken by themselves, are unambiguous. The owner is to be liable for any damage done to the undertaking. My Lords, if the language of this section could legitimately be construed by us who sit here without regard to authority, I should find difficulty in saying that the appellants were not entitled to claim that it applied . . . But we cannot proceed here on this simple view. It has been established by a decision which is binding on us by this House that the language must be interpreted as subject to some qualification which is implicit in the words, and the question which alone we are free and bound to examine, is what this qualification is, and how far it extends."

Towards the end of his speech he states the qualification thus (ibid., 71):

"We appear to me to be bound by the authority of the Adamson case (4) to hold that the section in question is not to be read literally, but as applying when the damage complained of has been brought about by a vessel under the direction of the owner or his agents, whether negligent or not. The decision further exempts the owner when the vessel is not under such control but is for instance derelict."

LORD SHAW OF DUNFERMLINE said (ibid., 87):

". . . I must in duty declare that this statute seems to me still to abide in its full and comprehensive application of liability to owners, but that, in deference to Adamson (4), the sole exception, plus the statutory exception of pilotage, is the derelict or abandoned ship case. Respect must be had alike (1) to the statute in its express and general effect and (2) to the decision of this House of an implied and particular exception. Such an exception ought not to be extended or expanded. This House and courts of law should resist that."

LORD BLANESBURGH said (ibid., 106):

"The result, in my view, is that the owner of a vessel has, under this section, been made answerable to the undertakers for the damage referred to in the section, with no obligation on the part of the undertakers to prove more against him than that the damage was done by his vessel and that he was her owner at the time. To such a claim when so far proved only two defences are open to the owner: (a) the pilotage exception; (b) that the damage was in fact attributable to the agency of what, in the language of a simpler age, is known to the law as an act of God."

My Lords, it may be that the description "act of God" was used in this last sentence with less than LORD BLANESBURGH'S usual accuracy, but it is sufficiently clear that the majority of the House were laying down as matter of general construction that the section imposed on the shipowner a statutory obligation from which he can only escape, since the Pilotage Act, 1913, came into effect, by bringing himself within the decision of Adamson's case (4). VISCOUNT DUNEDIN ended his speech by saying (ibid., 77):

"Although I am not in agreement with the majority of your Lordships . . . I am glad that there will at least be a clear rule for future cases—namely, that the action which led to the damage must be action attributable to human agency, but, that being found, that the words of the section remain absolute."

VISCOUNT DUNEDIN'S view that the judgment of the House had finally cleared away all doubt about the meaning of the section by construing it as imposing an absolute liability, subject only to the restriction created by the decision in Adamson's case (4), is the more significant because he was dissenting. There is no room left for a construction which would introduce a new exception. It cannot be said that the House may have overlooked the case in which the cause of the damage done by the ship was the negligence of the harbour authority or its servants, for a case was cited in which the authority's claim under this section had been held to fail on that very ground: Det Forenede Dampskibs Selskab v. Barry Ry. Co. (6). That case had moreover been referred to with approval by SARGANT, L.J., in the Court of Appeal. VISCOUNT HALDANE certainly had in mind the case where the damage had been caused by the negligence of the harbour authority, for he mentions the opinion which SIR GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., had expressed on it in Adamson's case (4). The ratio on which ROCHE, J., decided Det Forenede Dampskibs Selskab v. Barry Ry. Co. (6), that nobody can take advantage or avail himself of the wrong for which he is himself responsible, is not consistent with the judgment of this House in The Mostyn (5), which forbids a construction of s. 74 which would qualify its terms by exceptions imported from the common law. But if the shipowner might have recovered as damages in an action of negligence the sum paid by him to the harbour authority under s. 74, a supposition which need not be considered here, the decision would be saved: frustra petis quod mox es restitutus.

A It follows that the respondents are liable for any damage done to the harbour by the Towerfield. The Towerfield when she took the ground caused a depression to form in the obstructing bank, she blocked the channel and silt was deposited round her hull. I should have been prepared to say that no damage was done to the harbour within the meaning of this section. "Damage . . .
B to the harbour, dock or pier or the quays or works connected therewith" means, in my opinion, physical damage to the opera manufacta of the undertaking. The respondents have, however, conceded that the appellants are entitled to the extra expense necessary to restore the channel to the condition in which it was before the Towerfield stranded, but not to damages for loss of the use of the harbour while the channel was blocked. I would allow what was expressly
C conceded and no more. For these reasons I agree that the appeal should be disposed of in the way proposed by my noble and learned friend on the Woolsack.

LORD OAKSEY (read by LORD NORMAND): My Lords, I agree with the judgment of the Court of Appeal, though for somewhat different reasons.

It has not been suggested by anyone that the respondents were themselves in any way negligent or to blame for the stranding of the s.s. Towerfield, but it
D is argued that on the true construction of the Pilotage Act, 1913, s. 15 (1), owners of a vessel are answerable for damage caused by any fault of the navigation of the vessel by a compulsory pilot. On the other hand, it is contended for the respondents that the word "answerable" in the section only refers to actions brought against the owners, and they are not answerable in the sense that the compulsory pilot's fault disentitles them to sue. My Lords, I agree
E that the words "answerable for any loss . . . caused . . . by any fault of the navigation of the vessel in the same manner . . . as if pilotage were not compulsory" mean that owners of ships with compulsory pilotage are affected by a compulsory pilot's lack of ordinary skill or care in all ordinary cases, but, in my opinion, this is not such a case, for not only was the pilot's faulty navigation due in part to the appellants' breach of their duty to him, but if the appellants
F had fulfilled their duty to the respondents the respondents would have had the opportunity, and would, as I find, have taken the opportunity, of preventing the stranding by taking the navigation out of the hands of the pilot.

The majority of the Court of Appeal have decided in favour of the respondents on the view that a contract was entered into between the appellants and the respondents by which the appellants warranted that a certain depth would be
G maintained in their harbour and in the channel thereto unless they notified the shipowners and their pilots that this depth was not maintained, and that the appellants had broken their warranty, and that, therefore, even if the pilot's negligence contributed to the accident, it had been induced by the failure of the appellants to warn the pilot and in any event did not affect the warranty. I agree with the majority of the Court of Appeal that a contract must be implied
H between the appellants and the respondents, but the question on which I am unable to agree with them is the terms which ought to be implied in the circumstances. In my opinion, no such warranty can be implied. I entirely agree that the appellants did not fulfil their obligations: they did not carry out proper soundings: they did not take proper steps to ensure that the pilots knew what dredging they had done: they issued a totally misleading plan of the entrance channel: they took no steps to warn the master of the s.s. Towerfield of the dangers of entering the harbour without a tug in all the circumstances;

but on the other hand I do not think they can be held to have warranted any absolute depth in the channel in view of the amendments to the WEST COAST OF ENGLAND PILOT stating that the channel was maintained at $4\frac{1}{2}$ ft. as far as possible by dredging, and that a less depth would be found in places. I am also of opinion that an obligation must be implied that the ship would be navigated by the compulsory pilot, for whose navigation the owners were answerable, with due care and skill.

Although I consider that the breach of their obligations on the part of the appellants was far more serious than that of the pilot, yet I cannot hold that the pilot navigated the vessel with due care or skill. I sympathise with him in the difficult task which he had to undertake, but, in view of his own evidence and the opinions of your Lordships' assessors and of the assessors who assisted the Court of Appeal, I cannot hold that his navigation was a mere error of judgment. The channel appears to have been about 155 feet wide at the point of stranding and there is no evidence (except perhaps the statement of the harbour-master) which suggests that it was not feasible to bring her in either on the leading marks or just north of them. It is difficult to refrain from the conclusion that the pilot must have misjudged his distance from the bush perch, and have disregarded the existence of the northern sand bank because of his view that freshets would have washed it away, a view unsupported, I think, by any other evidence.

It has been argued that the principle of Davies (Davis) v. Mann (14) is applicable, and that the respondent shipowners, being answerable for the pilot's navigation, could have avoided the result of the appellants' negligence by careful navigation and that, in any event, the pilot's negligence contributed to cause the stranding. This, however, appears to me to be an over-simplification of the position, since the respondents were deprived of the opportunity which I find they would have taken of assuming control of the navigation by the breach of duty on the part of the appellants, that is to say, if the true facts had been communicated by the appellants to the respondents as they ought to have been at any time up to the moment of stranding, the respondents could, and as I find would, have avoided the disaster. The harbour-master thought, as he said, that the ship should not have come in without a tug, but, relying on the pilot, without taking any steps to assure himself that the pilot knew as much as he himself knew, and without himself knowing the facts he ought to have known, he trusted to luck, and deprived the respondents of the opportunity of preventing the stranding. In my opinion, in such circumstances the true cause of the stranding was the breach of duty of the appellants, and to hold that the shipowners are answerable for the pilot's faulty navigation which they would have been entitled to prevent and would have prevented if the appellants had performed their duty seems to me a construction of the Pilotage Act, 1913, s. 15, which cannot be justified.

On the appellants' counterclaim I am also of opinion that the judgment of the Court of Appeal was right. It is, in my opinion, a fundamental principle of justice and not merely a rule of the common law, that no one can take advantage of his own wrong: COKE ON LITTLETON 148b; BROOM'S LEGAL MAXIMS, 10th ed., p. 191; and this principle is just as much applicable to the construction of statutes as it is to any other branch of law: see Davenport v. R. (15) (3 App. Cas. 129). The appellants cannot, therefore, claim for damage to their harbour caused in part by their own failure to fulfil their obligations. It is not, in my opinion, necessary to depart in any way from what was decided by your Lordships' House in The Mostyn (5), since the construction there put on the Harbours, Docks and Piers Clauses Act, 1847, s. 74, was that a ship navigated by her master or pilot and crew was liable for any damage which she caused to the harbour works, whether by negligence or not, but not that the owners were liable for damage caused or contributed to by the harbour authorities themselves. With the greatest respect to those of your Lordships who take a different view, I think it is scarcely conceivable that your Lordships' House would have laid down such a principle of interpretation without adverting in any way to the fundamental principle that no one can take advantage of his own wrong. The statement of VISCOUNT HALDANE in The Mostyn (5) ([1928] A.C. 64) could not, in my opinion, have been expressed as it was if the noble lord had intended to lay down that a harbour authority could recover for damage caused to their own works by their own acts. It is

A one thing to say that the owners of a vessel may be liable for damage caused by their vessel to harbour works without negligence on the part of the owners or their servants—it is a totally different thing, in my opinion, to say that if the harbour authority by its own negligence, or the negligence of its servants, damages its own works by driving the vessel against them, they can recover such damages from the owners of the vessel. The previous decision of your

B Lordships' House in River Wear Comrs. v. Adamson (4) in not holding the owners liable for their ship when not under human direction indicates that the damage to which the section refers is not damage done by the ship as an inanimate object. Moreover, if the legislature had intended that harbour authorities should be indemnified for any damage, however caused, to their works, no exception would have been made for the case of compulsory pilotage. The presence

C of this exception in the section appears to me to indicate that the legislature was considering damage caused by those in charge of the vessel, and not damage caused by the harbour authorities or anyone else for whom the shipowners were not fully responsible.

It is true that the result is not so startling when the harbour authority's negligence is only a contributory cause of the damage, but the underlying

D principle appears to me to be the same. If "damage" in the section means damage caused physically by the vessel when human beings are on board of her and nothing more, then, even if the damage is entirely due to the negligence of the harbour authority, the harbour authority can still recover. To suggest that the injustice of this result can be obviated by an action by the owners of the vessel against the harbour authority for causing them the damages which

E they have been compelled to pay to the harbour authority in the action by the harbour authority offends against the rule to prevent circuity of action and would, in my view, justify the interpretation I put on the section. For these reasons I am of opinion that the appellants' counterclaim should be dismissed.

LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON: My Lords, this is an unusual case in that no fewer than six questions of real difficulty arise for your Lordships' decision. I shall start by stating four of these questions and indicating the answer which I would give to each of them. It will be convenient to refer to the appellants as "the board" and to the respondents as "the owners."

Q. 1. Was there any negligence on the part of the compulsory pilot who brought in the Towerfield? A. Yes. Q. 2. Was the negligence of the pilot the sole cause or a cause of the stranding of the Towerfield? A. It was not the G sole cause, but it was a cause. Q. 3. Was the board guilty of a breach of any duty which it owed to the owners? A. Yes. Q. 4. Was that breach of duty a cause of the stranding of the Towerfield? A. Yes. It will be observed that on each of these four questions I have arrived at the same conclusion as BUCKNILL, L.J., and, as my reasons correspond closely with his, I can state them quite shortly.

H As to question 1, I have felt great doubt whether the pilot could fairly be held to have been negligent, or whether he was merely guilty of an error of judgment, not amounting to negligence in all the circumstances. In the end, however, I see no reason to disturb the finding of WILLMER, J. (with which BUCKNILL, L.J., concurred), that the former is the correct view. In addition to the matters on which the learned judge and the lord justice based their judgments, I am influenced by the answers of our assessors, which I accept, to the first two questions put to them.

As to question 2, if the pilot was negligent, I see no reason to doubt that his negligence continued up to the moment of the stranding and was a cause thereof. I shall shortly give my reasons for thinking that there was another cause which contributed to that result.

As to question 3, I think that the board cannot fairly be held liable for failing to keep the channel properly dredged, having regard to war-time difficulties and to the other surrounding circumstances. I am, however, of opinion that it was the duty of the board to ascertain by proper and regular soundings the approximate position, shape and extent of the banks which encroached on the north and south sides of the channel, and to communicate this information to the master of the vessel before he entered the channel, together with the information that the dredger had not been at work on the north bank since Oct. 9. The duty to give this information was one which arose as between invitor and invitee. It may well be that the board was also under certain contractual duties, but, for reasons which will appear later, I do not find it necessary to determine whether any contract came into existence between the board and the owners, and, if so, what were the terms of such contract. The duty just stated was clearly not performed by the board's employees. Apart from the fact that the method of taking soundings was unsatisfactory, the board's employees took no steps to give any information to the master of the Towerfield. They were not, in my view, entitled to suppose that the pilot was armed with full knowledge of all the conditions, to rely on this supposed knowledge, and to leave the master without any information.

As to question 4, it is, I think, possible that the master would have decided to enter the channel even if he had been properly informed as to the position, shape and extent of the banks on the north and south sides thereof. He would have had to weigh the possible risks of entering against the war risks to which he would be exposed if he remained outside. I feel no doubt, however, that if he had entered the channel he would have intervened to prevent the pilot from taking the course which stranded the vessel. If the master had had the information just mentioned, he would have realised that such a course would land the ship on the north bank, and, however reluctant he might have been to interfere with the pilot, I cannot believe that he would have remained passive in these circumstances. Thus, the breach of duty which I have found in answer to question 3 was a breach which continued to have an effect on the navigation of the vessel right up to the moment when she stranded, and this breach of duty combined with the negligence of the pilot to cause the stranding. This is, in my judgment, the result of applying to the facts of the present case the principles stated by VISCOUNT BIRKENHEAD, L.-C., in The Volute (16) ([1922] 1 A.C. 144, 145). The present case falls exactly within the fourth class described by GREER, L.J., in The Eurymedon (1) ([1938] P. 50), as follows:

"But if the negligence of both parties to the litigation continues right up to the moment of collision, whether on land or on sea, each party is to blame for the collision and for the damage which is the result of the continued negligence of both."

The case is thus one in which each of two parties—the pilot and the board—was guilty of negligence which contributed to the disaster. As it is not alleged that the master or any other employee of the owners was guilty of any negligence, it follows that the owners' claim for damages must succeed, unless it is defeated by the Pilotage Act, 1913, s. 15 (1), and that the board's counterclaim for damages must fail, unless it is assisted by the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847, s. 74. This leads me to questions 5 and 6, which may be stated as follows:

Q. 5. Does the Pilotage Act, 1913, s. 15 (1), debar the owners from recovering any damages for negligence against the board, because the pilot of the Tower-field was guilty of negligence contributing to the mishap? Q. 6. Does the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847, s. 74, enable the board to recover in respect of any damage done to the harbour by the Towerfield notwithstanding that the negligence of the board was one of the causes for the stranding of the vessel?

- As to question 5, s. 15 (1) of the Act of 1913 has already been read and BUCKNILL, L.J., has given a very full and careful account of the earlier statutes
- A dealing with the position of the owner or master of a ship in charge of a compulsory pilot. He has also reviewed the authorities bearing on this matter. My Lords, my first impression on reading s. 15 (1) was that it dealt only with cases in which some third party, who has suffered loss or damage caused either (a) by the vessel or (b) by a fault in the navigation of the vessel, is seeking to recover such loss or damage from the owner or master. The section provides
- B that in such a case the owner or master is to be "answerable" although the vessel was navigating under compulsory pilotage. I still think that this is the most natural meaning of the words used, and I find grave difficulty in reading them as applying also to a case in which the owner or master of a vessel is claiming that a third party is answerable for some loss or damage caused to the vessel. However, your Lordships are of opinion that the words do apply to such a
- C case and I can see no logical reason why the legislature should have limited the application of the section to cases in which the owner or master was defendant. Accordingly, I shall not dissent from the view which your Lordships have formed in common with BUCKNILL, L.J., and (so far as actions in tort are concerned) with SCOTT and ASQUITH, L.J.J. I agree with your Lordships in thinking that the wording of the section affords no ground for drawing a distinction between
- D actions in tort and actions in contract. For this reason, I have not found it necessary to form a concluded view as to whether the board has or has not been guilty of a breach of any contract.

- As to question 6, I have not formed any view on the question whether damage can be said to be "done by" a vessel to a harbour within the meaning of s. 74 of the Act of 1847 in cases where the sole cause of the damage is negligence
- E on the part of the harbour authority. This point does not arise, on the views which I have expressed in answer to questions 2 and 4 and it was not fully argued in this House, owing to a concession made at an early stage by counsel for the board. I am, however, of opinion that contributory negligence on the part of the harbour authority is no defence to a claim by the harbour authority under the section. This is, I think, the inevitable result of the views expressed
- F by the majority of your Lordships' House in The Mostyn (5). I would add, with reference to a passage in the judgment of BUCKNILL, L.J., in the present case, that when VISCOUNT HALDANE, in The Mostyn (5), used the words ([1928] A.C. 64): "It would have been equally difficult to hold that there was liability if the damage had been caused by the actions of the undertakers themselves," he was, in my view, summarising the opinion expressed by SIR GEORGE JESSEL,
- G M.R., in the Court of Appeal, and was not expressing a view which he, VISCOUNT HALDANE, himself held. Further, I do not think that the dictum of SARGANT, L.J. ([1927] P. 47), on which also BUCKNILL, L.J., relied in the present case, can be reconciled with the views expressed by the majority of this House in The Mostyn (5). I have thought it right to add these observations out of respect to the judgment of BUCKNILL, L.J., with which I am in agreement on all points
- H except the point now under discussion.

I agree with the view expressed by my noble and learned friend, LORD NORMAND, that the "damage" mentioned in the section means only physical damage to the opera manufacta of the undertaking. If this is so, I think that the damage in the present case is nil, since it could hardly be said that any damage was done to the harbour by the mere fact that the vessel's bottom disturbed a bank of stones and sand or silt which should never have been in the channel at all. I would allow by way of damages only what was expressly conceded by the respondents. I agree with the motion proposed by my noble and learned friend on the Woolsack.

LORD RADCLIFFE: My Lords, I too think that neither party should recover on its claim for negligence. Having regard to what he must have known, I can see no way of describing the pilot's navigation of this vessel as other than negligent, and think that the Pilotage Act, 1913, s. 15 (1), must be construed so as to impute his negligence to the owners, even when they appear as plaintiffs seeking to recover damages for injury to their vessel. If so, their claim must fail, for their negligence was no inevitable consequence of any breach of duty that can be attributed to the harbour authority. It may be quite true to say that this accident would never have happened but for some such breach, though even that conclusion must depend on speculations as to the probable course of conduct of the master or the pilot on receiving information which they did not get in circumstances that we can only imperfectly reconstruct, but so much as that might be said by any disappointed defendant who is made to compensate a negligent plaintiff in a case of the type of Davies v. Mann (14), and I do not think that in principle that consideration can be sufficient to "purge" the plaintiffs' own negligence in the navigation of their vessel.

I have had more difficulty in satisfying myself that the harbour authority committed any breach of duty that can fairly be described as a cause of this accident, for I think that the judgments below have charged them with breaches of duty in matters where no such duty was imposed on them either by statute or by the common law, but I agree that in the special circumstances of this case, which include the nature of the information conveyed by the Admiralty chart and the WEST COAST OF ENGLAND PILOT, as well as the complication inherent in the relationship of master and pilot, there was a duty on them to give a warning to the master which they failed to give, and that breach is so much connected with the decision that the vessel should dock on the tide on which she entered, and with the course which she followed, that it may fairly be regarded as a contributory cause of the accident.

But that conclusion leaves outstanding the appellants' claim under the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847, s. 74. This is the third occasion on which that section has visited your Lordships' House, and it is perhaps unfortunate that so much should still remain to be said about it. Nevertheless the section itself is an important one, since it appears in a general Act that has been widely adopted, and its application involves a question of some moment as to the relationship between a court of law and an Act of Parliament. It is for that reason that I ask leave to deal with the matter at greater length than I should otherwise have thought necessary. My Lords, there is no escape from the view that s. 74 is an arbitrary provision. Once it was decided by this House in The Mostyn (5) that the shipowner's liability under it did not depend on any imputation of default to him or to others who might be in charge of the ship, it was plain that the section was conceived in the interests of the dock or harbour authority and was calculated to produce on occasions what might be very rough justice indeed. But I do not know that I should deduce from that that a court of law would be entitled to give to its language any meaning other than that which the words will fairly admit. It is not always easy to see the whole picture when one is scrutinising a particular detail of a general code. After all, undertakers of a dock or harbour are providing an important public utility, which the law requires them both to conserve in reasonable condition and to keep open for the service of the shipping public without discrimination. No doubt, their enterprise must have its customers, but, if the works of the undertakers get damaged, someone must find the money to restore them to proper condition in the public interest, and I do not think it unfair to recall that it is the shipowner's property that has been the instrument of harm and it is the shipowner's adventure that brings the vessel to the dock or harbour where the damage occurs.

- These considerations, however, are not of any determining importance today, since any construction which your Lordships place on the words of the section must somehow contrive to be consonant with that placed on it by our predecessors in River Wear Comrs. v. Adamson (4) and The Mostyn (5). And those decisions have not left the door very wide open. I do not propose to essay the delicate task of discovering what was the ratio decidendi of the Adamson case (4). For all practical purposes the decision in that appeal must be taken with the decision in The Mostyn (5) as together providing a single authoritative interpretation of the meaning of the section. I am content with the certainty that in the later case the majority of your Lordships' House did arrive at a conclusion as to what the Adamson case (4) had decided, and then passed to the, perhaps, smaller achievement of themselves elucidating the construction of the section. The facts in The Mostyn (5) have no particular bearing on the problem which is now before your Lordships. A vessel had damaged certain installations forming part of Swansea Docks and the damage was done in circumstances that involved no negligence or breach of duty on the part of those in charge of the vessel. The question was whether s. 74 obliged the shipowners none the less to make good to the undertakers the cost of repairing the damage. To answer this problem it was necessary to resolve the long-standing uncertainty as to what the Adamson case (4) had really decided. The solution was not arrived at without difficulty, for, whereas LORD MERRIVALE at the trial and the three members of the Court of Appeal thought that the Adamson decision (4) was an authority that protected the shipowners, a majority of the members of this House who heard the appeal held not only that it was not such an authority, but also that the shipowners were in fact liable under the section. In expressing their decision they placed a construction on the section. Indeed, how were they to pronounce on its scope and application without fully considering what construction to give to its words? For my part, I cannot entertain any doubt what construction it was that they adopted. If there are ambiguities (and I think that there are) in some of the expressions that they used to define their meaning, I think that those ambiguities were the tribute that their piety paid to the somewhat Delphic responses of their predecessors in this House. Such ambiguities as there may be do not matter for our purpose. For the construction that must be taken as authoritatively adopted in The Mostyn (5) was that the section imposed an absolute liability on a shipowner whose vessel had done damage to the undertakers' works, and that this liability was qualified only (i) by the proviso as to compulsory pilotage, which is not now effective, and (ii) by the requirement that the damage must be "attributable to human agency" or not attributable to the "act of God." This requirement the House regarded as the necessary import of the Adamson decision (4). What matters is that the damage in the case before us cannot possibly be said to be attributable to act of God or not to be attributable to human agency. What is said is that it is wholly or partly attributable to negligent omissions of the harbour authority.

- So s. 74 is again before this House. The appellants' harbour has suffered damage and the damage has been done (so it is said) by the respondents' vessel. Your Lordships are invited to read the section as if it contained a qualification to the effect that shipowners are not to be answerable if the harbour authority making the claim can itself be convicted of contributory negligence in the matter of the damage. I think that there are two commanding reasons why the section must not be so read, and I do not know which reason to put before the other. First, we are bound by the interpretation which the House placed on the section in The Mostyn (5) and that interpretation leaves no room for a defence of contributory negligence. I might regret that conclusion if I thought that the possibility of a harbour authority causing or contributing to the damage done to its works could have escaped the attention of the noble Lords who formed the majority in The Mostyn (5). But the facts do not allow me so to suppose. Such a contingency had been referred to by SIR GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., in the Adamson case (4) (1 Q.B.D. 549) as one of the reasons that justified the introduction of "reasonable" exceptions, and VISCOUNT HALDANE even referred to that observation in his speech in the House, although he expressed no approval of the reasoning of SIR GEORGE JESSEL, M.R. ROCHE, J., had decided in Det Forenede Dampskibs Selskab v. Barry Ry. Co. (6) that negligence in the harbour authority did in fact let the shipowners out, and we were informed during the hearing of this appeal that that decision was much canvassed in the arguments of counsel before this House in The Mostyn (5). Lastly, the judgment of SARGANT, L.J. ([1927] P. 47), in the Court of Appeal (which was, of course, overruled by the decision of this House) had explicitly referred to and approved of that case. It would do altogether too little justice to the reflective powers of VISCOUNT HALDANE, and LORDS SHAW and BLANESBURGH if I were to suppose that in arriving at their interpretation of the section they had ignored the possibility of a harbour authority contributing to the damage of which it complained.

The second reason is that there is nothing in the wording of the section that would justify us in reading into it such a qualification. If we did, we should be amending the section, whereas our function is limited to construing it. To treat it as implied would be to do even more than our predecessors did by their judgments in the Adamson case (4), for, whereas they could point to such words as "the master or person having charge of such vessel" as supporting a construction that limited the range of the section to damage done through human agency, there is nothing that your Lordships can lay hold of that even bears on the contingency of negligence on the part of the harbour authority. After all, there are not many words before your Lordships on which the art of interpretation can be employed: "any damage done by such vessel . . . or by any person employed about the same, to the harbour, dock, or pier." Where damage done by a vessel under human control is in question, it is the vessel itself that is treated by the section as the instrument of causation, and it is the damage that it does that has to be paid for. The vessel has not done the damage any the less because those in charge of it may have been acting in compliance with some ill-judged or even careless direction given by a servant of the undertakers, or because some omission on the part of the undertakers may have been responsible, or in some measure responsible, for what took place. So to construe the section seems to me to import legal conceptions of responsibility (which is not the same thing as causation) in tort into simple words which, as has already been held in The Mostyn (5), are not directed to any considerations of tortious liability.

My Lords, I cannot part with this case without some reference to the Barry Ry. case (6). Much as I respect any opinion of LORD ROCHE, I cannot agree with the reported reasons for his decision. As I have said, I do not think that the section can in any way be construed so as to except damage for which the harbour authority would be held responsible in an action for negligence, and I can see no warrant for applying in the face of the statute the general rule of the common law which may be expressed by saying that a man cannot take advantage of his own wrong. It would be plausible to invoke it in a case where the damage done was solely the result of the claimants' negligence, and I am by no means clear that in such a case a counterclaim in negligence might not ultimately deprive the claimant of all his advantage under the section. Even so, it is not the construction of the section that is different, but other remedies would cancel out its advantage. If, however, his negligence is no more than a contributory cause, I cannot see why the provisions of the statute should not govern from first to last. There is certainly no turpitude involved in a failure to observe that standard of care which, after full inquiry, a court of law may find to have been the appropriate measure. Those standards are not absolute: they vary with the parties and the circumstances. Nor are the rules that determine them exactly graven on tables of stone. Indeed, the whole significance of contributory negligence at common law has been altered by statute within recent years. Responsibility on the ground of negligence is not evident as a physical fact is evident, although lawyers sometimes speak as if it were, and for my part I cannot at all suppose that the simple statutory remedy afforded by s. 74, which, if damage is under £50, is to be exigible before two justices, was ever intended by Parliament to be subordinated to a legal trial of what too often proves to be the complicated issue of negligence at common law.

The measure of damage was not an issue before your Lordships, and the respondents' counsel informed us that he did not dispute that, if the ship-owners could be made liable under s. 74, they ought to pay whatever extra expense had to be met by the harbour authority in returning the harbour to the condition it was in before the ship grounded. So be it. I only wish to make it plain that, in my view, the section is confined to damage, not damages. I think that it covers no more than the actual physical damage which a vessel may do to the works which constitute the harbour, dock or pier. I do not think that it has any relation to consequential damage, such, for instance, as a loss of business at the dock or harbour attributable to the presence of the stranded vessel or to the physical deterioration of the approach channel.

Appeal allowed. Claim dismissed, and counterclaim dismissed except in so far as damage was caused by the Towerfield to the appellants' harbour. Each party to pay his own costs here and below.

Solicitors: Thomas Cooper & Co. (for the appellants); Constant & Constant (for the respondents).

[Reported by J. D. PENNINGTON, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

E

PORTMAN BUILDING SOCIETY v. YOUNG.

F [CHANCERY DIVISION (Danckwerts, J.), June 30, 1950.]

Mortgage—Attornment clause—Creation of relationship of landlord and tenant—Application of Rent Restrictions Acts.

Rent Restriction—Mortgage—Attornment clause—Creation of relationship of landlord and tenant—Application of Rent Restrictions Acts.

G

A mortgage of a dwelling-house provided: "The mortgagor hereby attorns tenant to the [mortgagee] of such parts of the property as may at any time be in the occupation of the mortgagor at the monthly rent of £9 16s. 0d. to be paid on the days hereinbefore appointed for payment of monthly instalments and such rent is to be applied in or towards satisfaction of such instalments. Provided always that the [mortgagee] may at any time without giving previous notice in that behalf determine the tenancy created by such attornment." The monthly payments fell into arrear, and in order to ascertain the appropriate procedure to obtain possession it became necessary to decide whether the Rent Restrictions Acts applied to the relationship of the mortgagee and mortgagor.

H

HELD: on the true construction of the mortgage the relationship of landlord and tenant had been created between the mortgagee and mortgagor, and, the rent being more than two-thirds of the rateable value of the house, the mortgagor was entitled to the protection of the Acts.

[AS TO RELATIONSHIP EFFECTED BY ATTORNMENT CLAUSE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 23, pp. 325, 326, para. 489; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 35, pp. 327-331, Nos. 712-737.]

ADJOURNED SUMMONS.

The plaintiffs, the Portman Building Society, issued an originating summons under R.S.C., Ord. 55, r. 5 (a), claiming possession as mortgagees from the mortgagor. The mortgagor did not appear, but the master took the point that the mortgagor was protected by the Rent Restrictions Acts.

L. A. Blundell for the plaintiffs.

The mortgagor was not represented.

DANCKWERTS, J.: The question which arises in the present case is whether there has been a tenancy created by the terms of a mortgage so as to bring the case within the provisions of the Rent Restrictions Acts. The plaintiffs are the Portman Building Society, and, by a mortgage dated Feb. 17, 1948, the property in question (a house known as 122, Merewood Road, Crayford, Kent) was mortgaged to the plaintiffs by the mortgagor with the added security of a policy for £1,600 on his life to secure repayment of a principal sum of £1,600 and interest at four per cent. per annum. Clause 10 of that mortgage was what is commonly called an attornment clause and was in these terms:

"The mortgagor hereby attorns tenant to the society of such part of the mortgaged property as now is or shall be at any time during the continuance of this security in the occupation of the mortgagor at the yearly rent of 1s. 0d. if demanded, provided that at any time after the power of entry into possession or into receipt of the rents and profits of the mortgaged property herein before conferred upon the society has become exercisable the society may by giving to the mortgagor either personally or by post or leaving upon the property at least three days' notice in writing of the intention of the society so to do determine the tenancy hereby created and enter upon the property."

This clause would not have given rise to any difficulty because by the provisions of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, s. 12 (7), it is provided:

"Where the rent payable in respect of any tenancy of any dwelling-house is less than two-thirds of the rateable value thereof, this Act shall not apply to that rent or tenancy nor to any mortgage by the landlord from whom the tenancy is held of his interest in the dwelling-house, and this Act shall apply in respect of such dwelling-house as if no such tenancy existed or ever had existed."

Obviously a rent of 1s. 0d. is less than two-thirds of the rateable value. Therefore, if nothing further had been done, no difficulty such as the one which has now been discussed could have arisen, but, on Apr. 30, 1949, a deed of variation was entered into between the parties, whereby the mortgage was converted into the more usual form of building society mortgage in that the amount borrowed became repayable by monthly instalments of £9 16s. 0d. In this deed a new attornment clause was inserted in the following terms:

"The mortgagor hereby attorns tenant to the society of such parts of the property as may at any time be in the occupation of the mortgagor at the monthly rent of £9 16s. 0d. to be paid on the days hereinbefore appointed for payment of monthly instalments and such rent is to be applied in or towards satisfaction of such instalments. Provided always that the society may at any time without giving previous notice in that behalf determine the tenancy created by such attornment."

It is a little difficult to see what the precise object of inserting such a clause was, because, though formerly a clause of this kind was commonly inserted to enable a specially endorsed writ to be issued under R.S.C., Ord. 3, r. 6, and

Ord. 14 proceedings to be taken for summary possession, owing to the amendment by R.S.C., 1933, No. 1, of Ord. 3, r. 6, there ceased to be any point whatever in inserting such a clause. It seems to me that possibly an old practice was followed without appreciating the reason which gave rise to it. The point, however, is taken, though the mortgagor has entered no appearance, that the Rent Restrictions Acts apply to the present case. Although, as the rent in question is in arrear, the mortgagor is in a difficulty under those Acts, this may affect the questions of what court the proceedings should have been brought in and whether there is not a different discretion to be exercised, namely, that conferred on the county courts by the Rent Acts. Accordingly, I have to consider whether or not the Rent Acts apply.

It has been argued by counsel for the society, first, that the Rent Acts do not apply because they contemplate, on the one hand, mortgages as being within the Act and provide specifically for their case, and that the provisions dealing with tenants are entirely different and have no application whatever to a case which is purely between mortgagor and mortgagee. Secondly, it is said that, so far as the Rent Acts do apply to tenancies, they are not relevant in the present case because they are intended to apply to real tenancies in the practical sense. The words in those Acts, it is pointed out, are used in their popular sense, and, therefore, the Acts have no application in the case of an attornment clause, which is purely a technicality, inserted in a mortgage for a particular purpose, and not intended to create a relationship of landlord and tenant in the ordinary sense. It has been argued that the mortgagor was a mortgaging owner and not a tenant.

I have been referred to the relevant provisions of the Acts and the definitions of "landlord" and "tenant" which, I think, do not assist counsel very much. He has also referred me to certain authorities from which it appears that the court has treated payments differently according to whether, in the proper sense of the word, they were rent or not. I am afraid that does not get rid of the difficulties which have arisen. Whatever the reason—wise or unwise—may have been for the society inserting this clause in the deed of variation, they have chosen for their own good purposes, whatever they may be, to create the relationship of landlord and tenant between themselves, as landlords, and the mortgagor, as the tenant. They have used the words "tenancy" and "rent."

"The mortgagor hereby attorns tenant to the society of such parts of the property . . . at the monthly rent of £9 16s. 0d. . . . Provided . . . that the society may at any time . . . determine the tenancy created by such attornment. Provided also that neither receipt of the said rent nor the said tenancy shall render the society liable to account as mortgagees in possession."

It seems to me that they have repeatedly used expressions which show that a tenancy is created and a rent is to be paid. In those circumstances, as the rent is one of more than two-thirds of the rateable value, the tenancy is not excluded by s. 12 (7) of the Act of 1920, but it falls within the provisions of the Rent Acts, and, therefore, recovery of possession as between landlord and tenant is restricted by those provisions. Accordingly, it seems to me that the objection raised by the master is a proper objection, and I must give effect to it.

In view of the arrears of rent his Lordship granted an order for possession within twenty-one days. His Lordship held that in the circumstances he had no power to award costs to the plaintiffs, and he, therefore, made no order as to costs.

Solicitors: Hewlett & Co. (for the plaintiffs).

[Reported by R. D. H. OSBORNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re TAYLOR (deceased).

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Willmer, J.), June 28, 1950.]

Administration—Administrator—Appointment in “special circumstances”—Discretion of court—Sole beneficiary under will entitled to absolute interest—Beneficiary of full age, but of immature development—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 162 (1) (as amended by the Administration of Justice Act, 1928 (c. 26), s. 9).

A

The respondent, who attained the age of twenty-one on Oct. 26, 1949, was the sole beneficiary under the will of the testatrix, her mother, who died on Aug. 18, 1949. An application was made under the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 162 (1), as amended by the Administration of Justice Act, 1928, s. 9, by certain members of the testatrix's family for a grant of administration ad colligenda bona in respect of the estate of the testatrix, with certain special powers to provide for the maintenance and welfare of the respondent. The applicants alleged that the respondent was immaturity developed, and, therefore, unfitted at present not only for the enjoyment of the large fortune to which she had become entitled under the will of the testatrix but also for the task of administration, and stated that they were moving the court with a view to the respondent's interests being protected until she had gained sufficient experience of affairs to justify the court in giving her a full grant of administration.

B

C

HELD: the court had no power under s. 162 (1) of the Act of 1925, as amended, to interfere with the respondent's enjoyment of an estate to which she was by law entitled, and the application would, therefore, be dismissed.

D

Per curiam: I am much attracted to the contention that proviso (b) of s. 162 (1) of the Act of 1925, as amended, in referring to “special circumstances” relates only to special circumstances in connection with the estate itself or the administration of the estate.

[AS TO GRANTS AD COLLIGENDA BONA, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 14, p. 274, para. 484; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 23, pp. 207-209, Nos. 2446-2483.]

E

Cases referred to:

- (1) In the Estate of Sanpietro, In the Estate of Van Tuyll Van Serooskerken, [1940] 4 All E.R. 482; [1941] P. 16; 110 L.J.P. 23; 2nd Digest Supp.
- (2) In the Goods of Farrands, (1876), 1 P.D. 439; 23 Digest 171, 1880.

F

MOTION for a grant of administration ad colligenda bona.

By her will, dated Oct. 24, 1928, the testatrix, who died on Aug. 18, 1949, appointed her parents executors, and, subject to certain gifts of jewellery and wearing apparel to her sisters, she left her estate, amounting to some £19,000, to the respondent, her only daughter. The executors pre-deceased the testatrix. On Oct. 26, 1949, the respondent attained full age, and, as the sole beneficiary under the will of the testatrix, took steps to apply for a grant of letters of administration with the will annexed. An application was made under the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 162 (1), as amended by the Administration of Justice Act, 1928, s. 9, by the two sisters of the testatrix and by a trustee under the will of the testatrix's father for a grant of administration ad colligenda bona on the ground that the respondent was immaturity developed both physically and mentally, and was, therefore, at present unfitted for the enjoyment of the estate and the task of administration. Accordingly, the court was moved for a grant of administration ad colligenda bona, with the will of the testatrix annexed, of the estate of the testatrix, together with a grant of certain special powers, including a power to make an adequate allowance out of the estate to the respondent. The respondent, in her affidavit, stated that she opposed the making of any order which in any way restricted her complete control of the property to or in which she had any interest consequent on the death of the testatrix.

G

H

Russell, K.C., and Latey, K.C., for the applicants.

Manningham-Buller, K.C., and R. T. Barnard for the respondent, the sole beneficiary under the will of the testatrix.

A WILLMER, J.: This motion is brought before the court because it is said that, owing to a background of ill-health during her childhood, the respondent is immaturely developed both physically and mentally, and, consequently, is quite unfitted, not only for the enjoyment of the large sum of money which she will inherit under this will, but also for the task of administration. What is contemplated is that for a year or two, during which time it is hoped that the respondent will mature, the Midland Bank Executor and Trustee Co. should be appointed administrator ad colligenda bona, with special powers, inter alia, to pay an allowance to the respondent for her maintenance. It is, perhaps, not without significance that the respondent's own solicitor and the psychiatrist, who have sworn affidavits on her behalf, both take the view that it would probably be wise for a young woman in the position of the respondent to consent to some sort of machinery whereby this large estate would be subjected to some form of control until she has matured and developed a little further. The respondent herself, however, denies that she is in any way unfitted for the enjoyment of this estate or for the task of administration, and I think there is no doubt that she has every wish to bring this large sum of money under her own hands and to exercise her own power over its disposition at the earliest possible date. I say nothing at the present stage as to the wisdom of that point of view, nor do I

B

C

D feel it is for me to comment on the merits of the application.

As I indicated in argument, I think my decision to-day must be based on the hypothesis that the merits are in accordance with what has been said on behalf of the applicants, i.e., I am prepared to assume that it would be wise and in the best interests of the respondent that her fortune should be tied up under someone else's control for the time being. On that assumption the questions, to my mind,

E are (i) whether the court has power to make an order of the type asked for by the applicants, and (ii) if it has the power, whether there is any precedent for the exercise of such power in the manner suggested.

The application is made under the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 162 (1), which has been amended by the Administration of Justice Act, 1928, s. 9, whereby a new proviso has been added to the original

F section. It is helpful to study the words of para. (b) of the new proviso, which is in these words:

"if, by reason of the insolvency of the estate of the deceased or of any other special circumstances, it appears to the court to be necessary or expedient to appoint as administrator some person other than the person who, but for this provision, would by law have been entitled to the grant of administration, the court may in its discretion, notwithstanding anything in this Act, appoint as administrator such person as it thinks expedient, and any administration granted under this provision may be limited in any way the court thinks fit."

G

That proviso, it is claimed, gives the court a discretion to make an order of the type sought by the applicants. It has been frankly conceded by counsel for the applicants that he has found it impossible to put his finger on any case in which a similar order has been made in circumstances such as those of the present case. I have been referred by him to two cases where special orders were made for the administration of estates, in one of which, In the Estate of Sanpietro, In the Estate of Van Tuyll Van Serooskerken (1), the interests of enemy aliens were concerned, while in the other, In the Goods of Farrands (2), the person who, but for the provision, would have been entitled to a grant of administration was a person who was quite unfitted to handle the task of administration. No case, however, has been cited to me in which the court has made an order designed merely to protect the beneficiary from himself or herself.

H

I am much attracted to the view put forward in argument by counsel for the respondent that the terms of this proviso, where it mentions "insolvency of the estate ... or ... any other special circumstances," relate only to special circumstances in connection with the estate itself or the administration of the estate. It is complained on behalf of the respondent that what is sought to be done in this case is to use the machinery of this section, which is designed solely to deal with the question of administration, for the ulterior purpose of controlling the disposition of the respondent's estate and inhibiting her from enjoying it or from dealing with her own property in the way in which she wishes to deal with it. As put by counsel for the respondent, the position is really the same as though the respondent had been left a legacy of an equivalent sum of money under the will of some person. It was argued, as I thought with considerable force, that, in such circumstances, provided that the beneficiary were sui juris, this court could have no possible right to interfere so as to inhibit the full enjoyment of any such legacy. It seems to me that very similar considerations apply when I am asked to use the machinery of this section to achieve the ulterior object of preventing the respondent from exercising to the full her enjoyment of the estate left to her by the testatrix. I say nothing, as I have already indicated, as to the wisdom or otherwise of controlling the activities of the respondent. It seems to me, regardless of the merits of the application, that, if the court were to accede to this application, it would be setting a new precedent and using the section of the Act for an entirely new purpose, and it might very well be found hereafter that it was taking the first blow towards driving in the thin end of a very large wedge. It is difficult to see where the end might be if it were once admitted that this section could be used for the ulterior purpose of interfering, by order of the court, with a beneficiary's enjoyment of an estate to which he or she was by law entitled.

In those circumstances it seems to me that, notwithstanding the assumption which I make that this application is made with the best intentions, and that it is in the interests of the respondent herself that the management of the estate should in some way be controlled for her own benefit, I must, in my discretion, decline to make the order asked for in this case. None of the matters alleged, as has been pointed out, goes to the question of administration. Those matters go rather to the wisdom or otherwise of allowing the respondent to enjoy the estate. In my judgment, it would be a bad precedent to use this section for the ulterior purpose for which it is sought to be used, and in those circumstances I conceive it to be my duty to dismiss this motion.

Motion dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Gibson & Weldon, agents for Clough & Son, Cleckheaton (for the applicants); Janson, Cobb, Pearson & Co. (for the respondent).

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

JEFFREY v. JEFFREY.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Pearce, J.), July 5, 1950.]

Divorce—Judicial separation—Substitution of decree for decree nisi of divorce—Motive of financial advantage—Exercise of discretion of court—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 183 (3) (added by Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57), s. 9).

A After obtaining a decree nisi for the dissolution of her marriage on the ground of her husband's adultery the wife applied to the court for a decree of judicial separation to be substituted for it. The husband applied for the decree nisi to be made absolute.

B HELD: there might be circumstances where justice would be better served by altering a decree nisi of dissolution to a decree of judicial separation, but it was undesirable to allow a petitioner wife to use delay in applying for a decree nisi of divorce to be made absolute, or to accede to her application for an alteration in the form of decree, and thereby enable her to put pressure on her husband to secure a financial advantage; in the present case, although the wife alleged that she had conscientious scruples against divorce, it was clear that that was not the sole motive for her application and that she was also considering the possible financial gain which might follow if she remained a wife; under the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 183 (3) (added by the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937, s. 9), the court had a full discretion to deal with the case as it thought just; and, in the exercise of that discretion, the wife's application would be refused and the decree nisi would be made absolute.

D [AS TO DISCRETION OF COURT IN GRANTING A DECREE, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 10, pp. 686-690, paras. 1018-1025; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Vol. 27, pp. 359-367, Nos. 3446-3538 and Digest Supp. and 2nd Digest Supp.]

Cases referred to:

- E (1) Parsons v. Parsons, [1907] P. 331; 76 L.J.P. 159; 27 Digest 382, 3735.
 (2) Griffiths v. Griffiths, (1912), 106 L.T. 646; 27 Digest 551, 6042.
 (3) Daglish v. Daglish, [1936] P. 49; 105 L.J.P. 19; 154 L.T. 246; Digest Supp.
 (4) Blunt v. Blunt, [1943] 2 All E.R. 76; [1943] A.C. 517; 112 L.J.P. 58; 169 L.T. 33; 2nd Digest Supp.

F APPLICATION by a wife to rescind a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage and to substitute for it a decree of judicial separation, and a CROSS-APPLICATION by the husband to make the decree nisi absolute.

G After the decree nisi had been pronounced on Jan. 10, 1950, unsuccessful negotiations took place between the parties regarding maintenance, and in May the husband applied to the court to vary a deed of separation, entered into in 1936, by extinguishing his liability under it. In June he applied that the decree nisi should be made absolute. In asking that the decree nisi be rescinded and a decree of judicial separation substituted, the wife said that she had brought the petition for divorce against her conscience and had now reverted to her previous objection to divorce.

H Herd for the wife.
Petrie for the husband.

PEARCE, J.: This is an application by a wife to rescind a decree nisi for the dissolution of her marriage, pronounced on Jan. 9, 1950, on the ground of the husband's adultery, and to substitute for it a decree of judicial separation. There is also before me an application by the husband for the decree nisi to be made absolute.

The parties were married in 1916. In 1935 the wife left the husband, and in April, 1936, she petitioned for judicial separation on the ground of cruelty. That petition was settled by a deed of separation under which the husband agreed to pay certain sums by way of maintenance to the wife. Those payments have been maintained ever since. In October, 1949, the wife petitioned for divorce against the husband on the ground of his adultery. In December, 1949, she made an application in that suit for maintenance. After the decree nisi there were unsuccessful negotiations about maintenance. On May 25, 1950, the husband put in an application to vary the deed of separation by extinguishing his liability under it, and on June 6 he applied to make the decree absolute, the wife not having done so. The husband has filed an affidavit of means in answer to his wife's claim for maintenance, in which he says that he wishes to marry the woman with whom he committed adultery. He discloses the fact that his means are not large and says that the payments of the wife's maintenance under the deed have been made largely out of capital and cannot be continued.

Counsel for the wife asks me to rescind the decree nisi of dissolution. He referred me to Parsons v. Parsons (1), where the substitution of a decree of judicial separation for one of dissolution was allowed. Apparently, in that case the wife's desire for the alteration arose mainly from financial motives. In Griffiths v. Griffiths (2) a similar alteration was allowed, as it was in Daglish v. Daglish (3). In the latter case financial considerations were taken into account, though they were connected with the position of the children and not with that of the wife herself.

Since those cases the position has been altered by the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937, s. (9), which has added to s. 183 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, the following sub-s. (3):

"Where a decree nisi has been obtained, whether before or after the passing of this Act, and no application for the decree to be made absolute has been made by the party who obtained the decree, then, at any time after the expiration of three months from the earliest date on which that party could have made such an application, the party against whom the decree nisi has been granted shall be at liberty to apply to the court and the court shall, on such application, have power to make the decree absolute, reverse the decree nisi, require further inquiry or otherwise deal with the case as the court thinks fit."

Before the passing of that Act in 1937 a respondent had no rights in the matter, but now he or she has a right to apply to the court and the court has a full discretion to deal with the case as it thinks just.

It is obviously undesirable to allow a petitioner wife to use delay in applying for a decree nisi of divorce to be made absolute, or to accede to her application for an alteration in the form of decree, to enable her to put pressure on a respondent husband and to secure from him a financial advantage. There might be circumstances where justice is served by altering a decree nisi of dissolution to a decree of judicial separation. The judge has a complete discretion under the new sub-section. How that discretion should be exercised must depend entirely on the circumstances of the case. In the present case the wife says that she brought a petition for divorce against her conscience, that she has now reverted to her original feeling that it was wrong to have a divorce, and that she wants a judicial separation. It is clear from the rest of her affidavit that that was not the sole ground that moved her, and her arguments have been mainly directed to the financial position. I think that the wife's underlying motive is that she was disappointed at the husband's financial state as revealed in the maintenance proceedings, and that she thinks it would pay her better to remain his wife and thus to keep her chance of making in the future (if she survives him), an application under the Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938. The question of the maintenance of the wife is at the moment sub judice in proceedings for maintenance initiated by herself in this suit.

After considering all the facts of the case and bearing in mind the observations of VISCOUNT SIMON, L.C., in Blunt v. Blunt (4), I have come to the conclusion that the wife's application to rescind the decree nisi of divorce should be refused and that the decree should be made absolute. There will, therefore, be no order on the wife's application to rescind the decree nisi.

Decree nisi made absolute.

A Solicitors: Alfred Cox & Son, agents for Clarke and Nash, High Wycombe (for the wife); Gregory, Roucliffe & Co., agents for Neal, Scolah, Siddons & Co., Sheffield (for the husband).

[Reported by R. HENDRY WHITE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

B

KORNER v. H. KORNER & CO., LTD. AND OTHERS.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Singleton and Jenkins, L.J.J.), June 28, July 5, 1950.]

C Costs—Taxation—Eight defendants jointly represented and seven successful—Two distinct issues—Main issue against one defendant only—Separate defences—Plaintiff successful on main issue—Action against other defendants dismissed with costs—Claim by successful defendants to be paid seven-eighths of fee for instructions for brief and counsel's fees.

D In an action brought by the plaintiff against a company and seven individual defendants, the plaintiff alleged that in 1946 an agreement had been made between him and the second defendant for the formation of a private limited company and for the shares of the company to be allotted equally between him and the second defendant, and that the second defendant had caused the company to be incorporated while the plaintiff was abroad and had had the shares allotted to himself and the other individual defendants to the exclusion of the plaintiff. The plaintiff claimed specific performance of the agreement and damages, and also certain declarations, the main claims, i.e., the claims for specific performance and damages, being against the second defendant alone, and the claims for the declarations being against all the defendants. The eight defendants were represented by the same solicitors and only one brief was delivered on their behalf, but they delivered three separate defences. It was clear from the pleadings that, for the defence of the defendants other than the second defendant, it was unnecessary that the plaintiff should fail on his main claim. The plaintiff obtained judgment against the second defendant on the main claim (in which the second defendant only was involved), but failed in his claims against the company and the other individual defendants. He was awarded the costs of the action against the second defendant, and the action against the other defendants was dismissed with costs. The greater part of the costs of the action were attributable to the issues between the plaintiff and the second defendant. On the taxation of costs, the successful defendants claimed that they should have seven-eighths of the total costs of the defendants, including seven-eighths of the fee for instructions for brief and counsel's fees.

H HELD: (i) the rule that, where a number of defendants were jointly represented and some of them were successful, each successful defendant was entitled to an aliquot proportion of the costs of the defence was merely a convenient rule to apply in an ordinary and straightforward case, and there was no authority which compelled the court to follow it in every class of case even if injustice would thereby result, and the rule should not be extended to a case such as the present where different defences were delivered and where the plaintiff succeeded on the main issue in which one defendant only was involved.

Ellingsen v. Det Skandinaviske Compani ([1919] 2 K.B. 567), considered.

(ii) the order of the trial judge as to costs was of itself sufficient to render inapplicable the general rule as to the costs of successful defendants who were jointly represented; the order first provided that the second defendant was to pay to the plaintiff the costs of the action against the second defendant and then provided for the costs of the successful defendants; and, therefore, the latter part of the order was limited by what had gone before and the successful defendants were not entitled to seven-eighths of the fee for instructions for brief and counsel's fees, but should receive (a) seven-eighths of the general costs of the action, i.e., the costs incurred in relation to matters done on behalf of the defendants generally, (b) any costs solely appertaining to their defences, and (c) such part of the fee for instructions for brief and counsel's fees on the brief as might be attributable to their defences.

Per SINGLETON, L.J.: When one is dealing with an order as to costs, great trouble and expense would be saved if either party were able to go back to the judge, even after the order had been drawn up, if there appeared to be ambiguity or uncertainty in the terms of the order . . . An alteration to bring about such a means of solving a question of this kind would remove what appears to me to be a burden on litigants, and it would simplify the task of taxing masters and of judges.

[AS TO TAXATION OF COSTS, see HALSBURY, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 26, p. 102, para. 192; and FOR CASES, see DIGEST, Practice, pp. 947-949, Nos. 4872-4899, and pp. 877-880, Nos. 4176-4197.]

Cases referred to:

- (1) Ellingsen v. Det Skandinaviske Compani, [1919] 2 K.B. 567; 121 L.T. 367; sub nom., Ellingsen v. Det Skandinaviske Co. and Harsem & Co., Ltd., 88 L.J.K.B. 956; Digest, Practice, 877, 4177.
- (2) Burridge v. Bellew, (1875), 32 L.T. 807; 42 Digest 253, 2841.
- (3) Kelly's Directories, Ltd. v. Gavin & Lloyds, [1901] 2 Ch. 763; 70 L.J.Ch. 786; 85 L.T. 399; Digest, Practice, 880, 4196.

APPEAL by six of the seven successful defendants, in an action brought against eight defendants, from an order of WYNN-PARRY, J., dated June 8, 1950, dismissing their application for a review of taxation.

By an agreement, dated Feb. 7, 1946, and made between the plaintiff, Henry Korner, and his brother, Emil Korner, the second defendant, for the formation of a private limited company under the name of Henry Korner & Co., Ltd. (and by subsequent oral variations to the agreement) it was agreed inter alia (a) that the memorandum and articles of the company should be agreed between the parties, (b) that the parties or their nominees should be the subscribers thereto, and (c) that the capital of the company should be divided into ten thousand ordinary shares of £1 each, and that the plaintiff or his wife should subscribe for five thousand and the second defendant or his wife or daughters should subscribe for five thousand. The company was formed on Mar. 30, 1946, while the plaintiff was abroad, the original subscribers being two persons employed by the solicitors who were acting for the second defendant. No shares were allotted to the plaintiff or his wife.

In an action by the plaintiff against the company, as first defendant, the second defendant, and six other persons to whom the shares (other than the two subscription shares) had been allotted, the plaintiff claimed, by the prayer in the statement of claim: (i) specific performance of the agreement of Feb. 7, 1946; (ii) damages in addition to, or, alternatively, in lieu of, specific performance; (iii) damages in any event for delay in performing or for failure to perform the

A agreement; (iv) a declaration that the purported issue and allotment of shares in the company to the personal defendants were invalid; (v) a declaration that a resolution of the company, dated Sept. 20, 1946, purporting to remove the plaintiff from his position as a director of the company was invalid and in-operative; (vi) a declaration that the plaintiff was a director of the company, and an injunction to restrain the defendants from excluding him from meetings of the directors of the company and from otherwise preventing him from acting as a director of the company; (vii) a declaration that a special resolution of the company, purporting to have been passed on Sept. 20, 1946, and to have altered the company's articles, was invalid; and (viii) an order that the second defendant should concur with the plaintiff in the allotment to the plaintiff of five thousand shares in the company.

B Only one brief was delivered on behalf of all the defendants, but three separate defences were delivered: (i) on behalf of the defendant company; (ii) on behalf of the second defendant; and (iii) on behalf of the remaining defendants. By their defences the defendant company and the individual defendants other than the second defendant denied knowledge of the agreement between the plaintiff and the second defendant.

C The action came before ROMER, J., who found that, although paras. (i), (ii) and (iii) of the prayer in the statement of claim were couched in general terms, they concerned only the second defendant, as none of the other defendants was a party to the agreement. By his judgment, dated May 5, 1948, the learned judge found for the plaintiff on paras. (i), (ii), (iii), and (viii) of the prayer in the statement of claim and decreed specific performance of the agreement. In regard D to paras. (iv), (v), (vi) and (vii), he found that the plaintiff had no locus standi, as he never became a shareholder of the company, and, accordingly, he held that the action failed against the company and the individual defendants other than the second defendant. He ordered the second defendant to pay the plaintiff's costs of the action against the second defendant and dismissed the action against the other defendants with costs.

E On construing the learned judge's order as to costs, the taxing master ruled that the successful defendants were to receive (a) seven-eighths of the general costs of the action, (b) any costs solely appertaining to their defences, (c) such part of the fee for instructions for brief and counsel's fees on the brief as might be attributable to their defences. The successful defendants objected to the principle on which the taxing master proposed to apply the learned judge's order and contended that they were entitled to receive seven-eighths of the fee F for instructions for brief and counsel's fees on the brief. On the summons to review taxation, WYNN-PARRY, J., upheld the ruling of the learned taxing master, and the successful individual defendants now appealed from his decision.

Gallop, K.C., and Dare for the successful individual defendants.

Montgomery White, K.C., and J. V. Nesbitt for the plaintiff.

G Cur. adv. vult.

H July 5. SINGLETON, L.J.: This is an appeal from an order of WYNN-PARRY, J., dealing with a question of the taxation of costs. There were eight defendants in the action, which was brought by Mr. Henry Korner. The first defendant was a company, H. Korner & Co., Ltd.; the second defendant, Emil Korner, was a brother of the plaintiff; the next four defendants were the wife and members of the family of the second defendant; and the other two defendants, Mr. Dub and Mrs. Dub, were friends of the second defendant; and they and the members of the family of the second defendant had been allotted shares in the company, the first defendant on the record. In the action the plaintiff alleged that in 1946 an agreement had been made between him and the second defendant for the formation of a private limited company in which the two brothers (i.e., the plaintiff and the second defendant) were to be allotted shares equally. Later, at a time when the plaintiff was away from this country, he and the second defendant had some difference of opinion, and it was alleged that the second defendant caused the company to be incorporated and had the shares allotted to himself and to the other individual defendants to the exclusion of the plaintiff. The plaintiff claimed (a) specific performance of the agreement, as varied, (b) damages, and (c) certain declarations, including (a) a declaration that the purported issue and allotment of shares in the company to the personal defendants were invalid, and (b) a declaration that he was a director of the company. The claims for specific performance and damages were against the second defendant alone, while declarations were claimed against all the defendants.

The action was heard by ROMER, J., who gave judgment on May 5, 1948. The judgment of the learned judge was wholly in favour of the plaintiff against the second defendant. He found that the plaintiff had established the agreement which he set out to prove and that the submissions made on behalf of the second defendant and pleaded by him in his defence failed. The second defendant, in his defence, had denied that the agreement was made in the terms which the plaintiff set up, and had alleged that by various causes or for various reasons the plaintiff had waived his right to sue under the agreement, and, furthermore, that he was estopped from doing so. On all those issues the judgment of ROMER, J., was in favour of the plaintiff. The learned judge then proceeded to give his judgment in regard to the action as against the company and the other individual defendants, and he found that the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief claimed against those defendants. In the first place, he had never validly been appointed a director, and, furthermore, as ROMER, J., said:

"Not only is the plaintiff not a director, but he is not a shareholder and has never paid for any shares. In these circumstances it appears to me that he has no locus standi to sue the company in respect of the acts of the company which are matters of internal management. The fact, if it be a fact, that one of the two original subscribers is his nominee does not give him the right to sue. To acquire the right to complain of matters of the internal management of the company he requires a legal title and this he has not got. As against the company, therefore, his action fails."

For the same or similar reasons the action failed against the other individual defendants.

The order of ROMER, J., after decreeing specific performance against the second defendant, ran in this way, in regard to costs:

"And it is ordered that the defendant Emil Korner do pay to the plaintiff his costs of the action against such defendant (other than the costs of the motion heard on June 13, 1947) such costs to be taxed by the taxing master."

After providing for the costs of the motion, the order goes on:

"... and it is ordered that this action against the defendants other than the defendant Emil Korner do stand dismissed out of this court with costs other than their costs of the said motion to be taxed by the taxing master and paid by the plaintiff to the said defendants."

Questions arose as to the precise mode in which the costs of the successful defendants should be taxed. Points were raised by all the successful defendants. The taxing master, having been asked for his observations and ruling, said this in his written observations:

"The cause of action against the defendant, Emil Korner, was quite different from those against the other defendants. The defendants, who were represented by the same firm of solicitors, delivered three separate defences. The plaintiff succeeded against the defendant, Emil Korner, only. The learned judge made the following order for taxation."

After reading the order of ROMER, J., the taxing master said:

